

016

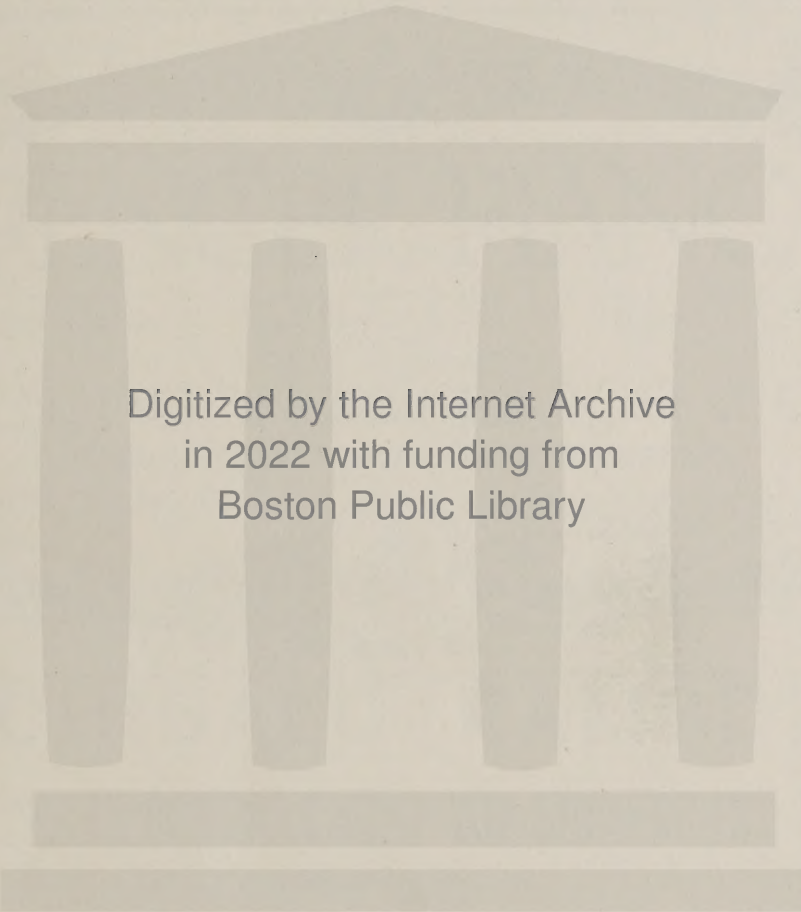

No. 4

PERIODICAL
ML5
.M85

64
1923

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2022 with funding from Boston Public Library

VV

No.
959

Price
6d.

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

JANUARY 1, 1923

Jan 19, 1924

4041280
4041280
4041280

SPENCER PIANOS

GRANDS ▽ UPRIGHTS ▽ PLAYERS

Sole Agents

Vol 64

MURDOCH MURDOCH & CO

Piano & Player Piano Experts

461 & 463 OXFORD STREET

And at BRIGHTON · PORTSMOUTH · SOUTHAMPTON
FOLKESTONE · DOVER · CHATHAM
BIRMINGHAM · CAMBRIDGE

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN

LTD.

PATENT THREE COMPARTMENT TOP LID FOR GRAND PIANOS

We have already fitted over

1000 PIANOS

by most of the leading makers with this New Device.

Kindly send for Booklet giving particulars.

CECILIAN HOUSE,
65, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON.
12, Park Row, LEEDS.

Patented in AMERICA - FRANCE - GERMANY.

4361

THE GREAT ENGLISH PIANO

—
ACTUAL MANUFACTURERS.

Factories :
LEIGHTON ROAD,
KENTISH TOWN, LONDON.

—
Proprietors of
JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'
TUNING CONNECTION.

THE INSTRUMENT DE LUXE OF THE PIANO WORLD

—
GRANDS, PLAYER PIANOS,
UPRIGHT PIANOS,
WITH DETACHABLE PARTS.

—
SHOWROOMS :
56-60, WIGMORE STREET,
W.1. LANGHAM 1418.

ESTEY ORGANS ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.

Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317.

Telegrams: "ESTEY OX. LONDON."

Estey Organ Co

- 12 -

RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

METZLER'S TRIO SERIES

For Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello.

1s. each Trio.

Extra Parts for Harmonium, Violin, 2nd Violin, 'Cello, Bass. 4d. each.

- | | | | |
|----------------------------|--------------|--|--------------|
| 1. AIR | Bach | 20. CHANSON POLONAISE .. | Wieniawski |
| 2. MINUET IN E flat | Beethoven | 21. AVE MARIA | Bach-Gounod |
| 3. MINUET IN A | Boccherini | 22. NOCTURNE IN E flat (Op. 27, No. 2) | Chopin |
| 4. LA SERENATA | Braga | 23. BRANDENBURG CONCERTO, | |
| 5. HUNGARIAN DANCE (No. 1) | Brahms | 1st Movement (condensed) | Bach |
| 6. HUNGARIAN DANCE (No. 2) | Brahms | 24. PATHETIC SYMPHONY (Extract | |
| 7. BERCEUSE (SERENADE) .. | Gounod | from 2nd Movement) | Tschaikowsky |
| 8. LARGO | Handel | 25. ARIA ON G STRING (2nd arrangement) | |
| 9. SPRING SONG | Mendelssohn | | Bach |
| 10. NARCISSUS | Nevin | 26. VALSE DES FLEURS (Casse-Noisette) | |
| 11. CAVATINA | Raff | | Tschaikowsky |
| 12. MELODY IN F | Rubinstein | 27. PRELUDE IN C sharp minor (transposed | |
| 13. AVE MARIA | Schubert | to C minor) | Rachmaninoff |
| 14. SERENADE | Schubert | 28. CHANSON TRISTE (Op. 40, No. 2) | |
| 15. TRAUMEREI | Schumann | | Tschaikowsky |
| 16. POLACCA (Mignon) | Thomas | 29. CHANT SANS PAROLES (Op. 2, No. 3) | |
| 17. BARCAROLLE (JUNE) .. | Tschaikowsky | | Tschaikowsky |
| 18. O STAR OF EVE | Wagner | 30. SALVE DIMORA (Faust) .. | Gounod |
| 19. WALTHER'S PREISLIED .. | Wagner | | |

METZLER & CO. (1920), LTD.,

(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

142, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

THE

4 0 41.230
vol 64

m

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED IN THE YEAR 1844

JANUARY TO DECEMBER, 1923

VOLUME LXIV.

PRINTED BY THE MUSICAL TIMES CO. LTD.

10, ABINGDON STREET, LONDON, E.C. 4.

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED,

160, WARDOUR STREET, W. 1

NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

—
1923

8361

INDEX FOR 1923

MUSIC

SACRED

	No.		No.
Spring bursts to-day (Easter Carol) ...	Geoffrey Shaw 960	Worship (Unison song for massed voices)	Geoffrey Shaw 967
Now if Christ be preached that He rose from the dead (Easter Anthem) ...	W. Wolstenholme 961	How beauteous are their feet (Anthem)...	C. V. Stanford 968
Happy art thou, O Israel (Anthem for general use, from 'Honour the Lord with thy substance')... ..	J. Stainer 963	Jesu, Star of Consolation (Introit, or Short Anthem)	Charles Macpherson 969
Let the people praise Thee, O God (Anthem for Harvest)	Percy E. Fletcher 966	O praise the Lord (Anthem)	Berthold Tours 970

SECULAR

	No.		No.
John Ball shot them all (Part-song) ...	Adam Carse 959	Twilight Night (Unaccompanied part-song)	John Ireland 964
Thus saith my Cloris (Madrigal) ...	John Wilbye 962	In going to my lonely bed (Madrigal) ...	Richard Edwards 965

EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS.—MUSIC

SACRED

	No.		No.
Jesus Christ is risen to-day (Anthem) ...	C. V. Stanford 960	May the grace of Christ our Saviour (Vesper Hymn)	H. Smart 968
The Reproaches	Rev. Horace Spence 961	And we beheld His glory (Anthem) ...	George Rathbone 969
Come, Holy Ghost (Introit)	C. Lee Williams 963	The Shepherds found Thee by night (Carol for Chorus and Accompaniment)	Geoffrey Shaw 970
O Lord, the Maker of all thing (Evening Anthem)	H. A. Chambers 965
I will greatly rejoice (Full Anthem for Harvest)	Edward C. Bairstow 966

SECULAR

	No.		No.
Whether I find thee (Part-song)...	Edward Elgar 959	Folly's Song (Part-song)	Percy E. Fletcher 967
After many a dusty mile (Part-song) ...	Edward Elgar 962	Evensong	Montague F. Phillips 968

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

	No.		No.
Henry Littleton	959	Gustav Holst	964
Norman Allin	962	Walter Hyde	970

ILLUSTRATIONS, PORTRAITS, ETC.

	Page		Page		Page
Allt, W. Greenhouse	640	Evans, Edwin	127	Paris Opéra, The: The Bibliothèque and the Famous Rotunda on Second Floor... ..	686
Bradshaw, Dr. John C.	341	Farnam, Lynnwood	543	Escalier d'Honneur	687
Byrd Memorial Tablet, Lincoln Cathedral	547	Littleton, Henry, in 1856	19	Foyer, where official Balls are held	689
Caird, Robert	365	Nikisch, Mitja	201	Safonoff, Sketched at Queen's Hall ...	677
Christchurch Cathedral	343	Nicholls, Agnes, Dorothy Silk, and Elsie Suddaby	716	'Table Book' (or 'Table Music'). Reduced facsimile in a, of Song by John Dowland	472
Dowland, John, Song by, reproduced in facsimile from early 17th-century 'Table Book'	472	Organ Blowers, Notre Dame Cathedral, Paris	544	Title-Page to 'Theatrum Instrumentorum' (Prætorius, 1618)	32

	Page		Page		Page
Abbott's Langley Choral Society	430	Bach. Chorales harmonized by Johann Sebastian, edited by H. Elliot Button	698	Berks, Bucks, and Oxon Competitive Musical Festival	429
Aberdeen, Music at	132, 204	'Forty-Eight, Round about the' ('Feste')	834	Berlin. Austrian Musical Festival at	649
Aberystwyth Festival	402, 577	Bach Choir, The (see 270, 354, 503)	274	Music at	67
Aberystwyth, Music at	63, 204, 869	Coming Season, The	726	Bertelin (Paris). 'Hymne Funèbre'	362
Acoustic Properties of a Church (Correspondence)	270, 790, 860	Bach Chorales, The, and Congregational Singing (Correspondence)	724	Bertrand, Marcel (Paris). 'Sainte Odile,' at the Opéra-Comique	874
Acoustics for Architects. By Percy C. Buck	608	Bailey, Gilbert. Song recital	201	Besly, Maurice (Oxford). 'The Shepherds had an Angel'	578
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' 33, 113, 320, 395, 405, 539, 612, 682, 764, 834		Bairstow, Dr. E. C. Morning, Evening, and Communion Services (Review)	551	Part-songs, 'O Lord, support us' and 'Sleep' (Review)	170
Adams, A. Davies. One-Act Opera, 'Qualis'	62	Baker, J. Percy. 'Musical Association, The, A Brief Survey of its History'	772	Song, 'An Epitaph' (Review)	406
Æolian Orchestra, Concerts by the	131	Baldock, Margaret. Pupils' Concert	497	Suite, 'Chelsea China' (Eastbourne)	870
Æsthetics of the Organ, The. By Alex. Cellier	717	Balfour, Margaret, at Concert of Æolian Orchestra	131	'Best of the Year, The,' for 1922 (Review)	39
Agnew, Roy E. Pianoforte, 'Dance of the Wild Men' (Review)	479	Ball, Thalben. Appointment at Temple Church	565	Bien, Irene. Pianoforte, 'Bach and the Old Masters' (Review)	328
Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society	62, 275, 720	Ballymena Musical Festival	432	Birmingham. Kunneke's light Opera, 'The Cousin from Nowhere'	132
Coming Season of the	720	Bambridge, William Samuel (Obituary)	139	Music at 63, 132, 204, 278, 355, 430, 501, 647, 730, 798, 869
Alexanian, Diran (Amsterdam). 'Petite Suite Arménienne'	208	Bangor Tabernacle Choir	278	New musical comedy, 'Catherine'	647
Theoretical and Practical Treatise of the Violoncello, with an Introduction by Pablo Casals (Review)	325	Bantock, Granville. Part-songs, 'Fond Lover, The,' and 'Jack and Joan' (Review)	110	Organ Recitals at the Roman Catholic Exhibition	639
All Souls', Langham Place, Recitals at	345, 787	'Song of the Volga Boatmen, The' (Review)	552	Blackburn Ladies' Choir	204
Allan, E. W. Organ Arrangement of Bach's 'Adagio ma non tanto' (Review)	325	Barclay Squire, W., and J. A. Fuller-Maitland. Works of Henry Purcell. Vol. 22. Catches, Rounds, Two-Part and Three-Part Songs (Review)	47	Blackhill. Benfieldside Choral Society	430
Allin, Norman (see 'British Players and Singers')		Barclay's Bank Musical Society, Coming Season, The	792	Blackpool Lyric Choir	430
Allingham, Mildred. Song recital	61	Bark, Lancelot G. Anthem, 'Come to our dark nature's night' (Review)	561	Blackpool Musical Festival (see 729)	500, 795
Allt, W. Greenhouse. Organist and Master of the Music at St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh	640	Barking-by-the-Tower. Church of All Hallows'. Organ recitals at	721	Blair, Hugh. Serenata, 'Life and Love,' for pianoforte (Review)	480
Alpaerts (Paris). 'Renouveau'	505	Barlow, Rev. J. Herbert. 'Bach Chorale Book, The' (Review)	184	Bliss, Arthur. By Edwin Evans	20, 95
Alton, Robert. 'Violin-Making and Repairing' (Review)	182	Barnmouth, Music at	869	'Colour' Symphony, at Queen's Hall	275
Amateur on Critics, An. By Robert Lorenz	178	Barnard Castle. Leeds Choral Union at Barnsley Musical Competitive Festival	577	Musical Association Paper, 'Some Aspects of the Present Musical Situation'	349
Amateurs' Exchange, The 54, 124, 196, 268, 346, 419, 492, 567, 641, 722, 788, 848		Barnstaple Musical Society	340	Bloch, Ernest. Three Jewish Poems (see 542)	131
Amsterdam, Music at 67, 135, 207, 281, 360, 433, 504, 648, 800		Barry-Mason, R. Song recital	497	Blom, Eric. Has Music Descriptive Power?	30
Anderton, H. Orsmond, (Birmingham). Music-Drama, 'Baldur'	430	Bath. Pump Room Spring Festival	355	'Blue Bird, The.' Incidental music of, at Queen's Hall Symphony Concert	275
'Song of Life, A'	204	Batley Choral Contests	645	Blue-pencilled Score (Correspondence) (see 270)	347
Anglesey. Third Musical Festival	577	Batkó, Béla. Sonatas for pianoforte and violin (see 431)	424	Bognor. Bach Choir	566
Answers to Correspondents	365	Battersea and Wandsworth Choral Union	275	St. John's. César Franck Centenary Recital at	50
Angeles, Georges. Pianist-Futurist (see 364)	361	Battersea Town Hall. Chamber Concerts at	330	Bohm, C. Violin, Six Miniatures (Review)	561
Anthems, Classified List of (Review)	267	Battistini, Mattia. At Queen's Hall	425	Bohnke, Edward (Germany). 'Symphonie Overture'	433
'Appalachian 'Mountains, Nursery Songs from the,' By Cecil J. Sharp (Review)	843	Baumgartner, Hope Leroy. Organ, 'Idyll' (Review)	327	Bonavia-Hunt, Noel A. 'Modern Organ Stops' (Review) (see 789)	699
Appeal, An, and a Protest (Correspondence)	862	Bax, Arnold. New Choral Work, 'To the Name above every name,' at the Worcester Festival	716	Bonner, Eugène. Songs, 'A Clear Midnight,' 'Phantoms,' 'The Dismantled Ship' (Review)	842
Appointments, Organists and Choirmasters 52, 124, 195, 267, 346, 419, 491, 566, 641, 723, 788, 859		String Quartet in G (see 424)	202	Books on Orchestration: An Historical Sketch. By Adam Carse	31
Arcadelt. 'Ave Maria,' attributed to, said by Saint-Saëns to be by P. Dietsch	267	Symphonic poem, 'Tintagel' (see 504)	59	Books Received	844
Archbishops' Committee on Church Music, The	119	Symphony in E flat minor	60	Bookseller, The, and the Stationery Trades Journal, 1922	114
Report of the (Review)	783	Bax, Clifford. Minuet from 'Berenice,' and 'O Sleep' from 'Semele' (Review)	552	Borchard, A. (Paris). 'En Marge de Shakespeare'	505
Archibald, Phyllis. Song recital, with Mr. Tudor Davies	574	Baynon, Arthur. Song, 'In Brittany' (Review)	326	Borren, Charles van den. Round about a Toccata of Galuppi's	314
Archute? What about that (Correspondence)	570, 643	Beard, Paul. 'Caprice' for Orchestra (Birmingham)	204	Borsdorf, Adolf (Obituary) (see 495)	436
Arden, Evelyn. Song recital	806	Bechert, Paul. 'Supplementary' Festival, The, at Salzburg	731	Bortkiewicz, Serge (Vienna). Violin Sonata	210
Arkwright, G. E. P. Catalogue of Music in the Library of Christ Church, Oxford (Review)	624	Beckenham Choral Society	792	Boston, Music at	430
Armstrong, Thomas. 'Proms,' The, Impressions of	774	Bedford, Herbert. 'Hamadryad' (for orchestra)	865	Boughton, Rutland. 'Bethlehem' (see 552)	128
Arne Society, The. 'Comus,' Revival of	273	Songs, 'Ships that pass in the night' and 'Evangeline passes'	202	Chamber Concerts, Series of	714, 795
Ashburton Musical Society and the L.C.C. Philharmonic Society	875	Bedford Eisteddfod	53, 268	Chapel in Lyonesse	755
Association of Competitive Choirs, The Aubert, Louis. 'Habañera'	352	Bedford, Music at	63, 430	Greek Folk-Song Quartet	795
Pianoforte piece on 'FAURE' (Review) (see Schmitt, Florent)	479	Musical Society (see 114)	63	Immortal Hour, The, rooth performance (see 840)	114
(Paris). 'Poèmes Arabes'	362	Bedwell, Harry (Obituary)	578	Trio, Celtic Prelude (Review)	561
Auric, Georges (Amsterdam). Trois Interludes	360	Beecham, Adrian. Opera, 'The Merchant of Venice,' Garbling of Criticisms by Press Agent (see 113)	33	Welsh Hills' Quartet	795
Austin, Ernest. 'Dream Themes' (Review)	709	Beecham, Sir Thomas. New Beecham Concerts, The	776, 865	Boulanger, Lili (Paris). 'Envois de Rome'	362
Pianoforte, Tone Stanza, 'Calling out the Fairies' (Review)	709	Re-appearance in London Music (see 322, 348, 395, 401, 420)	352	Boult, Adrian C. Musical Association paper, 'Orchestral Problem of the Future, The'	273
Two Books of Pianoforte pieces (Review)	328	Beethoven (Vienna). Incidental music to 'Leonore Prochaska'	435	Bourgeois, M. Louis. Lectures on French Musical History	127
Austral, Florence. Song recital	132	Belfast. Fifteenth Yearly Festival at	432	Bournemouth Branch of the Hampshire Organists' Association	566
Austrian Musical Festival, The, at Berlin	649	Bell, Lady. 'Chantez, mes enfants' (Review)	479	Bournemouth Festival	355
'Ave Maria,' attributed to Arcadelt, said by Saint-Saëns to be by P. Dietsch	267	Bell, Rev. Maurice F. 'Church music' (Review)	182	Bournemouth, Music at	64, 798
Bach. Autograph vocal parts of a hitherto unknown Wedding Cantata, 'Vergnügte Plessestadt'	78	Ben Rhyddyd Operatic Choir	278	Bournville Works Musical Festival	500
		Benfieldside Choral Society	278	Bowen, York. Orchestral work, 'Eventide'	60
		at Blackhill	430	Bradford, Music at 64, 132, 204, 278, 356, 577, 798, 869
		Benjamin, Arthur. Song, 'Hey, nonny no!' (Review)	478	Musical Competitive Festival	575
		Bennett, Arnold. 'Things that have Interested me' ('Feste')	320	St. Wilfrid's Church, New Organ at	566
		Berkhamsted Choral Society. Coming Season, The	793	Bradshaw, Dr. John C. A Talk with	340
		Berkhamsted Musical Competitive Festival	340	Brahe, May H. Four Songs from 'Peacock Pie' (Review)	842
				Brahms's 'Liebeslieder,' by the Hallé Choir	206

	Page		Page		Page
Bramhall, Rev. F., and the Responses	50	Busoni, New book, 'Von der Einheit der Musik' ...	361	Chaminade, Pianoforte, 'Romanesca' (Review) ...	709
Brampton Choral Society ...	278	with Beard (Correspondence) ...	643, 725	Chamlee, Mario, at the Albert Hall	496
Braunfels (Vienna), 'Requiem' ...	210	Butler, Leonard, Pianoforte, 'Four Little Songs on a Hill Top' (Review) ...	480	Chaney, E. W. Recital of Otto Malling's 'Christus' ...	144
Brentford (Ontario) Oratorio Society ...	429	Pianoforte, 'Stray Leaves' (Review) ...	480	Chapin, Anna Alice, 'Heart of Music, The' (Review) ...	181
Breslau, Max Regier Festival at	68	Butt, Dame Clara, Royal Albert Hall Concert (see 322, 348, 395, 401, 420) ...	352, 573	Chappell Ballad Concerts, The ...	713
Bretton (Queen's Hall 'Proms.'), Violin Concerto in A minor ...	726	Button, H. Elliot, Chorales harmonized by Johann Sebastian Bach ...	698	Coming Season, The ...	726
Brewer, A. Herbert, Organ arrangement, Introduction to 'The Kingdom' (Review) ...	327	'In going to my lonely bed' (see 630) ...	476, 551	Chatham, Music at 64, 132, 205, 278, 356, 869	869
Brian, Havergal, Part-song, 'It was a lover and his lass' (Review) ...	111	Music Printing in the year 1603	472	Chatham, Pitt (Obituary) ...	578
'Phantom Woocer, The' (Review) ...	111	queen' (Review) ...	552	Chaumette, Gabriel (Amsterdam), String Quartet ...	208
Bridge, Frank, Suite, 'The Sea' ...	352	See, see the shepherds' (Review) ...	552	Chelsea Music Club ...	130
Bridge, Sir Frederick, Anthem, 'O send out Thy light' (Review) ...	561	Buxton Competitive Musical Festival	429	Chesterfield, Derbyshire Symphony Orchestra ...	730
Byrd's 'Looke downe, O Lord' and 'Come, come, help, O God' (Review) ...	481	Byrd, 'Great Service, The, &c' (Review) ...	561	Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society ...	275
Carols, 'Cradle Song' and 'Carol, carol, tenderly, sweetly' (Review) ...	47	New Edition of Six-Part Anthems ...	344	Choir Training and the Royal College of Organists (see 258, 417) ...	723
Gresham College Music Lectures ...	211, 863	Sacred Motets or Anthems (Review) (see 481) ...	47	Choral Contests and Local Music Dealers	195
Hymn-Anthem and Motet (Edited) (Review) ...	561	Samuel Wesley on ...	567	Choral Contests, Preliminary and Final: Point for Committees, A ...	195
Musical Association paper, 'Deering's Country Cryes' ...	66	Byrd Tercentenary (see 365, 491, 567, 571, 786) ...	545	'Choral Songs from the Old Masters' (Review) ...	552
'Sacred Motets or Anthems by William Byrd' (Review) ...	47	in South Africa ...	346	Christ Church, Oxford, Catalogue of Music in the Library of. By G. E. P. Arkwright (Review) ...	624
Bridgend, Cardiff Catholic Choral Society at ...	869	Lincoln Commemorative Service (see 547) ...	494	Chudleigh Choral Society ...	430
Glee Society ...	204	Caird, Robert (Obituary) ...	365	Chudleigh-Candish, C. F., 'Songs of the Armada' (Review) ...	110
Bridgewater, Music at ...	430, 869	Calvé, Emma, 'My Life' (Review) ...	181	Church Music, New (Review) ...	47, 111, 184, 481, 5f1, 843
Bridlington, Music at ...	869	Calvoceressi, M.-D., and the 'Dictionnaire du Conservatoire' (see 777) ...	622	Church-Music Society, Bristol branch ...	50, 195
Brighouse Orchestral Society ...	798	Innovation and Cliché in Music ...	25	Reprints (Review) ...	561
Brighton and Hove Harmonic Society, Coming Season, The ...	752	Russian Ballet, The—and after ...	775	City Temple Church Choral Society ...	51, 194, 207, 787
Brighton, 'Happy Sunday Evenings' Choir ...	630	What's in a Name? ...	393	City Temple, New Organ at the ...	858
Brisbane Austral Choir ...	578	Cambridge, Coming Season, The ...	792	Civil Service Choir, The, Coming Season, The ...	792
Bristol, Church-Music Society at ...	194	Festival of British Music at 283, 488	488	Civil Service Orchestra, The, at Queen's Hall ...	354
Music at 64, 132, 204, 278, 356, 430, 502, 577, 648, 730, 798, 869	869	Music at ...	132	Clapham Congregational Church, Old English Organ Music at ...	787
Musical Competitive Festival	268	University Musical Society and the Oxford Bach Choir at Royal Albert Hall ...	132, 211, 274	Clarke, Rebecca (New York), New Rhapsody ...	801
Philharmonic Society, Coming Season, The ...	792	Campbell, Hugh, Song recital ...	867	Claussnitzer, Paul, Sixty Choral arrangements for organ ...	710
British Empire Eisteddfod ...	729, 798	Canada, Manitoba Festival ...	500	Clay, Mrs. (Obituary) ...	507
British Federation of Musical Competitive Festivals ...	52, 427, 729, 868	Cape Town Orchestra and the Municipal Choral Society ...	507	Clifford, The Hon. Mrs. Julian (Obituary)	652
Annual General Conference 797, 868	868	Capell, Richard, 'Wotan the Victorian' ...	474	Clifton, Oakfield Road Church, Service of British Psalm- and Hymn-Tunes at ...	267
British Medical Journal on Musical Education (see 349) ...	253	Caplet, André, 'Le Pain Quotidien' (Review) ...	326	Coates, John, Recitals ...	61, 202, 794
British Music in Serbia ...	135	Cardiff Blue Ribbon Choir ...	793	Cobbett, W. W., Competition for British makers of Stringed Instruments ...	250
British Music Publishers, Open Questions to ...	714	Eisteddfod ...	124	Competitions for Chamber Music (see 495) ...	38, 54, 791
British Music Society 191, 330, 421, 571	571	Music at 64, 132, 205, 278, 356, 430, 577, 798, 869	869	On Chamber Music ...	54
(Correspondence) ...	421	Musical Society, Coming Season, The ...	792	Cocker, Norman, Organ Music, 'Interlude' and 'Psalm' ...	46
February number of the Bulletin of the ...	191, 330	Richmond Road Congregational Church ...	194	'Interlude' and 'Psalm' ...	46
Festival at Plymouth (see 869)	869	St. John's, Cantata at ...	345	Cohen, Reba, Song recital ...	353
British National Opera Company (see 333)	128, 423, 496	Carlisle Choral Society, Brahms's 'Requiem' ...	205	Colchester, Recital by Albert Sammons	64
Operatic Season, The ...	496	Carlisle, Musical Competition Festival at Carnegie Trustees, Music Publication Scheme of the ...	863	Coleman, Esther, Song recital ...	426
Holst, Gustav, 'Perfect Fool, The' (see 389) ...	423	Carr, Howard (Harrogate), String Quartet, 'Three Dances in the Old Style' ...	502	Collingham (Yorks), Music at ...	132
Broadcasting and Opera Question, The (see 112) ...	465	Carroll, Walter, Children's Play, 'A Day in the Country' (Review) ...	480	Colne Musical Competitive Festival ...	53
Bromley Choral Society ...	212	'Musical Exercises for Piano-forte' (Review) ...	328	Colson, Percy, and Alfred Kalisch, 'She Stoops to Conquer' (Review) ...	184
Coming Season, The ...	726	Pianoforte, 'In Southern Seas' (Review) ...	328	Performance at Baden Baden 733	733
Brown, James, Lectures ...	283	Carse, Adam, Books on Orchestration: An Historical Sketch ...	31	Come unto these yellow sands' (Correspondence) (see 539) ...	643
Browne, W. Denis, Songs, 'To Gratiana dancing and singing' and 'Diaphenia' (Review) ...	842	Song, 'The Merry Milkmaids' (Review) ...	478	Comic Opera by Piccinni, A (Correspondence) ...	569
Browning, Oscar (Obituary) ...	875	Song, 'West of the Skerries' (Review) ...	406	Coming Season, The ...	726, 792
Bruckner, Anton (Vienna), Symphony in F minor ...	435	Casella (Paris), 'Elegia Eroica' ...	362	Competitions for Composers, International ...	267, 570
Bruneau, Alfred (Paris), Opera, 'Le Jardin du Paradis' ...	873	Cassado, José, Spanish Rhapsody (Queen's Hall 'Proms.') ...	727	Competitions in February and March ...	124
Buck, Percy C., Acoustics for Architects ...	608	Castelnuovo-Tedesco, Mario, Six Shakespeare Songs (Review) ...	478	Competitive Festivals ...	576
Buckley, P. Kevin, 'Orchestral and Cinema Organist, The' (Review) ...	471	Cathedral Organists' Annual Conference	344	Festival Booklets' (Review) ...	575
Budapest, Music at ...	360	Catfish Handwriting (Correspondence) (see 612) ...	790	Judges and Expression Marks	728
Budleigh Salterton Musical Society ...	430	Cellier, Alex, The Aesthetics of the Organ ...	717	Competitive Musical Festivals—Various Composers' Original MSS. (see 790) ...	612
Buesst, Aylmer, Concert ...	864	Central Hall Choral Society, Westminster ...	858	'Comus', Revival of, by the Arne Society ...	273
Bullock, Dr., Evening Service (Review)	561	Cervantes, Ignacio, Pianoforte, 'Three Dances' and 'Two Cuban Dances' (Review) ...	709	Concert Calendar, Music and Dramatic Year-Book, and Directory ...	862
Bunnett, Edward, Memorial Tablets affixed to organ of the late ...	565	César Franck, Lefebvre-Wély, and Scotson Clark (Correspondence) (see 177) ...	270	Conductor, The, and his Fore-Runners, By William Wallace (see 630) ...	609, 677, 757, 832
(Obituary) ...	139	Chaliapin at the Albert Hall ...	574	Conductor, The, and the 'Beat' (Correspondence) ...	861
Burmese Music, By Paul Edmonds ...	697	Chambers, H. A., 'O for a closer walk with God' (Review) ...	843	Connell, John, Bach recital ...	122
Burr, Alan E. L., Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Review) ...	843			Contemporary Music Centre ...	277, 424
Busch, Adolf (German), Violin Concerto ...	433			Converse, Frederick H. (New York), A New Symphony ...	208
Bush, Alan, Sonata in B minor, for pianoforte (Review) ...	709			Cook, Edgar T., Edition of Thomas Tomkins's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Review) ...	111
Three pieces for two pianofortes (Review) ...	709			Cook, Gerald, Series of Six Concerts ...	60

	Page		Page		Page
Corder, Paul (Harrogate). Prelude for Oboe, Horn, Violin, Violoncello, and Harp...	577	Derby Municipal and County Chamber Concerts	726	Emotional Conception of Music, The. By Arthur L. Salmon	309
Cornwall Musical Competitive Festival	500	Déré, Jean (Paris). 'Krishna' (first performance)	362	Encore Question, The. By Richard Holt (see 322, 348, 352, 395, 420, 548)	401
Cortôt, Alfred. Recital	705	Desmond, Astra. Song recitals	61, 496	'Encyclopédie Musicale et Dictionnaire du Conservatoire' (Review) (see 777)	622
Covent Garden Opera	128	Dickin, H. B. (Obituary)	71	Enesco, Georges. At Queen's Hall	351
— 'The Perfect Fool' (see 406, 476)	423	'Dictionnaire du Conservatoire' (see 'Encyclopédie Musicale')		Enfield Musical Competitive Festival	268
Coventry Musical Competitive Festival	53	Dieppe. International Competitive Festival at	429	English Folk-Dance Society, The	477, 573, 768
Cowen, F. H. Song, 'Sunshine' (Review)	326	Dohnányi, Ernst von. 'Variations on a Nursery Song' at Queen's Hall	201	'Englishmen are Nowhere' (Correspondence)	57
Cras, Jean. Lyric Play, 'Polyphème' (Paris)	139	Symphony Concert (see 727)		Enniscorthy Choral Festival (Ireland)	578
Crawford, T. J. Presentation	51	— Violin Concerto in B (Queen's Hall 'Proms.')	727	Enthusiasm in Practice. By Edwin Evans	759
Crawley and Ifield Musical and Dramatic Society	133	Dolmetsch, Arnold. Concerts and Encores	323	Erlebach, Rupert O. Organ, Folk-song Suite (Review)	46
Craxton, Harold. Recital	276	Donarelli, Ugo. At Lady Dean Paul's Concert	277	Ertel, Paul (Berlin). Opera, 'Santa Agata'	67
Crieff Oratorio Society. Coming Season, The	793	Donaueschingen and Salzburg Festivals. By Edwin Evans (see 784)	631	Eskdale Tournament, Whitby	427
Criticisms and Reviews, Misquoting and Garbling of. By 'Feste' (see 113, 125)	33	Doncaster Friendly Societies' Third Annual Contest	645	Eton, 'Masque of Comus, The' (see 191)	72
Critics, An Amateur on. By Robert Lorenz	178	Doncaster Musical Society and Leeds Symphony Orchestra	356	— Music at	205, 356
Crouch End. Christ Church Choir, Notable Season of	491	Dresden, Music at	68	Eurhythmics, London School of
Crouch Hill Presbyterian Church, commendable enterprise of	418	Dublin, Christ Church Cathedral. Reconstruction of Organ at	344	Dalcroze	436
Croydon Symphony Orchestra and Philharmonic Society. Coming Season, The	726	Dublin, Feis Ceoil	432	Evans, Edwin. Arthur Bliss	20, 93
Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society	355, 792	Dudley, Madrigal Society	439	— Enthusiasm in Practice	759
Cudworth Choral Society	356	Dudley Parish Church. Restoration of Organ at	640	— Dinner and Presentation to	127
Cumberland, Gerald. 'Written in Friendship' (Review)	845	Duhan, Hans (Vienna). Comic Opera, 'Mozart'	651	Donaueschingen and Salzburg Festivals	631
Cumberland. Lamplugh Church, New Organ at	506	Dulwich Music Club and the Federation of Music Clubs (see 130)	211	— Opera and Lord Berners	533
Curnow, Leslie. Organ recitals	640	Dulwich Philharmonic Society	275, 355, 792	— Perfect Fool, The' (see 406, 423, 476)	389
Cuscini, Alfredo (Rome). New Musical Comedy, 'Il Ventaglio'	732	— Coming Season, The	792	Evans, Harry. Memorial to, at Liverpool	431
'Cuts' not Wanted (Correspondence) (see 401)	493	Dumfries, Music at	133, 205, 356	Exeter, Music at	64, 133, 205, 279, 357, 431, 502, 799, 870
Czechoslovak Choral Works, Some. By Rosa Newmarch	171, 762	Dundee Amateur Choral Society	205	— Cathedral, 'St. Matthew'
Czecho-Slovakian Composers	40	Dundee Amateur Choral Union. Coming Season, The	792	— Passion at	345
D'Albert, Eugène. Recital (see 323) (Germany). New Opera, 'Marcie von Nymwegen'	872	Dunfermline Competitive Musical Festival	429	— Organists' Association	194
Dale, B. J. Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin (Review)	480	Dunhill, Thomas F. Four new Part-songs for T.T.B.B. (Review)	329	— St. Michael's	345
— Song of Praise, A' (Review)	551	Dunstan, Ralph. 'The Littlest One' (Review)	843	Exhibition of the Royal Academy of Arts, The. By Arthur T. Froggatt	309
D'Alvarez, Marguerite. At Queen's Hall	497, 866	Dupré, Marcel. Recitals	639, 640	Exmouth Choral Society	357
Darke, Harold. American tribute to Musical Arrangements at St. Michael's, Cornhill	640, 721	Durban Orchestra. Festival in South Africa	67	Fairchild, Blair. 'Deux Chants populaires persans' (Review) (New York). Ballet-Pantomime, 'Dame Libellule'	137
Darré, Jeanne-Marie. Pianoforte recital	795	Durham University Choral Society	279	— 'Songs from the Chinese' (Review)	326
Davidson, Malcolm. Choral work, 'These are Thy glorious works' (Worcester Festival)	716	Dynastic Theme, Wanted A (Correspondence)	348	'Famous Hymn Tunes,' arranged by Lionel J. Bennett (Review)	552
Davies, Ben. Song recital	262	Dyson, George. Four-Part Song, 'Up in the morning early' (Review)	110	Farjeon, Harry. Pianoforte, Two Free Fugues (Review)	710
Davies, Charles Frederick (Obituary)	139	Eadie, Noël. Song recital	61	Farmer, Archibald. Organ recitals	123
Davies, Sir Walford. Memorial Suite (first performance)	794	Ealing Choral and Orchestral Society	62	Farnam, Lynnwood. A Chat with Recitals (see 640)	344, 720
— Resignation from Temple Church	565	Ealing Philharmonic Society	111, 275	Farrar, Ernest. Tribute to the Memory of	123
Davies, Tudor. Song recital, with Miss Phyllis Archibald	574	— Coming Season, The	726	Fauré (Paris). New Trio...	505
Davril, Cynthia. Song recital	426, 794	East Anglican Association of Musical Societies, The	127	Faversham Parish Church, Brahms's 'Requiem' at	51
Day, E. F. Song, 'Night in the Desert' (Worcester Festival) (see Review, 842)	717	East Herts Musical Society	418, 491	Federation of Music Clubs	130
De Falla, Manuel (Amsterdam). Seven Spanish Chansons	360	Eastbourne, Music at	799, 870	Felber, Rudolf. Gustav Mahler	311
— (Paris). New work for Voices and Orchestra, 'El Retablo de Maex Pedro'	650	— Musical Festival	870	Fellowes, Dr. E. H. Byrd's 'Cradle Song, A' (Review)	407
— Pianoforte, 'Fantasia Boetica' (Review)	479	Ecclesiastical Music Lectures at King's College	123	— Byrd's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Review)	111
De la Tombelle, F. Offertoire, for Organ, on 'Meum ac Vestrum Sacrificium' (Review)	481	Eccles's, Henry, Borrowings (Correspondence)	790	— Byrd's Masses (Review)	111
De Pachtmann and a 'scene' at his Chestfield recital (see 841)	38	Edinburgh, Music at 64, 133, 205, 279, 356, 430, 502, 577, 648, 798, 870	268	— Phillip Rosseter's 'Book of Airs, 1601' (Review)	478
De Sabata, Victor (Rome). 'La Notte di Platon'	874	— Musical Competitive Festival...		— Songs, Dowland's 'From silent Night' and Ford's 'What, then, is Love?' (Review)	407
Debussy, Pianoforte, 'D'un Cahier d'Esquisses' (Review)	476	— St. Giles's Cathedral, Appointment of Mr. W. Greenhouse Alt	640	— Two Albums of Dowland's Songs (Review)	842
Delage (Paris). Two 'Poèmes' for Voice and Orchestra	504	— St. John the Evangelist, 'St. Matthew' Passion at	344	Ferrari, Gustave. Organ, 'Entrée Festive' (Review)	711
Delius, F., and France (Correspondence) (see 778)	862	Edmonds, Paul. Burmese Music	697	'Fête Galante.' By Hubert J. Foss (see Birmingham, 501)	468
— Pianoforte Concerto at the Royal Philharmonic Society	352	Eichheim, Henry. Suite, 'Oriental Impressions'	425	Fetters, Arnold. Poetry and Modern Choralism	35
— 'Song of the High Hills' at the Royal Philharmonic Society	50	Elgar. Arrangement of a Handel Overture (see 715)	712	Filleul, H. (Paris). Overture	505
— (Vienna). Violoncello Concerto	304	— First Symphony, at Queen's Hall 'Proms.'	793	Finlay, Kenneth G. Six Part-songs (Review)	110
Demuth, Norman F. 'César Franck' programme	50	— Music to Laurence Binyon's 'Arthur'	272	Fino, Giocondo. 'Cantantibus Organis' (Review)	711
Denham, George. 'Mastery of the Keyboard' (Review)	406	— Pianoforte and Violin Sonata: Second Movement, 'Romance' (Review)	48	Finzi, Gerald. Song, 'The Cupboard' (Review)	842
Derby Choral Union. Coming Season, The	793	— The Neglect of (Correspondence) (see 550, 625)	569, 642, 722	Fiske, Dwight (Vienna). Fantasy for Pianoforte	435
		— Violin Concerto in South Africa	119	Fletcher, Percy E. Sacred Cantata, 'The Passion of Christ' (Review)	109
		Elgar-Atkins Edition (1911) of the 'St. Matthew' Passion, Sir George Henschel on the	332	Flood, W. H. Gratton. New Light on Early Tudor Composers:
		Elizabethan Musical Competition Festival (see 333)	53, 191, 268, 729	XXVII.—Gilbert Banaster	319
		— Second Festival	868	XXVIII.—John Gwynneth, Mus. Doc.	611
		Ellis, Dorothy. Song recital	353	Flower, Newman. 'George Frederic Handel: His Personality and his Times' (Review)...	470
		Ellis, William. Lecture-recital, Tudor Church Music	194	Fly, Leslie. Twelve Miniatures for Pianoforte (Review)	485
		Elwes, Gervase. Memorial Fund	562

	Page		Page		Page
Fogg, Eric. 'Dawn Song' (Review) ...	326	Goldmark, Ruben (New York). Negro Rhapsody ...	208	Harriss, Dr. Charles, and the Imperial Choir ...	803
— New Quartet (Manchester) ...	431	Good Words for Mendelssohn (Correspondence) ...	197	Harrison, Beatrice. Concert (see 477) ...	571
— Part-songs 'To Blossoms,' 'The Centipede' (Review) ...	110	Goodhart, A. M. Carol, 'His Birthday keep with a joyous lay' (Review) ...	47	Harrison-Gossens Concert ...	425
— Pianoforte, 'Faery Pieces' and 'Arabesque' (Review) ...	710	Goole Musical Society ...	279	Harrison, Julius. Duet, from 'The Canterbury Pilgrims' (Worcester Festival) ...	717
— 'Poem, A,' for violoncello or violin (Review) ...	48	Goossens, Eugène. Chamber Concerts (see 425) ...	202, 353, 354	— Pianoforte, 'The Ledbury Parson' (Review) ...	479
Ford, Donald. Song (Review) ...	329	— Incidental music to 'East of Suez' (Review) ...	479	Harrogate, Music at ...	133, 357, 431, 502, 577, 648, 730, 799
— (Review) ...	479	— (New York). New Sextet ...	801	Hartlepool's Musical Competition Festival, The ...	124
Forfar Choral Union ('Caractacus') ...	279	— New 'Sinfonietta' ...	276	Hartley, John. Retirement ...	640
Foss, Hubert J. 'Fête Galante' ...	468	— Pianoforte Quintet ...	202	Harty, Hamilton (Bradford). 'Comedy' Overture (Revised form) ...	278
— Lecture-Recital at Croydon ...	733	— Royal Philharmonic Society ...	277	Harvey, A. H. Paper on 'Humorous Songs' ...	566
Foster, Megan. Song recital ...	426	— 'Silence' (Review) ...	110	Has Music Descriptive Power? By Eric Blom ...	30
Foster, Myles Birket (Obituary) ...	139	— Songs, 'Melancholy' and 'Philomel' ...	202	Haydn (Vienna). Concerto for Violin and Orchestra ...	435
Foulds, John. 'World Requiem, A' ...	864	— (Germany). Tone-Poem, 'The Eternal Rhythm' ...	136	Haydn Keeton Memorial (Correspondence) ...	197
Fourdrain, Felix (Paris). 'La Griffée,' at the Opéra-Comique ...	874	Goss, John. Song recital ...	201	Hayes, Roland. Song recital ...	353
Fowles, Ernest. 'Musical Competition Festivals' (Review) ...	498	Gould, William Monk (Obituary) ...	365	— 'Hearing with the Eye,' By 'Feste' ...	764
Fox-Strangways, A. H. Musical Association paper, 'Translation of Songs, The' ...	351	Gounod's 'Faust' ? Who wrote (Correspondence) ...	57	Heath, John R. Three Short Pieces for Wind Instruments ...	202
Foxell, W. J. 'Elements of Musical Appreciation' (Review) ...	699	Grace, Harvey. Franck's Organ Music (see 270) ...	100, 174, 244	— Violin, 'In the Heart of the Country' (Review) ...	329
Francis, G. T. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (Review) ...	561	— Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas (see 723) ...	616, 690, 768, 854	Hebden Bridge. Male-Voice Choir ...	879
Frank Centenary (see 50, 67, 109, 177, 270) ...	39, 69, 186	Grafton Philharmonic Society. Coming Season, The ...	793	— Todmorden Orchestra ...	790
Frank, César. Unpublished works by Franck's Organ Music. By Harvey Grace (see 270) ...	100, 174, 244	Graham, John. 'Century of Welsh Music' (Review) ...	625	Hedgcock, Walter. Testimonial Concert ...	403, 714
Franklin, Henry. Appointment ...	803	Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' 49, 113, 192, 249, 329, 409, 482, 562, 635, 711, 785, 847		Hegner, Anna. Recital (see 498) ...	425
Freund, Marya. Schönberg's 'Pierrot Lunaire' ...	863	Grantham Philharmonic Society ...	279	Heller, Hans Ewald (Vienna). 'Adam and Eve' ...	435
Froggatt, Arthur T. 'Exhibition of the Royal Academy of Arts, The' ...	399	Great Eastern Railway Musical Society Greenbaum, H. 'Sea Poem, A' (Queen's Hall 'Proms.') ...	644	Hempel, Frieda. 'Jenny Lind' Concerts ...	456, 867
Froyaigeat (Paris). 'Poème de la Nuit' ...	505	Greene, Plunket. Recital ...	61	Henderson, W. J. 'Richard Wagner: His Life and His Dramas' (Review) ...	845
Fuller-Maitland, J. A. Pianoforte, 'At the Court of Queen Anne,' an 'Album of Twenty Easy Pieces' (Review) ...	709	Gresham College Music Lectures ...	211, 803	Henry, Alfred. Songs, 'Ten Alpine Pastorals' (Review) ...	842
— and W. Barclay Squire. 'Twenty-Five Pieces from Benjamin Cosyn's Vignol Book' (Review) ...	479	Greville, Ursula, and the Wolverhampton Musical Society ...	353	Henry Eccles's Borrowings (Correspondence) ...	790
Fumet, D. V. (Paris). 'Cantique du Firmament' ...	505	— Songs, 'Illusions' and 'Fox-gloves' (Review) ...	406	Henry, Leigh. Song, 'Spring Morning' (Review) ...	842
Gainsborough Musical Society ...	133	Grew, Sydney. Byrd's 'O God, give ear,' No. 1 of 'Psalmes, Sonets, and Songs of Sadnes and Pietie' (Review) ...	111	Henry Littleton (see 37) ...	17
Gallico, Paolo (New York). Dramatic Oratorio, 'The Apocalypse' ...	429	— Our Favourite Musicians from Stanford to Holbrooke (Review) ...	256	Henschel, Sir George, on the Elgar Atkins Edition (1911) of the 'St. Matthew' Passion ...	332
Galloway Musical Competitive Festival ...	137	— 'Polymeric Edition of 16th Century Vocal Music' (Review) ...	111	— Songs, 'She comes not' and 'Since I have given you' (Review) ...	479
Gamble, William. Music Engraving and Printing' (Review) ...	324	Griffith, Patrick Joseph (Obituary) ...	211	Herbert, Muriel. Songs, 'Beauty' and 'Renouncement' (Review) ...	429
Garbled Reviews (Correspondence) (see 33, 113) ...	125	Grimby, Music at ...	205	Herma, Sonia. Song recital ...	476
Gardiner, Gale. Song recital ...	353	Groat, Edith. Song recital ...	866	Hertford Parish Church, Brahms's 'Requiem' at ...	418
Gardiner, H. Balfour. 'April' (Philharmonic Choir) ...	274	Grove, New Edition of ...	777	Heseltine, Philip. 'Frederick Delius' (Review) (see 862) ...	778
— Songs, 'Quiet Garden' and 'Rybbesdale' (Review) ...	406	— (see Correspondence, 861).		— Robert Jones and his Prefaces 99, 168
Gardner, Archdeacon. 'Missa Sancti Laurentii' (Review) ...	843	Guild of Singers and Players ...	436	Hickey, Vivian. Song, 'Wander-Thirst' (Review) ...	406
Gärtner, Hans (Vienna). 'Dana' (Ballet) ...	435	Guildford, Music at ...	64	Highgate School Concert (see 630) ...	644
Gatty, Nicholas. Opera, 'Prince Feron' or 'The Princess's Suitors,' at the 'Old Vic.' ...	272	Hackett, Charles ...	353	Hill, Arthur George (Obituary) ...	507
— (Review) ...	184	Hadow, Sir Henry. British Music Society, 'William Byrd' ...	571	Hill Rivington String Quartet ...	51
Gerhardt, Elena. Recital ...	277	Hahn, Reynaldo (Paris). 'Nausicaa' ...	651	Hillforts, N.B. Choral Society ...	357
German, Edward. Organ, 'Fantasia on March Themes' (Review) ...	327	Haley, Olga. Tea-Time Concerts ...	61, 201	Hindemith, Paul (Germany). Kleine Kammermusik ...	433
Germany. International Society for Contemporary Music (see 477, 506, 549) ...	130, 433	Halifax Band Festival ...	575	— 'Nush-Nushi' Dances ...	793
— Music in 67, 136, 211, 360, 433, 649, 801, 872		— Choral Society ...	726	— One-Act Opera, 'Murderer! Woman's Hope' ...	136
Gibbs, C. Armstrong. Part-song, 'Hey nonny no!' (Review) ...	110	— Madrigal Society. Visit to London ...	797	— String Quartet (see 649, 801) ...	277, 872
— Song, 'Covent Garden' (Review) ...	842	— Music at ...	279, 357, 730, 870	(Vienna). New Quartet ...	875
— 'Vision of Night' (Queen's Hall 'Proms.') ...	727	Ham, Dr. Albert. Presentation ...	194	Hinton, Arthur. Quintet ...	277
Giesecke, Walter. Pianoforte recital ...	795, 864	Hambourg, Mark. 'How to Play the Pianoforte' (Review) ...	257	— 'Semele' at Queen's Hall ...	200
Gilbert, H. F. 'Dance in the Place Congo' (Queen's Hall 'Proms.') ...	793	Hamer, Alban. Lecture-Recital ...	566	Hislop, Joseph. At Albert Hall ...	474, 794
Gill, Harry (Harrogate). 'A Yorkshire Song' ...	799	Hamerik, Sir Asger (Obituary) ...	875	Hodge, Herbert. Services and Recitals at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey ...	787, 859
Gilly, Dinh. At the Albert Hall ...	353	Hamilton, Janet. Songs, 'The Great Child' and 'Endymion' (Review) ...	842	Holbrooke, Josef. Song, 'Clown's Song' (Review) ...	406
Giltay, W. J. 'Bow Instruments: Their Form and Construction' (Review) ...	778	Hampshire Advertiser and Independent, Centenary of the 'A Century of Hampshire Music' ...	630	— (Vienna). 'The Children of Don' ...	364
Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union. Coming Season, The ...	792	Hampshire Organists' Association, Bournemouth Branch of the ...	566	Holman, Phyllis. Song recital ...	61
Glasgow, Music at ...	133, 279, 330	Hampstead Garden Suburb Choral Society ...	354	Holmfirth and District Musical Society. Coming Season, The ...	792
— Musical Competition Festival ...	427	Handel Festival (see 550) 191, 194, 365, 402, 495		Holst, Gustav (Bristol). Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda (see 283) ...	278
— Orpheus Choir monthly record, 'The Lute' ...	626	— Festival of the late 'seventies, A (Correspondence) ...	789	— Fugal Overture and Fugal Concerto (Queen's Hall 'Proms.') (see Eastbourne, 870) ...	793
Glazounov, A. 'Stenka Razin' ...	59	— (Germany). Opera, 'Giulo Cesare' ...	649	— 'Hecuba's Lament' by the Philharmonic Choir ...	274
Gloucester, All Saints' Church. New Organ at ...	787	— Society. Coming Season, The Handel's Borrowings (Correspondence) ...	752	— Musical Association Paper, 'Tercentenary of Byrd and Weekes' (see 196) ...	199
Godfrey, Graham (Birmingham). 'The Golden Journey to Samarkand' ...	355	— Theodora' (Correspondence) ...	723	— New Opera, 'The Perfect Fool,' at Covent Garden (see 389, 406, 476) ...	423
Gold, Edith. Song recital ...	866	Hanley. Potteries Choral Society ...	787	— 'Planets, The' (see 136) ...	793
		Hanwell. St. Mellitus's, Gounod's 'Gallia' at ...	345	— Score, 'Savitrì' (Review) ...	478
		Harlech Annual Festival ...	577	Holt, Richard. Encore Question, The (see 322, 348, 352, 395, 420, 493, 548) ...	401
		Harlesden Philharmonic Society. Coming Season, The ...	792	Holt-Finney, Constance. Song (Review) ...	326
		Harrington, Mount View Hall ...	283
		Harris, Dr. William H. Organ Music, Fantasy, on 'Babylon's Streams' (Review) ...	46

	Page		Page		Page
Honegger, Arthur (New York). 'Horace Victorieux' ...	136	Jenkins, Cyril. Four-part Song, 'Impressions' (Review) ...	110	Lee, E. Markham. Two-Part Song, 'The Shepherd's Holiday' (Review)...	110
— (Paris). 'Chant de Joie' ...	504	Jersey Musical Competitive Festival ...	53	Leeds Choral Union. Coming Season, The ...	793
— (Paris). Overture to Shakespeare's 'Tempest' ...	505	Jervis-Read, H. V. 'Little Preludes for Pianoforte' (Review) ...	480	Leeds, Music at ...	64, 133, 206, 279, 431, 577, 730, 799, 870
— (Paris). Suite, 'Le Dit des Jeux du Monde' ...	362	Johannesburg Town Hall. Bach recital ...	122	— Musical Competition Festival ...	124, 196, 334, 645, 729
Horder, Rev. W. Garrett (Obituary) ...	139	Johnson, Bernard, Civic Tribute to ...	50	— Musical Festival ...	134
Horfied Choral Society ...	205	Jones, Leslie. Song recital ...	497	— Second Annual Eisteddfod ...	340
Horne, J. T. Organ recitals ...	267	Jones, Robert, and his Prefaces. By Philip Heseltine ...	99, 168	Leginska, Ethel. Pianoforte recitals ...	61, 573
Horne's Choral and Orchestral Society ...	194	Jongen, Joseph (Amsterdam). 'Sérénade tendre' ...	208	Leicester, Music at ...	64
Horton, J. R. (Harrogate). Theme and Variations for Violoncello ...	577	Joseph, Jane M. 'Festival Venite' (the Philharmonic Choir) ...	497	Leicester Philharmonic Society. Coming Season, The ...	793
Howard-Jones, E. Recital ...	498	Judd, Percy. 'Glycine's Song' (Review) ...	479	Leigh-on-Sea Choral Society. Coming Season, The ...	792
Howells, Dorothy. Pianoforte Concerto in D minor (Queen's Hall 'Proms.') ...	727	— Songs, 'The Little Waves of Breeffy' and 'Tread lightly here' (Review) ...	406	Lemare, Edwin, Sen. Resignation ...	123
— Song, 'If you met a Fairy' (Review) ...	406	'Kalender of Hymns Ancient and Modern, A,' and the English Hymnal, 1923 Edition ...	108	Leonard, Laurence. Song recital ...	795
Howells, Herbert (Eastbourne). New Pastoral Rhapsody ...	870	Kalisch, Alfred. Question for Critics, A ...	24	Ley, Henry G. 'Ascension Hymn' (Review) ...	481
— Song, 'King David' (Review) ...	478	— and Percy Colson. Opera, 'She Stoops to Conquer' ...	184	— Communion Service (Review) ...	843
— Song, 'O my dear hert' (Review) ...	478	Kaminsky, Heinrich (Vienna). 'String Quartet' ...	875	— Organ Arrangements, 'Extracts from the works of Vaughan Williams' (Review) ...	327
Howes, Frank S. Taste ...	396	Karg-Elert, Sigfrid. Organ Music, 'Homage to Handel' (Review) ...	40	— Organ Arrangements, 'Handel's Operatic Overtures' (Review) ...	327
Howes, Marie. Song recital ...	795	— Seven Pastels from the Lake of Constance' and 'Two Choral Improvisations' (Review) ...	407	Liebh, Mrs. Frank. Sight and Sound, 'Eye-Music' ...	310
Hoyland, C. E. 'Missa Sancti Wilfridi' (Review) ...	843	Kattinger, Rudolf (Vienna). 'Grotesque Serenade' ...	435	Lincoln, Music at ...	64, 870
Hubay, Jenő (Budapest). 'Petőfi' Centenary Symphony, The ...	360	Keighley, Music at ...	64, 279, 648	Lincoln Cathedral ...	365
Huddersfield, Music at ...	64, 279, 357, 431, 799, 870	— Musical Union. Coming Season, The ...	792	— Commemoration Service, Byrd Tercentenary ...	494
Huddersfield Musical Competition Festival ...	268	— Summerscales' Musical Compositions, The ...	860	— Lindberg, Helge. Song recital ...	497
Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society at Ripon Cathedral ...	491	Kenningham, Joseph (Obituary) ...	436	— Litante, Judith. Song recital ...	426
Hudson, John William (Obituary) ...	875	Kent Musical Competitive Festival ...	427	Liverpool Church Choir Association ...	51, 418
Hughes, Herbert. 'Carol of Jesus Child' (Review) ...	842	Keussler, Gerhard von. New Symphony, 'To Death' ...	68	Liverpool Hamlet Free Church, New Organ at ...	418
Hughes, H. V. 'Latin Hymnody' (Review) ...	406	Kidderminster Choral Society ...	206	— Memorial to Harry Evans, Unveiling of ...	431
Hulbert, Dr. H. H. Lectures on Eurhythm ...	39, 106	— Coming Season, The ...	792	— Music at ...	64, 133, 206, 279, 357, 431, 502, 578, 799, 870
Hull, Dr. Eaglefield. Organ recital ...	490	Kimbell, H. Julian. British Players and Singers: No. IX.—Norman Allin ...	241	— Philharmonic Society. Coming Season, The ...	792
Hull, Dr. Eaglefield. Organ recital ...	490	— No. X.—Walter Hyde ...	820	— Rushworth & Dreaper Concerts ...	279
Hull, Music at ...	138, 205, 357, 431, 799, 870	King, Alison. Song recital ...	202	— Welsh Choir ...	362, 865
— Musical Competitive Festival ...	500	King, Oliver (Obituary) ...	803	— Livesey, F. J. Testimonial to ...	394
— Vocal Society. Coming Season, The ...	793	— (see Correspondence, 862).		Llandaff Cathedral. University College Choral Society and the Cathedral Choir ...	266
Hungarian Gipsy Music, Some Notes on (Correspondence) ...	269	King's College. Lectures on Ecclesiastical Music ...	787	Llandudno. Season Extension Choral Society ...	133
Hunter, Albert E. (Obituary) ...	139	Kingston, Morgan. At Albert Hall ...	426	Llanyncha Parish Church, New Organ at Llynypia. Mid-Rhondda Orchestra, The ...	357
Hurstpierpoint, St. John's College, fourth Annual Concert at ...	357	Kingston, St. Luke's Choral Society ...	212	Lochgelly Choral Union. Coming Season, The ...	793
Hyde, Walter (see 'British Players and Singers').		Kingston String Quartet ...	212	Lockwood, Walter. Presentation to London Baptist Association ...	418
Ibert, M. Jacques. 'Trois Pièces,' for Organ (Review) ...	481	Kingston, Strubton, and District Musical Society ...	212	— London Choral Society ...	62, 275
Ilkley, Music at ...	133, 345, 870	Kirkcaldy Musical Society ...	357, 793	— Coming Season, The ...	792
— Vocal Society ...	133, 345	Kitchener, Frederick. Recollections of Life at Cairo ...	203	London Musical Competition Festival ...	124, 268, 798
In Memoriam Dr. Bunnett (Correspondence) ...	125	Klein, Herman. Lecture 'How to Sing Mozart' ...	273	— Organ Competition ...	193
Incorporated Society of Musicians: Annual Conference ...	128	Klein, John W. Nietzsche and Bizet ...	27	London School of Dalcroze Eurhythmics ...	436
Inflated Orchestras (Correspondence) ...	347	Kneller Hall Concert ...	573, 803	London Scottish Choir ...	267
Influence of the Elizabethan Composers on Purcell, The (Correspondence) (see 196, 199) ...	346, 419, 492, 568	— Competition (see 'Report on Competitive Scheme').		London Shipping Orchestral Society, The ...	876
Ingenhoven, Jan (Amsterdam). String Quartet ...	208	Kobbe, Gustav. 'Complete Opera Book' (Review) ...	406	London Society of Organists ...	193, 344, 418, 565
Innovation and Cliché in Music. By M. D. Calvorcoressi ...	25	Kodaly. Chamber Music and Songs ...	40	— West and North-West Branch ...	193
International Competition for Composers ...	570	Kœchlin (Paris). 'A l'Ombre de la Fontaine' and 'Caravanes' ...	362	London Sunday School Choir ...	127, 275, 364
— for New Sacred Music ...	267	— Paris. 'Ode Funèbre à la Mémoire des jeunes Femmes Défuntes' ...	69	London Symphony Orchestra (see 776) ...	60, 200, 277, 352, 425, 503, 865
International Competitive Festival, Dieppe ...	429	— Sonata for Oboe and Pianoforte ...	505	— Bax, Arnold. Symphony ...	860
International Goodwill Association. Project for a 'Song of Peace' ...	626	Konjensky (Paris). Fantasia for 'Cello and Orchestra ...	362	— Bruckner. Symphony ...	60
International Society for Contemporary Music ...	136, 433, 477, 549	Korngold, Eric. Overture to a Drama (Queen's Hall 'Proms.') ...	644	— Eichheim, Henry. Suite, 'Oriental Impressions' ...	425
— Festival of Modern Chamber Music ...	477	— (Vienna). New Pianoforte Quintet ...	364	— Goossens, Eugène. 'Sinfonietta' ...	277
— Italian Committee, The, and the Salzburg Festival ...	549	Krehbiel, Henry Edward (Obituary) ...	365	— Nicolai Sokolof ...	425
— Supplementary Festival, The, at Salzburg ...	731	Kullmann, Alfred (Paris). Lyric Scene, 'Tentation' ...	505	— Strauss, 'Alpine' Symphony ...	864
Ipswich Municipal Concerts ...	799	Kunneke. Light opera, 'The Cousin from Nowhere' ...	132	— Weingartner Concerts ...	503
Ireland, Music in ...	66, 134, 207, 281, 432, 504, 578, 648, 730, 800, 872	Kurz, Selina. At Albert Hall ...	573	— Williams, Gerrard. Three Preludes ...	352
Ireland, John. Pianoforte, 'Equinox' ...	709	Labette, Dora. At the Goossens Concerts ...	436	— Lorenz, Robert. An Amateur on Critics ...	178
— Second Pianoforte Trio ...	202	Ladelle, Marie. Song recital ...	423	— Louis Vienne Fund, The ...	489
Islington Choral Society. Coming Season, The ...	793	Landark (Upper Ward) Musical Competitive Festival ...	429	— Louth Eisteddfod ...	196
'It should be B flat' (Correspondence) (see 478) ...	643	Landormy, Paul. History of Music ...	777	— Lowestoft, Music at ...	357
Jarnach, Philipp (Germany). 'Sinfonia Brevis' ...	433	Langham Choral Society ...	354	— Lucas, Stanley. Organ recitals ...	858
— Sonatina for Flute and Pianoforte ...	424	Lark, Kingsley. Song recital ...	866	— Lute, The, monthly record of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir ...	626
— (Vienna). String Quartet ...	875	'Latin Church Music of the Polyphonic Schools' (Review) ...	482	Lyon, James. Four Songs from the Chinese' (Review) ...	407
Jeboult, Harold A. Presentation ...	194	League of Arts, The ...	192, 477	Lytham Musical Competitive Festival ...	501
Jenkin, Olive. At Queen's Hall ...	277	Leamington, Music at ...	502
		— Musical Competitive Festival ...	576

	Page		Page		Page
Maas, Madame Joyce. Appeal for Fund on behalf of (Obituary) ...	331	Miltoun, Francis. Paris Opéra, The ...	686	New Light on Early Tudor Composers. By W. H. Grattan Flood : XXVII. — Gilbert Banaster ...	319
MacArthur, Donald. Old Village Church Music ...	264	'Mission Hymn-Book, with Tunes, The' (Review) ...	185	— XXVIII. — John Gwynne, The. Mus. Doc. ...	621
MacDonald, Annabel ...	277	'Missionary Hymn-Book, with Tunes, A' (Review) ...	185	New Light on Some Masterpieces. By Moritz Rosenthal ...	237
— Sheila ...	277	Mitchell, Ogilvie. 'Talking Machines' (Review) ...	624	New Music Teaching, The. By Percy A. Scholes ...	316
MacDowell, Edward (Vienna). 'Celtic' Sonata ...	435	Modern Organ Stops (Correspondence) (see 699) ...	789	New Queen's Hall Orchestra ...	60, 727
Mackenzie, Sir Alexander. Royal Philharmonic Society Beethoven Medal ...	65	Moeran, E. J. Concert ...	131	New York, Music at 68, 136, 208, 281, 362, 434, 650, 732, 801, 872
Mackinlay, Sterling. Twenty Years as a Teacher of Singing ...	803	— String Quartet in A, and Violin Sonata in E minor ...	131	New Zealand, Christchurch Cathedral : A talk with Dr. John C. Bradshaw ...	340
Maclean, Alex. Morvaren. 'The Annunciation' (Review) ...	111	Moger, Gladys. Song recital ...	277	Newcastle, Bach Choir ...	193, 418
McEwen, J. B. (Dumfries). 'Solway' Symphony. First complete performance ...	205, 276	Mold, Music at ...	502	— Cathedral Choir and Recitals ...	51, 194, 859
— Sonata-Fantasia (First performance) ...	130	— National Eisteddfod, The (see 626) ...	645, 729	— Jesmond Parish Church, New ...	566
— (Toronto). 'Biscay' Quartet, in A ...	209	Monkseaton Musical Society ...	357	— Music at ...	206, 280, 357, 871
Magrini, Gustavo. 'Manuale di Musica' (Review) ...	323	Montgomery County Musical Festival ...	432	— Musical Tournament ...	501
Mahler, Gustav. By Rudolf Felber ...	311	Moody, C. H., Mus. Doc. Degree ...	787	— Royal Grammar School ...	491
Malashkin. Russian Song, 'O could I but express in song' (Review) ...	183	Moore, H. E. 'La France qui chante' (Review) ...	843	— Memorial Organ ...	206
Malipiero (New York). Ballad for String Quartet ...	801	Morecambe Musical Competitive Festival ...	428	— (Staffs) Male-Voice Glee Union ...	165
— 'Orfeo' (Review) ...	184	Mores, J. Francis. Song recital ...	795	Newman, Ernest. Moussorgsky as a Song-Writer ...	93, 165
— Part I. of 'L'Orfeide' (Review) ...	479	Morfora, Kristyna. At Æolian Hall and Albert Hall ...	353	Newmarch, Rosa. Some Czechoslovak Choral Works ...	171, 762
Malton String Orchestra ...	431	Morris, Gwynn. 'Song of the Highway' (Review) ...	842	— Russian Opera' (French Edition) ...	406
Malton, W. H. C. Paoletti's Office for the Holy Communion (Review) ...	482	— R. O. 'Contrapuntal Technique of the 16th Century' (Review) ...	254	Newport (Mon.), Music at ...	65
Malvern Oratorio Choir. Coming Season, The ...	792	Moss, Arthur W. (Obituary) ...	803	Newton, Ernest. 'Copy-Books for Musical Theory' (Review) ...	480
Malvern Priory Church ...	51, 345	'Moszkowsky Album for Piano' (Review) ...	710	Nichol, Elizabeth. Song recital ...	353
Manchester, Music at 206, 280, 431, 799, 871 ...	124	Moussorgsky as a Song Writer. By Ernest Newman ...	93, 165	Nicholson, Sydney H. Communion Service in C (Review) ...	843
— Musical Competitive Festival ...	504, 576, 863	Moussorgsky's 'Song of the Flea' (Review) ...	183	— Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in G (Review) ...	482
— Sixty-sixth Hallé Season at ...	799	Moy, Edgar. Piano, 'Fanciful Sketches' (Review) ...	328	— New Edition of Merbecke (Review) ...	482
Manchester and District : A Mid-Season Stocktaking ...	65	Muller-Hermann, Johanna (Germany). Overture ...	433	Nielka, Marguerite. At Queen's Hall ...	574
Manière, L. 'Four Pieces for Organ' (Review) ...	710	— (Vienna). Sonata for 'Cello and Piano' ...	435	Nielsen, Carl (Germany). Quintet ...	433
Mansfield, Purcell J. Organ Music, Concert-Overture in F, and Scherzo-Caprice (Review) ...	46	Mullings, Frank ...	277	Nietzsche and Bizet. By John W. Klein ...	27
Marchant, Stanley. Carol, 'Rejoice, the Christ has come' (Review) ...	47	Murdoch, William, and Albert Sammons, at Wignmore Hall ...	130	Nikisch, Mitja. Piano, recital ...	354
— 'Five Nonsense Songs' (Review) ...	183	Murray-Aynsley, Elsa. Song recital ...	502	No 'Cuts' Wanted (Correspondence) (see 401) ...	493
— Singer's Pilgrimage' (Review) (see 254) ...	574	Murton, Marshall. Song recital ...	274	Noble, Richmond. 'Shakespeare's Use of Songs' (Review) (see 643) ...	539
Marionette Opera ...	350, 424	— Music and Letters ...	134	Noble, T. Tertius. Anthems (Review) ...	561
Marsh, Ethel (Obituary) ...	365	Music at Meal-Times ...	625	— Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in B flat (Review) ...	561
Marshall, Eric. Song recital ...	61	Music by Wireless. By 'Feste' (see 405) ...	112	Noelte, Albert (Vienna). 'Vor einem Bilde' ...	803
Marshall, M. E. Piano, 'Happy Little People' (Review) ...	328	Music for Film Stars ...	630	Nonconformist Choir Union ...	858
Martens, Frederick H. 'Art of the Prima Donna, The' (Review) ...	625	Music in Education (Correspondence) (see 253) ...	348	— Thirteenth Annual Festival ...	507
Martin, L. C. 'Sleepers, wake' and the Hallelujah Chorus ...	343	Music in Public Schools (see 630) ...	640	North Lincs (Brigg) Competitive Musical Festival ...	429
Mason, Daniel Gregory (New York). New Symphony ...	208	Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvoceressi 39, 108, 252, 403, 475, 542, 784, 839 ...	784, 839	North Lindsey (Scunthorpe) Musical Competitive Festival ...	429
'Masque of Comus, The,' at Eton (see 191, 273) ...	72	Music in Worship (Correspondence) (see 783) ...	861	North London Musical Competitive Festival ...	53
Matlock Bath Musical Competitive Festival ...	501	Music of Tibet, The. By T. Howard Somervell ...	107	North London Philharmonic Society. Coming Season, The ...	792
Matthay, Tobias. Piano, 'School Madrigals and Motets' ...	51	Music on Paper ...	612	North Notts (Retford) Competitive Musical Festival ...	429
Mayfair Dramatic Club ...	59, 358, 436	Music Printing in the year, 1603. By H. Elliot Button ...	472	Norton, Rev. H. R. 'Andrea Gabrielli's "Missa Brevis" (adapted)' (Review) ...	482
Meale, Arthur. Organ recital ...	578	Music Teacher, The, and the R.C.O. (Correspondence) (see 258, 417) ...	790	Norwich, Music at ...	65, 432, 799
Melba, Dame Nellie (see 396) ...	574	Music Teachers' Association, Portsmouth Branch ...	345	— Musical Competitive Festival ...	501
Melbourne, Mewton Choir ...	503	Musical Association, The, Baker, J. Percy : A Brief Survey of the History of the ...	772	Nottingham, Albert Hall Choir ...	50
— Philharmonic Society ...	207, 429, 733	— Bliss, Arthur : 'Some Aspects of the Present Musical Situation' ...	349	— Civic Tribute to Mr. Bernard Johnson ...	50
Melvin, Arthur Hugh (Obituary) ...	211	Boult, Adrian C. : 'Orchestral Problem of the Future, The' ...	273	— High Pavement Chapel ...	345, 859
Mendelssohn Letters, Some, By Herbert Thompson ...	461, 605	— Bridge, Sir J. Frederick : 'Deering's Country Cryes' ...	66	— Music at ...	133, 280
Mexborough Musical Competitive Festival ...	53	— Fox-Strangways, A. H. : 'Translation of Songs' ...	351	— Musical Competitive Festival ...	53
Miaskovsky. Tone-Poem, 'Alastor' (Queen's Hall 'Proms.') ...	793	Holst, Gustav : 'Tercentenary of Byrd and Weelkes' (see 196) ...	199	— St. Mary's, 'St. Matthew' Passion at ...	344
Mid-Somerset (Bath) Musical Competitive Festival ...	53	Pearson, Arthur A. : 'Comedy and Drama in Folk-Song' ...	867	Novello Choir, The ...	130, 283, 354, 477, 622
Middlesbrough, Music at ...	357, 502, 871	'Musical Competition Festival,' By Ernest Powles (Review) ...	499	Novello. 'Hymns and Tunes for Sunday School Anniversary Services,' Set 5 (Review) ...	844
— Musical Competitive Festival ...	124	Musical Directory, 1923 (Review) ...	283	— Octavo Edition (Review) ...	110
— Musical Union ...	726	Musician's Bookshelf, The (Review) 180, 254, 323, 404, 470, 622, 698, 778, 844 ...	844	— Reduction in Prices ...	461, 507, 533
Middleton, H. S. Bach programme (see 721) ...	194	Muswell Hill Presbyterian Literary Society ...	858	Obolensky, Prince Alexis. Albert Hall Concert ...	574
Midland Musical Competitive Festival ...	427	National Brass Band Festival at the Crystal Palace ...	796	Occasional Notes (see 17, 125, 322, 348, 352) 37, 114, 185, 253, 330, 402, 476, 548, 625, 712, 776, 840
Milani, Otto (Obituary) ...	803	National Institute for the Blind, The. Braille Publications ...	144, 787, 859	O'Connor-Morris, G. Holy Communion in E flat (Review) ...	46
Milhaud, M. Darius (Amsterdam). Second Violin Sonata ...	365	— Five Christmas Carols. Work of Blind Poets and Composers ...	768	O'Dwyer, Katharine. Song recital ...	277
— Chamber Music, Sonate (Review) ...	480	— Organ Recitals ...	122	'Oh Caspian' : Where do the words occur? (Correspondence) ...	348
— 'Le Retour de l'Enfant Prodigue' ...	69	— (see Correspondence, 197) ...	406	Okehampton Choral Society ...	280
— Mayra' ...	40	'National Opera Handbook' (Review) ...	406	'Old Vic.' The (see 631) ...	272, 471
— (Paris). 'La Création du Monde' ...	874	National Union of Organists' Associations, The ...	718	Old Village Church Music, By Donald MacArthur ...	265
'Milton' Organ (1637) (Correspondence) ...	347	Nettleship, Ursula. Song recital ...	497	Oldroyd, George. Song, 'In Dreams Fleeting' (Review) ...	326

	Page		Page		Page
Opera and Lord Berners. By Edwin Evans	533	Pitcher, R. J. Appointment	50	Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts. Miaskovsky. Tone-Poem, 'Alastor'	793
Opera in London	128, 423, 497	Pizzetti, Ildebrando. Aria in D major (Review)	708	— Pick-Mangiagalli, Riccardo.	727
Opera Story, The Average	632	— Concert at Wigmore Hall	875	— 'Sortilegi'	727
Orchestration of Bach's Organ Works (Correspondence)...	57	— (Vienna). Violoncello Sonata in F major	364	— Reger, Max. F minor Piano-forte Concerto	793
Orefice, Giacomo (Obituary)	211	Plumstead, Wesleyan Central Hall	211	— Rózycki, Ludomir. Pianoforte Concerto	727
Organ, Model, An Interesting (Correspondence)...	789	Plymouth. British Music Society's Festival	869	— Saint-Saëns. Fantaisie Zoologique	644
Organ Recitals (see 'Recitals').		— Music at	65, 280, 358, 830, 871	— Sainton, Philip P. Two Orchestral Pictures	727
Organ, The, Musical Quarterly	122, 786	— Muley Baptist Church	345	— Smyth, Dame Ethel. Four Choral Preludes	727
Organists, London Society of	193, 344, 418, 565	— 'Poacher's Widow, The' (Correspondence)	348	— Spelman, Timothy. 'Bar-baresques'	793
Oriana Madrigal Society	131, 275, 573	Poetry and Modern Choralism. By Arnold Fettes	35	— Stravinsky, Igor. 'Petroushka'	794
Orton, Albert. Bach recitals	858	Poldini, Edward. Pianoforte, Folies d'autrefois (Review)	479	Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts (see 777)	60, 201, 275, 753
O'Shea, Alfred. Song recital	201	Pollack, Prof. Violin recital	61	— Bloch, Ernest. Three Jewish Poems	141
Ossett Orchestral Society...	358	— 'Polly', Sequel to 'The Beggar's Opera' (see 550)	129	— Dohnányi, Ernst von. Variations on a Nursery Song	401
Oundle School, Bach's Mass in B minor at	62	— (Review) (see 192)	184	— Holst, Gustav. 'Planets, The'	793
— Midsummer Concert Programme	550	Pontefract Competitive Musical Festival	529	— Satz, Ilya. Masterlinck's 'Blue Bird, The'	275
Oxford Bach Choir and Cambridge Musical Society at the Royal Albert Hall	211, 274	Pontypridd. Griffiths-Pugh Pianoforte Trio	403	— Question for Critics, A. By Alfred Kalisch	24
Oxford, Christ Church Cathedral	193, 344, 345	Port of London Authority Amateur Orchestra	354	— Quilter, Roger. Pianoforte, Country Pieces (Review)	709
'Oxford Church Music' (Review)	561	Porter, Ambrose. Organ recitals	123	— Songs, 'Over the land is April' and 'In the Highlands' (Review)	326
Oxford, Contest in Verse-Speaking	403	Portsmouth Choral Society	133	Rachmaninov, C sharp minor Prelude (Correspondence)	790
— Music at	65, 133, 206, 280, 358, 432, 502, 578, 648, 871	Portnoy, Leo. Violin, Concertinos (Review)	561	— 'The Bells' (Philharmonic Choir)	274
Oxsted Road Congregational Church, New Organ at	787	Portsea Parish Church. 'St. Matthew's Passion at	345	— Ramsey, B. Mansell (Obituary)	733
Paderewski at Queen's Hall (see 548)	572	Portsmouth, Music at	65, 134, 207, 358, 432, 730, 871	— Randerson, H. E. String Quartet	277
Paignton, S.W. Section of Incorporated Society of Musicians	432	— Musical Competitive Festival	428	— Ratcliffe, William. Organ recitals	787
Palmer, E. Davidson. 'Unknown Truth about the Voice and its Development, The' (Review)	324	— Philharmonic Society. Coming Season, The	792	— Ravanello, Oreste. 'Six Easy Pieces for Organ or Harmonium' (Review)	711
Palmer, Geoffrey Molyneux. Irish opera, 'The Sea of Moyle' (see 578)	648	— Welfare Association	429	— Ravel, Maurice. Chamber Music Concert	866
Palmer, Peggy. Chappell Gold Medal...	578	Poulenc, Francis. First Book of Impromptus for Pianoforte 'Promenades' (Review)	479	— Violin Music, 'Berceuse sur le nom de Faure' (Review)	328
Panpipes. New Musical Journal	715	Poynter, John. Choral, 'Rough wind that moanest long' (Review)	110	— Recitals (see 331, 566, 638)	51, 123, 194, 267, 345, 418, 491, 566, 641, 721, 787, 788
Par and District Choral Society...	358	— Song, 'Shall I, wasting in despair' (Review)	406	— Recollections of Life at Cairo. By Frederick Kitchener	203
Paray, Paul (Paris). Fantaisie for Pianoforte and Orchestra	505	Prendergrast, Dr. William. Church Music, 'St. Joan of Arc' (Review)	561	— Reddish, Meta. Song recital	353
Paris, Music at	69, 139, 362, 504, 650, 803, 873	Press Agents and Criticisms (see 125)	33, 113	— Reger, Max. F minor Pianoforte Concerto (Queen's Hall 'Proms.')	793
Paris Opéra, The. By Francis Miltoun Parkyn, William. Presentation	344	Preston Choral Society	134	— Festival at Breslau	68
Parson Plays, The (Correspondence)	125	Primrose, William. Promising violinist, A	498	— Festival at Leipsic	435
Parsley, Norah. Song recital	497	Pritchard, E. L. M. Service in E (Review)	843	— Report on Competitive Scheme at Kneller Hall (Correspondence)	347
Past Organists of St. Peter's, Brockley (Correspondence)...	421	'Proms.' Impressions of the. By Thomas Armstrong	774	— Respighi, Ottorino. 'Belphagor' (Vienna). Concerto Gregoriano	210
Patterson, Alexander (Obituary)	365	Pullein, John. Organ recitals, Byrd Tercentenary	491	— matica (Vienna). 'Sinfonia drammatica' (Germany). New Opera, Reznicek	872
Pavlova, Madame. Season at Covent Garden	727	— Te Deum in D (Review)	111	— Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas. By Harvey Grace	616, 690, 768, 854
Paying, Lily. Concert	353	Pulver, Jeffrey. 'A Dictionary of Old English Music and Musical Instruments' (Review) (see 140)	844	— (Correspondence)	569, 723
Pearce, Charles W. 'The Priest's Part of the Anglican Liturgy, Choir Offices, and Litany' (Review)	406	— Violin-Tutors of the 17th Century	695	Rhodes, Harold William. Mus. Doc. Degree	622
— Two Easy Pieces for Pianoforte (Review)	480	Puppet Players, The	350, 424	Rhondda, Music at	432
Pearsall's Letters. By W. Barclay Squire	359	Purcell, Henry. Evening Hymn, on a Ground, edited by Harvey Grace (Review)	406	Rhyl Musical Competition Festival	124
Pearson, Arthur A. Musical Association Paper, 'Comedy and Drama in Folk-Song'	867	— Influence of the Elizabethan Composers on (Correspondence) (see 196, 199)	269, 346, 419, 492, 568	Rhythm, Some Ancient Conceptions of. By C. F. Abby Williams	105
Peat, Arthur Hugh Melvin (Obituary)...	211	— Works of. Vol. 22. Catches, Rounds, Two-Part and Three-Part Songs. By W. Barclay Squire and J. A. Fuller-Maitland (Review)	47	— Ricci, Vittorio. 'Il Bel Canto' (Review)	324
Pennarth Choral Society	358	Purley Choral Union	726	Riccielli, Primo (Rome). 'I Compagnacci'	435
Pendleton, Edmond (Vienna). Prelude to the Third Act of a Tragedy	435	Queen's Hall Ballad Concerts	794	— Richardson, Tessa. Song recital	794
Penge and District Choral and Orchestral Society	726	Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts (see 548, 713)	644, 726, 793	— Richmond. St. Matthias's, Passion music at	345
Penge Musical Society	62	— Novelities	644	— Richmond (Yorks) Choral Society	207
Pennrith Musical Society	358	— Breton. Violin Concerto in A minor	726	— Riddings Parish Church, Organ at	418
Penzance Choral Society	133, 871	— Cassado, José. Spanish Rhapsody	727	— Riemschneider, G. Two Sonatas for Organ (Review)	710
People's Palace Choral and Orchestral Societies	48, 200, 211, 275, 354	— Davies, Walford. Memorial Suite (first performance)	794	— Ripon Cathedral, Dvorak's 'Stabat Mater' at	345
— Musical Competitive Festival	797	— Dohnányi. Violin Concerto in D, and Variations on a Nursery Song	727	— Choral Society	358
'Perfect Fool, The,' at Covent Garden (see 406, 476)	423	— Elgar. First Symphony, and Violoncello Concerto	793	— Old Boys' Association	640
— By Edwin Evans (see 406)	389	— Gibbs, Armstrong. 'Vision of Night'	727	— Robbins, Reginald E. Songs (Review)	326
— or 'The Perfect Opera.' By Donald Francis Tovey	464	— Gilbert, H. F. 'Dance in the Place Congo'	793	— Robert Jones and his Prefaces. By Philip Herseltine	99, 168
Performing Rights Society Gazette	331	— Greenbaum, H. 'A Sea Poem'	644	— Robson, Dorothy. Song recital	426
Performing Rights Society. Royalty System	331	— Holst Gustav. Fugal Overture and Fugal Concerto	793	— Rochdale Philharmonic and Orchestral Society. Coming Season, The	793
Peterborough, Music at	206	— Howell, Dorothy. Pianoforte Concerto in D minor	727	— Rochester, Chatham, Gillingham, and District Free Church Choirs' Association, Annual Service of the	858
Petřif Centenary, The	360	— Impressions of the 'Proms.' By Thomas Armstrong	774	— Diocesan Church Choirs Festival	565
Pfitzner, Hans (New York). 'Von Deutscher Seele'...	873	— Korngold, Eric. Overture to a Drama	644	— Music at	134, 207, 280, 648
— Two Romantic 'Deutsche Gesänge' (Vienna). Music at Vienna	210			— Roedel, Joseph L. (Obituary)	578
Philharmonic Choir	274, 497, 630, 726			— Roger - Ducasse. Third Barcarolle (Review)	709
Philharmonic Society, The (see 776)	59, 866
Phillips, Ivy. Song recital	131
Pick-Mangiagalli, 'Sortilegi' (Queen's Hall 'Proms.')...	727
Pincherle, Marc. 'Les Violonistes Compositeurs et Virtuoses' (Review)	471
Pisk, Paul A. (Vienna). Violin Sonata, Op. 5	506

	Page		Page		Page
Rogers, Rev. Prof. C. F. Ecclesiastical Music Lectures	123	St. Nicholas-Cole-Abbey	51, 194, 859	Sheffield, Music at	65, 134, 281, 358, 432, 503, 730, 800, 872
Rome, Music at	70, 137, 208, 282, 363, 434, 651, 732, 871	St. Paul's Cathedral, Brahms's 'Requiem' at	50	Season, The	792
Romford Musical Society	432	St. Paul's, Knightsbridge	639	Shera, F. H. Evening Canticles (Review)	561
Ronald, Sir Landon. Song, 'At Night' (Review)	326	St. Paul's, Onslow Square	859	Sherborne School Chapel Choir. Carol Festival in Sherborne Abbey	51
Rondel Singers, at Blackheath	436	St. Paul's, Portman Square. New Organ at	103	Sherwood Wesleyan Church	267
'Roof and Four Walls, A.' Comedy (Apollo Theatre). By Temple Thurston	186	St. Peter's, Brockley. Past Organists of (Correspondence)	421	Shindler, Alan. Appointment	563
Rootham, Cyril Bradley. 'Brown Earth'	274, 425	St. Stephen's Walbrook. 'Hymn of Praise' at	51	Shindler, Thomas. Resignation from Royal College of Organists	563
— (see Review)	110	Saint-Saëns. 'Fantaisie Zoologique' (Queen's Hall 'Proms.')	644	Shipley Musical Competition Festival	343
— 'Two sisters o' Binnorie, The' (Review)	552	Sainton, Philip P. Two Orchestral Pictures (Queen's Hall 'Proms.')	727	Shirehampton Choral Society	207
— Song, 'West Wind, The' (Review)	842	Salisbury Cathedral Oratorio Choir	521	Shrewsbury Philharmonic Society	281
Roper, E. Stanley. Oxford Choral Songs from the Old Masters' (Edited) (Review)	844	Salzburger, Franz (Vienna). Pianoforte Quartet	875	Sidmouth. Annual Series of Chamber Concerts at	207
Rosenblatt, Joseph. Song recital	497	Salmon, Arthur L. Emotional Conception of Music, The	309	Sight and Sound: 'Eye-Music.' By Mrs. Frank Liebach	310
Rosenthal, Moritz. New Light on Some Masterpieces	237	Salzburg, 'Supplementary' Festival at. By Paul Becher	731	Silk, Dorothy. Concerts of Old Music	61, 210
Rosseter, Phillip. Tercentenary of Round about a Toccata of Galuppi's. By Charles van den Borren	314	Sammons, Albert, and William Murdoch. Joint recital	130	Simon, Ingo. Song recitals	61, 426
Rousseau, Marcel-Samuel (Paris). 'Le Hulla'	651	— and Stanley Curtis. Violin-Organ recital	786	Simpson, Hugh Haley. Song, 'The Birds' (Review)	406
Roussel (Paris). 'Fadnavati'	650	Samuel, Harold. 'Bach' Week	424, 795	Sittingbourne and District Musical Society	358
Rowell, Alec. Songs, 'Birds, The,' and 'Toll-Gate House, The' (Review)	842	Sanderson, Wilfrid. Resignation	859	Sixty Years Ago 58, 198, 271, 348, 421, 643, 862
— Songs, 'Cotswold Love' and 'Old Oliver' (Review)	406	Sandford, Arthur. Cantata, 'Blessed Damosel, The'	62	Skinner, Ernest M. Biography of 'Sleepers, Wake' and the 'Hallelujah' Chorus. By L. C. Martin	343
Royal Academy of Music (see 252)	62, 126, 198, 272, 349, 422, 495, 570, 791, 803	Sandra, Maria. Song recitals	61, 497	Smart, H. 'May the Grace of Christ our Saviour' (Adapted) (Review)	843
— Opera Theatre Fund	253	Satz, Ilya. Maeterlinck's 'The Blue Bird'	275	Smith, Alexander Brent (Worcester Festival). 'In Glorious Freedom'	716
— Sandford, Arthur. 'Blessed Damosel, The'	62	Savage, E. W. Forty years as Organist of St. Thomas's, Winchester	787	— Unexpected in Music, The	537
— Sir Henry Wood at the	126	Scarborough, Music at 65, 134, 207, 280, 800, 871		Smyth, Dame Ethel. 'Boatswain's Mate, The' at the 'Old Vic.'	272
Royal Amateur Orchestra	276	— Philharmonic Society. Coming Season, The	726	— Four Choral Preludes (Queen's Hall 'Proms.')	727
Royal Choral Society 62, 130, 200, 275, 354, 425		Seats, Godfrey. Four New Carols for Christmastide (Review)	844	Snow String Quartet	354
— Coming Season, The	726	Schäfer, Dirk (Vienna). Violin Sonata	210	Society of Church Vocalists, The	490
— Rootham's 'Brown Earth'	425	Schellings's Recital	864	Sokolof, Nicolai. At Queen's Hall	425
— Verdi's 'Requiem'	62	Schmitt, Florent. Pianoforte piece on 'FAURE' (Review) (see Aubert, Louis)	479	Somervell, T. Howard. Music of Tibet, The	107
Royal College of Music 62, 199, 272, 422, 495, 570, 725, 791, 803		Scholes, Percy A. 'Complete Book of the Great Musicians, The' (Review)	624	Songs by Early Women Composers (Correspondence)	725
— Adams, A. Davies. One-Act Opera, 'Qualis'	62	— New Music Teaching, The	316	Songs of Many Lands (Review)	841
— Cobbett, W. W. Prizes for Chamber Music (see 495)	38, 54	Schönberg, Arnold. 'Pierrot Lunaire' (see Freund, Madame Marya)	865	Sorajji, Kaikhosru. Chamber Music, A Quintet (Review)	430
Royal College of Organists (see 193, 859) 49, 119, 258, 343, 417, 489, 590, 563, 636, 854		Schreibler, Fritz (Vienna). Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte	435	— 'Fantaisie Espagnole' (Review) 479
— and Choir Training (see 417, 723)	258	Schreker's Chamber Symphony (New York)	282	South Africa. Musical Festival	67
— and The Music Teacher (see 258, 790)	417	Schubert Festival, The (Vienna)	71	South-East London Musical Competition Festival	288, 797
— Choir Training Examination (see 723)	489	Schumann's 'Rhenish' Symphony (Harrogate)	646	South London Choral Association. Coming Season, The	792
— Distribution of Diplomas	49, 119	Schutz, Heinrich. 250th Anniversary of the death of	40	South London Philharmonic Society (see 507)	62, 211, 354, 436, 726
— Resignation of Mr. Thomas Shindler	563	Scientific Voice-Culture (Correspondence)	493	South-West College of Music	365
Royal Normal College for the Blind, Upper Norwood	400	Scott, Cyril. Pianoforte, 'Souvenir de Vienne' (Review)	710	Southampton, All Saints' Church	51
Royal Philharmonic Society 65, 200, 277, 352		— Song, 'Reconciliation' (Review)	326	— Music at	358
— Beethoven Medal presented to Sir Henry Wood	65	Scott, Hugh Arthur. Test of Enthusiasm, The	681	— Philharmonic Society	876
Royalty, System. The Performing Rights Gasette	331	Scripture, E. W. Lecture, 'What the Voice Looks Like'	863	Southport Musical Competition Festival United Choir. Coming Season, The	793
Rózycki, Ludomir. Pianoforte Concerto (Queen's Hall 'Proms.')	727	— Voice Failure, Two Curious Cases of (see 332, 493, 569, 724)	320	Southwark Cathedral 51, 123, 194, 274, 418, 786
Rubinstein, Arthur. Recitals	572	Semi-National Eisteddfod, London	53	— Elizabethan Church Music at	51
— Trio in B flat (Review)	407	Semi-Professional in Music, The	254	— Musical Services at 123, 274, 418, 786
Rummel, Walter. Recitals	864	Serbia, British Music in	135	— 'St. Matthew' Passion at	194
Russian Ballet—and After, The. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	775	Sevcik, Prof. 'School of Intonation on a Harmonic Basis, for the Violin' (Review)	48	Southwark Diocesan Plainsong Association	417
Russian Cossack Choir	652	Seymour, Joseph (Obituary)	71	Book	344
Russian Songs (Review)	183	Scambati, Giovanni (Harrogate). Pianoforte Concerto in C minor (Rome). 'Ave Maria'	363	Sowerbutts, J. A. Bach programme	123
Rutland, Harold. Song, 'To the Moon' (Review) (see 643)	478	Sharp, Cecil J. Hon. Degree of Master of Music at Cambridge	477	Spanner, H. V. Organ recital	859
Sachs, Leo (Paris). 'Lament'	362	— 'Nursery Songs from the Appalachian Mountains' (Review)	843	Speer, William H. Organ Music, Sonata in F minor (Review)	327
St. Anne's, Soho. Bach Recitals at	858	Sharps and Flats	58, 126, 198, 271, 348, 421, 493, 570, 643, 725, 791, 862	Spelman, Timothy Mather. Pianoforte Suite, 'Barbaresques' (Review)	710
St. Helen's Glee Club	726	Shaw, Geoffrey. Anthem, 'He wants not friends that hath Thy love' (Review)	481	— (see Queen's Hall 'Proms.', 793).
St. John's, Burscough Bridge. New Organ at	787	— Easter Carol, 'Spring bursts To-day' (Review)	111	Spence, Rev. Horace. 'Reproaches, The'	191
St. John's, Wilton Road	194, 787	— Six duets, for Pianoforte (Review)	328	Squire, W. Barclay. Pearsall's Letters Stanford, Sir Charles. Easter Anthem, 'Jesus Christ is Risen To-day' (Review)	359
St. Leonard's-on-Sea. Christ Church, Recitals at	193	Shaw, Martin. Anthem, 'With a Voice of Singing' (Review)	482	— 'Lo! He comes' (Review)	843
St. Martin-in-the-Fields	123	— 'Fanfare for Christmas Day'	47	— Morning, Evening, and Communion Services (Review)	591
St. Mary's, Guildford. Monthly Music List	787	— She Stoops to Conquer, Opera by Percy Colson and Alfred Kalisch (Review)	184	— Organ Music, Fantasia on Parry's 'Intercessor' (Review)	46
— Rotherhithe. Organ Fund Appeal	787	Sheffield Amateur Musical Society. Coming Season, The	793	— Organ Music, Four Intermezzi (Review)	347
— St. Matthew's Passion. Edition in O. N. and Sol-fa Notations (Review)	110	— and District Organists' and Choirmasters' Association	787	— Six Irish Melodies (Review)	110
— Question of 'Cuts,' A (Correspondence) (see 274)	270			— Three Preludes and Fugues for Organ (Review)	480
St. Michael's, Cornhill. Musical arrangements at	640, 787			— 'While Shepherds watched' (Chorus)	843
— Third Musical Festival	858			Statham, H. D. Mus. Doc. Degree	578
— Croydon, Musical Service at	786			Steele, Robert. Anthem, 'Saviour, Thy children keep' (Review)	481

	(Page)		Page		Page
Stewart, C. Hylton. Office for the Holy Communion (Review) ...	482	Thurston, Temple. 'Roof and Four Walls, A.' Comedy (Apollo Theatre) ...	186	Walker, Dr. Ernest (Oxford). Original Music to 'Rhesus' ...	578
Stilliard, Joseph Hubball (Obituary) ...	726	Tibet, The Music of. By T. Howard ...	107	— String Quartet, Fantasia in D (Review) ...	708
Stockport Vocal Union ...	71	Timmer, N.Z. Musical Society ...	140, 733	Wall, Alfred M. (Harrogate). 'Thanet' Concert-Overture ...	577
Stocks, H. C. L. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D (Review) ...	482	Tittel, Bernhard (Vienna). 'Agnes Totenfeier' ...	435	— (Middlesbrough). String Quartet in C minor ...	502
Stöckton, Music at ...	358	Toch, Ernst (Vienna). 'New String Quartet' ...	210	— (see Eastbourne) ...	870
Stöhr, Dr. Richard. New Oratorio, 'The Lost Son' ...	68	Tonbridge, 1923-24 Season ...	803	Wallace, William. Conductor, The, and his Fore-Runners (see 630) ...	609, 677, 757, 832
Stoke-on-Trent Choral Society. Coming Season, The ...	702	Tonic Sol-Fa and the Minor Mode (Correspondence) ...	643, 725	Wanstead, St. Mary's Parish Church, New Organ at ...	491
Stone, George. Youthful Organist, A ...	418	Tonypandy, Music at ...	872	Ware, Herbert. Plainsong Mass (Review) ...	482
Stratford. East London Competitive Musical Festival ...	429	Toop, Augustus. Resignation ...	787	Warlock, Peter. Pianoforte, 'Folk-Song Preludes (Review) ...	710
Strauss, Richard. 'Alpine' Symphony, The (Queen's Hall) ...	854	Toronto, Music at ...	70, 209, 283, 363, 435, 505, 802, 874	— Robert Jones's 'The Muses' Garden of Delight' (Review) ...	478
— 'Don Quixote' (Queen's Hall) ...	60	Torquay, Music at ...	281	— Song, 'Bachelor, The' (Review) ...	406
— Suite, Incidental Music to 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme' (Royal Philharmonic Society) ...	59	Tovey, Donald Francis. 'Perfect Fool, The, or 'The Perfect Opera' ...	464	Warlock, Peter, and Philip Wilson. 'Choral Songs from the Old Masters' (Review) ...	552
— (Vienna). 'Bardengesang' ...	210	Tredegar Choral Society ...	358	— Michael Cavendish's 'Six Ayres to Four Voyces' (Review) ...	110
Stravinsky (New York). 'Le Chant du Rossignol' ...	873	Treorchy Choral Society ...	134	— Twenty-one English Ayres (1598-1612) (Review) ...	183
— (Paris). New Symphony ...	874	Tribel, Ario. 'Prose Musicali' (Review) ...	182	Watchet, St. Decuman's Parish Church, New Organ at ...	859
— (Paris). 'Noces' (see 784) ...	650	Trinity College of Music ...	58, 126, 199, 272, 349, 354, 422, 495, 570, 644, 792, 863	Watcyns, Watcyn. Song recital ...	497
— (Paris). 'Symphonies d'Instruments à Vent' ...	139	Truelove, J. M. Fifty-nine years as Organist of Powderham Church ...	787	We hope he sees this (Correspondence) (see 347) ...	270
— 'Petroushka' (Queen's Hall Proms, 1911) ...	791	Truro Cathedral ...	194, 345	'We want to hear the Orchestra' (Correspondence) (see 322, 352, 401) ...	348, 420
— Pianoforte, 'Grand Suite de l'Histoire du Soldat' (Review) ...	479	Truro, Music at ...	65	Weber, Ludwig (Germany). String Quartet ...	433, 872
Stravinsky's 'Renard' and 'Mavra,' Darius Milhaud on ...	40	Truth about Gounod, The. By Frederick Corder ...	20	Weiner, Leone (Rome). New Quartet (see 364) ...	282
Street, Oscar W. (Obituary) (see 211) ...	139	'Tudor Church Music' (Review) ...	111, 481, 561, 860	Weingartner, Felix. 'Aus meinem Liben' (Review) ...	623
Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society ...	726	— (Correspondence) ...	860	— Concerts, The ...	503
Strong, David (Obituary) ...	507	Turton, H. Matthias. Appointment at Chatham, Ontario ...	786	Weissmann, Julius. New 'Divertimento' ...	68
Stuart Ford String Quartet ...	51	— Lecture-Recital ...	194	— (Vienna). New Pianoforte Concerto ...	210
Summer School of Church Music 418, 490, Summercales Festival, Kighley ...	729	— Presentation to ...	858	Wensleydale (Leyburn) Musical Competitive Festival ...	429
Sunderland, Music at ...	358	Twgwyn Choral Society ...	345	West, John E. 'Cathedral Organists, Past and Present' (Review) ...	181
Sutton Musical Society ...	726	Two Curious Cases of Voice Failure. By E. W. Scripture (see 332, 493, 569, 724) ...	320	— Gibbons's 'The Silver Swan' (Review) ...	551
Swan, Alfred J. 'Scriabin' (Review) ...	405	Tynedale Musical Competitive Festival ...	429	— Morley's 'Now is the month of Maying,' 'What saith my dainty darling,' and 'My bonny lass she smileth' (Review) ...	551
Swinstead, Felix. 'Six Pieces after Scarlatti' (Review) ...	472	Underpaid Organist, The (Correspondence) ...	492	— Series of Early English Organ Music ...	266
Szymanowski, Karol. 'Etudes,' Op. 33, and 'Metopes,' Op. 29, for Pianoforte (Review) ...	479	Unexpected in Music, The. By Alexander Brent Smith ...	537	West Lindsey Musical Competition Festival ...	429
Tabernacle Choral Society, Pontypridd. Coming Season, The ...	703	Union of Graduates in Music ...	427	West London Choral and Orchestral Society. Coming Season, The ...	793
Tailleferre, Germaine (Paris). A 'Ballade' ...	362	— at Durham ...	576	West London Choral Union. Coming Season, The ...	792
— Sonata, for Pianoforte and Violin (Review) ...	407	Unity Choral and Orchestral Society (Islington) ...	51, 491	West Middlesex Musical Society 140, 727, 803
Tamworth, Music at ...	65	Unscrupulous Pianoforte Dealing (Correspondence) ...	271	Westminster Abbey Special Choir (see 714) ...	50, 786, 852
Tančević, Sergius (New York). Suite de Concert, for Violin and Orchestra ...	208	Valmont, Maxime. Song recital ...	867	Westminster Choral Society 275, 354, 879
Taste, By Frank S. Howes ...	396	Van den Borren, Charles. Round About a Toccata of Galuppi's ...	314	Weston-super-Mare Choral Society. Coming Season, The ...	793
Taunton Competitive Musical Festival ...	501	Van Dyck, Ernest Marie Hubert (Obituary) ...	733	— Glastonbury Festival Players ...	134
Tavistock, Music at ...	800	Van Emden, Harriet. Song recital ...	426	Wharfedale (Ilkley) Musical Competitive Festival ...	429
Taylor, E. Douglas. 'Modulation Made Easy' (Review) ...	257	Vatican Choir, The ...	59	What about that Archlute? (Correspondence) ...	570, 643
Tcherepnine, Alexandre. 'Petite Suite for Pianoforte' (Review) ...	479	Vaughan Williams, Dr. 'London' Symphony, First German Performance ...	211	What's in a Name? By M.-D. Calvo-coressi ...	393
— Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin (Review) ...	407	— Mass in G minor (City of Birmingham Choir) (see 876) ...	36	Wheelodon, Herbert Arthur (Obituary) ...	875
Telini, Madame. Song recital ...	426	— New Suite (Kneller Hall) ...	573	Wheeler, James D. Resignation ...	859
Temple Church, The. Dedication of New Organ at ...	787	— 'Sea Symphony' Score (Correspondence) (see 347) ...	270	When is a Stunt? (Elizabethan Competitive Festival) ...	333
Temple, Wilfrid. Song recital ...	391	Venezian, Giulio. 'Teoria Generale Della Musica' (Review) ...	324	White, Felix. Folk-Song, 'John Anchor' (Review) ...	110
Tercentenary of Phillip Rosseter ...	350	Vernespny, Mario (Paris). A Psalm ...	362	— Part-Songs, 'Marriage Song' and 'Beethoven' (Review) ...	110
Tercentenary of William Byrd and Thomas Weelkes, The (Correspondence) (see 199, 269, 346, 419, 492, 568) ...	196	Vienna. International Society for Contemporary Music ...	875	— Song, 'Desolation' ...	202
Terry, Charles Sanford. J. S. Bach's Original Hymn-Tunes for Congregational Use (Review) ...	184	— Music at ...	70, 137, 209, 363, 435, 506, 651, 802, 874	— Song, 'That's the way for Billy and me' (Review) ...	841
— Six Plain-song Melodies Harmonized by Bach (Review) ...	184	— Novelties ...	189, 210	— Song, 'The Satyr's Dance' (Review) (see 406) ...	479
Tertis, Lionel. Recital ...	573	— Pitzner Music at, A Week of ...	802	White, Robert T. Mass (Review) ...	843
— 'Sunset,' for Violin, Viola, or Violoncello (Review) ...	708	Schubert Festival at ...	71	Whitefield's, Tottenham Court Road. Renovation of Organ at ...	578
Test of Enthusiasm, The. By Hugh Arthur Scott ...	681	Vienne, Louis. Relief Fund (see 271) ...	191, 489	Whitlock, Percy W. Motet (Review) ...	843
Tewkesbury Festival, Revival of the Once Famous ...	733, 860	Village and Country Town Concerts ...	548	Whittaker, Dr. W. G. Airs from Purcell and Handel (Review) ...	552
Thanet Festival Committee ...	124	Violin Contest. Old versus New ...	250	— 'Chæphoroi' of Æschylus (Review) ...	184
Thole, M. Dutch Baritone ...	573	Violin-Tutors of the 17th Century. By Jeffrey Pulver ...	695	— Oxford Church Music (Review) ...	561
Thomas, J. C. Albert Hall Sunday Concert ...	724	Vittadini, Franco (New York). Opera, 'Anima Allegra' ...	282	— Pianoforte Quintet, 'Among the Northumbrian Hills' (Middlesbrough) ...	502
Thomas, Vaughan (Anglesey). Seven 'Cwyddau Cymreig' ...	577	Vogt, Mrs. (Obituary) ...	72	— Two Song Carols (Review) ...	407
Thomas, Vincent. Tale of Alsatia, A' (Westminster Choral Society) ...	275	Voice Culture (Correspondence) (see 320, 332) ...	493, 599, 724	Who wrote Gounod's 'Faust'? (Correspondence) ...	57
Thompson, Herbert. Cambridge Festival of British Music ...	458	Volunteers Wanted (Correspondence) ...	198
— Some Mendelssohn Letters 461, Worcester Festival (see 712) ...	705	Von Schilling, Max (Vienna). 'Mona Lisa' ...	364
Thornley, Beatrice. Song, 'O Mother Earth' (Review) ...	326	Von Webern, Anton (Germany). Five Pieces for String Quartet ...	433
Thursfield, Anne (Mrs.). Song recital ...	61	Wadely, F. W. Three Short and Easy Pieces for Organ (Review) ...	326
		Wagenaar, Dr. Johan (Amsterdam). Choral Work, 'The Shipwreck' ...	433
		Wagner (Vienna). Belated first performance of Opera, 'Das Liebesverbot' ...	435
		Wakefield, Music at ...	358, 800
		Wakefield Cathedral. 'St. Matthew' Passion at ...	345

	Page		Page		Page
Williams, Charles Francis Abdy (Obituary)	283	Woodgate, Leslie. Songs, 'Abiding Joys' and 'Primrose and Colombine' (Review)	326	Davies, Charles Frederick	139
— Rhythm, Some Ancient Conceptions of	105	Woods, Edna (New York). Valse Phantastique	873	Dickin, H. B.	71
Williams, Gerrard. Pianoforte, 'Side Shows' (Review)	328	Woodward, Rev. G. R. Lecture on Carols	787	Dondini, Cæsar	70
— Second Quartet	202	Wootton, Stella. Song recital	131	Drinkwater, Albert E.	199
— Three Preludes. First performance	352	Worcester. Bach's 'Christmas' Oratorio at	134	Falchi, Stanislaw	70
— 'Three Ravens, The' (Review)	110	Worcester Festival, The. By Herbert Thompson (see 712)	715	Foster, Myles Birket	139
Williams, Joseph Benjamin (Obituary)	578	Worcestershire Musical Competitive Festival	429	Gould, William Monk	365
Williams, J. Hugh. 'Voice-production and Breathing' (Review)	325	Wotan the Victorian. By Richard Capell	474	Greenish, Frederick Robert	875
Williams, Marie. Song recital	867	Wright, F. A. 'Arts in Greece, The' (Review)	644	Griffith, Patrick Joseph	211
Williams, W. Cecil. Organ recitals	721	Yon, Pietro A. (Correspondence)	421	Hamerik, Sir Asger	875
Wilson, A. W. Office for the Holy Communion (Review)	482	York Minster. Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion at	345	Hill, Arthur George	507
Wilson, D. Miller. 'Player-Piano, The' (Review)	624	York, Music at 134, 281, 358, 432, 503, 648, 730, 800, 872	429	Horder, The Rev. W. Garrett	139
Wilson, Philip. Concert at Steinway Hall	427	— Musical Competition Festival	429	Hudson, John William	875
— Lute-songs, Recital of	131	Ysaye, M. The return of	424	Hunter, Albert C.	139
Winchester Cathedral	123, 786	Zacharewitsch, Michael. Recitals	425	Kenningham, Joseph	436
Winchester College Chapel. The Nightjars Madrigal Society	267	Zaehner, Lily. Song recital	277	King, Oliver	803
Winchester Hymn Supplement (Review)	184	Zamano, Carlo. At Queen's Hall	277	Krehbiel, Henry Edward	365
Winchester, Music at	65, 358, 503	Zifado, Léonie. Song recital	202	Maas, Joyce	875
Winchester School Concert (see 630)	644	Zingarelli, Niccolo A. (1752-1837). 'Hide Thou Thy Face' (Review)	561	Marsh, Ethel	365
Windsor and Eton Choral Society. Coming Season, The	793	Zucca, Mana. Song, 'I shall know' (Review)	326	Mattoni, Philip	70
Wingate, Maud. Song, 'Sweet Heart of Somerset' (Review)	326			Milani, Otto	803
Winnipeg Choral and Orchestral Society	436			Moss, Arthur W.	803
Winscombe, Mendip Musical Club	578			Orefice, Giacomo	211
Witney Choral Society	432			Patterson, Alexander	365
Wolverhampton Musical Society (see 323, 332)	351			Peat, Arthur Hugh Melvin	211
Wolverton and District Choral Society	207			Ramsey, B. Mansell	733
Wood, Arthur (Harrogate). Suite, 'My Native Heath'	357			Roeckel, Joseph L.	578
Wood, Sir Henry, and the R.A.M.	126			Seymour, Joseph	71
— Orchestral arrangement of Purcell's 'Trumpet' Voluntary (Review)	478			Stilliard, Joseph Hubball	71
— Orchestral arrangement, Suite No. 6 (Bach) (Review)	478			Street, Oscar W.	139
— Presentation of Royal Philharmonic Society's Beethoven Medal to	65			Strong, David	507
Woodbridge Musical Competitive Festival	429			Van Dyck, Ernest Marie Hubert	733
				Vogt, Mrs.	72
				Wheeldon, Herbert Arthur	875
				Williams, Charles Francis Abdy	283
				Williams, Joseph Benjamin	578

(Abstract from General Index)

Bambridge, William Samuel	139
Bedwell, Harry	578
Borsdorf, Adolph (see 495)	436
Browning, Oscar	875
Bunnett, Edward (see 565)	139
Caird, Robert	365
Chatham, Pitt	578
Clay, Mrs.	507
Clifford, The Hon. Mrs. Julian	652

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

JANUARY 1 1923

HENRY LITTLETON

BORN JANUARY 7, 1823

Musicians do well to observe the centenaries of composers and performers, even though the former, thanks to their works, run little risk of being forgotten. And although great singers and players, like actors, leave no more than a name, this apparently faint memorial usually proves to be of unexpected vitality. Meanwhile, the publisher, without whose enterprise and help composer and performer would come badly off, remains unsung. Yet it is certain that the art of music owes not less (and probably more) than literature to the men who place its productions within easy reach of the public. For example, it is difficult to overestimate the debt of Russian music to Belaieff; of German music to Johann Breitkopf (1719), Gottfried Härtel (1763), and Bernard Schott (17—); and of English music to Vincent Novello (1781). But in the building up of the great houses founded by these pioneers a notable part has been played by men whose names are not perpetuated in the titles. Thus the very word 'Novello' has become almost a musical term, yet the present generation is hardly aware that for over half a century there has been no Novello in the business, and that the greatest developments of the house were mainly due to Henry Littleton, who became its sole proprietor in 1866.

The musical life of this country, especially on its popular and choral sides, owes so much to Henry Littleton that the hundredth anniversary of his birth ought not to be allowed to pass without notice, least of all in the columns of the journal that during his ownership increased its size sixfold, and its scope and usefulness in proportion.

It is evident that Henry Littleton would have made his mark in almost any sphere. How quickly and deeply he made it in the publishing world, and by what slight incident his career was determined, was told in these pages at the time of his death thirty-four years ago. It will bear brief re-telling, however, for there are no better stories than the lives of those who have shown their fellows that man may be (as Carlyle says) the architect of circumstance, not its mere creature. Among the romances of industry must be included the story of how the career of one of the greatest of music-publishers began through the chance meeting of two boys in a London street.

In 1837 Henry Littleton, a lad of fourteen, was walking about the City looking for work. He seems to have had no particular leanings; almost anything in the way of employment would satisfy him. He had drawn the City blank, when, in St. Paul's Churchyard, he met (apparently for the first and last time) a boy with whom he struck up a conversation. Did the boy know of a job going? Yes; his own employers, Messrs. George & Manby, music sellers, in Fleet Street hard by, were in want of a lad. In a few minutes Henry Littleton had applied for and secured the vacant post. Here he remained awhile, going thence to another house in the same line of business, Messrs. Monro & May, in Holborn. But these were mere preliminaries. Four years after his lucky meeting with George & Manby's boy, he answered Alfred Novello's advertisement for a collector, and so began the connection which was to prove so phenomenally successful.

Alfred Novello (at that time in Dean Street) was far from being firmly established, and there were spells when business was so poor that young Littleton's post hung by a thread. But he somehow divined when the 'sack' was impending, and managed to be out of sight at critical moments. However, the danger passed as his employer discovered his energy and ability, and the following letter, written three years later, shows him well-established as Novello's trusted lieutenant:

Liverpool, August 10, 1844.

DEAR SIR,—It gives me great pleasure to hear from Mr. Clarke [Charles Cowden Clarke] of your continued attention to your duties in Dean Street, not only from the comfort and confidence it gives me personally during my absence, but also as it assures me that the good opinion I had formed of you has not been misplaced, and is good promise of your future welfare.

The 12th of Aug. (the day on which you will receive this) is my birthday, and I have therefore chosen it as a pleasant opportunity to send you the enclosed five pounds of which I request your acceptance, as a mark of my approbation. I hope that you will by perseverance in the same conduct make yourself a useful member of society, and earn for yourself the satisfaction of meriting my future confidence.

I remain,

with sincere good wishes for your advancement,

Yours faithfully,

J. ALFRED NOVELLO.

To

Mr. Henry Littleton.

The speed with which the recipient of this birthday 'fiver' proceeded to make himself 'a useful member of society' may be shown in a few lines.

Seventeen years later—1857—Alfred Novello retired to Italy, leaving him to manage the rapidly-growing business, and in 1861 he took him into partnership, the name of the firm being changed to Novello & Co. At the end of a further five years, the former collector bought the business and became sole proprietor. From this point its operations, conducted with an enterprise at times amounting to daring, were so successful that in 1887, when Henry Littleton himself retired, the business that fifty years before was a small though promising venture, had become one of the largest of its kind in the world.

The above bare outline is sufficient indication of Henry Littleton's force of character. Let us add two facts of widely different type—one great and one small—as examples both of his almost reckless courage and determination, and of his choleric impatience with petty time-wasting annoyances.

When he arranged to buy the business it was agreed that the purchase price—a very large sum—should be paid within ten years. As he had no private means, the liability was one that would have daunted most men. Yet he managed to be so much better than his bond that the whole sum was paid in five years!

Here is the other incident—one so small as to be insignificant, and mentioned here only because of the vivid glimpse it gives of his personality. It will be seen from the portrait reproduced on page 19 that almost until middle age he was clean-shaven. The ample beard of his later years was due to a trifling circumstance. While on a holiday in Scotland he went to a village barber to be shaved. The barber was out. He went again the following day, with no better result. When a third visit also proved fruitless, he exclaimed, 'Very well; I'll be shaved no more!'—and kept his word.

This quickness in making a decision, and firmness in holding to it, was apparent in his conduct of business, and was apt to be misinterpreted by people who met him too rarely to be aware of his real kindness of heart. On this point we cannot do better than quote from the obituary notice that appeared in the Musical Times of June, 1888, written by Joseph Bennett:

He was not a man of business in the hard, unsympathetic sense of the term. Few in his position ever allowed sentiment to influence them in an equal degree, or were so capable of making sacrifices for an idea. For proof I need only refer to the kindness he showed to young composers, in several cases going so far as to bear the expense of their education at home and abroad. Throughout all his manifold dealings he was never consciously unjust, and certainly on more than one occasion, perhaps on many, he has been known to set a higher value upon manuscripts than the author himself, and to pay up to his own estimate. A now prominent cathedral organist tells how, when comparatively an obscure man, he showed the Berners Street chief a work and named a certain price, only to have it doubled on the spot by the other party to the contract. Then there is the case of a cathedral organist, now dead, who, at the close of an important transaction with Mr. Littleton, found himself in a position so much better than was expected that he remarked, 'When I get home, they will think I have robbed some one.' Instances of this kind evince not only a sense of justice, but also a feeling of generosity, the buyer giving the advantage of his own knowledge of the market to the seller, and operating against himself. The man who can act thus may not truthfully be called 'hard.' Indeed, the typical commercial mind would, with the utmost promptitude and most perfect conviction, set him down as 'soft.' Henry Littleton was neither the one nor the other, but simply carried into the larger transactions of his later years the absolute uprightness which made him invaluable to his employer when he exercised a delegated authority.

Of the numerous and comprehensive activities of the house under Henry Littleton's direction it is impossible to speak in detail. They may be read in A Short History of Cheap Music, published in 1887. Here we can do no more than make bare mention of a few, e.g., the formation of the Barnby Choir (1867); the acquiring of the business of Ewer & Co., with all the existing Mendelssohn copyrights, and the large and valuable circulating library (1867); the launching of the Oratorio Concerts (1869), at which were performed Beethoven's Mass in D, the St. Matthew Passion, and the Choral Symphony; the publication of a cheap octavo edition of the St. Matthew Passion (1870); the undertaking of the general direction of the Royal Choral Society when Barnby succeeded Gounod as conductor (1873) [in the season 1872-73 the St. Matthew Passion was given four times in Holy Week]; the issue of cheap editions of S. S. Wesley's works (1868); the commencement of the famous series of Music Primers (1877); the issue of English versions of Jahn's Mozart and Spitta's Bach; and the setting up of new manufacturing premises in Southwark Street (1877). This factory, by the by, he placed under the direction of his second son, the present Chairman of the Company, who was then in his twenty-third year.

The biggest enterprises of the house in concert direction were undertaken in 1873 and 1874. In the former year, Novello & Co. were invited by the Commissioners of the International Exhibition to arrange a series of concerts to take place in the Exhibition buildings. The concerts began on Easter Monday, April 14, and were given daily until the Exhibition closed on October 31—over two hundred concerts! Admission was free to visitors, a small charge being made for reserved seats only, and the analytical programme cost threepence.

An even more astonishing series of concerts was given by the firm during the following year at the Albert Hall. London is justifiably proud of her Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts. Their inception and carrying out called for courage and skill, but what is to be said of the nightly concerts that began at the Albert Hall on November 7, 1874—nearly fifty years ago? Five conductors shared duty: Barnby, Randegger, Dannreuther, W. H. Thomas, and J. F. Barnett. Two choirs were specially organized, one for large choral works and one for part-songs. The concerts anticipated the 'Proms.' in several respects, notably in the adoption of a scheme of 'nights.' Thus Monday was 'Ballad' night, Tuesday 'English,' Wednesday 'Classical,' Thursday 'Oratorio,' Friday 'Wagner,' and Saturday 'Popular.' The whole scheme was carried out with a lavishness that may fairly be described as staggering. However, the undertaking was ahead of the times, the Albert Hall was of course even less easy of access than to-day, and the cost was so enormous that the scheme had to be modified after seven weeks, the concerts thereafter being given twice weekly during the ensuing five months. But even in its reduced form the enterprise was remarkable. (One of the last of the series saw the first performance here of Verdi's Requiem under the composer's direction.) The whole scheme was undoubtedly one of the most daring in the history of concert-giving. Many an acclaimed success of to-day is of small importance to the art by the side of so magnificent a failure—if the term can be applied to an undertaking that must have had enormous influence in many ways.

We have touched on these ventures not for the glorification of the house of Novello, but solely in order that readers may form an idea of the personality of Henry Littleton, to whose vigour and vision they were due. The present generation knows nothing of him, but some of his contemporaries were aware of how much English musical activities owed to him. One little bit of evidence only need be brought forward. In 1882 the Duke of Edinburgh wrote to Sir George Grove, apropos of the foundation of the Royal College of Music:

I shall be glad if you will see Mr. Littleton, head of the firm of Novello & Co., and mention to him the Royal College of Music, the establishment of which the Prince of Wales and I have so much at heart. No house has done such service to music in England as that eminent firm by their editions of Handel, and their numerous publications of new works by native composers.

It need hardly be said that the 'mention' was not in vain.

There is still in some quarters a disposition to regard the publisher as the natural enemy of the composer. In the opinion of a few disgruntled folk, a publisher can be commercially successful only at the expense of the composer—a view that ignores the root principle of all sound business, namely, that the essence of a just bargain is its power to benefit all the participants. In the case of music-publishing the participants are three—composer, publisher, and public. A publisher who tried to build up a business on a basis unfair to one or both of the two latter would soon find himself putting up the shutters. The life of Henry Littleton is a good deal more than a stimulating record of richly rewarded enterprise and hard work; it is also a fifty years' proof of two things: First, that the musician, both creative and practising, has no better friend than the publisher; second, that when the publisher is a Henry Littleton, his value to the art is in exact ratio to his commercial success.

If, as is generally agreed to be the case, the musical life of the community is vigorous in proportion to the number of people engaged in performances of the best examples of the art, then, in a very real and practical sense, the history of music is the history of cheap music. For example, it is easy to see the connection between the issue of inexpensive and handy editions of choral works of all kinds fifty years ago and the Competitive Festival movement of to-day. In this, as in practically every other department of our musical life, the country owes a deep debt of gratitude to the remarkable man whose career is sketched above. The measure of this indebtedness could not be realised in his lifetime, because the results were yet to come. They are apparent now, and the hundredth anniversary of his birth should see the debt acknowledged.

HENRY LITTLETON

IN 1856

The coloured plate is reproduced from a painting by Robinson, dated 1887. The above portrait is from a daguerreotype by R. H. Dyball, Perseverance Place, Old Kent Road, 'near the Ice-Wells Gate.'

THE TRUTH ABOUT GOUNOD

BY FREDERICK CORDER

A recent article in the Musical Times reviving the ancient canard about the composition of his Faust, seems to indicate that in the surging tide of modern music Charles Gounod is becoming as forgotten as Spohr. The writer of the article in question, for instance, does not seem to be aware that 'Dio possente' was extracted from the Prelude to Act I in order to fatten up the part of Valentine and make it worthy of Santley. 'Quando a te' is Gounod at his most characteristic, if not at his best: and these two songs, and the unjustly depreciated ballet music, have surpassed in popularity and 'golden returns' during half a century all Gounod's other works put together.

The simple fact is that Gounod was purely a lyric composer, and exceedingly narrow in his musical outlook. More limited than Spohr in Germany, or Grieg in Norway, or Bellini in Italy, though he had received an adequate musical education, his mind refused to occupy itself with instrumental passages or the development of themes. All his life long his poor, hysterical, ill-balanced brain would work only by fits and starts, the most connected and sustained piece of composition he ever succeeded in putting forth being undoubtedly the Garden-Scene in Faust. For the rest, his music consists of a fitful succession of vocal gems with the most perfunctory—yet never inartistic—padding in between. The marked superiority of Faust to his other operas arises from two obvious causes: the large number of its lyric gems and the great excellence of the libretto. To say that Faust was his only operatic success is to overstate the case. Its predecessor, Le Médecin malgré lui, is nearly as brilliant; but how can an opera keep the stage when it has a dumb soprano? Mireille again has a totally uninteresting libretto, but the chorus of mulberry gatherers, the pastoral duet in five-time, and the soprano air, 'Mon cœur ne peut changer,' are as fine as anything Gounod ever wrote. Each of the other operas, which naturally got weaker and weaker as the composer's mind failed, contains one or two perfectly lovely numbers. 'She alone charmeth' and 'Far greater in his lowly state' in La Reine de Saba and 'Nuit resplendissante' in Cinq Mars are such flashes of genius; while some of the ballads written for the English public—Nazareth, There is a Green Hill, O that we two, and Ring out, wild bells are probably immortal. The excellent musicianship of the man is evidenced by the two versions—solo and duet—of O that we two, it being impossible to tell which was the original; and still more by that wonderful but unjustly depreciated Ave Maria based on Bach's harmonic ground and amplified by a violin obbligato. It was this consummate feat that first opened the present writer's mind to the fact—so strenuously denied by most musicians and all critics—that melody is made and not born.

To any person in the least musical who recalls the lyrics above-mentioned it must be apparent that they are not only from the same pen, but written by a stylist who signed every bar with his name. There is not a single piece by Gounod that could possibly have emanated from the pen of Saint-Saëns or Massenet even, to name the best of his many followers. This is so patently true that I have always suspected the story about the authorship of Faust to have emanated from some practical farceur, like the late E—— S——, for instance, in an endeavour to see whether anything was too preposterous for the public to believe. And nothing is. The mystery of mental invention is too wonderful for the ordinary human mind to admit, and most people prefer to believe that Bacon wrote Shakespeare, or Shakespeare wrote Bacon; that Dickens's books were written by his illustrators, because they claimed the authorship; or, as the late W. S. Gilbert pretends to assert, 'that the Iliad was not written by Homer, but by another man of the same name.' Any of these beliefs is more congenial to the ordinary mind than the plain acceptance of the mystery that one man has creative power while another has not. Honest souls write books telling you where Dickens took his characters from and picturing the houses where they lived, or they write articles showing where the great musicians 'got their ideas from,' or how, when, and where they were 'inspired'—anything rather than admit that we do not know and never can know how and why a half-crazy poet or musician can turn out pearls and diamonds while the rest of us can make only more or less good cut-glass.

ARTHUR BLISS

BY EDWIN EVANS

Many musicians have been a little mystified—some of them, apparently, even a little irritated—by the unprecedented rapidity with which a composer, utterly unknown at the beginning of 1919, was transformed into a celebrity before the end of 1921. Some of the comment upon this extraordinary episode in recent music has not been informed by as much good nature as one would wish, and the explanation has been sought either in some personal pushfulness on the part of Arthur Bliss himself, or in that mysterious entity known as 'influence.' How much simpler it would have been to take note of the reception accorded to every work that he has produced since Madam Noy! Then it would have been transparent that neither pushfulness nor influence, nor the snobbish desire of amateurs and others to be in the fashion, has been the agency at work. It is the musical public itself that has given Bliss this prominence, and by no more mysterious process than that of demonstrating, visibly and audibly, that it enjoyed listening to his music. When Rout was first performed it was, in deference to a clamorous demand, given three times, being repeated in its place in the programme and again at the end. The two Nursery Rhymes, 'The Ragwort' and 'The Dandelion,' have to be repeated nearly every time they are sung. It is therefore not surprising that singers like to sing them. In short, when an audience gives unmistakable signs of its pleasure, the rest is easy to understand without seeking for other clues. But this pleasure that audiences appear to take in Bliss's music—is it the real thing? Is it the same delight that holds them spell-bound at chamber concerts where Bliss is not performed, and makes them look so rapt that one wonders if they have attained nirvana? Probably not. They do not look as if they have even the desire for nirvana. Their enjoyment has no pretension of transcending ordinary human joy. It is exhilaration, not differing very considerably from that which may be derived from any scene of visible animation. The connection between the music of Rout and its subject is a close one. Looking down upon such a carnival we would be exhilarated, and desire to take part in it. When we hear Rout we have to contain an impulse to pick up anything handy and join in. It arouses an almost primitive instinct, and primitive instincts have much to do with philosophy.

Some years ago philosophers—chiefly German—devoted much thought to the origins and functions of music, and they split for a time into two opposing camps, one of which pictured the first musician as making music to attract a mate, whilst the other described him as working off a surplus of energy that remained unexhausted by his round of toil, and refused to be bottled up for the next day. This surplus energy furnished the impulse to play, termed Spieltrieb in the professional dialect of the moment. Eventually it came to be common ground that music embodied both of these factors, and even the most solemn philosophers did not put less value upon the contribution of the Spieltrieb than on that of uxorious and other emotions, for they knew that we owe to the former the strongest element in music, its rhythmic dynamism. In theory it was an hereditary partnership, though in practice most of the German composers came to prefer Sehnsucht to Spieltrieb. But energy is more quickly communicative than sentiment, and the music in which energy predominates will always enjoy a certain advantage in this respect. It is to that initial advantage, in all probability, that Bliss owes the rapidity of his success. The greater part of his music expresses the energy of a buoyant personality, bursting with life. It is, like his own manner of speaking, all impatience to get to the point. This is not to say that he cannot express the gentler emotions. He has expressed them, for instance, in the second Rhapsody, and in the second of the Conversations, the scene of which is placed 'In the Wood.' So far, however, these are exceptional, whatever may be the case as he develops. But if Bliss owes much to the Spieltrieb in one direction, in another it tends to revenge itself upon him, for it is responsible for the view, which has been taken in some quarters, that he is playing at music. In a philosophical sense this may be perfectly true, but it is not put forward philosophically. The fact is that the infectious quality of this vital energy, precisely because it makes for popularity, is exposed to the charge of frivolity. It is difficult to some serious natures to recognise that an earnestness as great as their own can underlie the most exhilarating restlessness. Music presents special difficulties of this kind in the tradition of the last hundred years, which has made conventional earnestness into a kind of fetish. Even to-day there is still a tendency to regard music that is outwardly solemn as necessarily containing more thought than music that exhilarates. In the conventional sense a work like the Mêlée Fantastique may not appear to be as serious as a German symphony. Intrinsically, as well as in intention, it is full of earnestness. How otherwise could the composer have inscribed it to the memory of the friend he had just lost in Lovat Fraser, whose personality was another of those which express in bustling animation a side of themselves that in others demands a more weighty utterance? It is necessary to lay stress upon this if only to counteract an impression, less prevalent than it was a year or so ago, that Bliss has merely caught the ear of the public with a series of successive 'stunts,' but is not to be regarded as a composer of serious aim. He is perhaps even more in earnest than most composers, but his earnestness expresses itself differently, and in a manner which was not encouraged during our immediate musical past.

So far as these 'stunts' themselves are concerned—since that is the term nearly always applied to them—they proceed from Bliss's preoccupation with tone-colour. Of all English composers to-day he is the one most intimately concerned with sound. To say this is to venture upon dangerous ground, for the limitations of musical terminology tend to cause ambiguity. I may be permitted to recall that in my article on Holst I laid stress upon the fact that, as a young man, he sat down to write music, and not, like other young men, to reform the world. Elsewhere I have referred to his preoccupation with sound. But obviously the object of his concern was a very different set of sound-reactions than we imply when we speak of the study which recent composers, with Stravinsky at their head, have devoted to the reactions of timbre. It is to these that Bliss belongs, almost by instinct. Compared with others who have manifested similar pre-occupations, he is the one in whom they take a more concentrated form. Goossens, for example, is no less keen in his appreciation of tone-colour, but much more intent upon sequential considerations. Lord Berners, another composer with a sharp sense of colour-values, has a kind of mundane self-consciousness that makes him recoil from anything resembling a platitude, and have recourse to a clever deformation rather than incur even the suspicion of being commonplace. But Bliss cares little for any of these connotations of sound. If the course of a composition made apposite a momentary platitude in sound he would no more think of removing it on that account than he would of removing everyday words from his conversational vocabulary. The reason is that it is not the logic of sound or its associations that weigh with him, but its quality. And it is this which produces an effect of spontaneity in his music, even when it is studded with so called 'stunts.' His use of these is unsophisticated. He is in this respect the very antithesis of Stravinsky, despite all superficial resemblance. The apparently conventional clarinet arpeggio in the Prelude to the second tableau of The Rite of Spring remains practically unique in Stravinsky's music. In that of Bliss such incidents occur constantly, but they do not attract attention because they occur naturally. They are part of Bliss's mode of expression, which stands much nearer to the vernacular than one imagines at a first hearing of his music. His musical speech does not consist of an unbroken string of pungent words, but he has a useful stock of these available when required.

Mention of Stravinsky leads to the question of resemblances. Here again we are on dangerous ground. Has not Mr. Hamilton Harty declared much modern English music to be imitative? But Dr. Vaughan Williams has since then pointed out that all the great composers have been thieves. This question of indebtedness is constantly being brought into the foreground, where it does not belong. All musicians without exception have profited by the experience of their predecessors and the innovations of their contemporaries. It is, of course, better that they should learn from many traditions than from only one. Above all it is better that they should learn from many masters than from one. Thus, when we are told that some composer of to-day has absorbed the teaching of Strauss, Debussy, Ravel, Schönberg, and Stravinsky, we may be sure that he is an all-round master of his craft, and then proceed to examine his own contributions to it. But if he has studied only one of these we shall be less disposed to take his all-round mastery for granted. So far as the degree of indebtedness is concerned, a very good standard is supplied by that of Mozart to the Italians of his period. If any of our composers owe more than this to one particular Continental tradition it is time to examine whether he may be called imitative.

In Bliss's music the dominant influences, among many, are those of Ravel and Stravinsky. To the former may be traced the pointedness of Madam Noy and some of the Conversations, to the latter the use of certain sonorities of which a good example is offered by the opening of Rout. But in speaking of the Stravinsky influence, we must bear in mind that Stravinsky himself does not admit the introduction of foreign fragments to be imitative. He does not hesitate to borrow a thematic motif which happens to suit his purpose, and declares it to be a matter of no importance whatever. It is not the words that constitute authorship, but their arrangement. Two jugglers may use the same oranges or billiard balls, but it is the juggling that matters. One of the finest moments in The Fire-bird employs a theme identical with that of the slow movement of Rimsky-Korsakov's Sinfonietta. Yet it is undoubtedly an original composition. In China, the country with the longest record of art-criticism, an artist who painted a subject from the same point of view as one of his predecessors was not regarded as imitative. The same dragon in the same position has been painted by shoals of them. But if he employed the same method of brushwork as a predecessor he was exposed to the charge or plagiarism, even when he painted a different subject. A second glance at Rout is enough to establish that Bliss's brushwork is emphatically his own, in spite of Petroushka. It is all a matter of perspective. Ten years ago a composer who wrote three consecutive major thirds inevitably risked being told that he had come under the influence of Debussy. To-day we have forgotten this particular form of triviality, and to-morrow we shall forget others. Bliss has written one or two works which might, with some excuse, be regarded as imitative. They are buried in his cupboard, whence it would be difficult to obtain them.

Arthur Bliss was born in London on August 2, 1891. He studied at Rugby and Cambridge, and took his B.A. and Mus. Bac. in 1913. The following spring he attended the Royal College of Music for a term, during which he had a few lessons in composition from Stanford. Then war broke out. He obtained a commission, served in France, was wounded, gassed, and mentioned in dispatches. Two of his pre-war works, a String Quartet in A major and a Pianoforte Quartet in A minor, were performed while he was on active service, one of them being awarded a prize at the War Emergency Concerts. They were also published, but on his return to musical life he destroyed the plates and the unsold copies, being convinced that neither work corresponded in any sense with his musical aims. During 1919 some incidental music which he had arranged from Elizabethan sources for As you like it was performed at Stratford-on-Avon. In the autumn of that year he gave a series of Sunday concerts at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith, where he also conducted Pergolesi's Intermezzo La Serva Padrona. From that time onwards he has been a prominent and active figure in English musical life. It was also in 1919 that he paid a musical visit to Paris, for which, being uncertain of Ravel's whereabouts at the time, I provided him with an introduction to Maurice Delage, who placed him in touch with the various currents of French musical life. There is something very stimulating in the contact with French musicians which compensates for whatever disadvantages there may be in venturing among such particularists as most of them are. This disadvantage Bliss threw off on his return by means of a Pianoforte Quintet which was so truly Parisian in character that it may be regarded as the effect of an inoculation resulting in immunity after the immediate effects had passed. It was performed at Æolian Hall in April, 1920, at a concert which I have good cause to remember, as the programme included Stravinsky's Ragtime, and a zealous sub-editor made a 'cut' in my account of it which caused my remarks upon this work to apply to Bliss's Quintet. About the same time as the Quintet he had also composed the first of his two Rhapsodies, a study for two pianofortes and wood-wind, but it has not been performed.

It was in the course of 1920 that his more characteristic works came before the public. The first of these, Madam Noy, a 'witchery' song, is dated 1918, and was first sung in June, 1920, by Anne Thursfield, to whom it is dedicated. The poem is by 'E. H. W. M.,' and the setting is for soprano with flute, clarinet, bassoon, harp, viola, and bass. It makes a piquant background to the gruesome story, with its wealth of opportunities for musical illustration. Compared with what had gone before, it established the direction which Bliss was to take. If any doubt remained, it was removed by the opposition which this spicy little work immediately aroused in conservative quarters. It is easier to detect original work by the enmity than by the admiration it arouses.

The second Chamber Rhapsody, the score of which is dated 1919, was the next work to reach the public, which it did in October, 1920, in two performances within a few days; it had thus a better chance of carrying conviction. It is an idyllic work for soprano, tenor, flute, cor anglais, and bass, the two voices vocalising on 'Ah' throughout, and being placed as instruments in the ensemble:

Ex. 1. Più lento e tranquillo. RHAPSODY No. 2.

SOPRANO.

TENOR.

ORCHESTRA.

Cor. Ingl.

Fl.

In many ways this Rhapsody is more definitely personal than the preceding composition. It is one of Bliss's most poetical works, and, owing to the poetry being in gentler vein, the improved sense of definition and of responsibility to the instruments employed attracted less notice than the more salient characteristics of his other works, in which the colouring was in brighter hues. Here, at least, one could absolve the composer completely from any attempt to amuse the ear with jugglery. The work was accepted for publication by the Carnegie Trust, and when the score in due course made its appearance there were many who were surprised to find how straightforward was a work which, like its predecessor, had aroused sharply-divided comment. This time, however, even conservative opinion showed signs of veering round.

Then, as if with malice aforethought, Bliss defied it with Rout, the first performance of which was given at the Baroness d'Erlanger's house in December, 1920. The original version is for soprano, flute, clarinet, harp, string quartet, bass, glockenspiel, and side-drum, but it has since been arranged for full orchestra, in which form it was subsequently given as an interlude during the 1921 season of the Russian Ballet. The title is used in its significance of revelry, and the music conveys an impression such as one might gather at an open window at carnival time. The singer is given a series of meaningless syllables chosen for their phonetic effect. Although essentially a mosaic, the scheme of the composition does not exclude lengthy spells of consistent melody, but most of the material is given in snatches. The mode of disintegration is not without precedent, but still sufficiently novel to enhance the exciting effect produced by the tone-colours. Its infectious gaiety has made Rout very popular, and it is probably the composition which has contributed most to the portrait which the musical world has made for itself of the composer.

(To be concluded.)

The Title-page and Contents of Volume 63 (January to December, 1922) of the Musical Times is now ready. Subscribers can obtain it post-free on application to the publishers.

A QUESTION FOR CRITICS

BY ALFRED KALISCH

I wish to say at the outset that when I use the word 'critic' I do not mean only the chosen band of happy brothers—at least I hope we are happy—whose business it is to attend musical performances and record their impressions; I include everybody who is sufficiently interested in music to form his own judgment, and competent to express his own opinion.

Ever since I began being a critic (in the former sense) I have been much exercised in my mind about a certain aspect of the work which I believe causes heart-searchings to all occupied in the same profession. It should also interest all critics in the other sense, in so far as they do more than merely express their feelings at the moment without consideration of any general questions involved. I would add by way of consolation, that in spite of glaring examples to the contrary it is quite possible to ponder such questions and discuss them without becoming 'highbrow' or a bore to one's fellow men. The question is this:

What ought one to prefer—a performance by an acknowledged great artist whose conception of a certain piece does not agree with one's own, or the playing or singing of a merely competent performer in a style with which one happens to agree? On paper the answer appears deliciously simple: we cannot consider as a great artist anybody whose ideas differ so violently from our own. But this view, if carried to its logical conclusion, will land us in many absurdities. I will quote a case within my own recollection.

At the time when the controversy between the followers of Joachim and the adherents of Ysaÿe was at its height, I remember a great Joachimite saying that he would never cross the street to hear Ysaÿe play Beethoven. I asked him whether he would prefer to hear Mr. —, a violinist who sedulously copied all the faults of Joachim and none of his virtues, and rarely, if ever, played in tune, and the unhesitating reply was 'Yes,' which of course was ludicrous. This is admittedly an extreme case, but the fallacy underlying it is one that is apt to vitiate musical judgment all along the line. Few people would be so narrow-minded as to deny that there must be several ways of interpreting a masterpiece. For example, no two readings of the same music could differ more widely than Richter's and Nikisch's respective ways of conducting the second Act of Tristan; but anybody who, owing to excessive devotion to the one, would deny the beauty and power of the other, or would (because of his own theories) prefer an ordinary time-beater's rendering to that of either master, would confess himself singularly wanting in the power of forming well-balanced opinions—in fact, of critical competence in either sense of the word.

An exceptionally strong personality will cause strong enmities as well as strong friendships. In many cases the vehement assertion of disapproval and a determination not to hear an artist whom one dislikes, amounts to a confession of fear lest a preconceived opinion may be upset by great individual achievement. If this sensation be analysed into its ultimate essence, it will reveal a form of intellectual indolence, an anxiety lest one be forced to reconsider the reasons for these preconceived ideas. This attitude has had enough consequences when applied to mere performances, but when the matter in question is the quality of new music, it is still more harmful.

The attitude—sometimes subconscious—of some music-lovers recalls the famous story in Punch of a young man who, being told that some of his poems reminded the reader of Byron, said he hoped that the worst of them were not as bad as that. When asked whether he had ever read any Byron, he replied that 'he had not, and hoped he never would.' We are all ready to laugh at this young man, but can we all lay our hand on our heart and say that we are not subject to the same weakness?

The question for each individual to ask himself is whether his judgments are, or are not, influenced by ready-made ideas? Here, again, we are confronted by another difficulty. If one says to himself he will not allow his opinions to be influenced by any such considerations, there is the danger—which is always great—that he would lose his hold over the permanent principles of good and bad, and be landed in a sort of flabby eclecticism. This happens, and will go on happening, to many good people who pride themselves on their broad outlook.

One might, indeed, almost say that the general question resolves itself into the difficulty of distinguishing between these two.

If, again, we adopt another division of art-lovers—that is, into conservatives and progressives—we shall find that neither is free from the weakness which besets us all. Those who condemn all innovators as mere effect-mongers whose work is vitiated by insincerity, and protest that the art ended with Wagner and Brahms, are just as blameworthy as those who would have us believe that music began in 1918, and who speak of Beethoven and Wagner as if they belonged to an inferior order of humanity, with cerebral equipments which would hardly be creditable to an anthropoid ape. This is not an exaggeration. It has actually been said, and the remark is perhaps as good an illustration as can be found of the danger of the one-sided view, and it is, on the whole, a greater danger than that of excess in the virtue of toleration.

It may be said in conclusion that toleration is a better guiding principle, except for those fortunate few whose minds are so keenly analytical and who can so truly and objectively analyse themselves as to discern greatness and strength wherever they meet it—even in things which they instinctively dislike.

INNOVATION AND CLICHÉ IN MUSIC

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

At one end of the range of resources which composers use we find the clichés—or, as Mr. Sydney Grew defines them in Music and Letters (July, 1920), musical terms, forms, ideas, or modes of thought which have 'dried up into platitude.' At the other end we find innovations of all kinds in matter and treatment. The possible presence of either in a given work is a point of interest to the critic who believes in the virtues of analysis. But analysis will remain barren unless heralded by an investigation of the notions which the terms 'innovation' and 'cliché' represent. As regards the former, there is little difficulty; but the latter, like many of the terms used in musical criticism, represents something indefinite and variable. It may be difficult to determine its content and implications so as to satisfy everybody; but it should be possible at least to make clear in which sense it is used.

The cliché may occur in many forms and under various circumstances. It should be considered in its twofold aspect, spiritual and material.

The tale of the former is soon told. There exist writers of music whose minds are for ever running in grooves. Their works may contain no particularly conspicuous instance of any given cliché, yet as a whole they are but so many vast clichés. The case of the composer who thinks, and not merely writes, in clichés, is hopeless. Incidentally, we may note that such composers are not always found out so soon as we would expect them to be.

Materially, clichés occur in idiom or in disposition. They are either materials out of which the structure is made or lines on which it is erected. That is, they consist of ready-made modes of expression or of progress to which a composer resorts, not under the impulse of creative imagination, but mechanically—be it through habit, through poverty of mind, or as a matter of principle.

The problem for us is, then, to discriminate between what constitutes a cliché through being done mechanically, and what does not. It is not altogether a matter of outer aspect. In its simplest form the cliché may be a mere mannerism of diction or of style; and there is not much to add to what Mr. Grew has written of this kind of cliché. Between it and the thousand current terms of musical idiom which nobody would dream of describing as clichés, there is no essential difference. When a composer passes, say, from the chord of the tonic to its relative and thence to the dominant, or from one position of a chord to another, and so on, or gives us thirds or sixths in succession, we do not drag in the word cliché. We take the use of such simple resources as a matter of course. If we single out for notice things such as progressions in common chords with added seconds, or episodes in the whole-tone scale, and so forth, and describe them as clichés, it is either because we consider them as devoid of significance at the particular spot where they occur—and perhaps quite rightly: but it will be a point of critical judgment, not of mere definition—or because we are misled into ascribing undue prominence to them simply on account of their comparatively short pedigree. In other words, such formations obtrude simply because shortly after having burst into being they become current, alongside with or instead of other terms in the usual vocabulary. Between them and these other terms the difference corresponds exactly with that which exists, in language, between 'live' metaphor and 'dead' metaphor. As surely as a live metaphor which constitutes a useful addition to the vocabulary will in time become dead—that is, be incorporated into everyday speech—so surely will a great proportion of what are now neologisms be incorporated into the current idiom of music. It is true that a little experience enables most of us to detect which of these neologisms are now being used more or less extensively as conscious mannerism, for the sake of their supposed glamour rather than as means towards a more positive end. But unless we remember that each case is to be judged on its own merits, our judgments in turn will assume the character of so many clichés, and we shall run the risk of being less fair to a composer who admits into his vocabulary the recent additions than to a composer who does not. After all, there can be—indeed, there often is—as much of the mechanical and of wilful affectation in the stand taken by the academists (i.e., the composers whose trend of thought and modes of expression consist entirely of the older sort of clichés) as in that of the dabbler in neologisms which may or may not rise above the level of mere catch-words. Between the attitude of a Saint-Saëns averring that 'whoever is incapable of enjoying a sequence of chords merely because they are beautifully written does not deserve to be called a musician,' and that of the unsophisticated 'modernist' who invites us to enjoy a sequence of seconds merely because they are seconds, I can see no difference in kind: I even doubt whether there is a difference in degree. In both cases we have the exact musical equivalent of what Coleridge has described, in the Biographia Literaria, as:

... language mechanised, as it were, into a barrel-organ supplying both instrument and tune . . . a press-room of larger and smaller stereotype pieces, which it requires but an ordinary portion of ingenuity to vary indefinitely, and yet still produce something which, if not sense, will be so like it as to do as well.

Besides the academically-minded formalist, the dabbler in neologisms, and the popular opera-writer, whose sole aim is effect, and who is as little concerned with avoiding clichés as his worshippers are with detecting them, there is yet another kind of cliché-monger, probably the most dangerous through his influence on the plain (i.e., uncultured) man's musical taste: the emotionalist composer who thinks that provided he wear his heart on his sleeve, the veriest commonplaces may pass muster. And next to him should be placed those composers who believe that their cosmogonic or otherwise would-be philosophical intentions may give a fresh lease of life to tricks whose staleness, from the mere musical point of view, is unquestionable.

It is not with all these, however, that we are at present concerned, but with the composer who, though his mind does not run in grooves, is yet incapable of actually creating a fit expression of what he conceives. The test of genuineness cannot be thorough unless both intention and achievement be taken into account.

Obviously, it is not the fact of resorting, however freely, to commonplaces, which connotes the cliché-monger, but the incapacity to think and to write otherwise than in commonplaces. Most of the simpler commonplaces, when all is said and done, are neither particularly good nor particularly bad in themselves: they will offend chiefly by accumulation and recurrence. In his article, 'Rule and Law in Music' (Music and Letters, October, 1922), Prof. Watt writes:

The laws of part-writing taught in our schools to-day hold for the classical period from Bach to Brahms a style that for purposes of creation may well be said to be dead. It is a style for the exercise of pupils. Not that they would recreate its spontaneous beauty! And even if they did so, no one would think them really creative.

The overstatement is, I suspect, intentional, and there is no lack of perfectly live music written to-day in the alleged 'dead' style—for instance, by Fauré and by Kœchlin. It will have become obvious by now that a time-honoured resource is not necessarily a cliché. Nor is a cliché necessarily anything time-honoured. Nothing becomes a cliché (in appearance, at least) more quickly than the latest innovation. We have already seen one reason for this, and duly taken into account that innovations offer an attractive bait to the plagiarist, conscious or unconscious. But there is a third and deeper reason, of which Emile Hennequin's general description (in his book, La Critique Scientifique) will suffice for our present purpose:

It should be realised that the very act of imitation, the act by which a writer enlists under one banner in preference to any other, originated in a deep-rooted principle, and is a consequence of this writer's intellectual disposition, of his aptitudes and tendencies. Between the imitative artist and his master there exists a general similitude of intellectual organization. The idiosyncrasies are more powerful in the master, since they led him to actual, thorough creativeness; and probably lesser in the imitative artist, since they did not assert themselves altogether spontaneously: yet the analogies are unquestionable. General psychological facts are the foundations of movements such as romanticism, realism, colorism, and so forth.

It is not difficult to realise that whenever an artist asserts a capacity for thorough creativeness, there may be around him a number of artists of lesser creative power whom his discoveries and contributions to the common fund of musical resources will provide with the very means they needed for self-expression. How are we to discriminate between this second degree of originality and the mere dabbling in clichés which necessarily will take place concurrently? This is a matter for the critical sense which anybody pronouncing a judgment on musical works asks us to assume that he possesses. Not infrequently a guidance of some sort will be provided by some discrepancy in matter, or between matter and manner: as when we encounter melodic platitudes in elaborately modern harmonic garb, or a 13-4, 17-8, or 31-32 time-signature to things which might have been said as well and better in less ostentatious 3-4 or 3-8, if they were worth saying at all. But such indications are not always available, nor are they uniformly clear enough to serve the critic's purpose.

If we agree that the hall-mark of the cliché is to be found in its mechanical origin—as distinct from the imaginative origin of created expression—we are able to see, for instance, that even such things as Scriabin's famous scale and resulting chords, despite their outward aspect of innovations, may be mere clichés. The recipe for creating new scales, or substitutes for scales, is in itself purely mechanical. Another man may crop up any day who, by using semitones where Scriabin uses whole-tones, and vice versa, will present us with an equally brand-new system—a system whose artistic value will depend upon the artistic value of his music, apart from any question of system, exactly as the value of Scriabin's system depends upon the value of Scriabin's music.

A case in point is provided by Rebikov's fairly well-known Feuillet d'Album, in which a simple little tune is harmonized in piled-up consecutive fourths, beginning thus:

and going on until:

is reached.

I adduce this instance, not because I wish to single it out as particularly offensive or particularly puerile, but because there can be no doubt that on the face of it the procedure is no less mechanical than if an accompaniment in thirds and sixths, or thirds or sixths alone, had been provided. It could be carried further simply by striking two perfect fourths, and taking in the black keys of the pianoforte as well as the white.

Having noticed as much, it remains to ask ourselves whether anything is gained by the composer's avoidance of the older stereotype; whether he has achieved his object, which in all likelihood is similar to Cyril Scott's in Old Songs in new Guise, viz., to give fresh colour, point, and piquancy to a tune of not unfamiliar order. Needless to point out that Cyril Scott's endeavour, although equally deliberate, is far less mechanically carried out.

It is by resorting not to one comparison of this kind, but to dozens, that we may hope to thresh out similar minor aspects of the problem of originality in music. And the more characteristically bad certain of the instances used in the process of comparison will appear to be at first, the more we shall benefit by carefully carrying out the process point by point. Indeed, it is by the comparative study of 'good' music and 'bad' that the student will best be shown why music is 'good' or 'bad.'

But to disengage the bona fide use of innovations from their use as clichés is no easy task. If evidence were needed to show how grossly people may err in this respect, the history of the attitude of French criticism towards French music during the last sixty years or so would provide more than enough. In the 'seventies, and until the end of the century, practically every composer of imagination was described as a follower of Wagner. Later, most composers who rose above the level of the commonplace were accused of imitating Debussy. Critics, haunted by the effects of recent developments in music, ran amuck. Some of them, in their desire to show that Ravel had found a mine of clichés in Debussy's music, generously credited him with a fondness for the whole-tone scale, and for consecutive ninths, which investigation of his printed works has hitherto failed to reveal. Then came the Schönberg bogey. And as early as 1913 or thereabouts, Ravel again, of all people, was accused of doing things in imitation of Schönberg.

As I wrote in the November Musical Times, the main reason for errors of that kind is that, unavoidably, neologisms and innovations of all kinds begin by looming far too large in our minds; and it is only when the terms in which a work is couched have ceased to strike us as surprising, or unfamiliar, that we may become capable of passing sentence on that work. A neologism may be a cliché or not, exactly as any other term, current or rare; it is the critic's business to find out whether it is.

NIETZSCHE AND BIZET

By JOHN W. KLEIN

The English version of the correspondence between Nietzsche and Wagner has already been the subject of a considerable amount of discussion. It may therefore be of interest to devote a little attention to the passionate admiration which the great philosopher felt for Bizet, who supplanted Wagner in his esteem.

The final breach with Wagner occurred in the year 1878, three years after the death of Bizet. Nietzsche had as yet not even heard of the French composer, though he devoted a considerable amount of his time to the study of modern music, and, indeed, regarded himself with characteristic self-confidence as the sole authority on the subject worth considering. It was in November, 1881, that he strolled into a small theatre at Genoa and saw Carmen for the first time. He was enchanted, and wrote to his friend, Peter Gast:

A happy find! An opera, Carmen, by Bizet. A true French talent and one not led astray by Wagner—nevertheless, a disciple of Hector Berlioz. His music is strong, ingenious, here and there staggering. I am not far from thinking this is the best opera at present existing; so long as we live it will form an item in every European repertoire.

The delighted philosopher concluded his letter with the words, 'Bizet? Who is he?' He was not even aware that the creator of Carmen had sunk unnoticed into an early grave more than six years before.

Five days later he saw Bizet's masterpiece a second time, and wrote another enthusiastic letter to his friend:

It was a great blow for me to hear that Bizet is dead. I saw his masterpiece again yesterday. It is the very soul of passion and beauty. It is, indeed, well worth a whole journey to Spain. I was very ill lately, but I am well again, thanks to Carmen.

At this time Nietzsche no longer corresponded with Wagner, and, indeed, the embittered master of Bayreuth is even said to have destroyed some of the literary effusions of his once beloved pupil and disciple. (Several were destroyed by Frau Cosima in 1909.) Nevertheless, Nietzsche did not venture to proclaim his views until after the death of Wagner.

The year 1881 witnessed the complete triumph of Bizet's masterpiece. It would be extremely interesting to know whether Wagner was ever present at a performance of Carmen. Probably not, as it was his wont to ignore the works of all progressive and original spirits in foreign countries. So far as we are aware, he paid no more heed to Bizet than he had done to Moussorgsky or Verdi, and he even announced with sublime fatuity that Saint-Saëns was the greatest French composer of his age. It is strange that Liszt—who on one occasion had practically proclaimed Bizet to be the most brilliant pianist in Europe—did not draw Wagner's attention to the young Frenchman. Nevertheless, in 1881, the number of performances of Carmen greatly exceeded that of all the works of Wagner and Weber; and the former, who during the last years of his life had been making considerable bids for popularity, cannot have viewed his French rival's success with equanimity.

There are several interesting references to the matter in Nietzsche's letters to Spitteler and Gast. Spitteler (who was still smarting from certain pungent remarks of the philosopher) accused Nietzsche of having written The Case of Wagner not out of enthusiasm for his cause, but simply to gratify his animosity against the dead Wagner. Nietzsche replied sarcastically :

It is quite natural that I should connect my conversion with Carmen. I know you will not doubt it a moment—yet another malignity of mine! As a matter of fact, I know the success of Carmen awakened Wagner's wrath and envy.

How could he know this? Three months after the publication of The Case of Wagner—shortly before the terrible catastrophe—Nietzsche wrote to Gast :

Gersdorff has just paid me a visit. There is a strange thing which he tells me about which I am highly delighted. He assures me he saw Wagner in a paroxysm of rage against Bizet when Minnie Hauk was at Naples and sang Carmen. Since Wagner has himself taken sides in the matter, my malice in a certain important passage of the essay will be all the more keenly felt.

The last sentence is somewhat incriminating, though it is at the same time evident that Nietzsche knew nothing of the incident when he actually wrote the essay. The story is probably true, as it is in complete accordance with Wagner's nature. He, however, obviously abstained from referring to the matter in his letters.

After Wagner's death, Nietzsche's admiration for Bizet rapidly increased. He regularly attended performances of Carmen, and wrote on one occasion to Peter Gast :

I have once more been very happy. When this music is played some very deep stratum is stirred within me, and while listening to it I feel resolved to hold out to the last, and to unburden my heart of its supremest malice, rather than perish beneath the weight of my own thoughts.

Subsequently—in Jenseits von Gut und Böse—he deplores the fact that none of the modern German composers are 'good Europeans.' Beethoven alone could lay claim to such a title. In his opinion, Schumann—and especially Wagner—were hopelessly and exclusively German, even occasionally misusing their art to foster national hatreds. Bizet was, however, in every sense of the word a good European. He had discovered a new beauty and a new seduction, having succeeded in combining the otherwise conflicting elements of north and south into one harmonious whole.

Nietzsche developed these ideas in his brochure, The Case of Wagner, which he published two years later. In the Preface to this work he writes :

It is not malice alone which makes me praise Bizet at the expense of Wagner. To turn my back on Wagner was for me a piece of fate—to get to like anything else whatever afterwards was a triumph.

He started his famous essay in this way :

Yesterday—would you believe it?—I heard Bizet's masterpiece for the twentieth time. How such a work completes one! Through it one almost becomes a 'masterpiece' oneself. Bizet's music, indeed, seems to me perfect. It comes forward lightly, gracefully, stylishly. It is lovable, it does not sweat. 'All that is good is easy, everything divine runs with light feet.' This is the first principle of my æsthetics.

The most significant words of the essay, so far as Carmen is concerned, are as follows :

This music is gay, but not in a French or German way. Its gaiety is African: fate hangs over it. I envy Bizet for having had the courage of this sensitiveness, which hitherto in the cultured music of Europe had found no means of expression—of this southern, tawny, sunburnt sensitiveness.

Many of us may consider this an exaggeration, but it is well to repeat it to those who see in Carmen nothing else but a traditional French 'opéra-comique.' Dr. Adrian Boulton is not wrong in asserting that Carmen was the least understood of all operas, thanks mostly to the senseless antics of famous singers in the name-part.

Nietzsche proceeds :

Have more painful, more tragic accents ever been heard on the stage before? And how are they obtained? Without grimaces! Without counterfeiting of any kind! Free from the lie of the grand style! I, indeed, know no case in which the tragic irony which constitutes the kernel of love is expressed with such severity or in so terrible a formula as in the last cry of Don José with which the work ends. Perhaps you are now beginning to perceive how very much this music improves me! 'Il faut méditerraniser la musique.'

After reading so extraordinary an eulogy, we may perhaps be permitted to ask whether Nietzsche was really in earnest. Though he had written the following Latin quotation, Ridendo dicere severum, on the title-page of his essay, he subsequently wrote to his friend, Dr. Fuchs :

You mustn't take what I have said about Bizet too seriously; in my present state of mind I don't care a brass farthing for him. But as an ironical antithesis against Wagner, the glorification of Carmen was certainly most effective. After all, it would have been an incomparable lack of taste on my part to have begun my essay by praising Beethoven.

Whatever we may think of this letter, most of us will probably agree with the last sentence. Nevertheless, no less an authority than Mr. Bernard Shaw has been guilty of this 'incomparable lack of taste,' when he savagely exclaims :

What can we say to a man who, after pitting his philosophy against Wagner with refreshing ingenuity and force, proceeds to hold up as the masterpiece of modern musical drama—blazing with all the merits which the Wagnerian music-dramas lack—guess what? Don Giovanni, perhaps, or Orfeo or Fidelio? Not at all. Bizet's Carmen—no less.

Nietzsche would probably have retorted, 'A man who places Bunyan above Shakespeare is not worthy of a moment's serious consideration.' However revolutionary and startling his opinions on other questions, Mr. Shaw is on the whole—as regards music—perhaps a trifle too conventional. Moreover, I consider him to have taken rather an unfair advantage of Nietzsche, since the latter, in The Case of Wagner, was professedly dealing with the works of contemporary composers alone. As for Fidelio, it is, from a purely operatic point of view, more or less of a failure; and, personally, I am unable to understand those people who persist in ranking it among Beethoven's most inspired creations.

On the other hand, in spite of his incriminating letters to Dr. Fuchs, Nietzsche often assured his friends that he was thoroughly in earnest, and repeatedly remarked that he wrote the essay with the greatest pleasure and ease during 'those happy days at Turin.' He announced his intention of publishing a French translation, and was convinced that his work was in intimate harmony with French tastes, and that the appreciation of Bizet would be read with considerable interest. He forwarded a copy of the brochure to the famous Danish Shakespearean critic, Georges Brandes. The latter replied:

A few days before receiving your pamphlet I witnessed a performance of Carmen. What splendid music it is! I hope you will not be angry with me for saying that Tristan and Isolde also made an indelible impression on me.

(Nietzsche himself considered this work Wagner's non plus ultra.)

Nietzsche subsequently heard the Patrie Overture, and found in it a welcome occasion for a fresh outburst of enthusiasm for his old idol. 'You ought to hear how the little man grows heroic,' he writes. A few days later he had sent his strange letter to Dr. Fuchs! In the presence of such contradictory statements we should, however, bear in mind that the terrible cloud of madness was already hovering over him. He began to sign his letters 'The Man on the Cross,' and to speak spitefully of his dearest friends. He sought in music oblivion, and nothing else. The influence of his illness is, however, not in the least perceptible in The Case of Wagner, which was, nevertheless, his 'chant du cygne.' Ungern-Sternberg, who visited him about this time, declares: 'He possessed a cool head and a critical mind, combined with the greatest possible sobriety.'

In this connection it is interesting to ask what it was in the first place induced Nietzsche to praise Bizet at the expense of Wagner. Surely not malice alone, as Spittler imagines. Neither can it have been merely a morbid craving to startle people or to offend Frau Cosima Wagner, who had regarded him as her husband's pre-destined champion in the non-musical world.

No; there must surely have been something else, or the man who was always in a state of nervous agitation would not on several occasions, according to his own testimony, have listened five hours 'with gentle reverence' to Bizet's music. Indeed, this triumph over his impatience was always a matter of wonder to him, and yet he scarcely ever missed a performance of Carmen. More than once we read 'Bizet's orchestration is practically the only one I can endure now.' Probably the break with Wagner was more owing to Nietzsche's state of health than most people realise. His illness was the inevitable result of the morbidly feverish intensity of his mental activity, of thirty years of an almost superhuman over-use of his brain. Now Wagner's music is certainly—if judged from this particular point of view—essentially morbid, and a man who feels that his mind is slowly giving way will turn with instinctive loathing from the products of a brain such as Wagner's. In The Case of Wagner the significant words occur, 'How terribly Wagnerian orchestration affects me. A disagreeable sweat breaks out all over me.' On the other hand, his love for Carmen was a violent, almost unreasoning passion. Some people have compared it to the craving of the sufferer for a narcotic, though Nietzsche himself would have been horrified at any such suggestion, since he considered Wagner's music 'narcotic art par excellence.' There is, moreover, no doubt that Bizet's music, 'toute lumière, toute vie,' as Romain Rolland says—exercised a most invigorating influence on the philosopher's debilitated nervous system, even as it had done on that of Hugo Wolf.

We must not, however, be led to infer that Nietzsche's musical criticism during these years is consequently of little or no value. The Case of Wagner was written only a few months before the catastrophe, but even Mr. Bernard Shaw recognises 'its refreshing ingenuity and force.' Nevertheless, a distinguished critic has recently declared that Nietzsche was incapable of understanding Wagner, and that he was—as regards music—the feeblest mind which ever hitched itself to the chariot of the master of Bayreuth. This critic laid particular stress on the fact that Nietzsche wrote fourth-rate music—as if the absence of a creative gift necessarily implied that of a critical one. Wagner himself always had a very high opinion of Nietzsche's gifts as a music critic, though we should of course beware of overrating such a testimonial.

Though many of us may be unable to agree with all the opinions expressed in The Case of Wagner, it is difficult to overrate its importance as one of the most brilliant pieces of musical criticism ever written. The chapters dealing with Carmen may seem excessively laudatory, but they are, nevertheless, essentially true. After all, Nietzsche is not entirely responsible for the flights of imagination of some of his followers. As we all know, his championship of Bizet encouraged certain French critics—who had previously stigmatized the composer of Carmen as a poseur aping Wagner and relying on a few eccentricities to win him admirers—to make extravagant claims on their countryman's behalf, and to set him above Wagner. Such comparisons were of course in the main futile, as on the one hand we are dealing with the work of a man who accomplished the task he set out to perform, and, on the other, with that of one who was still engaged in groping his way when he was struck down by the hand of fate.

"Whalley Abbey consisted of a choir of three boys and a nave of ten."—Ecclesiastical paper.

"If we know anything of choir boys, there is a 'k' missing."—Punch.

HAS MUSIC DESCRIPTIVE POWER?

BY ERIC BLOM

Miss Margaret Morris once performed a kind of nonchalant hooligan dance with bowler hat and cigarette to Dvorák's Humoresque, an interpretation which invested this mild and amiable little piece with anything but the atmosphere the composer must have meant it to convey. But it was startling to see how the music seemed to fit the dancer's conception; it displayed an almost alarming readiness to throw all appearances to the wind, and lose its immaculate character by snuggling to the insinuating movements of the subtle ruffian portrayed on the stage. The question obtruded itself whether the Humoresque really is the innocent little tune, fit to delight the heart of every gentle maiden who is not afraid of its six flats, or whether it is a stupendous piece of musical hypocrisy, hiding behind a mask of genteel respectability an abyss of infamy. On reflection, however, it became clear that it is simply a thing of small moral strength, which could be easily induced by an artist of imagination to lend itself to a dozen different renderings, each as convincing as the one seen at the quaint theatre at Chelsea.

But let us not use this harmless little weakling as a scapegoat for its fellows, for most music is tarred with the same brush, and succumbs in a similar way to the imposition of extra-musical ideas which it is fondly supposed to illustrate perfectly. It does nothing of the kind; not until we actually hear the music in connection with the extra-musical subject do we conclude, a posteriori, that they are both indissolubly linked up with each other. Had the music been introduced to us without its title or text—or whatever literary or pictorial element it is that fixes a certain atmosphere in our mind in connection with it—we might have come to our own very different conclusions as to its meaning. Even onomatopoeic musical imitation, from Rameau's clucking hens and Haydn's lowing cattle and croaking frogs to the more realistic bleating of Strauss's sheep, is only unmistakable to us so long as our imagination is guided by an illuminating title, an explanatory programme, or, in the case of vocal music, by the words to which it is set. Without these props, we should flounder into a hundred conjectures that might be extremely wide of the mark, however plausible the real explanation may seem when it is unfolded. Thus the Humoresque, which we usually accept as an expression of a certain capricious wistfulness, may, to the uninitiated, sound sad and yearning, vulgarly skittish, or even, as Miss Margaret Morris has shown, insidiously evil.

Without external aid, music has really no descriptive power at all. If it is to express a distinct aspect or character, the suggestion as to its particular meaning must be established by factors that lie entirely outside its proper sphere. If such a suggestion is vouchsafed by the composer in a scenic or literary form, we shall generally feel that the music conveys, more or less happily, of course, what he claims to express, even in cases where the allusion is limited to a mere title which may have been added by an afterthought—as we cannot help feeling is the case, to mention only one or two typical instances, with many pianoforte pieces by Schumann, Grieg, and Debussy. On the other hand, the music of men like Chopin and Scriabin, while quite as strongly suggestive, lends itself, in the absence of any indication, to a great variety of readings according to the hearer's temperament. It is powerless to impress upon the listener's mind the exact shade of the composer's mood. Some people speak of César Franck's Symphony as being all religious aspiration and asceticism, while others feel it to be, on the contrary, a stuffy, luxurious, hothouse growth. But such is the power of programmatic suggestion, that all are agreed to see in his Chasseur maudit a perfect musical picture of the story on which it is based. Again, Scriabin's orchestral works, listened to without any illuminating analysis, strike some hearers as metaphysical and detached from all human passions, others as unpleasantly erotic.

Bacon said that 'generally music feedeth the disposition of spirit which it findeth.' If that be so, then we know why absolute music is so satisfying even in moods which would preclude our enjoyment of music of a 'descriptive' character—music which relies on an attitude of mind that has first to be created by a prescribed feeling with which we may for the moment be out of harmony. The Unfinished Symphony may move us to a hopelessness of despair or may bring consolation, in each case finding our sympathy, at moments when a Weber Overture, delightful at other times, would jar or at least leave us unresponsive. Mozart can move us to tears by the gayest of his tunes, if we are so disposed, or fill us with an exulting happiness by his most tragic movement, at times when the Pastoral or the Pathetic Symphony would set our nerves on edge by forcing us into the particular mood with which their programmes have for ever associated them. The immense popularity of the Wagnerian drama in the English concert-room seems to be entirely due to its comparatively rare appearance on our stage. No people who are on intimate terms with Wagner in his proper surroundings could go on appreciating his music as a stimulant of ideas that may not be entirely those imagined by the composer. Thus the British public has in Wagner something much more of an absolute musician than he ever meant to be—a compensation for our operatic poverty that must not be underestimated.

There is abundant proof that music which has become welded to a definite situation seems appropriate to it simply because we have made the acquaintance of both simultaneously. Had we met with the musical idea without being at the same time introduced to its consort, it might have made a vastly different impression on us and we might perhaps have fallen in love with it by lending it a charm of our own imagining. How many people know that the Turkish March in Beethoven's music to the Ruins of Athens was a spinster for two years, and acquired its Eastern nationality only on the day on which it was wedded to Kotzebue's play? Does not Desnoiresterres tell us, in his book on Gluck and Piccinni, how Boïeldieu made of a duet in Armide on the truculent words, 'Esprit de haine et de rage,' one of the gayest and most comical themes in Ma Tante Aurore? Does not Handel use the same themes over and over again for different works? And what of Beethoven, who set a poem by Goethe four times, thinking no doubt at each attempt that it fitted the words better than the last? These four songs are a typical illustration of the 'futility of endeavouring to fix a definite feeling in music, for each, looked at without the words, is just a feeble tune that may mean anything under the sun, yet each expresses the poem tolerably enough once we know that it was intended to do so. A good example of how a most inappropriate musical idea may serve, if the literary foil be strongly suggestive, is the Sancho Panza theme in Don Quixote, which is generally quite readily accepted as a perfect character study; yet if we had heard it, to begin with, without its programme, we should probably all have agreed that it is a portrait of a Viennese cabman to the life, and we should certainly have exclaimed, on hearing what its purport is in reality, that it is no more in its place in the satire of Cervantes than the Widow Twankey is in Aladdin.

No; music unaided is perfectly incapable of fixing a definite picture for us without the assistance of conceptions that lie outside its scope. There is no need to deplore this defect, for music's very lack of delineating faculties makes it the most evocative of all the arts. It can light up in our minds strange dream-pictures which none of the other art-forms, with their concrete outlines, can make so tangible to us. The composer can choose one of two ways of doing this. The first, which this article has endeavoured to prove to be the more defective because the less purely musical, is to direct the vision, by means of extra-musical suggestion, into a channel analogous to that along which his own thought has flown; but since he cannot compel us to grasp the actual lines and colours of his own image, he may be sure that he will always create something of more lasting value by following the second mode of procedure, which is to leave us to work out entirely for ourselves our understanding of the psychic impulse that prompted him to write a piece he chose to leave nameless. Absolute music will to the end of time be preferred by the imaginative listener, because it voices his own emotions and those of the world at large rather than those, interesting perhaps, but comparatively negligible and transitory, of the composer. There is an ever-growing tendency to-day to look upon the two most objective classics, Bach and Mozart, as the greatest. Purcell, Scarlatti, and Couperin, who never worry us with their own affairs, are coming into their own again, while Tchaikovsky and Strauss, whose absolute music is insignificant, are already waning. Beethoven is greatest in the Quartets and in those Symphonies which have remained unconnected with any sort of programme. Wagner himself is losing ground because he claims too much of our attention for his gods and heroes, and living composers like Elgar, Ravel, Sibelius, Bartók, and many others already leave no doubt in our minds that they have created their most enduring works where they are concerned with nothing but music pure and simple.

BOOKS ON ORCHESTRATION: AN HISTORICAL SKETCH

BY ADAM CARSE

The recent issue of Rimsky-Korsakov's Principles of Orchestration in English suggests that a short survey of the growth of text-books on this particular subject may not be without interest to musicians.

The general impression that all books on orchestration look back to Berlioz's well-known work as their progenitor is not altogether correct, although the publication of that book in 1848 certainly acts as the most important landmark in a vista which may possibly be conceived to stretch back into the 16th century.

The books which, up till the beginning of the 19th century, served practically the same purpose as modern books on orchestration, concerned themselves more with describing how to play musical instruments than with how to write for them. In a sense they are instruction books, usually covering the whole range of musical instruments and voices, and in some cases embracing such comprehensive matter as the technique of composition, harmony, acoustics, form, and a variety of kindred subjects. Their present value is purely historical and antiquarian; some of them are absolutely indispensable to the student of the history of musical instruments. The terms 'orchestration' and 'instrumentation' do not occur in these books till early in the 19th century, nor indeed were their authors probably conscious that they were dealing with the early stages of what has since become a specialised branch of a composer's equipment.

It is possibly not stretching the subject too far to go back to Virdung's Musica getutscht, published at Basle in 1511, for a definite beginning. That Virdung's work supplied a certain want may be judged from the fact that already in 1532 one Luscinius put the whole into Latin, and that Martin Agricola about the same time served it up in verse, both reproducing Virdung's original illustrations. A facsimile reproduction of this valuable book was issued in 1882 by Breitkopf & Härtel.

A more comprehensive successor to Virdung's book was Prætorius's Syntagma Musicum (1615-20), of which one part, published in 1618, deals entirely with orchestral and other instruments. Prætorius, whose real name was Schultz, describes a large variety of viols and violins, oboes, flutes, and bassoons in their early forms, cornetti, trumpets, and hunting-horns, many completely obsolete instruments, also bagpipes, lutes, harps, and sundry keyboard instruments, and in 1618 issued his Theatrum Instrumentorum, giving wood-cut illustrations of many of the instruments described in the text. Of the original editions of these rare books very few copies survive, but a German reprint is available. We reproduce the title-page overleaf.

Next in the field came the Frenchman, Mersennus, part of whose Harmonie Universelle (1636-37) covers more or less the same ground as Prætorius's work, and who also provides interesting pictures of instruments. Most of the pictures of the 16th and 17th century musical instruments in general histories of music are derived from one or other of these three books.

The 18th century successors of these early books deal more specifically with orchestral instruments, and give clearer details of the compass, capabilities, and fingering of the instruments which by then had united to form the nucleus of the modern orchestra.

Das neu eröffnete Orchestre, by the North-German musician, Mattheson, is dated 1713. In this enlightening book it will be found that many of the older instruments were dropping out of use. The violin—'the most difficult'—the viola, violoncello, and violone (double-bass) are described in company with only a few survivors of the viol family. The strings, compass, and uses of each are clearly, although briefly, dealt with. The cornetto (Zincke) is said to be just going out of use, and the horn (Waldhorn) just coming into use. A trumpet in D,

The horn is by this time sehr en vogue kommen, and is usually in F, a fifth below the schreyende Clarinen (screaming trumpets). Alto, tenor, and bass (F) trombones are described, and we read that 'shakes, as on the trumpet and horn, are made with the chin.' Majer's illustration of a timpani stick is quite a good picture of an indian club, and he tells us how to prevent the drum-head from getting too dry by treating it with brandy!

After Mattheson and Majer there is a distinct slump in books of this character, but many writers partially fill up the gap with works dealing with their own particular instruments; also the early Dictionaries of Music such as those by Walther, Gerber, and Koch give information about instruments which at all events save the historian from being left high and dry. Incidentally, Walther must have been something of a humorist, for on looking up the word Pauke (drum) the reader is referred to Timbale; on turning up Timbale he is informed that it is eine Pauke.

Towards the end of the 18th century and during the first forty years of the 19th century quite a large crop of books appeared, some of which specifically professed to teach instrumentation. These, the immediate precursors of Berlioz's famous work, are rather difficult to get hold of nowadays. Not being old enough to possess much historical interest, and too out of date to be of any practical use, they have not generally been carefully preserved, nor have they achieved the distinction of being reprinted. A mere list will suffice to show that there was considerable activity among author-musicians during the period of Beethoven and Mendelssohn:

- 1772. Franceur. Diapason général de tous les instruments à vent.
- 1800. Vanderbroeck. Traité général . . . instruments à vent (Paris).
- 1828. Sundelin. Die instrumentierung für das Orchester (Berlin).
- 1829. Frölich. Systematisches unterricht . . . Orchesterinstrumente (Würzburg).
- 1837. Kastner. Traité général d'instrumentation (Paris).
- 1837. Marx. Compositionslehre (vols. iii. and iv.).
- 1838. Gassner. Partiturkenntniss (Karlsruhe).
- 1851. Gassner. Traité de la partition (French translation).

Berlioz's Modern Instrumentation and Orchestration (1848) is too well known to require much comment. The language of the English translation (1858) sometimes fails to make matters quite clear, but allowing for the great mechanical improvements in instruments since Berlioz's time, even the present-day student may profit by the sound advice and infectious enthusiasm of this remarkable author's work.

Following Berlioz, quite a number of worthy musicians have kept the subject of orchestration up-to-date in books modelled more or less on the same lines. Lobe (vol. ii. of Lehrbuch der Musikalischen Composition, 1850), Buszler, Hoffmann, Jadassohn, Kling, and Riemann (the last two also in English) are amongst those who have supplied a demand for such books with varying success. But still more important is the work of the Belgian, Gevaert, whose Traité d'Instrumentation (1863), revised as Nouveau Traité d'Instrumentation in 1885, is still recognised abroad as a standard work.

Near the end of last century English musicians began to take an important part in providing text-books on a subject which had previously been left entirely to foreign hands. The following, in order of publication, are still current, and in some respects are more serviceable to the English student than works by foreign authors, who are not familiar with the conditions which prevail and the orchestral instruments which are in use in this country:

- 1895. Corder. The Orchestra, and how to write for it (Curwen).
- 1897. Prout. The Orchestra (two vols., Augener).
- 1914. Forsyth. Orchestration (Macmillan).

Several smaller books in English give—not always quite correctly—little more than the compass of orchestral instruments.

Other recent books of importance are those by Widor (1904, English translation, Joseph Williams, Ltd.), a modernised version of Berlioz by Richard Strauss (Peters), the Italian L'Orchestrazione by Ricci (Milan, 1920), and now the English translation of Rimsky-Korsakov's work mentioned at the beginning of this article.

Helpful as they are to the student, books on orchestration all suffer—in common with dictionaries and cyclopædias—in that they begin to get out of date from the moment they are written, in that they can never be quite complete, and from the fact that no one learns how to orchestrate by reading books.

Ad Libitum

BY 'FESTE'

A letter in last month's Musical Times called attention once more to the practice of misquoting and garbling of criticisms and reviews. I take up the subject because a very bad case has occurred during the past few weeks—a case so flagrant that some such organization as the Critic's Circle ought to make a move and obtain legal advice on the matter. Strictly speaking, the only really honest way to use critical notices is to print them in full, with their mixture of praise and blame. But as this is usually impossible owing to want of space, we need not complain if the bouquets only are preserved and the other missiles left. We can hardly expect publishers and concert agents to cry 'stinking fish,' or even to announce that the fish is good in parts. The omission of adverse opinions may be forgiven; it cannot even be described as suppressio veri, for opinions are not facts. The misapplication of a critic's expressions is quite another thing. It is rank dishonesty, and double-barrelled, too, in that it hits both critic and public. It represents the critic as having said 'white' when he said 'black,' or, at least, 'grey,' and it cheats his readers by inducing them to part with their money on the strength of critical pronouncements that, honestly quoted, would have merely made them button their pockets the tighter.

Before dealing with the case that has moved me to this protest, I may be allowed to say, first, that I have no personal feeling in the matter. I have never set eyes on the composer concerned, and I have not attended a performance of his work, or even seen a note of it. I simply present the facts and let them speak for themselves—which they do in no uncertain manner. In fact, they shout.

On November 20, Mr. Adrian Beecham's opera, The Merchant of Venice, was produced at the Duke of York's Theatre. On November 22, The Times theatrical advertisement columns contained a long string of apparent eulogies from the daily press of the preceding day. Reading the extracts, one received the impression that the work was a masterpiece of the first order. Now let us take these laudatory quotations, and see how much they are really worth.

The Times: Remarkable. . . . Genuine inventive ability.

I turn to the long notice in The Times and find that the quoted expressions occur in a context that does anything but glow:

The whole thing is remarkable in its ambition as the product of a very young and inexperienced writer, and naturally every allowance has to be made in judging it. What one chiefly looks for is not technical surety. It has none of that, nor has it any special degree of musico-dramatic talent—the writing is too immature. One looks rather for evidences of a genuine inventive ability, and in this respect we certainly do find a few traces.

So that, after all, the 'genuine inventive ability' was, not something with which the opera was chock-full, as the simple reader of the advertisement was led to believe. It was merely a quality for which the critic looked—and looked almost in vain, for he found no more than 'a few traces.'

Daily Telegraph: . . . Uncommon distinction.

An opera to which these words could be applied would be the very thing England has been waiting to receive from one of her composers. But the truth must be told: the Daily Telegraph critic applied the expression not to the opera but to one of the performers! Thus:

Mr. Gregory Stroud makes a Bassanio of uncommon distinction.

Daily Mirror: . . . Beautiful . . . Delightful.

Here again we find a misapplication of the critic's terms. What he really said was that 'the scenery, designed by Mr. George Harris, was in beautiful taste,' and that Miss Ena Riess was 'a delightful Portia.'

Daily Express: . . . What about Sir Charles Stanford?

At first sight one is puzzled by this, and says, 'Well, what about him?' Then one chews it over, and comes to the conclusion that it is an application of the old yarn of the Scotsman who in his enthusiasm for the dramatic effort of a now forgotten fellow countryman (John Home, and his Douglas, I think) cried, 'Whaur's your Wully Shakespeare the noo?' The reader figures the Express critic throwing his hat in the air, and asking for the whereabouts of Stanford in the same way. Myself, I know nothing of critics, but I have been led to regard them as a cold and fish-like tribe, unlikely to indulge in such flights. So I turn to the Express to see what's about Sir Charles, and find this:

Young Mr. Adrian Beecham has not been well served by his pastors and masters. His musical setting of The Merchant of Venice, produced at the Duke of York's Theatre last night, is completely immature, and he himself will probably live to regret its public performance. Doubtless it is remarkable that a boy of eighteen should write an opera at all; doubtless the musical talents of Adrian Beecham are considerable enough to be worth cultivating. At present, however, they are in a state too much akin to the precocious talents paraded by fond mothers and aunts on Sunday afternoons for the delight of admiring friends and relatives. Obviously he has a certain natural sense of the stage, and there is no reason why, with another three or four years of study, he should not write an excellent opera. But the time is not yet. The performance, apart from Gregory Stroud, who sang well as Bassanio, was hardly more than adequate, and the claim (put forward incidentally by a man who appeared before the curtain in one of the intervals to make an appeal for a deserving charity) that this was the first instance of a British composer setting a Shakespeare play to music is quite unjustified. What about Sir Charles Stanford?

Well! well!

Morning Advertiser: . . . Must be admired . . . the music was decidedly original and very melodious.

At this stage of our researches the reader will not be surprised to find that the Tiser critic wrote:

When it is remembered that he [Mr. Beecham] is still very young, his pluck in tackling so well-known a work must be admired. . . . Some of the music was decidedly original and very melodious. [My italics.]

If we admire Mr. Beecham's pluck we are astonished past all whooping at that of his advertisement compiler. In fact, pluck is hardly the word.

Sportsman: Achieves the marvellous.

What the Sportsman actually said:

Whether Mr. Adrian Beecham will be of the immortals, whether he will tower over his contemporaries, or even rank with the best of them, we are not competent to express even a hesitating opinion. The fact remains that to write an opera of any kind at fifteen years is to achieve the marvellous . . .

I should like to have been within earshot when this hesitating sportsman found himself committed to the statement that the opera 'achieves the marvellous.' What a lot of difference that tacked-on 's' makes!

The Daily Mail notice was very badly mauled. This is what the critic wrote

Young Adrian, the eighteen-years-old son of brilliant Sir Thomas Beecham, has spent in writing operas the years in which most schoolboys enjoy bird's-nesting and collecting stamps. A fruit of this exceptional hobby was The Merchant of Venice, staged with no little pomp at the Duke of York's Theatre. . . . Only very serious people would reproach one so young for mating his callow and untaught notions with Shakespeare's poetry. Young Adrian, no doubt, in years to come will smile too at such indiscretion. At the same time the grown-up listener does wish that the enthusiastic lad had been less bold and had chosen some text more of the Maritana and Bohemian Girl type—operas with the style of which his music has something in common. For, truth to tell, the youth's fluent pen wreaks havoc with the music of the verse. One would not for a moment suggest that this composer would have been better employed in bird's-nesting. Some great musicians have been very late in giving an inkling of genius, and if there is none in this infantile Merchant of Venice, that argues nothing against the future.

Now it is certain that if you or I wrote an opera and woke up on the morning after the night before to find a notice of this kind waiting with the early cup of tea, we should say that here was a verdict from which no commendatory tit-bits could be picked. But such a notice presents no difficulty to a practised press agent. As Hamlet says, 'tis as easy as lying'; in fact, the process is really a modern development of that oldest of arts. You simply take your axe, pick out the most attractive adjectives, and disregard such a detail as the context. The result is brief, bright, and to the point. Here is the Daily Mail report, after its surgical operation :

. . . Exceptional . . . Fluent pen . . . Enthusiastic.

The above examples do not exhaust the list ; I have dealt only with the more flagrant specimens. The conclusion of the whole matter is that a perusal of all the available criticism of the opera shows the critics to be practically unanimous in their verdict, namely, that the work is immature and unsatisfactory in various ways, but that as the work of a mere boy it shows some promise. On the other hand the quotations give a cumulative verdict to which not one of the critics would have signed his name.

Writing on this subject in the Musical Times of May last, Mr. Ernest Newman said :

Some day, I think, the courts will have to be asked to decide as to whether these traditional practices of artists and agents are permissible. Within the last few months an American author, Mr. W. F. McCaleb, brought an action—and, I believe, won it—against the exhibitors of an 'historical' film for misquoting on the screen from an historical treatise of his. He ' . . . alleged in his pleading that the purported quotation is erroneous, and that it expresses a view diametrically opposed to the opinion in fact expressed by him in his book, and that it is injurious to him in his reputation and standing as an author and historian.'

Commenting on the case, the Author (the journal of the [British] Incorporated Society of Authors) says that ' . . . it would seem, on the principle of the British cases,* that Mr. McCaleb is right, and that he ought to succeed in his action if he can prove that the quotation attributes to him an opinion which, in fact, he never expressed.'

There I leave the matter, with an expression of sympathy for Lady Beecham, whose devoted efforts on behalf of her son's work deserved a better fate than to be made ridiculous by the methods of some unscrupulous press agent.

P.S.—I have just seen Mr. Percy Scholes's notice in the Observer. Here it is :

With the greatest wish in the world to be kind to a promising boy composer I regret that I cannot say that I see any good reason whatever for the public production of the youthful Adrian Beecham's opera.

This looks wangler-proof, doesn't it? Yet I am sure that the artist whose efforts we have been considering should have been equal to the occasion. P.A.S. may be thankful that his pronouncement appeared too late to be used with those of his colleagues on the daily press. Had it been a few days earlier he might have been staggered to see, among the other scalps, this :

Observer : . . . Greatest in the world . . . promising boy composer . . . good.

* Cases decided by English courts in the author's favour on the ground of 'misrepresentation of facts as to what the author had written, thereby falsely imputing to him the authorship of work inferior to his own standard of work in the same class.' Some of the perversions I have seen of a critic's words for advertisement purposes would certainly come under this category.—E. N.

POETRY AND MODERN CHORALISM

BY ARNOLD FETTERS

Few types of British music have changed so much for the better as has choral music during recent years. This is particularly evident in the larger forms which have developed from oratorio and cantata. There is no comparison between the interest of works such as Coleridge-Taylor's Hiawatha, Elgar's Dream of Gerontius, Bantock's Omar Khayyám, Atalanta in Calydon, and Vanity of Vanities, and Delius's Sea-Drift, and the choral works of the last century, or even of the preceding twenty years. Such compositions have brought into being a totally new idea of choral music, and a completely new technique of choralism. Symphonic development can account for much so far as the increased interest of the instrumental accompaniments goes ; but this consideration can scarcely apply to the choral matter, even though Bantock has attempted to write choral symphonies dispensing with instrumental parts. Voices, by their nature, cannot provide the variety of contrast in timbre and combination which instruments can. Putting aside the technical interest of modern polyphony, which can appeal only to comparatively few, and is almost caviare to the mass of concert-goers, what then accounts for the impression created among the general public by these modern choral works?

Where is the main difference between any of the works mentioned and, say, a large choral work by Macfarren, Barnett, or Gaul? The increased originality of the music, some will reply immediately. Does musical originality, however, ever take the general public by storm? Is its acceptance not a matter of very gradual growth of familiarity, as in the case of Wagner? Is it not more likely that the regular and familiar masses of sound built up on the already popularised models of Handel and Mendelssohn would please a general audience more than the strange scenic effects of the moderns mentioned were the musical matter the only consideration?

We must seek further for the real cause. Modern choral music has more than musical characteristics to divide it from earlier types. Leaving aside the great Bach, since he was inspired by his religious sense—one with that which gave us the great Psalms and poems of the Bible—modern choralism is different from its predecessors because it is more expressive in a dramatic, poetic, or atmospheric manner. This brings us to the main contention of this paper.

The drama, poetry, or atmosphere of the works exemplified is something created in the first place by the matter of the poems or texts set. Here we find the most marked contrast between the moderns and their forerunners. Handel, Haydn, and many of the classics seem to have been totally oblivious of literary quality. They would take the most uninspired texts and set them ; and only their musical genius transcended the shortcomings of their librettists. Indeed, we are often painfully aware of these, in spite of the composers' talents. Among the last generation of British choral composers the lack of literary discrimination is even more plain. The use of reach-me-down 'words for music' seems to have spread from the ballad into larger forms—two notable exceptions, however, having been Barnett's Ancient Mariner and Sullivan's Golden Legend. Musical culture does not seem to have necessitated a development of general taste.

The new school of choralism has developed its general interest because it has developed its literary and poetical taste. Of course, this traces back, indirectly, to Wagner, with his attempts to synchronise the values of verbal and musical sound. Nevertheless the Bayreuth master limited himself and the future possibilities of his idea by his almost exclusive attention to alliteration. The moderns who have taken advantage of his pioneer work in opening out new dramatic expression have not made the same mistake. They have sought out poems or texts in themselves dramatic in theme yet also musical in wording. With verbal beauty and sonority they seek also beauty of mood and idea. This course has a direct musical result. The composer is obliged to transcend the poem in some way, by amplification or by subtilising its theme. In other words, no modern composer is content with sound-colour; that would be simply to paint the lily. To justify the intrusion of music he has to produce something in which music is essential, or, to continue the metaphor, he is obliged to produce a new floral culture of art. Summarised, the fine poem, imbued with verbal music, creates an incentive to originality in setting.

Thus far the composer. The effect on the public of the new taste is clear also. It must be admitted that the basis of British culture is literary. Folk-music is a recent addition to educational subjects, notwithstanding its age; but Chaucer, Spenser, Shakespeare, and Milton are old features of the classroom. Poetry allows of our arriving at ideas by a more direct route than music. Speech is shared by all; music is an accomplishment of but comparatively few. A great poem of large form will therefore be more likely to have admirers before it is set than would be the case in countries where music rivalled literature in the cultural tradition. This granted, it is plain that the general affection for a great poem will predispose the public to be sympathetic to its setting, and therefore such setting will have many more admirers than could a purely musical work.

This offers the modern choral composer a great advantage over his symphonic colleague. In attempting to expound a literary idea in music alone, the composer must place his music under a yoke. It must fulfil a literary purpose before it fulfils a musical one. Sounds must undertake the work of words. In the choral work the words are already a component part of the general effect. The thousands who love and have memorised poems such as Omar Khayyám, and others published in popular editions, have a key to the intended effect of the music. No dramatic situation can escape notice for lack of knowledge of the subject. The choral and orchestral setting of a great poem acts on the public sense very much as do imaginative book-illustrations. Concisely, therefore, the choral poem appeals to the generally cultured part of the public in a way exactly converse to the appeal of the music-hall ditty to the uncultured part. With the one a large amount of public attraction is caused by the poem to those who have little musical discrimination; with the other a melody attracts those with little taste in words. The great difference is that the former leads to the acquirement of taste in music, while the latter has nothing tasteful to offer in words. Enough has been said to show why modern choral works appeal more widely than do symphonic examples. And, by the same token, enough has been said to show the importance of the part played by poetic taste in modern choral composition.

A final consideration, less noticed than those dealt with already, is the reaction of modern musical settings on poetry itself. Not only has the old versifier for music already alluded to virtually disappeared; poets definitely writing for musical setting have appeared. This is where the matter interests poets, because it brings fresh influences to bear on their art. It increases their scope. The concert-hall as well as the printed page is open to them. It offers new chances in sonority and rhythm which would rarely be suggested by the older verbal and metric ideas. It restores to some degree the wider function of the ancient bard.

So far the reaction has been most plain in song-lyrics. I have dealt with this fully elsewhere, and it is outside the scope of this article. In choral poetry there are nevertheless striking examples. Helen F. Bantock, in works like The Time Spirit and The Sea Wanderers, already sought musical values some years ago. Walter de la Mare and Leigh Henry, the latter a musician himself, have developed an even more entirely musical mode of poetic expression, in Silence, set by Goossens, and Celtic Poems, set by Treharne, respectively. There is no longer need for composers to forsake words for vowel sounds, as Debussy did in Sirènes. All the oral colour needed is already in these poets' work, with infinite suggestion for mood, atmosphere, and tone-colour.

Who would say that the institution of the Greek dramatic chorus did not aid poetic development in Greece of old? Even so, after its great aid in modern choralism's development, may not modern poetry find new avenues of progress in modern choral music?

DR. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS'S MASS

BIRMINGHAM, December 7.

Dr. Ralph Vaughan Williams's Mass in G minor for solo quartet and double choir a cappella was sung here last night by the City of Birmingham Choir under Mr. Joseph Lewis.

We are impressed by the long accumulated volume of impulses and of meditations which can bring such a man as Vaughan Williams, at this time of day, to add his accents to the sublime text. We may be sure that it comes not, on the one hand, from a Regerish itch for note-spinning, or, on the other, from a romantic, egoistic impatience with foregoing methods and styles in the musical treatment of the text, or for the sake of a crude breaking-down of known limits of expression. As one of the composer's lesser impulses, we divine in this Mass an intimation to his generation of what he holds to be a true unaccompanied vocal style. This writing can be taken as a rebuke to the awful floundering in an instrumental sort of modulation, that choral heresy of our times, as also to a straining after quasi-instrumental colouring; the human voice, particularly in chorus, never can shriek like piccolos or boom like trombones. Dr. Vaughan Williams has not even required his chorus to hum or buzz!

It may have been the prime impulse. There is a newish demand for unaccompanied music of some extension. I will do my best to meet the case (we conceive the composer saying), and since it is to be my best I will take the best of possible texts for music. This setting of the Mass shall not be an impossible striving to say everything that the text means to me, any more than the architect of a church (a sane architect, anyhow) seeks to make his building the complete expression of his religion—for then it would have to have a world-wide nave and a spire touching heaven. His church is in proportion to the site and the parish, and my Mass likewise must contain itself if it is to be fit for service, and not fret itself in a purely personal ecstasy at the confines of the impossible.

Since all the beautiful interest of the work is far too much of a tale to be told at this moment, one must make his point of the comfort found in the secure narrowness of this frame. The spire, not losing itself in the clouds, allowed its fine and serviceable proportions to be perceived! The texture is intensely personal, however the personal expressiveness is subjugated. Have there since Hucbald been so many consecutive fifths in a Mass? Because it is so reactionary towards the 19th century there was some haste here to make it out to be 'Tudor,' or even 'Palestinian,' but while Dr. Vaughan Williams has not lived his life in obliviousness of the 16th century, his music of course is his own. While it offers no occasion for violent brilliance, the best choirs will find it a field for endless refinements, and the more carefully they have toiled the more will the listeners think the music natural, helpful, and self-forgetfully devout. The warmest flush of emotional colour is held back with art until the Agnus Dei, and there the composer has allowed himself a lyric utterance which tells admirably, and the Mass ends with this cry still in the air. Last night's performance had the advantage of an alert and powerful choir which, however, had not much regard for shading; the quartet might have been better. But concert conditions do not encourage the recueillement desired for the hearing of such music. C.

Occasional Notes

In collecting material for our article on Henry Littleton we came across some letters that seem to us worth reprinting for several reasons. They are a reminder that Charles Lamb's slight connection with music was mainly through his friendship with Vincent Novello and Charles Cowden Clarke, Novello's son-in-law. Lamb's letters contain many interesting references to both men. Cowden Clarke took an active part in the music-publishing business, and was also a busy lecturer on dramatic and literary subjects, especially the plays of Shakespeare. As was shown in the letter from Alfred Novello on page 17, it was Cowden Clarke who gave young Littleton the praise which drew commendation and a five-pound note from his master. The first of the two letters we reprint shows Henry Littleton acting as Cowden Clarke's lecture agent. The reference to the beneficial effects of gout on Vincent Novello would probably have caused an extra twinge to the sufferer. Presumably the 'arrangements' were the big batch for the organ announced in the Musical Times of October, 1850. The allusion to breaking the Sabbath has to do with Littleton's habit of week-ending at Brighton, where his wife was staying at that time.

Nice, Casa Salvi,

Sept. 6th, 1850.

DEAR SIR,—You have much obliged me by the kind, and very satisfactory manner in which you have managed my concerns with the several institutions. In my desk, towards the right hand, you will find a copy of my Prospectus, which I had intended for Mr. Harvey, to reprint for me. Have the goodness to let some one copy the Syllabus of 'Foote and the Farce-writers,' and send it to Mr. Simpson of the Islington Institution.

If the Newport People answer you; you may give them the choice of Tuesday the 8th, Thursday the 10th, Tuesday the 15th, or Thursday the 17th Oct. My terms will be the same they gave me before: (I forget what they were :) and they may choose their own subjects. Send them a Prospectus. Hull I consider settled. I shall therefore only write in confirmation when I return.

You will be pleased to hear that we found Mr. and Mrs. Novello quite well upon our arrival. He had a slight attack of gout, but it was perhaps even healthful for him. He has finished a large quantity of arrangements for us to bring back; and he is preparing the 'Chandos Anthems.' I hope, for your sake, that the weather continues fine, so that you may break the Sabbath every week, and thereby mend your own health,—and which I hope continues to progress favourably. Here the weather is superb, and so warm, that we cannot endure any more covering at night than the sheet: and my dress in the day is a muslin shirt, with linen jacket and trousers—the whole dress not weighing more than, perhaps, 30 ounces.

I bathe every morning at $\frac{1}{2}$ past 6 in the Mediterranean: and the temperature even at that early hour of the day is most delicious. Our house is within two stones' throw of the beach.

With renewed thanks for your kind and punctual attention to my interests, believe me to be, DEAR SIR,

Your faithful and much obliged friend,

C. COWDEN CLARKE.

Mr. Henry Littleton.

The interest of the second letter is largely concerned with food and food prices. We like especially the qualifying 'smallish,' 'tis true' applied to the sevenpenny-halfpenny fowls:

Nice, Tuesday,

Sept. 24th, 1850.

DEAR SIR,—It is our intention to leave here on Thursday next, the 26th, and to pass thro' Turin to Geneva, Neuchâtel, Strasbourg, and so by the Rhine to Cologne, from whence we may reach London, by Rail & Steam, across the Channel in 24 hours. If we have no disappointments by delays in Switzerland, we have calculated to be home on Sat. evening, Oct. 5th. You will oblige me if you will send a message to this effect to Moss, with our kind remembrances, telling her also that we shall be glad to have our English roast Beef again, and a Risotto for our Sunday's dinner. . . .

We have had but two showers of rain for an hour or two, since we have been here, and they were accompanied with thunder. But the rain, when it does come, is quite in earnest. The weather has been most lovely all the while, my dress still being linen, without drawers, or waistcoat of any kind. We have about 5 or 6 lbs. of magnificent grapes for 3d., and a couple of dozen fine ripe and fresh figs, half the size of your fist, for three-halfpence. Our dinner drink is Burgundy, and for that we pay 5 pence a bottle. A couple of fowls (smallish 'tis true) for 15 pence.

Hoping that we may find you quite well upon our return, with kind regards from all the family here, and thanking you very much for your attentions to myself,

I am, my DEAR SIR,

Yours very faithfully and obliged,

C. C. CLARKE.

The third letter is from Macready. We reprint it in facsimile, as an autograph of the famous tragedian may be of interest to some of our readers. The letter marks a little landmark in the history of cheap music in this country. The works Macready ordered were the early numbers of the series originally entitled Novello's Collection of the Favourite Songs, Duets, Trios, Quartets, and Choruses, composed by Handel, Haydn, and Mozart, with an Accompaniment for the Organ or Piano-forte by Vincent Novello. Before the starting of this series, a solo of the kind was as a rule to be obtained only by buying the complete and very expensive work in which it appeared. The separate numbers in Vincent Novello's series cost a mere shilling. The first to be issued gave 'Thus saith the Lord' and 'But who may abide,' from The Messiah. The series is still running, and the latest, No. 465, lies before us. Like No. 1, it draws on Handel: 'You see, my friends' and 'Amaz'd to find the foe so near' from Belshazzar.

B. Clara Macready. R.H.

Dec. 19.

Dear Sir,

With thank you to order your new Edition of Handel's and Haydn's works to be sent regularly to Mrs. Macready as by agreement and also any back numbers. Yr. faithful Servant
W. C. Hawley

According to a report sent to the Weekly Dispatch of December 17 by a Chesterfield correspondent, Pachmann caused an uncomfortable scene at his recital in that town. At the end of his first solo he rose impetuously, pointed to a man sitting among the usual crowd of worshippers on the platform, and cried, 'He is not in sympathy with Chopin, and I should be glad if he would leave.' The audience, we are told, tittered and shuffled uneasily, and the unhappy man (who, so far as the evidence goes, had done nothing amiss) had to remove to another part of the hall before Pachmann would go on with his programme.

Isn't it time we had some plain speaking about Pachmann? When he was in his prime his antics were just bearable because we had his unique playing as a set-off. To-day, the antics tend to increase, while time takes its inevitable toll of his playing. Frankly, we may buy the vestiges of his mastery at too high a price. His early eccentricity long ago degenerated into mild buffoonery; now that it has taken a further step into downright bad manners, we may well ask ourselves whether we are doing the right thing in sitting at his feet to the neglect of many a young pianist who can play Chopin at least as well, and a good many other composers far better. Pachmann has been giving 'farewell' recitals for some years past. If he is going to add to his already too extensive variety entertainment the insulting of folk who have paid to hear him play, it is high time he said 'good-bye' in earnest.

During the past three years the students of the Royal College of Music, acting on the suggestion of the Principal, have formed chamber music parties among themselves, for the performance of works (chiefly British) at the College concerts. Mr. W. W. Cobbett has given prizes to the value of fifty guineas annually for distribution among these teams. The scheme has the double advantage of rousing emulation in ensemble work and of increasing the students' knowledge of native chamber music. In 1923 the prizes will be given mainly to composers of works in Phantasy (one movement) form. We understand that Mr. Cobbett is establishing a similar scheme at the Royal Academy of Music. In presenting his prizes at the R.C.M. recently the generous donor gave an address of so much interest to chamber music players in general that we have obtained his permission to print it in full. It follows the 'Amateurs' Exchange,' on page 54.

Speaking at the dinner given to Mr. J. T. Grein the other day, Mr. Zangwill said some unkind things about recent innovations in staging. Scoffing with particular severity at those who thought that the drama should be reformed by drapery and lighting, he said that he would not object to these things so much if it were not that those who practised them perpetually talk of Higher Art when they mean Lower Cost. He probably did not know, or if he knew, he had forgotten, that the British National Opera Company, which is among the principal supporters of such staging, openly avowed that one of its reasons for adopting Mr. Oliver Bernard's staging of the Ring and of certain other operas was that it was economical.

Overheard at the Albert Hall on Sunday, December 3.—Old Lady: 'This Kreutzer [sic] may be a great violinist, but it seems to me that the orchestra gets on just as well when he is not playing as when he is.'

In answer to several correspondents we wish to make it clear that in all towns where there is no local representative of the Musical Times, concert-givers and others who wish their activities to be recorded in these pages should send to the Editor a programme with a report extracted from a local newspaper. This matter should be despatched as soon as possible after the date of the concert. We will always do our best to include a brief report in the columns of provincial news.

Albert Jonas, a Spanish pianologue at New York, has just produced a Master School of Pianoforte Playing and Virtuosity, written in French, German, Spanish, and English, comprising sixteen hundred pages and two hundred engraved pages of exercises and studies. Musical America tells us that the work is designed as 'a short cut' to technical mastery. If this is the Señor's idea of a 'short cut,' we tremble to think what he will do some day when he sets out to grapple with the subject in a really comprehensive manner.

Messrs. Novello have pleasure in announcing that they have arranged for Dr. H. H. Hulbert to give a series of four lectures on Eurhythm at 160, Wardour Street, W., on the four Wednesdays in February (7, 14, 21, 28), at 8 p.m. Admission will be by cards of invitation, to be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

We invested in a copy of Messrs. Collins's The Best of the Year in order to see how music fared. (The publication is an endeavour to give the best short stories, poems, speeches, and letters published during 1922, together with expert opinion as to the most important events in various fields.) As we feared would be the case, the art came off rather badly. We see no reason why music could not have been dealt with in much the same way as were the books in a comprehensive article by Mr. St. John Adcock. There should have been a condensed chronicle of the musical season, with a mention of the most important compositions heard for the first time or published during the year, and a few music-type quotations. But what do we find? Mr. Ernest Newman was asked to write on 'the musical best of the year, so far as his experience went.' Nobody will complain at the result, judged as an article. We think, however, that the general public who read this Annual will get an unfortunate impression that the outstanding event in English musical life in 1922 was the series of recitals given by Elena Gerhardt. Those recitals were no doubt as good as Mr. Newman says they were, but there were as many other happenings at least as important, and it is a pity the Editor of The Best of the Year failed to realise that he was putting a writer in a false position in asking him to limit himself to one event only.

Music has one other slight footing in the magazine. The Editor includes as his model letter the shrill epistle Mr. Bernard Shaw wrote to the Daily News on the occasion of the Leeds Choral Union's concert at Queen's Hall in June last, when (for reasons that were fully set forth here and in other journals) the audience was very small. There is wise old advice to the effect that the writer of an indignant letter should put it aside for a day or two and then re-read it in cold blood. Many a letter has remained unposted as a result. Re-reading Mr. Shaw's outburst six months after it was written we can only say it strikes us as being even less worthy of him than we thought. '... I apologise to posterity for living in a country where, &c., &c.' Posterity will look after itself, so why apologise? And why persist in living in such a country? After all, the world is wide, and no man is indispensable.

Music in the Foreign Press

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

CÉSAR FRANCK

The French musical periodicals containing special articles on the occasion of the centenary of Franck's birth are not yet to hand, except Le Ménestrel (December 1), in which Jean Chantavoine writes:

Franck's part in the evolution of French music consisted in bringing this music back to the representation of the inner life. Berlioz had expressed himself under colour of suggesting the passions of Faust, of Romeo, of Dido, of the imaginary poet of the Symphonic Fantastique; Gounod is a musician of the lyric stage; Saint-Saëns is chiefly a magician in the handling of musical idiom. But Franck at his best is an exponent of musical thought self-contained, whose inner power creates its own form of expression. This direct presence in his music of a soul enclosed within it explains the extent and nature of his influence. The movement created by his personality and his works is similar to that which the 'Five' created in Russia.

ANECDOTES ABOUT FRANCK

In the same issue, Gabriel Pierné gives his recollections of César Franck at his organ class and at the loft of St. Clotilde:

Before starting his improvisations, Franck used to select a theme from a little book in which he had noted examples of his own invention or by various masters. Then, after a short time devoted to reflection, he would begin. And what he extemporized was wonderfully logical, correct, and firm. But he was so absorbed in his music that he did not follow the service and could never stop. The curé had caused a small bell to be placed in the loft, but Franck would fail to notice the signal to stop which it conveyed. Then a more powerful electric bell was established. This Franck could not avoid hearing. But when it rang, he would exclaim, 'I shall never be able correctly to revert to my key,' and go on modulating until the main key was safely re-established. Meanwhile the curé would cast anxious glances towards the loft, while the pace of the service grew slower and slower. At times a choirboy would be sent to stop the organist, but Franck remained unperturbed.

Comœdia credits the curé of this church with having said one day to a visitor :

Our organ is not in very satisfactory condition. But our organist is old, and for the time being we are leaving things just as they are. There will be a thorough renovation of the instrument before the next organist steps in.

HEINRICH SCHÜTZ

The two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of this master's death (November 6, 1672) is commemorated in special numbers of the Neue Musikzeitung and the Zeitschrift für Musik.

The former contains articles by Dr. E. H. Müller, Dr. Joachim Moser, and Hermann Keller. The last-named writer expresses the hope that Schütz's works will soon be made available in editions suitable for the practical purposes of performance.

In the latter there are a general article by Dr. Alfred Heuss, a study of Schütz's life and character by Prof. Arno Werner, an essay on his Passions, by Prof. B. Fr. Richter, one on the interpretation of his music, by Dr. Max Schneider, and one on the probability that Schütz has influenced Handel, by Dr. Rudolf Steglich.

CONDUCTING AND TELEPATHY

In the Courrier Musical (November 1) Gabriel Bernard suggests that possibly the gift of telepathic influence might be one of the assets of those conductors whose achievements strike us as most remarkable.

Whoever has played in an orchestra knows quite well that it is not necessary to look at the conductor in order to feel his indications, and especially the indescribable, subtle ones that ensure vitality and originality in interpretation. Why not, then, start experiments, possibly on lines such as these: given an orchestra consisting of musicians accustomed to playing together under a certain conductor a certain work which they are capable of playing by heart, let this work be played by them in the dark. The conductor will deliberately alter certain of his expressive intentions, and the question will be whether the instrumentalists will feel in the dark these alterations new to them, and how far their playing will be affected thereby. Experiments of this kind might throw light upon the workings of the mysterious force called telepathy.

MILHAUD ON STRAVINSKY

According to Darius Milhaud (Musikblätter des Anbruch, November), Stravinsky's Renard and Mavra are works in which the very things are achieved towards which a number of young French composers, himself included, are striving.

In Renard the music is wonderfully glowing. Nothing is lost; the times are of arithmetical accuracy, proceeding and interlinking exactly as cog-wheels in a piece of machinery. The vocal element gives life and colour to the whole. Renard justifies the attempts made of late by many young composers; they fight for a smaller orchestra, consisting of solo instruments. They will be glad to find that with this work Stravinsky, whose activities they watch with great eagerness, joins forces with them. In Mavra the orchestra is practically a military band—the gorgeous band of wind instruments which Jean Cocteau was calling for in Le Coq et l'Arlequin. Mavra corresponds exactly with the tendencies of all the young French school since Satie's Parades: there the fondest wishes of that school are admirably fulfilled. Mavra will flourish wherever recognition is granted to the live school, the school which works, but upon which people look askance, with eyes dimmed by the contemplation of vain images or by too much reading of Rimsky-Korsakov's Handbook of Instrumentation.

KODÁLY

In the same issue, Benedikt Szabolcsi emphasises the importance and interest of design and arabesque in Kodály's chamber music works and songs. The phrases of the Sonata for solo violoncello (Op. 8) show the modulatory suppleness of lines, the boundless expansion of tune, and the bright, novel vitality of tone (originating, perhaps, in the depths of folk-music) which, in Kodály's slow movements, often come as an absolute revelation. This glorification à la Bach of the solo instrument is the ultimate step in linear achievement. Notice also how the themes of his instrumental pieces, and even his pianoforte pieces, illustrate Monteverde's principle of 'waning sequence' (Verschleiernder Sequenz) in linear and dynamic progression. Even where the inexhaustible possibilities of instrumental co-operation seem to determine the form (Duo for violin and violoncello, Op. 7), the rights of colour remain supreme.

CZECHO-SLOVAKIAN COMPOSERS

In the same issue, Dr. Jan Löwenbach gives interesting particulars on many composers whose names will be new to most readers. Rudolf Karel (born 1880), whose best work is said to be the tone-poem The Demon; Jaroslav Jeremiáš (1889-1919), author of an oratorio, Jan Hus; Jaroslav Novotný (1886-1918); Otakar Ostrčil (born 1879); Ladislav Vycpálek (born 1882); K. B. Jirák (born 1891); Emil Axman (born 1887); Boleslav Vomáčka (born 1887), a pupil of Novak, who is described as attempting to react against the excessive complications to which modernism leads, and Ota Zitek (born 1892). Emil Némeczek (born 1900) is said to be extraordinarily promising, and praise is bestowed upon his opera The Queen's Mistake.

HANS PFITZNER

The December 1 issue of the Neue Musik Zeitung is devoted to Hans Pfitzner.

New Music

ORGAN MUSIC

The art of making a great deal out of very little is well exemplified in Sigfrid Karg-Elert's Homage to Handel, a set of fifty-four Studies in Variation Form on a Ground Bass of Handel (Novello). The theme is that used by Handel in the Passacaglia of the seventh Harpsichord Suite in G minor. A threat of fifty-four variations is enough to repel the stoutest, so I hasten to add that they are all very little ones, as indeed they are bound to be, the theme itself being a mere affair of eight notes—a falling fifth repeated three times. Handel, more than most of the old composers, was given to writing great numbers of variations on very short themes, so there is fitness in the form of this tribute. The composer calls them 'studies,' and carries the idea of fitness even farther by making use of figures taken from the same source as the ground bass (three of these being combined with fine effect in the last Variation), and he also quotes the 'Hallelujah' from the 'Hallelujah Chorus.' The total effect of so many short pieces is less scrappy than would be expected, thanks to the way in which many of them lead into one another. The harmonic scheme generally is diatonic, and on the whole the composer has been

(Continued on page 46.)

FOUR-PART SONG

Old English Rhyme

Music by ADAM CARSE

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro moderato

SOPRANO
John Ball shot them all; John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

ALTO
John Ball shot them all; John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

TENOR
John Ball shot them all; John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

BASS
John Ball shot them all; John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

Allegro moderato ♩ = 120.
(For practice only)

John Brammer made the rammer, John Wyming made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But

John Brammer made the rammer, John Wyming made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But

John Brammer made the rammer, John Wyming made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But

John Brammer made the rammer, John Wyming made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But

Copyright, 1922, by Novello and Company, Limited

p

John Ball shot them all. John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the ram-mer,

John Ball shot them all. John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the ram-mer,

John Ball shot them all. John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the ram-mer,

John Ball shot them all. John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the ram-mer,

p

ff

John Wyning made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all. John Wyning made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

John Wyning made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all. John Wyning made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

John Wyning made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all. John Wyning made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

John Wyning made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all. John Wyning made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

ff

p

John Crowder made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the rammer, John Crowder made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the rammer,

John Crowder made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the rammer, John Crowder made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the rammer,

John Crowder made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the rammer, John Crowder made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the rammer,

John Crowder made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the rammer, John Crowder made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the rammer,

p

ff

John Wyming made the pri-ming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

ff

John Wyming made the pri-ming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

ff

John Wyming made the pri-ming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

ff

John Wyming made the pri-ming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

p

John Puz-zle made the muz-zle, John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And

p

John Puz-zle made the muz-zle, John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And

p

John Puz-zle made the muz-zle, John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And

p

John Puz-zle made the muz-zle, John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And

p

John Puz-zle made the muz-zle, John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And

ff

John Brammer made the rammer, John Wy-ming made the pri-ming, And John Scott made the shot, But

ff

John Brammer made the rammer, John Wy-ming made the pri-ming, And John Scott made the shot, But

ff

John Brammer made the rammer, John Wy-ming made the pri-ming, And John Scott made the shot, But

ff

John Brammer made the rammer, John Wy-ming made the pri-ming, And John Scott made the shot, But

ff

John Brammer made the rammer, John Wy-ming made the pri-ming, And John Scott made the shot, But

John Ball shot them all. John Clint made the flint, John Puz-zle made the muz-zle,
 John Ball shot them all. John Clint made the flint, John Puz-zle made the muz-zle,
 John Ball shot them all. John Clint made the flint, John Puz-zle made the muz-zle,
 John Ball shot them all. John Clint made the flint, John Puz-zle made the muz-zle,

John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Bram-mer made the ram-mer,
 John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Bram-mer made the ram-mer,
 John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Bram-mer made the ram-mer,
 John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Bram-mer made the ram-mer,
 John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Bram-mer made the ram-mer,
 John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Bram-mer made the ram-mer,
 John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Bram-mer made the ram-mer,
 John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Bram-mer made the ram-mer,

John Wy-ming made the pri-ming, And John Scott, made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.
 John Wy-ming made the pri-ming, And John Scott, made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.
 John Wy-ming made the pri-ming, And John Scott, made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.
 John Wy-ming made the pri-ming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all.

p

John Patch made the match, John Clint made the flint, John Puz-zle made the muzzle,

John Patch made the match, John Clint made the flint, John Puz-zle made the muzzle,

John Patch made the match, John Clint made the flint, John Puz-zle made the muzzle,

John Patch made the match, John Clint made the flint, John Puz-zle made the muzzle,

p

John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the rammer,

John Crowd-er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the rammer,

John Crowd er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the rammer,

John Crowd er made the pow-der, John Block made the stock, And John Brammer made the rammer,

ff

John Wyning made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all. . .

John Wyning made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all. . .

John Wyning made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all. . .

John Wyning made the priming, And John Scott made the shot, But John Ball shot them all. . .

ff

(Continued from page 40.)

content to confine himself to the simple harmonic formula implied in the little sequential bass, enriched by chromatic auxiliary notes. Within these limitations he has produced an astonishing amount of variety and interest—even beauty and feeling in some of the Variations. Karg-Elert's enterprise in registration is, as usual, an important factor. In a Preface he explains his requirements in detail, though he leads off by saying that the registration indications are not to be regarded as binding. Probably few English organs are able to answer his demands in regard to such stops as 1-ft., 1½-ft., 2⅓-ft., ⅔-ft., and others. In addition to the customary organ effects, he asks for some imitations that will often be available, e.g., wood-wind quartet, trumpet ensemble, brass band, flute and string quartet, ditto quartet, and so on. He admits that on small organs the schemes must be modified, and adds that it may be necessary to omit some Variations. No doubt most players will decide that this is one of those cases where a part is better than the whole, and will make up a suite of such Variations as appeal to them. The main thing to aim at will be continuity. Variations so short must run on, or the result will be intolerably disjointed. As a matter of fact, most of the numbers depend very little on registration, despite the elaborate schemes indicated. Indeed, the first twenty may be played off on a pedal pianoforte with delightful effect, and, save for about a dozen or so that call for a high-pitched pedal-stop, or which depend for their effect on the interweaving of contrasted manuals, all are well suited to that useful form of the domestic instrument. It should be added that apart from its use as a recital piece for the exploitation of unusual effects of tone-colour, the work has a very real value on the technical side. The Variations may well be used as short intensive studies for practically every branch of organ technique—various kinds of touch, cross-rhythms, old ornaments, rapid scale and passage work, pedal solo, double and triple pedalling, pedalling a melody, &c. The great majority are only moderately difficult. Their use as studies in registration is of course obvious, but inasmuch as a good many organists have to play instruments with limited possibilities in that direction the point need not be stressed. There are, of course, a few characteristic Karg-Elert directions, e.g., Imperiale e pomposo, Grottesco, Trionfante e gigantesca, and the fearsome No. 53, which consists entirely of quadruple shakes fff, is very properly marked Demoniaco. It will generally—and wisely—be omitted.

A parcel of organ music and arrangements from Stainer & Bell contains some items well off the beaten track. For example, Rupert O. Erlebach breaks new ground with his Folk-Song Suite. It consists of four short pieces—a Réverie on Lord Bateman, a March on The Cuckoo, a Study on The Cruel Father, and a Toccata on The Sign of the Bonny Blue Bell. The music is slight in texture, and has a pronounced flavour of Vaughan Williams. The Réverie appeals at once by its wistful expression, the March is a rugged treatment of a fine tune first announced by the pedal reeds, and the Study is in five-four time with the tune accompanied by a figure in quintuplets. The Toccata is as unconventional as the rest of the Suite, but less satisfactory as a whole. It would have been better had the simple style of the opening been maintained throughout; the few extravagant chords towards the end are out of the picture. A point worth notice is the curiously ecclesiastical effect of this work. The themes of the first and third movements might easily pass for plainsong hymn melodies, and the Suite altogether is a reminder of the strong kinship between folk-song and plainsong. The title-page holds out a promise of a second Suite on similar lines. The quality of this one makes us look forward to its successor.

There is some fine stuff in Dr. William H. Harris's Fantasy on Campion's tune Babylon's Streams, but first acquaintance leaves us with the impression that it is too consistently rhapsodical, and that some of the material of these rhapsodical flights is conventional in style. The music is generally at its best when the tune is present. There is a pronounced dramatic feeling, especially on pages 8 and 9, where the harmony is bold and striking. It is good to see our fine old hymn tunes being more and more turned to account in this way.

Sir Charles Stanford's Fantasia on Parry's tune 'Intercessor' is on simpler lines. It is mainly quiet and flowing, and most of it is so easy that it may be read at sight by an average player. The best part of it is the middle section, where the tune appears in the bass.

Norman Cocker's Interlude and Pæan (issued under one cover) are a couple of pleasant, well-written pieces, specially suitable for voluntary purposes. The first makes effective use of antiphony between two manuals. In the Pæan all the parts are kept rather too busy with counterpoint in semiquaver motion, which has the double drawback of increasing the difficulty and decreasing the effect, but even so, the piece fluently played makes a good postlude. A Tuba Tune by the same composer has a good swinging melody of Handelian cast played as a tuba solo in various parts of the keyboard. We feel the want of a good, well-contrasted second subject, the only relief being provided by a rather stereotyped sequential passage and an even more conventional cadenza. Mr. Cocker writes well for his instrument, but his thematic material as a whole lacks freshness. He falls too easily into the snare set by the sequence. This Tuba Tune undoubtedly 'comes off,' though some of us will have doubts about playing the big chords on a powerful reed. Mr. Cocker's best pieces are after all the simplest—a couple of short pieces published together—Angelus and Trio, both easy and attractive.

Purcell J. Mansfield's Concert-Overture in F (Augener) is another example of a work suffering from too complacent use of threadbare sequences. The main themes, too, are frankly commonplace. Mr. Mansfield can do better than this. As a fact he does it in another piece just issued by the same publisher—a Scherzo-Caprice. True, it is not very original, despite the strings of consecutive fifths (or perhaps because of them), but there is a continuity that is lacking in the Overture, and its general air of animation and its spirited rhythm should make it popular. Both pieces leave the hearer with a feeling that the composer is a trifle too determined to be bright at all costs, and one of the costs is superficiality.

A large batch of arrangements, too important for brief notice, must be held over for discussion next month.

H. G.

NEW CHURCH MUSIC

There is much that will commend itself to musicians in the setting of the Office for the Holy Communion in E flat by G. O'Connor-Morris (Novello). The vocal writing is fresh and interesting, and the treatment as a whole is distinctive. While not over-elaborate it is essentially music for a good choir. The organ part is well written and admirably varied in style, and in the hands of a competent organist should prove highly effective. There is very little repetition of words, practically the only example in the Creed being in the last four bars, when 'Amen' is repeated three times: both here and at the end of the Gloria there would probably be a gain in dignity with the music spread over a single 'Amen.'

The chorus work in the Creed and Gloria is in the main straightforward in style, while the quieter sections are simply and expressively treated, frequently with some interesting harmonic touches. Particularly effective is the middle section of the Gloria with its broad, simple phrases, and its interesting harmonic scheme. The short but beautiful Sanctus opens with trebles and altos, both divided. At 'Heaven and earth' tenors and basses sing alone in unaccompanied four-part harmony, trebles (divided), altos, and organ entering a little later to form a fine climax. Over a quiet close the organ plays the 'Dresden Amen.' Adapted from this movement is an alternative setting for four voices. In the Benedictus 'Hosanna in the Highest' is first sung by tenors and basses divided (unaccompanied), and then briefly treated contrapuntally. The Agnus Dei is set for soprano and tenor soli with chorus entering (unaccompanied) for 'Have mercy.' In 'Grant us Thy peace' the composer has thrown the chief accent on 'Thy.' We would prefer singing the first three notes of this phrase to 'Grant'; this would also do away with the repetition of 'Thy peace.' Taken altogether this is a setting which may be cordially recommended to the notice of choir-masters.

Under the title, Sacred Motets or Anthems, by William Byrd and his contemporaries (Novello, 4s.), Sir Frederick Bridge has collected together in one volume a number of works which will be warmly welcomed by lovers of English Church music. From a Preface we learn that the whole of these compositions are selected from Sir William Leighton's Collection (published in 1614), entitled Teares or Lamentations of a Sorrowful Soul. Most of them were performed at Sir Frederick's lectures at the University of London, and, with one or two exceptions they have probably not been reprinted hitherto. Many of the contributors are well known as great Madrigal composers, but are not known by their sacred music. The names of Wilbye, Warde, Weelkes, Pilkington, Ford, Coperario, and Ferabosco, are cases in point. Dr. Bull is chiefly known as a writer for the clavier, but a short example of only two pages shows him as a sacred writer of rare excellence. Byrd is responsible for four contributions. The works are for four and five voices, and vary in length from two to six pages. Some are quite easy, but all, of course, require a well-balanced choir capable of singing unaccompanied. Marks of expression and suggestions for pace have been added by the editor, to whom a debt of gratitude is due for his share in making these works accessible to church choirs.

Some new carols are to hand (Novello). They are rather late for Christmas, but carol-singing does not cease with Christmas Day, and a carol is quickly learnt. First come two characteristic examples from the practised pen of Sir Frederick Bridge—Cradle Song and Carol, carol, tenderly, sweetly—the words in both cases by Lady Lindsay. They are tuneful, attractive, and quite easy.

A. M. Goodhart has provided an excellent setting for some words by Mark Ambient—His Birthday keep with a joyous lay. Each verse is sung by trebles or tenors in unison followed by chorus in harmony. With its alternating moods of pathos and jollity it should make an effective little work.

Rejoice, the Christ has come, music by Stanley Marchant, words by A. Muriel Fraser, is happy, melodious, and straightforward.

Martin Shaw's Fanfare for Christmas Day (Curwen) is a short, vigorous setting for S.A.T.B. of Gloria in excelsis Deo. Sung at a good pace, it would have a rousing effect. G. G.

Works of Henry Purcell: vol. 22. Catches, Rounds, Two-Part and Three-Part Songs. Edited by W. Barclay Squire and J. A. Fuller-Maitland.

[Published for the Purcell Society by Messrs. Novello.]

Another of these volumes of noble form and aspect of the Purcell Society's edition; and who could be ungracious enough not to rejoice in the nobility of this national monument, expensive and disinterested? Cheapness is usually all very well, but here is the proper occasion for a certain lavishness. The subscriber for his guinea gets more than his money's-worth. This monument celebrates the most charming of our musicians, and also is witness to the admirable pietas of its builders. We wish the list of subscribers indicated more general pietas among the musical of England.

Part 1 of the new volume, edited by Mr. Barclay Squire, contains fifty-seven catches and rounds; Part 2, by Mr. Fuller-Maitland, forty-seven two-part songs; and a couple of three-part songs and an appendix of two doubtful pieces follow. The volume is a library volume, but to glance through it is to long for what it contains to come into the open, to shake its feathers, and again sing. These gleanings are part of the essential Purcell. What a singer, so little self-conscious, or at least not oppressed by consciousness! Happy music, even when the song is sad! We look at these catches and rounds, and wonder what stupidity has come over the music that is ancillary to social and careless pleasure, that such form, lightness, and finish should be unknown at the entertainments of our 20th century Gaiety and other circuses. The catches, of course, were mostly designed for occasions of conviviality, occasions at which to-day cigar-smoking has ousted vocal exercise. But the practice of catch-singing is not extinct, and to enlarge the chance for these of Purcell Mr. Fuller-Maitland has spared the modern blush by modifying here the texts of the unblushing Restoration.

The duets (the bulk of the volume) embrace many moods, from light amorousness to 'A Dialogue between Charon and Orpheus.' Clearly the mere sight of a set of verses unsealed for Purcell, very much as for Schubert, the well of song. Purcell is still a young man with a bright future, because his art is full of unexpectedness. There is a happy freedom of fancy which in the next century was to be mostly lost to music. Purcell wrote 'Whim' on the portal of his work-room, and a more formal generation reflected sadly that if he had lived longer he might have grown up to be a Handel. There is really no need to want anyone to grow out of such grace, charm, and sense of fun. The fun is delicious—open the volume for instance at 'I spy Celia' (tenor and bass). And the turn of another page may bring such a characteristically delicate piece of just lyric declamation, as this :

The editor commends 'Orpheus and Charon' as 'worthy of Gluck or Wagner in respect of the faithful musical equivalents of the natural inflections of the speaking voice; and in the care with which the accents of the words are transferred to the music.' In effect, this scena for two basses is the Purcell of the Vergilian beauty of Dido's Farewell.

C.

VIOLIN STUDIES

Prof. Sevcik's School of Intonation on a harmonic basis for the Violin, which has just been published by Messrs. Chappell, is a monumental work in fourteen parts—by far the most detailed, most searching study of the art of acquiring an impeccable violin technique. It is said that in the days when years were usually spent on training the voice, a student after undergoing the usual long and exhaustive preparation asked his master whether it was possible to vary the dullness of practice with a little aria. 'Another week,' answered the master, 'and you will be able to sing anything.' Similarly, we could imagine a tyro beginning Prof. Sevcik's method, ignorant of the very position in which the fiddle must be held, and ending an accomplished performer with the last volume.

This great work is called a School of Intonation because true intonation is the very heart of technique. The facility to perform certain acrobatic feats is by no means uncommon. The scales in thirds and octaves of Paganini's Concerto are a mere trifle if the intonation is to go by the board. Intonation for the violinist means not only accuracy of notes but purity of tone. In the perfect octave, possible only to the violinist, the two notes are so perfectly blended as to sound like one note. The listener, in fact, should not be aware that two notes are played when the intonation is perfect. Moreover, the softer gradations of sound are always endangered by intervals that are not absolutely true. The player, consciously or unconsciously, forces the tone as soon as the ear warns him of his error, either blindly obeying the impulse to conquer by brute force (an imperfect performance brings out all the worst instincts of our nature) or in the knowing attempt to delete the first bad impression by a corrected and louder one. Finally, there is the obvious thing, namely, the extremely disagreeable effect uncertain intonation produces on the listener. We would—all of us—much rather hear Raff's Cavatina played in tune than the Brahms Concerto played out of tune, in spite of the fact that the Cavatina is a trifle while the Concerto is a masterpiece. Neither agile fingers nor pliant bowing are adequate substitutes for truth of intonation. Without it dash, grace, temperament, musicianship, are as nothing, for the player cannot convey to the audience an accurate picture of his mental conception of music. Moreover, unless the ear is encouraged in its work of watching for imperfections, and its warning obeyed, there is a very serious danger that the ear itself may become slothful and unable to distinguish finely and accurately. Hence the great importance of teaching which tolerates no compromise on this all-important question of intonation.

Prof. Sevcik gives the student every help. He tells him how to obtain good results, and how to control his results by the help of valuable tests. The habitual laggard, the careless student, has no respite. He must first see to the tuning of his fiddle, and the author's advice on this point deserves the attention of professors as well as students. Then the student must form and test his notes, passing later to all possible combinations of intervals, and always testing, probing, listening with utmost alertness, improving, and perfecting. The last volumes take him into fields through which runs the high road to virtuosity—'fingered' octaves are not for the average player. But it is impossible to give in words more than a very summary idea of such a work, which searches every angle of violin technique with a thoroughness and competence absolutely without precedent.

F. B.

NEW VIOLIN MUSIC

Messrs. Novello have published separately the second movement (Romance) of Elgar's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata, and although it is as a rule unwise to publish excerpts from such a work as this, which has no greater beauty or technical difficulty in the first than in the second or third movements, it is not difficult to see the arguments which suggested the present publication. Whoever can play the Romance will play equally well the whole work, but the second movement alone offers unparalleled opportunities for the study of tone and phrasing in all their variety, from the cantabile of the period which leads up to the climax to the half-tender, half-capricious phrases which recall the charm and eloquence of rhythmic speech. We know of no better opportunity to discover the most intimate secrets of tone-production. Moreover, the Romance can well stand as a sample of this great work. It takes all sorts of men to make a world, and presumably there are amongst us some cautious individuals who will not run to the expense of a new work in three movements, however beautiful, unless they know that it is within the limits of their technical skill. These shy amateurs will now be able to make the experiment with a most moderate outlay. If they can go through it creditably they may rest assured that they are also equal to the demands of the other sections of Elgar's Sonata.

A 'Poem' for violoncello or violin, with pianoforte accompaniment, by Eric Fogg, has been issued by Messrs. Elkin. This is by far the most modest and least pretentious work we have seen from Mr. Fogg so far, and marks, accordingly, a considerable advance.

B. V.

Verdi's Requiem will be performed at the People's Palace on January 20, at 7.30, by the People's Palace Choral and Orchestral Societies (three hundred performers), conducted by Mr. Frank Idle. The soloists will be Miss Carrie Tubbs, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. David Ellis, and Mr. Norman Williams. Mr. Herbert Hodge will be at the organ.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

The only orchestral record sent for this month's review is a first-rate one—Svensden's Carnival in Paris, played by the Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Landon Ronald (H.M.V. 12-in. d.-s.). The prominent part taken by the wood-wind is a factor in the success of the reproduction, the gramophone being usually at its best with flutes and clarinets.

People who enjoy a military band without regard to the quality of the music played will be suited by an Æolian 10-in. d.-s. record of the 1st Life Guards' performance of Chambers's Reminiscences of the Plantations, wherein a number of old friends, not forgetting The Old Folks at Home, are delivered with alternations of lustiness and sentiment.

The pianoforte, like the orchestra, is represented by a solitary record this month. H.M.V. sends a 12-in. d.-s. of Arthur de Greef playing Chopin's F sharp major Nocturne and a couple of Moszkowski pieces—the well-known Serenade and a brilliant Étude. The reproduction is clear, the only fault being some jangling in the pianoforte tone.

The two violin records received are off the beaten track. Heifetz is heard playing with due breadth in the slow movement of Goldmark's Concerto in A minor—rather stodgily accompanied by an unnamed orchestra (H.M.V. 12-in.); and Isolde Menges gives a beautifully clear performance of Bach's Fugue from the G minor Sonata for violin alone. It is a courageous selection. Not many musicians can get up enthusiasm for a lengthy work for a stringed instrument solus. As a rule, the interest is mainly technical, and the attempts to give us chords merely serve to remind us that the members of the violin tribe are apt for melody-playing and little else. The interest is greater in the case of this Fugue, however, because of the quality of the music itself. Organists who know and enjoy the work in Bach's own organ arrangement of it should make a point of hearing this excellent record. They will be more than ever sure that the arrangement is far more satisfying than the original, and they will be interested in seeing what Bach has done in the way of amplification. To earnest violin students it is invaluable, of course. This is a H.M.V. 10-in. d.-s. It is a pity the Fugue was not manageable on a 12-in., so that the break might have been avoided.

Most of us are weary of the Volga Boatman's Song, but if anything could give it a fresh lease of life it is Chaliapin's singing of it as recorded on a H.M.V. 12-in. It is a real thriller, with some wonderful crescendos and an even more wonderful, long-drawn diminuendo at the end. It gains a good deal from the excellence of the arrangement by Chaliapin and Koenemann, and the accompaniment is first-rate. I should find it difficult to name a more arresting record than this.

Good average operatic records are a H.M.V. 12-in. of Galli-Curci singing 'Comme autrefois dans la nuit sombre' from Bizet's Les Pêcheurs de Perles, and a H.M.V. 12-in. of the duet, 'O Quanti occhi fisi' from Madame Butterfly, sung by Frances Alda and Martinelli.

Less satisfactory is a H.M.V. 12-in. d.-s. of Tudor Davis in Onaway, awake, beloved, and the 'Legend of Kleinsach' from Tales of Hoffman. Mr. Davis's voice comes out with far too nasal a quality.

Another failure in the way of tenor records is an Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.-s. of Sydney Coltham's performance of 'In her simplicity,' from Mignon, and 'Where'er you walk.' Mr. Coltham is not only nasal, but terribly lachrymose as well.

It was quite cheering to lay aside these heart-throbs and turn on some fine records of Malcolm McEachran. Here are two 12-in. d.-s. (Æ.-Voc.). On one he is at his best in a couple of old Irish songs, arranged by Dr. J. F. Larchet, The West's Asleep and O'Donnell Aboo! His splendid voice is even more telling in the companion record of O divine Redeemer and Why do the nations? As a matter of fact the voice is the best part of the latter, for the florid passages do not come out clearly. We get no more than a sketch of them. It is not for me to say where the fault lies: I will merely opine that it is not in the recording.

Last month we had a first-rate choral record of the English Singers' performance of Elizabethan madrigals. This month we decline heavily with one of the Gresham Singers in Barnby's Sweet and Low and Sterndale Bennett's God is a Spirit. There is still a popular idea that art and science continually progress, and that the music of the 19th century was therefore an advance on that of the 15th. Perhaps it was in some ways, but hearing the two records I have mentioned, it can only be said that if we are to take the examples as typical of the ages in which they were written, then the advance was decidedly a backward one. This is a platitude, of course, but the contrast has been so impressed on me by these records that I must get it off my chest. The recording of the Gresham Singers is better than their performance. Both works are already weak, but the singers debilitate them still further—especially Sweet and Low—by making the utmost of every saccharine chord. Moreover, their phrasing is abrupt (H.M.V. 10-in. d.-s.).

A batch of dance records comes from the Æ.-Voc. Company. 'Dancing Time,' from the Cabaret Girl, is the best of a rather poor lot. The playing is by the Vocalian Dance Orchestra, and candour compels me to say that its performance is badly lacking in the quality that makes the best American dance bands so attractive. In a word—a very short one—it lacks 'pep.'

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

DISTRIBUTION OF DIPLOMAS

Members and friends are cordially invited to attend the distribution of diplomas to successful candidates at the Fellowship and Associateship Examinations, by the President, Dr. Alan Gray, on Saturday, January 20, at 11 a.m.

After the President's address, Dr. H. G. Ley will play upon the College organ the following works selected from the list of Fellowship and Associateship tests set for the July examination, 1923, viz.:

Sonata No. 5, in C (1st movement) ...	J. S. Bach (Associateship)
Pastorale No. 4, of six pieces ...	César Franck (Fellowship)
Fantasia and Fugue in G minor ...	J. S. Bach (Fellowship)
Psalm-Prelude No. I ...	Herbert Howells (Associateship)
Allegretto from the fourth Sonata ...	Mendelssohn (Associateship)

No tickets are required.

H. A. HARDING,
Hon. Secretary.

MOTETS AT WESTMINSTER ABBEY

A service of Motets was sung by the Westminster Abbey 'Special' Choir on December 11. The chosen pieces were: Stanford, Iustorum Anima, Calos ascendit, Beati quorum via; Bach, Be not afraid; Dowland, An heart that's broken; Morley, Nolo mortem peccatoris; Wilbye, O Lord, turn not; Vittoria, Jesu, dulcis memoria; J. F. Bridge, God's goodness; Orlando Gibbons, O Lord, increase my faith; Parry, Blest Pair of Sirens. Interspersed were organ works of Bach, Mendelssohn, and Saint-Saëns, and the final hymn, O come, Emmanuel, was no doubt to many an enlightenment of what hymn-singing can be. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, in organizing this superb 'special' choir and its services, is doing great work for liturgical music. C.

BRAHMS'S REQUIEM AT ST. PAUL'S

The customary Advent performance of Brahms's Requiem at St. Paul's Cathedral was on the evening of December 5, when the congregation was estimated at five thousand. Not all these heard the music whole. We know how variable at St. Paul's are the opportunities for hearing clearly. There is something to be said fancifully for hearing fragments of the Requiem, which gleam and then disappear into a mysterious distance. There is also much to be said for hearing it intact from so noble a choir. The solos were as usual taken by anonymous members, and the boy's voice in 'Ye who now sorrow' was wonderfully true. C.

THE ALBERT HALL, NOTTINGHAM:

CIVIC TRIBUTE TO MR. BERNARD JOHNSON'S WORK

We have on several occasions drawn attention to the admirable work done by Mr. Bernard Johnson, the Nottingham City organist. On December 3 his efforts received official recognition from the Mayor, Mr. Alderman Manning. His Worship, speaking to a very large gathering at the Sunday afternoon recital, said that when Mr. Johnson came to Nottingham fourteen years ago he resolved to make the organ at the Albert Hall a city organ. First, the concerts were held on Saturday afternoons, and then changed to Sunday once a month. As people commenced to appreciate them, they were held fortnightly, and with that appreciation growing they had become weekly. At Nottingham they were exceedingly fortunate in having had played to them forty Concertos—a record which he thought no other city could boast. He congratulated Mr. Johnson on the success of those Sunday afternoons, and on behalf of the Corporation and citizens he desired to place on public record that Mr. Johnson deserved well of the city.

After Mr. Johnson had played his own Intermezzo in E flat, the Rev. I. Goldhawk, in according the Mayor a hearty welcome, remarked that the programme of the Albert Hall Mission was a very comprehensive one, into which they introduced anything and everything that made for good citizenship, and his one supreme ambition whilst he remained minister of the Mission was to make trade very bad for the police.

The choir then sang Purcell's My Beloved spake, Mr. Johnson played a Bach Fugue, and was joined by Miss Enid Taylor and Miss Winifred Gardner in a fine performance of Mozart's E flat Concerto for two pianofortes and orchestra.

From the Fould Concert Guide we learn that the Concertos in this season's scheme comprise Stanford in C minor, Grieg in A minor, Brahms's Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Liszt in A and the Hungarian Fantasia, Tchaikovsky in B flat minor, Schumann in A minor, Delius, Liapounov, Beethoven No. 1 in C, Mendelssohn in G minor, Saint-Saëns in G minor, and Mackenzie in G. Concertos for violin and violoncello have also been played, in addition to pianoforte and string solos of the best kind. Various local choirs also lend a hand, among them the Albert Hall Choir, with a performance on December 17 of the Christmas Oratorio. This is a very notable record, and should stimulate other borough organists and local authorities to far more comprehensive efforts than are usually the case. It is difficult to overestimate the educational possibilities of the organ when used in this way. A long while must elapse before the establishment of first-rate local orchestras becomes practicable. A good organ, with a go-ahead organist and a few talented local violinists and pianists, can provide a capital substitute at a comparatively low cost. Somebody asks, Will the pupil respond? The best answer is the fact that at Nottingham audiences averaging at least two thousand five hundred attend weekly to listen to concertos, solos, and choral music, as well as organ music in which Bach is strongly represented and very popular.

HUSH! LEAVE IT TO THE CHOIR!

If there is one part of Evensong in which everybody should be able to take part it surely is the Responses. The Rev. F. Brammall, of New Wandsworth, S.W., was of this opinion until a few weeks ago, but he now knows better. We have received a newspaper cutting in which appears the following letter from Mr. Brammall:

'I had such an unusual experience last evening, I feel it is too good to keep to myself. I was preaching in a suburban church and joined with usual heartiness in the singing of opening hymn and the Psalms, but did not know the special setting of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, so took no part. On returning to my place after reading the second lesson I found this note placed on my Prayer Book: "I am sure you will not take offence at my asking you not to join us in the Responses. We do them unaccompanied, and you won't understand our methods.—Organist." The Responses were that well-known setting by Tallis, and yet the visiting clergyman is asked not to join in for fear he upsets the choir. I have been privileged to preach in at least fifty different churches during my furlough from Australia, and this was the first time such a request had been made to me.'

It ought to be the last.

CÉSAR FRANCK

The Franck Centenary was well observed by organists, many drawing on the composer for their voluntaries on December 10, and a considerable number giving recitals in which Franck figured prominently—sometimes exclusively. We are able to print only one of the programmes sent to us, choosing that of an organ and vocal recital given at St. John's, Bognor, on December 10, by Mr. Norman F. Demuth, with Miss Mabel Crowe and Mr. D. J. Glenister as singers:

Organ solo	Choral in A minor
Song La Procession
Organ solo	Fantaisie in A Song Pan's Angelicus
Organ solo Fantaisie in C
Song Ave Maria
Organ solo Pastorale
Song O Salutaris
Organ solo Pièce Héroïque

Mr. R. J. Pitcher has been appointed to St. James's, Muswell Hill, in succession to Mr. Reginald Goss Custard. Mr. Pitcher will continue the weekly recitals (Saturdays at 5.45) that have long been a feature at this Church.

CHURCH-MUSIC SOCIETY: BRISTOL BRANCH

Sir Henry Walford Davies was the inspiring director of a Hymn Festival at St. Mary Redcliff on November 18, when a gathering that filled the church sang impressively a number of hymns from the English Hymnal. On November 28 the Rev. Maurice Bell lectured at the Cathedral Chapter House on 'The Musical rendering of the Evening Canticles.' A choir directed by Mr. Arthur Warrell sang settings of various types.

LIVERPOOL CHURCH CHOIR ASSOCIATION

The fifteenth Annual Festival took place at St. George's Hall on November 21. A fine musical scheme had been prepared, including works by Tallis, Purcell, Mendelssohn, Handel, Boyce, Lyon, Walmisley, and Charles Macpherson. The last-named was represented by his Festival Te Deum in E flat and the anthem The Heavens declare. Dr. Macpherson was present as the guest of the Association, and conducted excellent performances of his works. Mr. Harry Goss Custard was at the organ, and opened the second part of the programme with Dr. Macpherson's Fantasy-Prelude. About twenty choirs took part in the Festival, which was a great success musically. We are sorry to hear, however, that public support was far less than the organizers had a right to expect. It is to be hoped that the committee will refuse to be discouraged, and will carry on until the new Cathedral becomes available. There, in more suitable and far less expensive surroundings than those of a concert-hall, the Festival should begin a new and more prosperous era.

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL

The Oratorio Choir, a body of two hundred, which was founded by Dr. W. G. Alcock last year, gave a fine performance of The Messiah in the Cathedral on December 6. The soloists were Miss Carrie Tubbs, Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. Arthur Lurcock, and Mr. Edgar Dyson. There was an orchestra of sixty, made up of the local Orchestral Society (organized by Dr. Alcock in 1918) and members of the Royal Marines Band from Portsmouth. The audience numbered six thousand, and the collection more than covered the expenses. Who can say that a small Cathedral city need be asleep musically, or in any other respect, after such evidence of local enterprise as this?

STRING QUARTETS IN CHURCH

Chamber music of the best kind is well suited for performance in church, because it has much of the impersonal, passionless character that belongs to the best ecclesiastical and organ music. This was well shown at the Church of the Annunciation, Bryanston Square, on November 28, when the Hill Rivington Quartet played works by Haydn and Mozart. The players were stationed on the screen, which proved to be an ideal position. Not the least of the advantages afforded by performance in such surroundings was the absence of applause.

PRESENTATION TO MR. T. J. CRAWFORD

On December 11, Mr. Thomas J. Crawford was entertained by the clergy, choir, and congregation of St. Michael's, Chester Square, on the eve of his departure to take up duties at St. Paul's Church, Toronto, Canada. Mr. Crawford was presented with a beautifully illuminated address and a cheque, in recognition of his twenty years' loyal service as organist and choirmaster. The council of the London Festival has also made a presentation to Mr. Crawford.

MALVERN PRIORY CHURCH

On December 10 a recital of Advent and Christmas music was given. Dr. Louis Hamand played organ works by Karg-Elert and Bach, and the Lady Maud Warrender sang. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise was sung on December 13 by the Oratorio Choir of eighty voices, under Dr. Hamand's direction. Mr. F. Stowell sang the tenor solos, and those for soprano were taken by the Priory choristers. Miss L. F. Peddie was at the organ.

Cherubini's Requiem in C minor was performed by the Unity Choral and Orchestral Society at Unity Chapel, Islington, on December 9. The work made a great impression, and the Society proposes to repeat it on Good Friday. The correspondent who sends us word of the event gives no particulars as to conductor and soloists, but as the performance and its effect are the things that really matter, nobody need complain. We congratulate the Society (which we understand is a new body) on its revival of an unduly neglected fine work.

Brahms's Requiem was sung in Faversham Parish Church on December 6 by an augmented choir conducted by Mr. W. J. Keech. The performance throughout reached a high standard, the singing of the boys being a notable feature. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Nunn and Mr. H. Simpson. Mr. Arthur Keech was at the organ, backed up by two pianofortes (Miss J. Ougham and Mr. F. A. Poultenay) and drums (Mr. Honey).

Part 1 and a selection from Part 2 of The Messiah were sung at the City Temple by the Choral Society on December 9. The soloists were Miss Eleanor Mowbray, Miss Gladys Peel, Mr. Leonard Lovesey, and Mr. Arthur Frith. Mr. Allan Brown conducted, Mr. E. E. Withall played the drums, and Mr. G. D. Cunningham was at the organ. The church was crowded. The Society will sing The Creation on January 13, at three.

The Chapel Choir of Sherborne School gave a Carol Festival in Sherborne Abbey on December 11. About a dozen carols were sung, including some of the choicest numbers from the Cowley Carol Book, interspersed with Lessons read by a chorister, an assistant-master, a governor, the head, and the head-master of the school. Mr. C. H. Trevor conducted, and Mr. W. E. Weardon accompanied, and played organ solos by Handel, Bach, and Parry.

An organ and violoncello recital was given at All Saints' Church, Southampton, on November 16, when Mr. Lionel Ladbroke played Saint-Saëns's Fantaisie, Best's Fantasia on a Choral, and other works on the organ, and violoncello solos by Ries, Panchenko, Bonnet, &c., accompanied by Master George Stone.

A chamber concert was given by the Stuart Foord String Quartet in Jackson's Lane Wesleyan Church, Highgate, on November 30. The programme included Dvorák's Nigger Quartet, Franck's Quintet (with Mr. Eric Brough as pianist), and songs by Dvorák, Brahms, Stanford, and Ireland, sung by Mr. Fred Hughesdon.

The choir of Newcastle Cathedral sang Brahms's Requiem on December 6, conducted by Mr. William Ellis. Mr. A. Ll. Lewis sang the baritone solos, those for soprano being sung by the Twelve Choral Scholars. An orchestra of twenty played, and Mr. H. A. Bennett was at the organ.

A good opportunity for hearing Elizabethan Church music under the best possible conditions will be afforded at Southwark Cathedral during the last two weeks of January, when examples will be sung at Evensong on every week-night, and, so far as possible, at the Sunday services as well. The week-day Evensong is at 5 o'clock.

Mr. Alan May will give a lecture on Elizabethan Madrigals and Motets at the City Temple on Saturday, January 27, at 3. Examples chosen from the syllabus of the Elizabethan Competition Festival will be sung. Sir Richard Terry will be in the chair.

A selection of twenty-seven numbers from St. Paul was sung at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey on November 22, Mr. Herbert Hodge being at the organ. The soloists were Miss Rosa Rubery, Miss Hilda Harrison, Mr. Edward H. Reach, and Mr. C. Winter Coppin.

Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise was excellently sung at St. Stephen's Walbrook on December 1, under the direction of Mr. Francis W. Sutton. The solos were sung by members of the choir. The church was crowded.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. W. Greenhouse Allt, St. John the Evangelist, Edinburgh—Prelude in E flat minor, Rheinberger; Largo from the 'Sea' Symphony, Vaughan Williams; Funeral March, Vierne; Fantasia and Fugue on a Scots Psalm Tune, Best; and a Bach programme.

Dr. W. H. Harris, Lincoln Cathedral—Fantasia on Campion's 'Babylon's Streams,' Harris; Chaconne, Purcell; Pastorale, Franck; Overture, 'Radamistus,' Handel.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Overture in F minor, Hollins; Prelude and Fugue in G minor and Aria, Bach.

- Mr. E. Stanley Roper, St. Andrew's, Westminster—Sonata in E minor, Rheinberger; Moderato, Gade; March, 'The Birds,' Parry.
- Mr. C. F. Waters, St. Stephen's, Walbrook—Prelude in E flat, Bach; Choral Melody, Waters; Finale, Sonata in C sharp minor, Harwood.
- Mr. Arthur Meale, Wesleyan Central Hall—March in B flat, Silas; Bohèmesque, Wolstenholme; Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Fugue, Reubke; 'Unfinished' Symphony; 'Homage to Handel,' Karg-Elert.
- Mr. Eric Brough, Jackson's Lane Wesleyan Church, Highgate—Choral No. 2, Franck; Preludes on a Theme of Tallis, Darke, and 'St. Thomas,' Parry; Canon, Schumann; Prelude and Fugue in B, Dupré.
- Mr. Norman Collie, St. Margaret's, Westminster—Arcadian Idyll, Lemare; Suite, Arensky; Variations on an Original Theme, Stuart Archer; Scherzo, Sandiford Turner.
- Dr. Chastey Hector, St. Martin's, Brighton—Dithyramb, Harwood; Pastorale, Vierne; Final-Marche, Boëllmann.
- Mr. Alexander McConachie, Christ Church, St. Kilda—Fugue in C, Buxtehude; Phantasie in D flat, Rheinberger; Sketch in F minor, Schumann.
- Mr. F. C. J. Swanton, St. Mary's, Nenagh—Rhapsody No. 3, Saint-Saëns; Postlude, Stanford; Chorale Preludes by Bach and Vaughan Williams.
- Mr. W. G. Webber, St. Lawrence Jewry—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Finale, Symphony No. 2, Widor.
- Dr. J. C. Bradshaw, Manchester University—Prelude and Fugue in E flat, Bach; Fantasia in E minor, Mozart; Andante from String Quartet, Debussy; Dithyramb, Harwood.
- Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson, High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham—Allegro Maestoso, Elgar; Meditation, Grace; Concert Allegro, Dobson.
- Miss Emmie Bowman, Barony Parish Church, Glasgow—Pastorale, Franck; Variations, Bonnet; Marche Pontificale, Widor.
- Mr. Stanley Lucas, Harecourt Congregational Church, Canonbury—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns; Novellette, Wolstenholme.
- Miss M. A. Sims, St. Vedast Foster—Spasializio, Liszt; Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Psalm Tune Postlude, Grace.
- Mr. G. C. Gray, Newcastle Cathedral—Scherzetto, Vierne; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Final, Franck.
- Mr. H. E. Wall, St. Matthew's, West Kensington—March Militaire, Buck; Trio on 'Herr Jesu Christ,' Bach; Réverie and Toccata, Grace.
- Mr. Francis W. Sutton, St. Margaret's, Westminster—Two Preludes on Welsh Hymn Tunes, Vaughan Williams; Intermezzo from Symphony No. 6, Widor; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach.
- Mr. G. F. Robertson, Hinckley Parish Church—Sonata in the Style of Handel, Wolstenholme; Overture in F minor, Hollins; Cantilène, Symphony No. 3, Vierne.
- Mr. Arthur H. Egerton, All Saints', Winnipeg—Preludes on 'Ave Maris Stella,' Dupré; Allegro Maestoso, Elgar; Sonata No. 1, Harwood.
- Mr. William Ellis, Newcastle Cathedral—Concerto in B flat, Handel; Vivace from Sonata No. 2, Bach; First movement of Symphony No. 2, Vierne; Chorale Preludes by Pachelbel and Karg-Elert; Fugue, Reubke.
- Mr. G. D. Cunningham, Westminster Cathedral—Choral No. 1, Franck; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Prelude and Fugue in B, Dupré; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach.
- Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—A Bach programme: Toccata and Fugue in D minor; Prelude and Fugue in C minor; Toccata and Fugue in C; Prelude and Fugue in E flat; Air in D; and Preludes on 'Nun Komm' der Heiden Heiland' and 'Schmucke dich.'
- Mr. John Pulletin, Newcastle Cathedral—Toccata, Rheinberger; Pastorale, Franck; Marche - Final, Boëllmann; Choral Preludes by Parry, Grace, and West.

APPOINTMENT

Mr. Edgar M. Dent, organist and choirmaster, Church of the Holy Spirit, Clapham.

Competition Festival Record

BRITISH FEDERATION OF MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVALS

We have received a copy of the first Annual Report of this body. It shows that the Federation, though but a yearling, is already well and truly founded, with much good spadework to its credit. Well over a hundred Festivals are affiliated, among the number being all the most important. Wales holds aloof, unfortunately, but one of the four big Canadian Festivals has joined the Federation, and no doubt the forthcoming visit on an adjudicating tour of Prof. Granville Bantock and Mr. Plunket Greene will end in the Dominion being fully represented. The Federation has in preparation a list of classified test-pieces; it has given help and advice to many applicants; it promises a Year-Book with particulars of Festivals; and (a more difficult job than some may think) it has evolved what may claim to be a perfect marking-sheet, which it supplies at cost price to affiliated Festivals. It has also conferred with entertainment tax officials, and not in vain.

The recent Conference at Carnegie House showed the secret of the Federation's strength. There was a large attendance of officials and adjudicators from all over the country, and discussions were so keen that a very long session was no hardship. Prominent speakers were Dr. Adrian C. Boulton, Mr. Julius Harrison, Sir Henry Walford Davies, Mr. Armstrong Gibbs, Mr. Plunket Greene, Mr. Hugh Robertson, Mr. Granville Humphries, Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill, and the admirable chairman, Mr. F. H. Bisset. All kept the debate on a plane of practical idealism. Critics who are apparently unable to see more than the weak points and dangers of the Competition Festival would, we are sure, have been converted by this meeting, and, above all, by its clashing of opinions as to matters of detail. Only in one thing was there complete unanimity, and that was in the matter of high aim. Local needs vary so much that the Federation does well to recognise that there can be no hard-and-fast rules and cut-and-dried decisions as to the carrying out of a scheme. At present its work is to help in making the schemes themselves first-rate. There is no better augury for the Festival movement than the successful start made by the Federation. All who contemplate the inauguration or revival of Festivals should begin by getting in touch with the secretary, Mr. H. Fairfax Jones, 117, Great Portland Street, W.1.

THE HALIFAX FESTIVAL

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT)

The first Halifax Musical Festival was held on Friday and Saturday, November 24 and 25, and attracted such large entries that it must be written down a great success from one point of view at least, though the audiences were not always adequate. It was hoped that Mr. Gustav Holst would be able to adjudicate, but at the last minute he found himself unable to attend, and in his place Dr. Vaughan Williams sat in the judgment seat, with Dr. W. G. Whittaker and Mr. Arthur T. Akeroyd, the secretary of the Wharfedale Musical Festival.

The test-pieces during the two days of the Festival flung perhaps rather too wide a net. Elocution classes, for instance, with tests like Watching a dinner of Conroy Grain and Prior to Miss Belle's Appearance, by one J. W. Riley, were not at all certain to catch musical fish. The study of elocution should, of course, be part of a musical festival's interests, but there must be insistence on verse that definitely appeals to the musical sense. It appeared from the syllabus of the Festival that the Halifax authorities had not quite decided on a definite standard of technical and artistic achievement for competitors to tackle. Perhaps it was thought that as the Festival was new, and as it was following close on the heels of the Blackpool meeting, a strict standard in the test-pieces could not safely be established; and it might have been considered that the more advanced competitors had had enough of the competitive festival, for the time being, at Blackpool. As it turned out, the Halifax Festival attracted competitors of high technical ability on the whole, and in many instances the tests were not stiff enough technically or imaginatively. This was very obvious in the choral contests on the closing day. Choirs like the Gledholt Vocal Union, the Bradford City Police, the Manchester Orpheus Glee, the Hebden Bridge Male-Voice, the Todmorden Glee—these are not likely to be extended, as they say at Newmarket, by César Cui's Two Roses and Walford Davies's Hymn before Action. The choral singing was uniformly beautiful, and the adjudicators were often hard put to it to spot the winner. An excellent idea in the scheme was the class for mixed-voice quartet with Sir Henry Walford Davies's exquisitely humorous Father William as the test-piece. The more our competitive festivals can do to spread a less solemn view of music as an art than is largely current to-day, the better. Why should we always insist on music being 'sublime,' 'divine,' 'god-like'? Let us get a little laughter into music, a smack of every-day fun and bustle. All the arts save music are granted permission to be funny without being vulgar. Sir Henry's setting of Lewis Carroll's verses was vastly enjoyed by both competitors and audience, and no doubt it was because high spirits were officially sanctioned in this piece that the singing had as keen a sting in it as anything heard in the Festival.

The solo singing classes brought out some good voices, but in too many instances we got a suspicion that teachers still permit pupils to distort vowels for 'resonance' purposes, instead of insisting on a poetic treatment of words. The playing in the instrumental classes was disappointing.

THE NORTH LONDON FESTIVAL

Many of the people concerned in this Festival thought that the extraordinary success of its first year would not be maintained. Well-wishers would tire, and so on. Certainly the third Festival, which has just taken place at Holloway, proved the mettle of the workers. Election week, bad trade, and November fogs were unfavourable elements. But the entries, reaching fifteen hundred and five, have not been equalled by any provincial festival. The standard of the performances was high; marks of 97 to 99, and even 100 per cent. were several times recorded. The venue is convenient for provincial choirs, the Northern Polytechnic Hall being only five minutes' tube journey from two railway termini. Choral awards went to Portsmouth, Chelmsford, Bedford, and Luton, and solo competitors took home prizes or certificates to Yorkshire, Lancashire, Devon, and the Home Counties. Ten adjudicators were at work (though not continuously) during the eight days' competitions in two halls. The attendance of the public was not good until the closing concerts, which were excellently supported. Lady Maud Warrender offered a challenge cup for Girl Guides, the Mayor of Islington (a pianoforte manufacturer) followed with a cup for Boy Scouts, and the Marquess of Northampton (having strong local ties) has followed with a cup for church choirs. These are indications of growing interest. At the close, Sir Frederick Bridge made a happy speech, full of sage educational advice.

J. G.

The Association of Competitive Choirs held its third annual meeting at Manchester recently. It now has a membership of over forty, including many of the best-known choirs in the North of England. The officers elected were as follows: president, Mr. J. E. Turner (Halifax Madrigal Society); hon. treasurer, Mr. E. S. Peel (Todmorden Male-Voice Choir); hon. secretary, Mr. H. Stevenson (Todmorden Glee and Madrigal Society).

SEMI-NATIONAL EISTEDFODD, LONDON.—This was held at Central Hall, Westminster, on November 17. The successful choir in the male-voice competition was Cardiff and District Choral Society. The tests were Hegar's The Phantom Host and Shepherd's In Memory. Mile-End Welsh was best of six mixed-voice choirs in Gounod's By Babylon's wave and Coleridge-Taylor's Lee Shore.

NOTTINGHAM.—Now twenty years old, the Nottingham Festival is making a good post-war recovery, and the entries this year (October 27 and 28) eclipsed all records. The adjudicators were Sir Richard Terry, Prof. Granville Bantock, Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, and Dr. F. H. Wood. The chief awards went to the William Woolley Choral Society, Alfreton Male-Voice Choir, and Sutton-in-Ashfield Harmonic (female voices).

COVENTRY.—The first Coventry musical Festival was held on November 25. Entries were far more numerous than had been expected, and seven halls were brought into occupation. The choral competitions were largely a triumph for Miss Alice McGowran, of Coventry, who conducted four choirs to victory. These were the Blue Triangle Club Choir (girls' clubs), the Vocal Students Ladies' Choir (female voice choirs, open), St. Osburg's Church Choir, Coventry, and the Vocal Students' Choir (mixed voices, open). The male-voice competition was won by Hayward Forge, Halesowen. A prize-winners' concert completed the day. The chief adjudicators were Mr. Hugh Robertson, Mr. T. F. Dunhill, Mr. Harvey Grace, and Dr. Caradog Roberts.

JERSEY.—A musical competition Festival was recently held at St. Heliers with success. Mr. T. Hopkin Evans awarded first place to the Western Choir (Mr. T. Mayo) for its performance of Elgar's Serenade, and the First Cecilian Choir (Mr. P. Syvret) for its singing of German's Beauteous Morn.

COLNE.—The annual Festival (founded in 1900) was held on December 1 and 2. Church Street Glee Singers Padiham (Mr. T. Shaw) were first of five male-voice choirs in Bantock's The glories of our blood and state and MacDowell's From the sea. Four mixed-voice choirs sang Lloyd's Rosy Dawn and Coleridge-Taylor's Dead in the Sierras, Thornton Vocal Union (Mr. Norman Stell) being placed first. Dr. Tysoe and Mr. A. Higson adjudicated.

MEXBOROUGH.—The first competition Festival organized by the Mexborough and Swinton Railwaymen's Male-Voice Choir took place on December 2. Mapplewell (Barnsley) was the best of twelve male-voice choirs. Mr. C. Jessop adjudicated.

BEDFORD EISTEDFOD.—In its third year, this Festival has reached an astonishing growth. It is to last from February 26 to March 9, and concerts of prize-winners prolong operations until March 12—a fortnight in all. Sixteen adjudicators are engaged, the senior choirs and solo singing being allotted to Sir Hugh Allen, Dr. E. C. Bairstow, Dr. P. C. Buck, Sir Frederic Cowen, Mr. Harvey Grace, Mr. H. Plunket Greene, and Mr. Cyril Jenkins. One male-voice class is open to choirs from any part of the United Kingdom, but all the rest are confined either to Bedfordshire or the district within thirty miles of Bedford. With its ninety-three classes, the syllabus covers chamber music trios and quartets, string orchestras, and elocutionists, besides the ordinary scheme of choirs and solo singers and players.

THE ELIZABETHAN COMPETITION FESTIVAL

MARCH 2 AND 3

We are asked to announce an addition to the choral side in this Festival. The new class is for London Working Girls' Club Choirs; the test-pieces are Este's How merrily we live for S.S.A. (Novello) and Morley's When lo, by break of morning, for S.S. unaccompanied (Stainer & Bell). Classes should not contain more than thirty members. The entrance fee will be 2s. 6d., and entries should be sent in by January 31 to the hon. sec., Mr. Alan May, Bonham Road, Brixton, S.W.2. The committee wishes us to announce also that competitors in the pianoforte classes may obtain the books of pieces at a reduced rate on application to Mr. May.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Violinist (lady) wishes to meet other instrumentalists with view to forming string trio or quartet for mutual practice.—B., 64, Parkstone Avenue, Emerson Park, Hornchurch, Essex.

*Cellist and pianist are willing to attend home of violinist or others for weekly practice; good, varied collection of music; and both experienced.—'CELLO,' 6, Camden Gardens, N.W.1.

Brass instrumentalists desiring orchestral experience are invited to attend rehearsals of Unity Church Choral and Orchestral Society, on Thursday evenings at Unity Church, Upper Street, Islington, at 8 p.m.

Tenor wanted for male quartet. Must be good reader and soloist. Preferably one residing in S.W. district.—Apply DOUGLAS EATON, 5, Dalebury Road, Upper Tooting, S.W.17.

The Tollington Orchestra will resume practices on Monday, January 8, 1923. New members will be welcome, especially violin, viola, wood and brass wind. Library of over seventy pieces. Established over twenty years.—D. J. JENKINS (hon. sec.), 105, Moray Road, N.4.

Lady pianist is desirous of getting in touch with violinist for mutual practice, Birmingham district.—V. A. P., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur vocalist desires to meet pianist for mutual practice. South London district.—Letters only, P. PARSONS, 2, Felday Road, Lewisham, S.E.13.

Baritone (City choirman) desires to join good quartet party (preferably male-voice). Also used to solos, duets, &c. Evenings only.—H. K., c/o SECRETARY, Novello Choir, Novello Works, Hollen Street, W.1.

Amateur instrumentalists—violins, violas, flutes, and clarinets—are invited to join orchestra for mutual practice on Monday evenings from seven to ten o'clock.—Write 120, Ferme Park Road, Crouch End, N.8.

Gentlemen, vocalist and accompanist, desires to meet another for mutual assistance in practising. Eltham, S.E.9.—F. G. W., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (16), moderate ability, would like to meet violinist (either sex), similar ability, for mutual practice. Preston (Lancs.) district.—'TARANTELLER,' c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist desires to meet instrumentalists for mutual practice. S.W. district.—A. B., 71, Barnwell Road, Brixton, S.W.2.

Soprano (district S.W.) would be glad to hear of an accompanist for mutual practice.—T., c/o Musical Times.

*Cellist wishes to join trio or quartet for classics. Preston (Lancs) district.—GEORGE W. GULLAND, c/o Musical Times.

MR. W. W. COBBETT ON CHAMBER MUSIC

At the Royal College of Music, on November 22, Mr. W. W. Cobbett presented the prizes alluded to in our 'Occasional Note' on page 38, and gave the students an address which we are very glad to be able to print in full. He said:

'Students of the Royal College of Music: Time, which at my age passes with incredible swiftness, has brought me round to another of these pleasant encounters, and I am glad to meet you once again. I had almost greeted you as fellow students, for your governing body has seen fit to elect me a member of this College, and I greatly appreciate the honour. I have sometimes thought that were a fresh incarnation offered me, I would elect to be reborn a student in one of the great schools of music, but now, without waiting millions of years, the dream has in a way come true. Speaking seriously, I really have to be to some extent a student, though not a professional musician, if I am to keep my end up and not be voted a reactionary, a back number, or something equally opprobrious. Hitherto, during my half-century of experience as a chamber-music player, I have indulged in the illusion that I was able and always would be able to keep abreast with the times. How and when disillusion came I will tell you now, hoping you will forgive my lapse into the autobiographical vein, my excuse—indeed, the raison d'être of this address—being that the ego presented to a very considerable extent reflects not my own opinions alone but those of many musical comrades. I had not the good fortune to be born in a musical milieu, having in youth few of the advantages which you enjoy, and which are not less to be desired for the amateur than for the professional career. The beginnings of musical consciousness came to me when listening to the enervating strains of Italian opera and to the English operas produced by a diva of the past, Louisa Fanny Pyne, and to the singing in antimacassered drawing-rooms, by early Victorian ladies, of Scotch and Irish airs. These I was taught to despise (the tunes, not the ladies); later on to love again, and to add English songs to the list. Then, at an age when some of you expect to be virtuosos, I began to learn the violin from a local teacher who also taught me a little harmony. It is in early youth and in early youth alone that the foundation of technical mastery can be laid, a truism that dogs the footsteps of all who take up the practice of music late in life. Thrice happy you who are making such a good start, under the guidance of professors bearing names honoured by every musician in the country. Italian opera had little hold on me, but it chanced that my violin master gave me for practice Italian music of another kind, the Sonatas of Corelli, and though I was far from being able to execute them properly, they awakened in me for the first time an interest in music of the deeper sort. Afterwards, thanks to an acquaintance luckily made with some ensemble players, came the Quartets of Haydn, to which I took still more kindly. Indeed, I was carried away by them to an extent for which I cannot quite account. If there is such a thing as the chamber-music temperament I believe I have it. It seemed as if I had been waiting for something to come into my musical life—practising the fiddle, you know, in the early stages is not very exciting—and here it was, contained in Haydn's genial music, inspiring me with a deep content. I remember that the first Quartet I ever led was Op. 33, in C—a memorable experience. It is a lovely little work, and on that day a flame was kindled within me which continued and still continues to glow, and will only flicker and die when the time comes to write at the foot of the ultimate page, as Haydn did, "Hin ist alle meine Kraft, alt und schwach bin ich" ["My strength is gone, I am old and weak"].

THE VITALITY OF HAYDN

'Haydn was in some respects the most original of the great composers, perhaps the first to be subjected to influences other than those of the organ-loft. Of what he did for the symphony I need not speak. Chamber music is my job, and chamber music began with Haydn. It is an art which sprang completely equipped from the brain of this wonderful yet unpretentious creative genius. Though he came into the world a hundred and ninety years ago, his works are in the repertoire of every leading quartet organization to-day. I attended recently a chamber concert at which a Quartet of Continental artists played two ultra-modern works and sandwiched them with Haydn's splendid Op. 76 in D, which I hope you all know. A journalist present whispered in my ear, "I would that all were by Haydn"—with which sentiment I profoundly disagree. The spice of variety, the avoidance of monotony, are vitally necessary if a programme is to give pleasure. Still, his remark serves to illustrate my point that Haydn at his best—the proviso is important, for it is notorious that some of his Quartets ought never to have been published—Haydn at his best is of to-day, whatever his detractors may advance. He was known familiarly as "Papa Haydn"; but he wielded the wand of eternal youth as no other composer has done. After a lapse of nearly two centuries his music still rings the freshest of all.

'Of Mozart it may be said that he derived from Haydn, but succeeded in writing music that is harmonically richer and, being subject to Italian influences, more solicitous for sheer beauty of sound, attractive, if for that reason alone, at a first audition. Even now it escapes detraction at the hands of the most captious critic. Beethoven's music can also be considered as a development of Haydn's through Mozart. Ethical feeling, which is not very apparent in chamber music as a whole—among the moderns it is almost non-existent—is expressed in the slow movements of both composers, but there was a new departure, further startling developments, by virtue of which Beethoven left Haydn and Mozart far behind. I must not be tempted to enlarge upon them. I will only say that when I first heard his Quartets led by that great master of the violin, Joseph Joachim, when I realised the virility of the music—virility raised to the *n*th power, yet touched with tenderness—when I came under the spell of those harmonies accounted strange by Beethoven's contemporaries, which flooded the listener with a sense of mystery, I received impressions which were of the kind inexpressible in words. The practical effect was that they moved me to persuade my father to let me have some lessons from a member of Joachim's team, with whom I studied the sixteen Beethoven Quartets for the first time. I have played them at regular intervals ever since. Indeed, they form a part of my life and of the life of every quartet-player in the world. Those who know them thoroughly also know that they are among the miracles of Art.

FROM MENDELSSOHN TO RAVEL

'In due time the brilliant flutterings of the Mendelssohn fairy Scherzos (bathed as of marvellous originality by the highbrows of the period, but disdained by the highbrows of the present day), the sentiment of Schumann, and the spontaneous lyricism of Schubert were promptly assimilated. Next came Brahms, Grieg, Dvorák, Smetana, and Dohnányi. With complacency I found their idioms easy to follow—inevitable. Brahms's metrical scheme gave a little trouble, but only at first. His music seemed a natural sequel to that of the older masters. A little more rugged, perhaps, but his ruggedness is only an outside crust covering a wealth of romanticism of the kind introduced into chamber music by Schumann, and wrong-headedly stigmatised by a French writer as the sentimentalism of the Bosche. Happily, I do not find that the French musicians I meet endorse this dictum, and we who like music that makes us happy, we who are not blasé, are thirsting for more of it—for more draughts from this Piérian spring. What chamber-music player does not wish that Brahms had followed the example of Beethoven and published sixteen Quartets instead of three? Little need be said of Grieg's music, a development of Norwegian folk-song. Its appeal was instantaneous. The folk-song element is also found in Dvorák, in whom the influence of Brahms is occasionally apparent. To play his music was a delight from the first. Most captivating is the chamber music of Tchaikovsky, Borodin, Glazounov, Glière, Medtner, and others of the Russian school, though touched (or because touched) with the habitual melancholy of the Slav temperament, less poignantly expressed in their chamber music than elsewhere. When the French chamber music writers appeared the transition was not less smooth. Saint-Saëns was easy, but not on that account to be spoken of disparagingly. In form his music is finely classic, and grateful to those players and listeners who are willing to waive a certain absence of profundity. Fauré's music is also easy of comprehension and of a noble elegance. I cannot say that I grasped at a first hearing the Piano-forte Quintet of Florent Schmitt. The trouble is that it is enormously difficult, but when I heard it played by the Philharmonic String Quartet with Mr. Sharp at the piano-forte, its finer qualities were made clearly manifest. It represents well the French spirit of twenty years ago. Schmitt's master, César Franck, of all musicians the most modest, was also one of the most intellectual. Yet in his Sonata for piano-forte and violin, with its easily followed cyclic scheme, an avenue is found by which we readily arrive at a comprehension of the rest of the Franck repertoire. The first production of Debussy's lovely String Quartet stirred the musical world to the depths. It may be that its significance was not immediately grasped by all, but if it seemed remote, mystical, elusive, it was for a brief moment only. It came very quickly nearer, and found the way to all our hearts by its wondrously delicate charm and originality. As much may be said of Ravel, at least of his Quartet, Harp Septet, and Trio, though the usefulness of the Trio is imperilled by its technical difficulties, which can be faced only by virtuoso performers. Of his latest Sonata for violin and 'cello I shall have something to say later on.

BRITISH CHAMBER MUSIC

'My reference to British chamber music must be brief for the simple reason that if I once began to talk about it, I should keep you here all the afternoon. It has always found a home in this College, and to-day's doings may be said to grow out of it. I am more proud than I can say of the achievements of my countrymen, who are obviously marching on to fresh triumphs, and I hope that my new competitions may prove helpful to this end. I should like to mention that I have recently heard a MS. Piano-forte and Violin Sonata by W. H. Bell, formerly a student at the R.A.M., with which institution you are fraternally related. His work is interesting inasmuch as he has been for some years principal of a South African Conservatoire, and therefore away from the ferment of musical life as lived in Europe. His music is none the worse for that, and a very select audience found it altogether delightful. It may be the fate of some of you to be called abroad by your professional duties. If you are, follow Mr. Bell's example, and carry with you the torch of British chamber music and keep it alight.

THE STRAVINSKY SNAG

'I now arrive at what I fear I must call my moment of honourable defeat—or shall I say disillusionment? The first indication that something was amiss was my failure to appreciate the music of Schönberg and Max Reger, but I was consoled by my enjoyment of the former's early Sextet and by finding that others besides myself thought Reger overweighted with musical erudition. The climax was reached one evening when I found myself sitting next to a Stravinsky enthusiast during the first performance of that composer's three pieces for string quartet. I had previously enjoyed the Stravinsky ballets, but had not thought of his music as separable from the dancing and grotesqueries of the Russian Ballet. Good; here was an opportunity for considering him in the light of a composer of absolute music, and I hazarded the guess that his Quartet would out-Mozart Mozart in structural simplicity, if only by way of contrast, but I soon found that I had made a very bad shot indeed. I listened attentively, and could hardly believe my ears. My thoughts reverted to a sensation experienced many years before at the great Chicago Exhibition, where I visited an authentic Chinese theatre and heard for the first, and I hope the last time, what a Chinaman calls music. I was by no means expecting a treat, for a much-travelled friend told me that the favourite Chinese scale or mode consisted of three notes in the octave, and warned me of the ghastly possibilities of portamento and glissando in the spaces between, but I did not expect anything quite so terrible. The Chinese love it, and why, indeed, should they not? I neither complain of, nor wonder, at it, but I realised as never before how distinct is the line of cleavage between East and West. The sounds or shrieks which issued from the mouths of these actors (all male) were not merely unbeautiful to our Western ears—they were harrowing; and the awful thing was that this Stravinsky Quartet affected me in a similar way. My neighbour obligingly told me that only those deficient in mental culture failed to appreciate it. The next morning one or two of the newspaper critics, men for whom I profess the greatest admiration—not of Chinese extraction—expressed themselves gratified. The game was up. I was evidently unable to respond to modern developments, and my complacency, as all complacency should, vanished into thin air. Since then I have tried again and again, with no better results.

MORE SNAGS

'I will not speak of Ornstein and Casella, as they have not perpetrated any chamber music so far as I know; nor of Strauss, whose contact with it was in early youth; nor of Scriabin, who might have interested us all had he turned his suggestion of a colour scheme in music in the direction of the string quartet; nor of Korngold, whose Trio and Sonata were played in London ten years ago, for he has recanted. He told me himself that he had deserted the neue Bahnen [the new paths], and now treads the highways of music. But of Béla Bartók there is more to tell. After working at his Quartets in private with very dissonant results, I had the opportunity later for hearing the composer's friends and chosen interpreters, the so-called Hungarian Quartet, play one of them. Technically, the performance was dazzling. Though none of the passages were in the ordinary tracks of the fingers, they reeled them off with infinite dexterity. Technique always has its appeal, but there was more of mystification than of pleasure in the impressions made by the music on the listeners. These young men, whose enthusiasm is admirable, read into Bartók's music more than the local or racial sentiment of the born Hungarian. For them it symbolises modernity, the onward march of the progressive musician. If they are right I have to admit, sadly, that I am left far behind, and with me a large number of musical comrades whose feelings are akin to mine. I had a similar experience with Egon Wellesz's latest Quartet, which I had also heard and played. A few bars here and there were highly expressive, others fascinated by their whimsicality and the singularity of the intervals, but in the main they confirmed the strange pronouncement of a writer in a musical periodical. "They do not contain," he says, "a single consonance." This has unusual significance, coming from one who professes himself an ardent admirer of Wellesz's music. I expected much from a Quartet by Francesco Malipiero, as that composer gained the prize in one of Mrs. Coolidge's competitions. His nationality is Italian, but his music is strangely devoid of the lyric impulse, and I confess that certain barbaric one-bar phrases failed to recommend themselves by repetitions during sixteen bars or so. Also the incessant clamour of open strings is not quite acceptable to those who have a different conception of the scope of chamber music. Still this may be said of it, it is bright, and has not the somewhat morose touch to be observed in the Quartet of Krenek heard at the C.A.C. This composer is a master of his craft, and being, I believe, a Serbian by origin, it is not surprising that he is pessimistic as a man, after the ghastly experiences of the war. But as a musician I cannot help thinking that it were better if he rigidly excluded feelings so unsuited for musical expression. It has been suggested to me that I should send to Vienna for a Quartet by one Alois Haba, advertised as written in the so-called quarter-tone system. I have not risen to the occasion, feeling that, having coped with enharmonic modulation, notation, and intonation more or less successfully all my life, I must leave these super-chromatics to a new generation. The history of my disillusionment extends unfortunately to certain composers who have delighted me in the past. Florent Schmitt's Sonata for pianoforte and violin is remote from ordinary musical humanity. It appears to me, and to many others, to be of incredible aridity. Even Gabriel Fauré, whose first Violin and Pianoforte Sonata is so full of gracious beauty (it has frequently been played within these walls) has produced a second Sonata which no doubt is of interest to musicians, but alas! of unrelieved dullness from end to end. Wishful to forget these disappointments, I turned to Ravel's new Sonata for violin and 'cello, with hope strong within me. Ravel, I argued, besides being a master musician, has shown himself capable of charming the normal man. Swearing he would ne'er consent to be a romantic, he has consented to give us in his lovely Quartet and Septet music which is of romance the very essence. In this unusual and sparse combination of instruments he will (I thought) surely display the same qualities and show incidentally what can be done by, or in spite of, the elimination of the two instruments he considers unessential. But I was doomed once more to disappointment. The Latin clarity was there, and intellectualism brooded over all, as shown by the blending of major and minor keys with not inharmonious results, but compensation there was none for the absence of viola and second violin, and what is worse, romance and beauty had fled affrighted from its pages. I am English, and my lachrymose glands are not sensitive, or I might have wept. To sum up, is this a conclusion? It would be a lame one if it were, but it is not. It is rather—how shall I put it in terms of music—a chord of suspense, not a full close; and it represents a mind-state common to hundreds of earnest musicians who are oppressed by discords as by a nightmare, yet who remember that Hanslick, the apostle of beauty in his time, reviled Wagner, and that Spohr, a master in many departments of the art, executant, composer, and theorist, professed a poor opinion of Beethoven's later Quartets. All of us see that it would be fatuous to condemn too quickly, to adopt an irreconcilable attitude. But we must be pardoned if we feel that to be faced with potential Wagners and Beethovens by the dozen is rather much for our assimilative powers.

THE NEED FOR SINCERITY

'Well, my young friends, the penalty to pay for the full appreciation of contemporary music of a certain type would appear to be renunciation of what we have hitherto understood as beauty, renunciation of the Will to Please; and, I regret to add, denunciation of the old. I am not prepared to pay the penalty. Are you? You young people are more concerned with the future than I. If I had the great honour of being a teacher of music I should take a keen pleasure in observing the attitude of my advanced pupils towards the questions upon which I have touched in this address. The minds of the young are not overlaid with experience, their vision is clear. If they find, if you to whom I am speaking to-day, find in the clash of unrelated keys and adjacent notes, baffling rhythms, atmosphere without form, polyphonic dissonance, and the rest, something you really love and admire, by all means proclaim it from the housetops. You have come into your own. But your sincerity must be absolute. If you care to remember anything I have said to-day, I ask you to remember this. Beware of unconscious insincerity, an insidious form of self-deception. Some young folk, and some old folk too—in fact most of us—like to appear at all costs up-to-date. It may be natural (I suppose that all weaknesses are natural), but it is a weed in the mind's garden which needs to be uprooted, for it is only small art that is dated. The greatest has no date. Out of this mentality the futurist pose grows only too readily, and there grows also from it a craving for originality which has its dangers. If you chance to possess an individuality which stands out from its fellows, and you are able to express it masterfully, you have achieved originality. But if you have it not, no conscious effort on your part will make an original of you. Two words embody the advice given thousands of times by the great writers on art—Be yourself! Sir Charles Stanford in one of his papers states that some writers deliberately insert extraneous notes to conceal the key chord—a scathing indictment coming from such a source. They seek a reputation for originality, and only succeed in proving that they are musical snobs. Others with commercial ends in view set to work deliberately to imitate those pieces of music which have achieved popularity. Those are the real plagiarists, a shameless crew which must on no account be confounded with the composers who at the outset of their career, so to speak, incorporate with themselves the spirit of the masters whom they revere. I respect them for it. I am not in accord with those who, with what Falstaff calls "damnable iteration," level the reproach at every young composer, as he comes along, that his music is "derived." Of course it is derived. All good music is derived up to a certain point. I could give you a whole gamut of derivation, citing all the musicians I have mentioned in turn to-day, and many besides, showing how one man's music grows out of another's, but I will refer to one only—Bach, to whom universal homage is paid. In his time, as Dr. Vaughan Williams in one of his lectures has pointed out, musical Germany was a nest of organists and capellmeisters, all writing in the same idiom and deriving from the same source. J. S. Bach was no more prominent than the rest, not even the most considered of his family, but later generations discovered that it was he who gave supreme expression to the spirit of his age. You may find in his music plenty of evidence of the influence of his predecessors, if you waste time in seeking for it, but the influence that lies behind it all is that of his own tremendous personality. The processes of nature are often curiously analogous to those of art. Wine is often linked with music by the poets, so I will not apologise for using it as a comparison. Many years ago the vines of France were transplanted into California. For a time the grapes produced a wine similar in flavour to the French, reminding the drinker of Margaux, Chambertin, Yquem, and the rest, but after a while the Gallic flavour was no longer to be detected. The analogy is perfect. If young composers are not mere mimics—in which case they will be automatically wiped out—they will reproduce at first the flavour of the original vine, and in the sequel their own personality, if they have one, will pierce through and be felt in every note they write. Never mind if it is only good vin ordinaire.

GOOD LIGHT MUSIC WANTED

'In the world of music there is plenty of room for writers of really sound music to be played in cinemas, hotels, music-halls, and theatres, suited to the plane of musical culture upon which the man in the street, who is in an immense majority, stands. If it bears the hall-mark of the R.C.M., it may be relied upon to improve the taste of the public, and, what is more, it will pay. I commissioned three composers many years ago to write light Suites for string orchestra. They did so, and publication was undertaken by a firm which is making—well, more money than the composers out of them. You will perhaps remark that this is not chamber music. It is not, but even in chamber music there is room for writers of music in lighter vein. There exists very little of it, and what there is of real value nearly all comes from Russia. Glazunov especially has given some delightful specimens of what can be done in this way in his Noveletten and Suite for string quartet, both full of gaiety and joie de vivre. A Royal College man indicated for that sort of work who might have done it to perfection was Coleridge-Taylor. Unfortunately he died young. The Dance Phantasy Competition, promoted three years ago, was intended to encourage this type of composition. Mozart you know, said, "the man who cannot write a good dance tune is not worthy the name of composer."

VIOLINS OLD AND NEW

'I have a few words to say to the string players amongst you. You are, I know, much exercised by the thought that fine old violins are unapproachably high in price. So they are and so they are likely to be, if only for their curio value, but it may hearten you to know that new violins are now being made in different parts of the world giving tonal results of a quite remarkable character. My own ancient prejudice against them has been broken down by recent experiences, one of which I will relate. I heard the famous Capet Quartet play a few months ago, and was struck by the bright soprano tone produced by the leader, M. Capet, out of a violin which I took to be an old Italian instrument of the first class, but on inquiry found to be quite new. Recently Albert Sammons played the Elgar Concerto on an English fiddle, and Pablo Casals played Bach on a new French 'cello, both at Queen's Hall. Such exceptional instruments, made with especial care and devotion, are the Strads. of the future, but they require to be sought out, tried again and again, and probably many of them rejected before the right one is found. If you are seeking such a violin, with the aid of your professor, don't mind if you are accused of being pernickety. Spare no pains, for it is worth it. The quest for a violin is the quest for tone, and the quest for tone is the quest for beauty. My concluding words relate to my next year's competition. Sir Hugh Allen, in connection with the present competition, had the splendid idea of encouraging you to form teams amongst yourselves. In connection with the new competition it is equally desirable to promote meetings between composers and executants. They should work hard for mutual benefit, as David did with Mendelssohn and Joachim with Brahms. The composer has not always complete technical knowledge of every instrument for which he writes, and a comparing of notes would prove of priceless value to both. I must not sit down without renewing my thanks to Sir Hugh for the kindly interest he has taken in these competitions from the first, and expressing the hope that in his valiant struggle against adverse conditions of health he will come out with his splendid energies unimpaired.'

A vote of thanks to Mr. Cobbett for his address was proposed by Sir Charles Stanford, seconded (at Sir Hugh Allen's suggestion) by the students in a body, and carried.

Letters to the Editor

'WHO WROTE GOUNOD'S FAUST?'

SIR,—I first heard a similar story to that related in Mr. A. Keay's interesting article at Paris during the Exhibition year of 1878. But Mr. Keay somewhat spoils it by stating: 'One of the students at the Paris Conservatoire while Gounod was its director.' Gounod was never a director of the Paris Conservatoire, and that position was held at the time by Auber until his death in 1871. What about the libretto? It was written by two well-known professional librettists and dramatists, who certainly would never have furnished to an obscure musical student an important 'book' based on Goethe's Faust without any prospect of payment.

The 'story' was not unknown to Camille Saint-Saëns, who told me it was 'a pure invention of Berlioz.' The composer of the Damnation de Faust was extremely jealous of the growing popularity of Gounod's Faust. Berlioz's criticism of it in the Journal des Débats was certainly more severe than in any other contemporary Parisian newspaper. 'Here lies the danger,' Saint-Saëns said, 'of giving the position of musical critic to opera librettists and composers. Give the job to an ordinary journalist who has no axe to grind.'—Yours, &c.,

ANDREW DE TERNANT.

36, Somerleyton Road, S.W. 9.

ORCHESTRATION OF BACH'S ORGAN WORKS

SIR,—In relation to transcriptions of Bach's organ music for orchestra, it may be of interest to recall a pioneer in that direction of more than a century ago, in the person of Vincent Novello, who arranged the Prelude to the St. Ann's Fugue for orchestra. The original MS. of the score appears in a recent catalogue issued by Mr. Harold Reeves. There are interesting footnotes in the handwriting of S. Wesley and V. Novello, to the effect that the transcription of this Organ Prelude of Bach was made for S. Wesley's concert in 1812 at the Hanover Square Rooms. Appended is a letter from Dr. Crotch approving the transcription. History repeats itself.—Yours, &c.,

Chattisham, Ipswich.

A. H. STEVENS.

'ENGLISHMEN ARE NOWHERE'

SIR,—I cannot allow your criticism of Dr. Grattan Flood's book, Introductory Sketch of Irish Musical History (December issue, p. 853), to pass without protest. One has only to live as many months in Ireland as I did years to understand why Ireland despises England and everything English, for Englishmen go out of their way to pour ridicule and contempt upon everything Irish just because it is Irish, while they eulogise everything German because it is German. I thoroughly endorse everything you report that Dr. Grattan Flood has said. I only regret that, among many others, he has omitted the name of the blind musician, Carl Gilbert Hardebeck, the greatest living authority on Irish music, who is doing for Ireland what Grieg did for Norway. But for him, I for one should never have understood music worth calling music. I should merely have tolerated cacophony because I had been taught, like many thousands of others, to believe that no music was music unless it was manufactured in Germany. With regard to your comments upon Irish musicians living out of Ireland, Ireland is well rid of them, for they have Anglicised Irish music to sell in England, and done nothing for the country to which they owe their birth and talent.

I did not know that the late Rev. Scotson Clark was Irish, but I am not surprised. Of course he was a criminal, for he preferred to write melody instead of unintelligible counterpoint to satisfy theoretical musicians. He founded the London Organ School, where I had the privilege of learning the organ under one of the best lady organists England ever produced, Miss Emily Edroff. It was at least an honest Institution, and did not make a fortune by granting bogus degrees and selling caps and gowns and worthless certificates to its deluded victims, as more than one musical institution has been doing for more than thirty years. In addition to innumerable compositions which I and many other musicians have the bad taste to play, Scotson Clark wrote some of the best instruction books in existence. Any pianist who wishes to understand part-playing cannot do better than study his book of harmonium voluntaries expressly written for that purpose. It can hardly be a comforting reflection for any patriotic Englishman, if there be one, to remember that we are entirely governed by Celts. The late Prime Minister was a Welshman, his predecessor and the present one, Scotch. Irishmen have built up the Empire, won our battles, and occupy the highest positions in the Army, Navy, legal, and medical professions. Englishmen are nowhere, because they haven't the courage of their convictions.—Yours, &c.,

Hunstanton.

ALEXANDER M. GIFFORD.

[We feel that we should be doing Mr. Gifford a good turn if we suppressed his letter, but we print it in order to avoid giving him a further grievance. So frenetic an outburst calls for no answer, so we add no more than a comment and a question: (1.) The review which has so strangely excited Mr. Gifford drew from Dr. Gratton Flood himself a genial and appreciative letter. (2.) If Mr. Gifford finds English people such a desperately poor lot, why does he live among them? There must be lots of really nice folk overseas in all directions.—EDITOR.]

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of January, 1863:

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Mrs. John Macfarren gave a performance on December 4 of a new entertainment written by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, entitled A Morning at the Pianoforte, in which she introduced anecdotes of the most esteemed composers and players, with remarks on their chief characteristics. The illustrations on the pianoforte were selected from Weber, Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Beethoven, and Thalberg, and were played by Mrs. Macfarren with great taste.

DR. GAUNTLETT continues to advise and assist the Clergy, and Directors of Choirs, in the order and conduct of music in Church, whether Parish or Choir. Dr. Gauntlett instructs and advises students and professors in the laws of composition. His system is based on that of Calvisius and Butler (Calvisius, said by Handel to be worth its weight in gold), and carried on to meet the advanced practice of the present day. 22, Colville Road, Kensington Park.

Copyright for Sale.

TO PUBLISHERS.—To be Sold, the Copyright of a Musical Work, which, if well pushed by some enterprising Publisher, would, without doubt, rival Jackson in F in popularity. This can be fully proved; and the Composer wishes it to be understood that he only desires to dispose of the Copyright because he is not, as a private individual, in a position to push the sale as a Publisher can do. Apply to M. D., 51, Kingsgate Street, Winchester.

Sharps and Flats

The life of a conductor is full of incidents that are disconcerting. . . Once I was conducting a very large work when my braces broke. I happened to have my left hand in my pocket.—Sir Hugh Allen.

When I turn into a cinema, as I do fairly often, I am attracted by a comfortable chair in the dark and a good band, and take the film as a supplementary pastime. Abolish the band, and you abolish me.—George Bernard Shaw.

It would appear that if I am to wait for appreciation in my own country I shall have to wait until I am eighty.—Josef Holbrooke.

If your boys and girls have protruding teeth, take them from pianoforte lessons and teach them the trombone or cornet for a while.—Dr. William C. Cavanagh (Portland, Ore.).

I have resisted the temptation for twenty years, but I have fallen. I have bought a gramophone.—James Glover.

Prima donnas at their best excite wonder; whereas a choir, at its best, is a challenge to all to be up and doing. We will never become a musical nation by sitting at the feet of coloraturas. We have probably sat there, as it is, too long.—The Lute.

A correspondent asks me how to tell classical music. My method is not very skilful, but it works, and he can have it for what it is worth. I watch the other sufferers. If they applaud and immediately look very relieved because the thing's finished, then it is.—C. J. A., of the Daily News.

I see that my friend 'C. J. A.' has given a humorous definition of classical music. It is a curious thing that people claim the right to make jokes about serious music. . . Few, on the other hand, would dare to say that they prefer penny-a-lining to Hamlet, or a cheap oleograph to the Sistine Madonna. Yet the cases are completely parallel.—Alfred Kalisch.

For years I have christened my cats after Wagner's characters in the Nibelungen Ring.—Harriet Kendall.

'Service at 10.30. Subject—The Three Great Failures.—Choir, Pipe Organ, Offertory.'—Church Notice.

To treat a song in this way [introduction of unauthorised high notes at the end] is to use it for the purposes of self-aggrandisement, which is both inartistic and in bad taste. Real art is always simple, and must be approached in a spirit of humility and sincerity.—Dame Nellie Melba.

Wales is a sea of song, but the sea must be kept in its proper place. There is a danger that the music of the Eisteddfod may submerge the more ancient—the literary function—of the Festival.—Mr. Lloyd George.

I am crazy about films. I am just mad on William S. Hart and his cowboy stunts. He truly typifies manhood.—Madame Tetrassini.

'Is not His Word like a fire' was declaimed with notable force, the fuel power of his voice being reserved until the final phrase.—(Provincial paper.)

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The Michaelmas term was brought to a close with a sense of good work done. That the College efforts in the cause of music are appreciated may be gathered from the fact that the number of students showed a satisfactory increase on the steadily growing numbers of previous terms.

In the last two or three weeks of the term, amongst other similar items two professors' recitals were given, including one by Mr. Alec Rowley, whose programme consisted of his own works. A successful chamber music concert at Steinway Hall served to introduce to the public a Quartet for two violins and two violas, the composer being the Director of Studies (Dr. C. W. Pearce). The Hospitals Combined Appeal Fund was benefited to the extent of £50 as a result of the collection made during the usual terminal orchestral concert given at Queen's Hall, when the programme included a praiseworthy work, Autumn Moods, by Mr. William Lovelock, a student of the College.

Gold medals were won at the North London Festival by Alma Daw (singing) and Frank Bilbe (violin), also by Doris Duck (singing) at the South London Festival. Constance Davies was awarded a silver medal at the North London Festival.

At the annual distribution of prizes and certificates at Birmingham, Sir Frederick Bridge (chairman of the Board of the College) dealt with a recent statement that to appreciate music it was not necessary to have any technical knowledge. Sir Frederick declared this to be nonsense, and went on to urge that without technical knowledge one might be impressed by music and have one's senses tickled, but that to ensure appreciation the study of the theory of music should not be neglected, nor was it a difficult subject to study. At a recent similar function held at Bighton, Councillor Frank Mott Harrison was in the chair, and Mr. Rodwell, secretary of the College, attended and spoke of the widely increased work and influence of the College.

THE GERVASE ELWES MEMORIAL

'When Gervase Elwes lost his life at Boston Station, Lady Winefride Elwes, so cruelly widowed, wished to retain such memorial of him as was possible. A death-mask was taken. The American sculptor, Malvina Hoffman, though unacquainted with Lady Winefride, approached her, and with a rare delicacy and womanly sympathy that at such a time must have brought comfort, begged to be allowed to make a bust of one whose gifts had brought so much artistic pleasure to her countrymen and countrywomen.'

In these words, or some very like them (the quotation is from memory), Lord Shaftesbury, as chairman of the great gathering at Queen's Hall on Thursday, December 14, explained to us the origin of the movement that had brought us together. The bust completed, it had naturally been desired to place it where the many who loved Gervase Elwes and his art might have it often before them, and as 'the gift of Malvina Hoffman and other American friends,' it had been placed at the back of the centre of the grand circle of the hall, in an alcove designed for it.

The unveiling ceremony was carried out by the Viscountess Lee of Fareham, who spoke a few simple and feeling words from her place in the circle. Upon the platform were Lord Shaftesbury, Cardinal Bourne, the Earl of Denbigh, Sir Hugh Allen, Sir Henry Walford Davies, and Mr. Robert McEwen. Each in turn spoke, and each, with rare good taste, did so briefly, speaking of love for the man and admiration for the artist, but doing so with measured and seemly restraint. Sir Henry Walford Davies spoke of the spirit in which Elwes approached the task of taking part in Bach's Mass in B minor, of his asking him as he entered the Cathedral at a Three Choirs Festival to 'Say a bit of a prayer for me, Davies,' and of his coming to him afterwards at the hotel with, 'Thank you for the bit of a prayer, Davies.' Sir Hugh Allen said, 'No one more nearly approached to the ideal "I will sing with the spirit and with the understanding also."'

Music (a little and choice) was given by the Bach Choir, with students from the Royal College of Music, under the direction of Dr. Vaughan Williams, and included the Bach chorales, Iesu, Joy of man's desiring and My God, I give myself to Thee, Parry's Motet, There is an Old Belief, and his Jerusalem. Before the more formal proceedings opened, Mr. Kiddle played a short organ programme. He, it will be remembered, was Mr. Elwes's regular accompanist.

The whole scheme and conduct of the afternoon's ceremony was dignified and impressive. It was not a service; it was not a concert; it was a sincere and simple-hearted tribute paid to a great artist by those who loved him.

The bust is an exceedingly fine likeness. Around the arch of its alcove runs a golden scroll:

'With his whole heart he sang songs, and loved Him who made him.'

P. A. S.

Rosina, a ballad opera by William Shield, will be performed by the Mayfair Dramatic Club on January 12 and 13, at the Guildhall School of Music.

London Concerts

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

The last concert of the Philharmonic Society before Christmas, on December 7, was choral. A curiously arranged programme gave Mr. Kennedy Scott's Philharmonic Choir only one piece of solid work to do, namely, Brahms's Song of Destiny. After the fine work these singers had done a few weeks ago in the Bach B minor Mass, their performance seemed a little disappointing. There was no absolute fault to be found with it, but it was greatly lacking in atmosphere, and, for my taste at least, Mr. Coates did not make enough of the significance of the relentless beat of the drums in the orchestral Introduction.

The other two pieces, in which the choir took a subordinate part, were Delius's Song of the High Hills and Scriabin's Prometheus. It was probably no accident that both these works presented nothing to sing but vowel sounds. The question of how far the singing of ah can be made as interesting to the hearer as the singing of words, or how it can give inspiration to a choir to the same extent as verses, however feeble, is still open to discussion. In an ideal world where choralists and orchestra may be presumed to be entirely familiar with each other's work, a musically sensitive choir would of course know by instinct the right kind of colour to give, but where voices and instruments seldom meet at rehearsal this can at best be only guess-work. I venture to say this much, though I am fully aware that many authorities differ.

The Song of the High Hills has many beautiful moments, and the atmosphere it creates is entirely individual, but whether the music, in which shapelessness is erected into a guiding principle, can endure, still remains to be settled. The performance was marked by subtlety and delicacy. Mr. Albert Coates of course revelled in Prometheus, and received a well-merited ovation. The music itself relies too much on the element of surprise to be likely to endure.

The only purely orchestral work was Glazounov's Stenka Razin, a work dating from the period before he came under the influence of Brahms. It has all the characteristics of the earlier Russian school, not excluding its diffuseness. The story of the hero who, feeling it necessary to pacify the divinity of the Volga, threw his mistress into the river (without, be it noted, consulting the lady in question), is also characteristically Russian.

A. K.

At the concert on November 23, an essay in a form lighter than he usually affects was given a first performance in Strauss's Suite arranged from the incidental music to Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme. Beyond illustrating the facility expected of a composer of Strauss's experience and reputation in simulating the musical manner of a bygone age, and blending therewith a conception of humour, objective rather than subjective, the work has no claims to consideration comparable with his deservedly popular tone-poems. The gentleman, in effect, remained bourgeois. The Suite was not particularly well played. Bax's symphonic poem, Tintagel, with which first acquaintance had been made at Bournemouth, stood later in the same programme. It shows an aspect of the composer's characteristic affinity with the sea atmosphere. The sensation of the evening was the violoncello playing of Señor Casals in Lalo's Concerto. The conductor was Mr. Albert Coates.

H. F.

THE VATICAN CHOIR

The body of singers from the Roman basilicas whose short title is the 'Vatican Choir' has been with us again. It is a pity that the praise we can give is only that which any well-disciplined choir ought to earn—praise for unanimity, in attack and in variation of tone-amount, and for being able to sing softly. The moment the tone rises above mezzo-forte, what a neighing of tenors! What a Punch tone from the boys, when vowels of the ee tribe come up! The contrasts of tone were often inartistically violent, too, though excellently stage-managed. There was thus a good deal less enjoyment in the choir's Palestrina programme than there ought to have been.

It is not a bit of use making excuses for these singers on the feeble ground that 'ideals of tone differ.' They may. So do ideals of honesty. Yet any man by taking the trouble may readily learn what is right and what wrong. And that the loud tone of this choir is thoroughly bad, there can be no doubt whatever. It is apparently the ideal of tone held in the Land of Song. If so, we may be heartily glad we live in a country whose choral tradition is based on other and surer foundations.

W. R. A.

ARNOLD BAX'S SYMPHONY

Arnold Bax's Symphony No. 1, in E flat minor, was produced by Mr. Albert Coates at the London Symphony Orchestra's fourth concert. Three movements—of battle, of lamentation, and of exultation. Here is a leading subject:

It is a most magnificent piece of wild music. It shakes a Promethean fist at heaven. It belongs to the great musical order of the frown and fierce stride, an indispensable order, as indispensable as the other, of the philosophic sigh and smile. The temper corresponds with Byron, not Gibbon; Hugo, not Voltaire.

Someone was saying that if art is emotion remembered in tranquillity, then Mr. Bax, who has here done powerfully better than before, may be expected one day to do better still, since here he is visibly the prey of his feelings. But there is an art of striking when the iron is hot. Here he has struck in E flat minor to impressive purpose. Whether an artist storms or persuades I take to be no matter for criticism, but one of ingrained temperament, a matter between himself and his Maker. He may carry you with him either way, and the carrying of you is his success. To storm argues the more physical vitality. Few had it like Wagner, and his could flag. Persuasion argues the cooler, less fanatic head and the more playful hand. The ardour of this Symphony ignores the fact that all our battles will be equally unimportant when the next Ice Age comes. A young man's symphony therefore, and a romantic young man's. A hothead and a genius, he compelled us to share at moments his estimate of the importance of his battle, and the drear Lento Solenne, ashen in colour, and singularly expressive of the full terror of hereavement, fairly overcame us, however hardened of heart.

C.

STRAUSS'S DON QUIXOTE

Pablo Casals was the soloist at the New Queen's Hall Orchestra's last symphony concert, and Strauss's Don Quixote was chosen for the occasion. The time is gone of the furious adulation of Strauss, and also of the sincere but excessive disparagement of wartime, when the insolent vanity and gross blunders of taste in this music of genius appeared so offensive. Don Quixote, with the Spaniard as protagonist and Sir Henry Wood conducting with fine devotedness, was shown in the best light, and what is jarring, unnecessary and clownish in it stirred not offence but regret—for here surely, if the composer had but passed his matter again through the refining fire instead of so dumping it down in all its crudity, had been a lasting masterpiece of music. By what fault has this remarkable musical mind so often not cared to transmute fully its lively thoughts into music? By vanity, we suggest. And though contemporaries of twenty-five years ago were dazzled, we wonder to-day how long this dubious mintage will remain at all current. The future's remedy for Don Quixote, wherein the good stuff ought not to be lightly disregarded, will perhaps lie in drastic editing.

Mr. York Bowen towards the end of this very long concert conducted his orchestral work, Eventide, music which was without either placidness or elegance. Its soft contours might easily have won more regard in a programme where there had been the contrast of more stern and argumentative music.

C.

A BRUCKNER SYMPHONY

Nobody at the third L.S.O. concert at Queen's Hall could remember when a Symphony of Anton Bruckner had last been heard there, and the realists were pleased with Mr. Albert Coates for producing the Romantic (No. 4, in G), while the idealists were dissatisfied. The realists had the satisfaction of seeing a bubble pricked, and said, 'Well, that ought to settle Bruckner's case here for a long time to come.' But the idealists prefer their bubbles unpricked, and rather regretted the dashing of a wonderland of nine unknown symphonies—of what a sumptuousness! Why, the incomparably musical Viennese never (we are always told) tire of them, and print Bruckner's effigy on their postage-stamps, while at Berlin the answer to the reproach of rather overdoing Bruckner is (it appears): 'Well, we can't have Brahms's Symphonies every day, and what else is there to do but Bruckner?'

In this Symphony a Schubertian ghost appeared to be lingering with humidity just within earshot of Wagnerian circles. Keats urged Shelley to load his rifts with ore. Bruckner's rifts gape so wide that it would have wanted Brahms on one hand and Wagner on the other to come to the rescue with cartloads.

The rest of the concert was Wagnerian, Miss Florence Austral singing as Brunnhilde.

C.

GERALD COOPER

The fastidious taste of the connoisseur is characteristic of Mr. Gerald Cooper, whose series of six concerts during November and early December have been largely devoted to old music. It has marked both the choice and the presentation of many valuable but little-known works which would otherwise have remained in obscurity, so that an apt contribution has been made to the study of the antique in music which is at present in fashion. Mr. Cooper's own facility with the harpsichord has materially contributed to a complete reproduction of the medium and atmosphere in which the composers of the past worked. This was established at the very first concert, devoted to English music of the Elizabethan period—a time when the national musical voice spoke in tones which for directness and melody have since scarcely been equalled. Miss Hélène Dolmetsch is an expert with her own instrument, the viola da gamba, forerunner of the modern violoncello, but more reedy in tone. Moreover the singers, Miss Dorothy Helmrich, Miss May Yeatman, Miss Flora Mann, Miss Dorothy Robson, and Mr. Philip Wilson, have all of them preserved the quality of serene efficiency so indispensable for the purpose in view. But contemporary talent has not been ignored. Mr. Peter Warlock's song-cycle, The Curlew, was given for the first time in revised, and, it must be said, improved form. Mr. Arthur Bliss's Chamber Rhapsody found a place in the scheme under the composer's direction, and Saint-Saëns's diverting Carnaval des Animaux was played for the first time in England on the same occasion. Three Bach Chorale Preludes for the organ, the same composer's Sonata for flute, violin, and harpsichord, Trios by Telemann and Lécclair, and a Corelli Violin and Harpsichord Sonata are remembered with gratitude, which extends to a long list of musicians, specialists in their own line, but too numerous to mention individually.

H. F.

DOROTHY SILK

Miss Dorothy Silk is continuing her excellent concerts of old music, for the artistic interpretation of which her gifts of voice and temperament so admirably fit her. At the concert on December 9 we had the cantata of Bach, Weichet nur (No. 202), of which the special interest is in the use of the oboe obbligato, admirably played by Mr. Walter Hinchliff. The last two, Oh, love is a pleasure and In supreme contentment seen, are particularly delightful. Those gentlemen who persist in saying that the 'exploration of the timbres of individual instruments' is a discovery made within the last ten years, should be invited to study this oboe part with special care. There was also an interesting little cantata, Alexis, by Pepusch (who was responsible, in the first place, for the music of The Beggar's Opera), which is quite pleasant, but has not more than an antiquarian interest. The Chromatic Tunes of Danyel (1606), as edited by Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson (sung by Mr. John Goss), are more worth studying. A. K.

ETHEL LEGINSKA

This young lady of Hull allowed us, at Queen's Hall, the privilege of considering her both as pianist and composer—a privilege enhanced by the help she had from Mr. Goossens's extraordinarily fine orchestra. The public ought to have been more numerous, for Miss Leginska is (as she reminded us with her first half-dozen bars in a Mozart Concerto) of the race of real pianists. The play was sprightly, fine, and feeling; and next time, if Miss Leginska has not stayed away too long and she again chooses Mozart, Queen's Hall will not look so empty. Miss Leginska as composer has sat at the feet of Bloch and of Goossens, and we heard her symphonic poem, Beyond the fields we know—fields where she has diligently planted a lot of little parterres and herbaceous borders with quantities of odd little exotics, often pleasing, taken one by one. C.

PROF. POLLACK

An unhackneyed programme added much to the attraction of Prof. Pollack's recital at Æolian Hall, which began with Elgar's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata. Of this Prof. Pollack, admirably matched at the pianoforte by Mr. Harold Craxton, gave an interpretation that was at times illuminating and always interesting. Especially the slow movement revealed beauties and graces that hardly another violinist had discovered before. The light interplay of the rhythm, the intermingling of tender and whimsical elements, was realised to perfection. The Reger Sonata which followed showed the accomplishment of the violinist, but this choice was not altogether happy. Reger has written some admirable things, but this Sonata is not one of them. It aims at the revival of the unaccompanied sonata, of which Bach left the supreme examples. It achieves a compromise between the study and the classical 'caprice' of the Kreutzer and Fiorillo type. A Suite by E. Korngold, drawn from his music to Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing, left the audience unmoved, although Prof. Pollack was at his best and seemed to revel in the strong accents of the quasi-comic march of Dogberry and his watchmen. A group of little-known short pieces concluded the well-balanced if not invariably stimulating recital. B. V.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Miss Noël Eadie sang at Wigmore Hall: a newcomer for once in a way who beguiled with a good deal more than fair promises. Her voice is warm soprano—a rarity to begin with. Tonal depth and depth of pitch are not necessarily one, but the lower sister-voices mostly in practice monopolise sensuous tone, leaving the soprano to be choir-boyish and shrill. But we know from Melba that a soprano can be both sensuous and clarionous. Well, Miss Eadie's voice soars without shrillness and is lovely to hear. She began with Mozart; two most pretty English songs stood out (Frank Bridge's E'en as a lovely flower and Bainton's Nightingale near the house); and her French was as good as any English listener need want. Singing of such quality and of such sense is delightful, even while there is plenty of room for Miss Eadie to develop control and perfect her diction (notably on the mid-vowels).

Miss Mildred Allingham's programme at Steinway Hall included the names of Cyril Scott, Gerrard Williams, Frank Bridge, and Mary Turner Salter, and Eric Fogg's One morning in the flower garden had a nice little success. This singer has a slight voice and a generally contemplative point of view, so that the audience (audiences do so want always the gras moyens!) was at first cold, but as the concert went on it was interesting to observe the ground being gradually conquered by the sweet and tranquil singing of an artist.

Mr. Ingo Simon (baritone) sang French and Italian music at Wigmore Hall, not disdaining Donizetti or a page from the Prigione d'Edinburgo of Ricci. Tone and technique might be criticisable, but the stronger impression was favourable, made by a communication of the singer's own hearty conviction; and mannerisms could be overlooked, for there was something at least to grip the attention.

Mr. Plunket Greene sang, accompanied by Mr. Liddle, at Æolian Hall. Who can match his vividness of characterisation? It is good to hear him, however little actual voice there may be, for he at once stiffens our standard of judgment, and the average singing that might have seemed tolerably good we realise to be only half alive. Singers, sit at the feet of this grey-haired wizard and find his secrets—how he varies his tonal colour and how he reinforces and shuts off his resonances! The programme was full of good things well set off one by another. We pick out Parry's Follow a Shadow and Stanford's Monkey's Carol for their fine ironic effectiveness.

Miss Phyllis Holman and Mr. Eric Marshall were heard at Æolian Hall—two good voices. Miss Holman, moreover, showed the gift of conveying passionate exaltation. Mr. Marshall's fine voice might be better used, and his Non più andrai lacked sparkle and pliant grace. If he cultivated his legato and hankered less after mere big tone he would meet our need of an English lyric-baritone. Not wisely he seeks to combine the lyric and dramatic styles. Perhaps if he concentrated on thinking as a tenor rather than as bass he might come nearer the eminence we should like to see his. Sometimes his phrasing was faulty, for which poor translations partly were to be blamed and partly his carelessness.

Miss Astra Desmond, at Æolian Hall, sang some new songs of M. de Falla, not perhaps very characteristic pages, but this beautiful voice, which becomes to an unusual degree influenced and coloured by the prevailing mood, did them justice. Her full-throated, low tones in Mourning in the village dwells, from Korbay's Hungarian folk-songs, were duly sinister.

Miss Maria Sandra, who sang for the first time at Queen's Hall (at Balokovic's concert), was indisposed, yet won favour. She was very much the beginner—equipped with a fine voice (soprano) and an obviously expensive training; now casting her eye over the world of art to see what land to conquer. Ravel's Asia was one of her pieces, undertaken however more conscientiously than conqueringly. So it won't be Asia, perhaps. All the better. We could do quite well here with this good young singer.

Miss Anne Thursfield introduced, in a group of Arnold Bax's songs, two new ones, Cradle Song and Rann of Exile, both of characteristic rich beauty. Miss Thursfield did not begin well, for in Mozart's Non più di fiori she occasionally forced her voice, a surprising indiscretion from a singer who a few minutes later could sing the French folk-song, J'ai perdu ma belle, with every refinement of judgment. Sospirando and sforzato attacks, floating pianissimi, needle-pointed staccati—Miss Thursfield is mistress of all, and there is no call on her to broaden the range of her singing.

Mr. John Coates, at Chelsea Town Hall, arranged an ingenious English programme from Purcell to Parry. 'He sings so well,' was someone's paradox, 'that you would say he had never had a lesson.' Genial, easy, natural, smiling, he has made the laws of his art his second nature. To hear John Coates sing Purcell is to perceive how living in our own time is the traditional English aptitude for happy and urbane music-making.

Miss Olga Haley gave tea-time concerts at Æolian Hall. She has a voice of beauty, she has passion, force, and personality. Her singing engages one strongly up to a point, but somehow often loses hold just when the grip should tighten. I fancy she draws too fully on her resources, gives too generously, so that there is no secret reserve when the music asks for a supreme gift. And then Miss Haley does not disguise the processes of her enchantment, which means that some of the enchantment is lost.

We think that this talented artist is very nearly a great singer, and we scrutinise for faults—so much depends on their correction. If Miss Haley doled out her breath with more meticulous attention to the phrase to be sung she might gain sharper diction and avoid her fault of agitated inhalation. Mr. Frank Titterton, who took part, is a real tenor, not a strung-up baritone; his voice is sweet, his delivery sound, but he ought to experiment with more tonal variety.

H. J. K.

CHORAL CONCERTS

Though there can be few if any present members of the Royal Choral Society who sang in Verdi's Requiem when the Society introduced it to London under the direction of the composer some forty-two years ago, the association is traditional, a fact which may have put spurs to the singers' pride when the Mass was revived at the concert at the Albert Hall on November 25. At all events, under Mr. Albert Coates's compelling methods a very sensitive performance was achieved. To listen to the work again was to realise that Verdi's true metier was the operatic form, and that, even in this most sincere tribute to the memory of a friend he could not altogether rid himself of the dramatic atmosphere of the stage. In the circumstances, a certain secularity of treatment detected in the reading enhanced rather than detracted from its effectiveness. The impression was deepened that the Royal Choral forces are entering upon a new lease of artistic life, and for that happy circumstance Mr. H. L. Balfour, the general-conductor, is entitled to congratulation.

H. F.

The London Choral Society, which has decided to devote the present season mainly to unaccompanied music, gave its first concert on November 29. The discipline which unaccompanied singing implies has had an excellent effect on the choir, which showed greater steadiness, better balance, and cleaner attack than ever before. The performance of Brahms's Rhapsody for alto solo—Miss Lucy Nuttall—and male voices was creditably done, but it seems strange to include it in a programme of unaccompanied music and to hear the orchestral part played by a combination of pianoforte and organ—which Brahms would never have dreamt of. The singing of three of Elgar's Part-Songs from the Greek Anthology was most effective, and showed the choir has a much keener appreciation of atmosphere than it had some time ago. After many a dusty mile in particular was extremely well done. Two short Cantatas by H. V. Jervis-Read, sung for the first time, proved to be pleasant little works which should be useful to choral conductors. One fault of the singers, which should be noticed and modified, is their excessive fondness for extreme staccato, a thing for which, ultimately, Dr. Coward is probably responsible. On the whole, however, Mr. Fagge is to be congratulated on the improved style of his choir.

A. K.

The Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society gave all its enthusiasm to Sir Henry Walford Davies's Everyman on November 25. This strongly-made music would not go begging for performance, as it does, if average choirs and conductors were as alert and enterprising as Mr. Allen Gill and his North Londoners. The principal parts were sung by Miss Gladys Moger (Good Deeds), Miss Millicent Russell (Knowledge), Mr. Sydney Coltham (Death), and Mr. Samuel Mann (Everyman). Merrie England was in the same programme.

The work of other suburban choral societies, excellent in every respect, but partaking of routine, must be summarised as follows: Penge Musical Society, conducted by Mr. Alfred B. Choat, gave A Tale of Old Japan, at the Crystal Palace, on December 2. On the following Saturday (December 9) there were two good concerts: Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast and Bath's The Wake of O'Connor were the choice of the South London Philharmonic Society, at Goldsmiths' College, under Mr. William H. Kerridge; and Stanford's Songs of the Fleet and Sullivan's The Golden Legend were performed by the Ealing Choral and Orchestral Society, Mr. A. C. Praeger conducting.

STUDENT OPERAS

QUALIS

The Parry Opera Theatre of the Royal College of Music was the scene of a recent 'interesting event'—the birth of a short one-Act opera by Mr. A. Davies Adams, a student. The infant of his imagination bears a cast of feature which could never be mistaken for anything but British, though he saw fit to christen it by the un-English-sounding name of Qualis. However, it is the name of the leading character in a south coast village drama, 'a few days after Waterloo.' Those were days when patriotism ran high, and a good deal is made of the picturesque announcements by the village crier of the latest news from the front. The press-gang also becomes busy. The skeleton of the story is sufficiently well-knit and adorned with humour to avoid arid moments, and the music, strongly modal at times, is apt, and scored with an ear for orchestral colour. If the love scenes reveal the true and modest level of the inspiration, sincerity and a light touch are gratefully recognised. Mr. L. Cairns James, the producer, and Mr. S. P. Waddington, the conductor, are both entitled to warm congratulation for the smoothness and liveliness of this private rehearsal, and the singing (especially in articulation) and acting bore witness to hard work on the part of the students.

H. F.

SANDFORD'S BLESSED DAMOZEL

The students' concert of the Royal Academy of Music on Tuesday, December 12, at Queen's Hall, was made especially interesting by the first production of The Blessed Damosel, a cantata for soprano solo, chorus, and orchestra, by Mr. Arthur Sandford, who is the present Mendelssohn Scholar. So far as I remember, the only work of his previously performed is a one-Act opera based on a Greek subject. If recollection serves, that was more modern than the present work, which is distinctly mid-Victorian in style. I do not know with whom Mr. Sandford has studied, but if we assume the work to have been discovered, and the name of the composer to be unknown, experts would have said that it was probably the work of a pupil of Macfarren. The composer has, however, a real gift of melody and dramatic expression, and the restraint which he exercises is appropriate to the atmosphere of the poem. The principal soprano solo is expressive, but the little flute obbligato seemed pastoral rather than heavenly. The chorus sang very well, with however, rather a secular atmosphere. The solo part was sung by Miss Thelma Tuson, who is a Parepa Rosa Scholar, and enjoyed a considerable reputation in South Africa before coming to England to complete her studies. Detailed criticism of students is not in place here, but it will suffice to say that her career should be watched. Mr. Henry Beauchamp conducted.

A. K.

BACH'S MASS AT OUNDLE

When it was told me that the boys of Oundle School were going to sing Bach's Mass in B minor on the afternoon of Sunday, December 10, my first thought was that either the authorities were exceedingly rash or music must absorb a far greater proportion of the school's time than is generally possible or even advisable—in fact that there was one of those special 'stunts' which are suspect in proportion as they are successful. I went, however, and it is because everything which I heard there contradicted this impression that the event seems worth recording in the Musical Times. Everyone was, indeed, enormously keen because everyone had something to do. But it was not like a school speech-day. One did not meet boys leading about tame parents, showing off the buildings, and obviously hoping that the parents would remain sufficiently tame to behave themselves suitably. I met only one boy with a parent, and the parent was doing the leading not only of him but of the whole school. It was she, in fact, who sang the soprano solos, and she did not, I think, confine her efforts to the solos when the time came. She is known in the musical profession as Miss Carrie Tubb. I believe that she had played a considerable part in inspiring the undertaking, and had helped to collect as her colleagues in the solos Miss Astra Desmond, Mr. Hubert Eisdell, and Mr. Norman Allin.

These, with the addition of some dozen players from the London Symphony Orchestra to complete the school orchestra and take charge of obligato parts, represented the extent of outside help—a very material help certainly, but one which left the school entirely responsible for all those terrific choruses and the greater part of the instrumental accompaniment. How was it done? Well, the great thing was that it seemed to have grown naturally. All the school sings, in a way, and about half the school sings as a choir of trebles, altos, tenors, and basses. Last year a whole-school performance of The Messiah was given, the choir singing the choruses, the 'non-choir' coming in with a bass unison at 'Wonderful, Counsellor,' and such-like dramatic moments. Mr. C. M. Spurling, the school musical director, resolved to do the same with the Mass, teaching whole choruses to the choir, and salient tunes, vague subjects, and Et iterum venturus est cum gloria (a thing gorgeous to sing once you know it) to the rest. The choir members must certainly be good readers, but then they learn musical reading from the first in the preparatory school. The actual learning of this music was done practically in a term, two short preliminary practices being held at the end of the summer term. It was all done out of school hours except for thirteen hours (little more than one hour per week) which the trebles normally devote to singing, and ten minutes three times a week after prayers, in which the whole school sings. It was during these ten-minute spells that the non-choir learnt to do its bit. Sectional rehearsals for altos alone, and for tenors and basses together, amounted to another thirteen hours. This was out of school, as was eleven hours for the full choir, seventeen for orchestra, and some half-dozen hours of combined rehearsal. These statistics were given me after the performance was over, when I expressed surprise that the boys knew the music so well. They confirmed my impression that the whole thing was not the result of 'swatting,' though of course everyone must have worked hard, and Mr. Spurling, who took all rehearsals, sectional and full, must have been pretty constantly at it. But we expect that of a music-master.

The composition of the orchestra is another interesting point. It is fed by the band, and the bandmaster, Mr. F. S. Allen, teaches the wind instrument players, while Mr. Champ, the violin-master, trains the strings. The orchestra can muster a full complement of wood-wind, and there are about ten flautists, some brass players, and a good pianist. The son of the violin-master played third trumpet in the Mass. When I asked Mr. Spurling how he got boys to take up the wind instruments so as to be able to play creditably in such music as Bach's, his answer was, 'Well, they do it themselves, mainly. We had one fellow here (he has left now, unfortunately) who used to come back after each holiday playing a new wind instrument, and he made the others learn them, too.' That of course is the thing, and once you have started the keenness, its infection spreads like measles.

In this sort of way it came about that on December 10, the whole floor of the school hall was filled with singers and players, and the whole cubic space of the hall was resonant with Bach. On what may be called the back wall of the hall, above the gallery where such audience as could be admitted was gathered together, there was an innocent looking reflector (it looked like a brass basin) which was to receive the sound for transmission to a wider audience by wireless. The chief wireless operator explained it all beautifully to me; boys nowadays take to wireless even more easily than they take to Bach, but I dare say no more about it than that afterwards other craftsmen at a considerable distance reported that they had heard the music splendidly.

Apart from the thrill of the big moments—thrilling because of the sense of everyone doing his utmost, whether the utmost were much or little—there was some really fine singing in the clear and easily sustained parts. One of the best numbers was the second Kyrie, where the intricacies of the chromatic subject often produce haziness and faulty intonation in far more experienced choirs. When Mr. Spurling asked me which I should guess to be the boys' favourite chorus I named this one because they had sung it so well. But he told me that, as a fact, it took him some time to get them to care much for either of the Kyrie choruses, their immediate favourite being the Qui tollis. Certainly they sang this with remarkable spontaneity of expression. We are apt to forget what emotional creatures boys are; they have a pretty sure instinct for the deepest things.

Several of the choruses were omitted because it was impossible to learn all in the time. Such weak points as there were in what was given seemed to be the accidents of the moment against which there is no insurance rather than the result of imperfect preparation. It was obviously better to omit some than to jeopardise the whole by undertaking too much, but one wondered whether it might not have been better still to have given the Gloria complete (it wanted the last chorus) and leave the Credo for another time. Of the latter we had only the Et in unum Dominum (duet), the Crucifixus, and the Et resurrexit. The eight-part Osanna too remains for another time.

There will be other times, certainly, for the infection of keenness for Bach is no mere epidemic. Why should it be, and why, I asked myself as I came away, should I have been surprised at all at the undertaking? We are not surprised when schoolboys offer us Greek plays and do them well. Bach is much easier to understand than Euripides, and singing is an occupation more natural and therefore more delightful to English boys than speaking in the Greek language. The public schools have made a tradition of Greek for hundreds of years, with results which are sometimes questioned. Why not try a tradition of Bach for a decade?

H. C. C.

Music in the Provinces

ABERYSTWYTH.—The ninety-sixth concert given by the College of Wales on November 16 was conducted by Sir Henry Walford Davies. M. Fleury played flute solos, including Debussy's Pipes of Pan (composed for him). The choir sang Bach's Chorale, Zion hears her watchmen's voices, in unison, the strings supplying the counter-melody, and two Motets by Parry—There is an Old Belief and Blest Pair of Sirens—were sung. The orchestra played the first movement of the New World Symphony.

BEDFORD.—The Bedford Musical Society gave the first concert of its fifty-sixth season on December 7, with a fine programme that included Parry's My soul, there is a country, Stanford's Last Post, Elgar's Wand of Youth Suite and the Bach-Elgar Fugue, Holst's Two Psalms, and Deering's Cryes of London. Miss Carrie Tubb was the soloist, and Dr. H. A. Harding conducted.—The Bedford Free Church Choral Union, two hundred strong, gave a good account of itself on November 22, when Israel in Egypt was performed. Mr. Percy Burke conducted.

BIRMINGHAM.—The two most notable events of a busy month have been the visit of Mr. Gustav Holst to conduct his Planets Suite, and a first English performance of Dr. Vaughan-Williams's new Mass. The Suite was performed at a symphony concert given by the City Orchestra on November 29, with the composer in charge.

—The City Orchestra's Sunday evening concerts have been more interesting this month. The programmes have included Debussy's Petite Suite, Wolf's Italian Serenade, and Ravel's Mother Goose Suite.—At the Max Mossel concert on November 22, the Rosé String Quartet was heard in Franck's Quintet, with Mr. Egon Petri in the pianoforte part.—The Thursday mid-day concerts have drawn good attendances this month. The venture has proved so successful that Miss Sotham has decided to continue the concerts in the New Year.—Recitals have taken their usual prominent place in the musical activities of the month.—Miss Maud Randle, Miss Edna Iles, and Mr. Leonard Rayner, of the pianists, have all had a hearing.—Miss Denne Parker concluded her series of historical song recitals on December 15 with a programme of modern English songs.—Mr. Albert Sammons and Miss Winifred Browne joined forces in Elgar's Violin Sonata on December 11.—Some choral works have been given, including a performance of Elgar's King Olaf by the Walsall Philharmonic Society, and a performance of Delius's Sea Drift and Rachmaninov's The Bells by the Festival Choral Society.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Arthur Bliss's Colour Symphony was played on November 16, conducted by the composer, Sir Dan Godfrey having prepared the work with the Symphony Orchestra.

BRADFORD.—Dvorák's The Spectre's Bride was the choice of the Bradford Old Choral Society on November 15.—On December 1 the Catterall Quartet and some Hallé players gave Schubert's Octet and two Aubades of Lalo, but the audience at the Mechanics' Institute was small.

BRISTOL.—The Choral Society performed Israel in Egypt on November 18, and was assisted by a hundred and seventy members of Newport Choral Society—thus the big choruses were adequately dealt with. Mr. George Riseley conducted.—Bristol South Choral Society, supported by an orchestra, performed The Ancient Mariner on November 25.—On the same day Cadbury Heath Male Choir, numbering over fifty voices, and conducted by Mr. Fred Isaacs, sang A wet sheet and a flowing sea (Richards), The Last Days of Pompeii (Ritz), The Crusaders (Prothero), and The Three Chafers (Trühn).—The London Symphony Orchestra was conducted by Sir Henry Wood in two concerts at Colston Hall under the auspices of Messrs. Duck, Son, & Pinker. Among the works played were Beethoven's eighth Symphony, Borodin's second, Elgar's and Saint-Saëns's Concertos for 'cello and orchestra (with Miss Beatrice Harrison as soloist), Delius's Dance Rhapsody, and Stravinsky's L'Oiseau de feu Suite. In addition, Mr. Roger Quilter conducted performances of his Children's Overture and As you like it Suite.

CARDIFF.—Kreisler gave a violin recital on November 18.—The Musical Society (conducted by Mr. T. E. Aylward) performed the concert version of Faust on December 1.

CHATHAM.—Beethoven's first Symphony was played by the band of the Royal Marines on November 27, and was followed of a Suite by Percy Fletcher (Sylvan Scenes), the Prelude to Moussorgsky's opera, Khovantchina, and 'La Fricassée,' from Glazounov's Ruses d'Amour.

COLCHESTER.—Mr. Albert Sammons gave a violin recital on November 17, assisted by Dr. George Young at the pianoforte.

EDINBURGH.—At the Mossel subscription concert on November 18 the Rosé Quartet was joined by Mr. Egon Petri (pianoforte) in César Franck's Pianoforte Quintet.—At the Patterson orchestral concert in Usher Hall on November 20 the César Franck centenary was anticipated by the performance of the Symphony in D minor and the Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra. Mr. Julius Harrison conducted, and Mr. Harold Bauer was the pianist.—At the first concert of the season given by the Bach Society on November 21 the programme included works by other composers than Bach, thus departing from the custom hitherto observed. With Miss Margaret Tilly as pianist, the Bach Concerto in D minor was played, a Concerto Grosso by Handel, Mozart's Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, and works by Froberger, Farnaby, Croft, and Kittel were performed. Mr. Douglas Dickson conducted.—An 18th century programme given at the Patterson orchestral concert on November 27 included the Jupiter Symphony and Hamilton Harty's Suite from Handel's Water Music, with Till Eulenspiegel.

EXETER.—At the November meeting of the Chamber Music Club the programme included Schumann's Quintet for pianoforte and strings, Beethoven's Sonata in A for violoncello and pianoforte, the Brahms Zigeunerlieder for pianoforte and four voices, and Delius's Sonata for violin and pianoforte.—Sapellnikov gave two pianoforte recitals on November 22, assisted by Miss Gladys Moger.—The Gertrud Hopkins Trio, at the second concert of the Philharmonic series on November 28, played John Ireland's second Pianoforte Trio (in one movement). Mr. Walter Belgrove sang two new songs by Dr. Ernest Bullock (who accompanied them), and a fine selection by Bach, Purcell, Parry, Herbert Howells, Balakirev, Rutland Boughton, Armstrong Gibbs, and Martin Shaw.

GUILDFORD.—Captain Claude Powell conducted an excellent performance of Die Meistersinger, as arranged for concert purposes, on November 22, a choir being brought in to assist the Guildford Symphony Orchestra.

HUDDERSFIELD.—Miss Carrie Tubb sang the title-rôle in a performance of Aida by the Huddersfield Choral Society on November 18, Dr. Henry Coward conducting.—The Holmfirth Musical Society, on December 7, revived Prout's Hereward.

KEIGHLEY.—On November 2 the Musical Union opened its season with Faust and A Tale of Old Japan, conducted by Mr. R. H. Moore.—The old Clef Club has been succeeded by a new Keighley Branch of the B.M.S.

LEEDS.—Mr. Hamilton Harty played his new Pianoforte Concerto at the Philharmonic Concert on November 22, when the programme also included Bach's My Spirit was in heaviness and parts of The Creation.—The Saturday orchestral concert on December 2 brought Mr. Eugene Goossens conducting Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony and Miss Myra Hess playing the Schumann Pianoforte Concerto.—Dr. Tysoe conducted Brahms's Requiem at the Parish Church on December 8.—The Christmas Oratorio was given on December 11 by Calverley Choral Society, under Mr. Norman Strafford, and two days later by the Leeds New Choral Society under Mr. H. Matthias Turton.

LEICESTER.—Miss Grace Burrows opened a series of orchestral lecture-recitals on November 24. The Ladies' String Quartet (Misses Grace Burrows, Evelyn Cooke, Gertrud Hopkins, and Edith Churton), assisted by Messrs. Arthur Palmer (clarinet) and Frank Dyson (flute), with Miss Gertrud Hopkins at the pianoforte, played Brahms's Clarinet Quintet, Beethoven's String Quartet, Op. 131, and the fifth Brandenburg Concerto of Bach (flute, violin, pianoforte, and orchestra).—On November 27 the Ladies' String Quartet played Mozart in G, Schumann's Op. 41, No. 1, and Beethoven's Op. 18, No. 5.

LINCOLN.—Berlioz's Faust was given by the Musical Society at its annual concert in the Corn Exchange on November 21. Dr. G. J. Bennett, who conducted, had at his command a well-balanced choir of two hundred and fifty and a band of over fifty.

LIVERPOOL.—At the Crane Hall recital on November 15 Miss Madeline Owen sang songs by Purcell, Schubert, Max Reger, and Hugo Wolf, Mr. Claude de Ville played pianoforte music, and Mr. Arthur Sykes sang songs by John Ireland and Herbert Oliver.—Members of the British Music Society were led in a debate on 'Ways and means of raising the standard of music at Liverpool' by Dr. J. W. Hayward on November 15.—An all-Beethoven pianoforte recital was given by Lamond on November 18.—City Road Baptist Choir sang the Hymn of Praise on November 22, conducted by Mr. Percy Lewis.—Dame Melba and Mr. Backhaus gave a song and pianoforte recital in the Philharmonic Hall on November 22.—At the Crane Hall recital on the same date Mr. Reginald Paul played pianoforte music by William Byrd (a Pavane), Bach, Chopin, Brahms, Ireland (The Island Spell), Goossens, and Albeniz, and Mr. Seth Lancaster played 'cello music.—At the Mossel concert on November 25 the Rosé String Quartet played Quartets by Haydn, Mendelssohn, Tchaikovsky, and César Franck's Pianoforte Quintet in F minor, with Mr. Egon Petri at the pianoforte.—The Beatrice Hewitt Pianoforte Quartet played on November 27 at the second concert of the Rodewald Society. The programme included a Quartet in C minor by Alfred Wall.—At the Philharmonic Society's concert on November 28 Sir Henry Wood conducted performances of Mahler's fourth Symphony (with Miss Marcia van Dresser in the voice part), some Danzas fantásticas by Turina, a Tambourin (Castor and Pollux) by Rameau, two Aubades by Lalo, and Wagner's Faust Overture.—The Vatican Choir paid a return visit on November 29.—The Tobin Pianoforte Trio were the performers at the Crane Hall recital on November 29, and played Delius's Trio and the Phantasy Trio of John Ireland.—Under the auspices of the British Music Society, on November 30, Rachmaninov's Concerto in C minor for pianoforte and orchestra was played by Mr. Douglas Miller, Dr. Arthur W. Pollitt playing the orchestral parts on the organ. Dr. Pollitt also played two movements from his own Sonata in C minor, three Miniatures by Ernest Bryson, and the Finale from William Faulkes's Sonata in A minor.

NEWPORT (Mon).—Newport and Bristol Choral Societies, amalgamated, gave a performance of Israel in Egypt on November 23. The orchestra was reinforced with organ by Mr. Garforth Mortimer, and Mr. Arthur E. Sims conducted.

NORWICH.—Dr. Bates opened the Philharmonic Society's season on November 30 with an orchestral programme, in which were included Beethoven's eighth Symphony and Bach's D minor Pianoforte Concerto, played by Mr. Harold Samuel.

OXFORD.—Lamond gave a pianoforte recital on November 10.—The Bach Choir performed Verdi's Requiem, Parry's Jerusalem (orchestrated by Elgar), and For all the Saints, composed by Vaughan Williams and orchestrated by him for the occasion. Sir Hugh Allen conducted these choral works, and Mr. Maurice Besly conducted the Funeral March from Elgar's Grania and Diarmid.—A violin recital was given by Kreisler on November 14, with Mr. Charlton Keith at the pianoforte. —The third subscription concert, on November 30, was provided by the Oxford Orchestral Society with wind-players from London and undergraduate percussion-players. Mr. Maurice Besly conducted performances of Bach's Suite in D, the second Pianoforte Concerto of Rachmaninov (with Ivan Philippowski as soloist), Brahms's third Symphony, and Dvorák's Carneval.

PLYMOUTH.—The Orchestral Society, on November 29, played Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony and the Hänsel und Gretel Overture, Mr. Walter Weekes conducting.

PORTSMOUTH.—The Brotherhood Choral Society on November 17 sang Flow gently, Deva, Hatton's Tar's Song, and Maunder's To Arms. Mr. E. Adams was the conductor. —The Band of the R. M. L. I., conducted by Lieut. Walton O'Donnell, played Debussy's Golliwogs' Cake Walk, A Celtic Idyll by Shaun Hart, and A Norwegian Artist's Carnival by Svendsen, in addition to Tchaikovsky's Casse-Noisette Suite.

SCARBOROUGH.—Now in its twenty-third year the Scarborough Philharmonic Society did honour to its conductor, Dr. Ely, on November 29, by performing his dramatic cantata The Spanish Jew's tale.—Berlioz's Faust was given by the Musical Society (with help from Wykeham and Sealby) on December 9, Mr. A. C. Keeton conducting.

SHEFFIELD. — At the 'five o'clock' concert on November 29, Mr. Cyril Cantrell (pianoforte) and Mr. Alan Morton (violinocello) collaborated in the Sonata in one movement of Delius.—Miss Eva Rich's concert at the Victoria Hall on December 9, provided the first performance at Sheffield of Music comes, a choral dance from Glastonbury, composed by Mr. P. Napier Miles.—On December 13 Dr. J. F. Staton conducted the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society in Dvorák's Stabat Mater, and Hamilton Harty's Mystic Trumpeter. There has been much good chamber music, and Brahms's Requiem has been sung at the Cathedral.

TAMWORTH.—The City of Birmingham Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Appleby Matthews, played Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto, Mr. Harry Ellingham playing the solo part on a player-piano.

TRURO. — Brahms's Requiem was performed on December 1. Mr. Hubert Middleton conducted, Dr. Ernest Bullock was at the organ, and the soloists were Miss Fifine de la Côte and Mr. Walter Belgrove.

WINCHESTER.—The Musical Society carried out a heavy programme with great distinction on November 20. The works performed were Brahms's Requiem and Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise. Mr. J. A. Sowerbutts conducted.

The Beethoven Medal of the Royal Philharmonic Society was presented to Sir Alexander Mackenzie, on December 10, by H. R. H. The Princess Beatrice. The function took place at the Royal Academy of Music, Sir Hugh Allen presiding.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT: A MID-SEASON STOCKTAKING (FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT)

Hopes which I expressed in these columns in the early autumn have in some directions been cruelly dashed. The prospect of establishing municipal orchestral concerts by the joint efforts of the City Council and Hallé Executive then seemed 'set fair,' but a cyclonic depression unexpectedly appeared in the form of an intimation that if the recommendations of the special sub-committee of the City Council were brought forward the Conservative majority of the City Council would furnish solid opposition. There was no sense in riding for a certain fall on the eve of the November elections, and the sub-committee's proposals were held back.

The Free Trade Hall is now city property, but it is already abundantly clear that municipal concert-giving in a hall which costs them nothing will be vigorously opposed by those who use the same hall at a fixed rental for concert-giving on a frankly commercial basis. An objection which has some point is that experience has proved that Sunday concerts such as those contemplated at cheap rates, when held in the Free Trade Hall attract but a small proportion of those whom it is desired most to benefit—those who cannot attend the ordinary Thursday or Saturday evening orchestral concerts of the Hallé or Brand Lane series. Probably the greatest good to the greatest number would come from taking the orchestra to the people in their own neighbourhoods rather than in bringing them to the centre of the city. But beyond all this, sooner or later the City Council will have to realise that the custodianship of the Free Trade Hall means using it in every possible way for the social and moral uplift of the community, and that, whether private enterprise likes it or not, communal service of the public in music (as in education or baths or sanitation), under right guidance, can and must be provided. For the moment, then, we lag behind some distinguished centres, but this can only be one of those temporary withdrawals, reculer pour mieux sauter.

With only two available theatres at Manchester the problem of an opera season of adequate length is enormously complicated by the already heavy forward bookings of travelling theatrical companies. The Manchester opera-going public does not get into its stride in a week or a fortnight's season. For the National Opera there seems to be no opening for a month's season before next October, and to call for a long season, embracing the Christmas-New Year holiday, such as was ours under the Beecham régime, seems just now to be crying for the moon.

So much for the debit side of the account. What of the credit? Chamber music is firmer in the saddle than ever before. Manchester is a great producing centre of chamber players. Their markets lie close to hand—most of them can easily be reached by a train leaving here at five o'clock, and the players can be back again and in bed soon after midnight. I think that to some extent supply has stimulated—if not exactly created—the demand. In this connection there can be no question that the noon-tide concerts on Tuesday and Friday (the 'market-days' here on the various exchanges—cotton, produce, stock, &c.), have played no small part in stimulating interest in this form of music amongst the men gathered for business from all parts of industrial Lancashire.

The Catterell Quartet, with the co-operation of Mr. Hamilton Harty and the assistance, as occasion arises, of Messrs. Alfred Stott (double-bass), Mortimer (clarinet), Camden (bassoon), and Meest (horn), has inaugurated the Manchester Chamber Concerts, and in all probability these will become as definite a part in the city's musical life as were the Brodsky series in former days. Mr. Edward Isaacs, the earliest of the Manchester school of pianists and most consistently identified with its mid-day music schemes, undertakes for the central musical life of the city what the Bowdoin Chamber Society has long done for the city's suburban life, namely, the attraction to Manchester of the most distinguished of the visiting chamber groups or eminent sonata players. This persistent growth of interest in chamber music activities is one of the stabilizing influences in the maintenance of the musical exchanges in south-east

Lancashire. Values in choral and operatic currencies are subject to violent fluctuations, but the orchestral parity, whilst bearing much the same ratio to pre-war basis as does the pound to the dollar, contrives to maintain a distinctly steady level. Whether the Hallé Orchestra will ever again possess the massive, rock-like foundation of the spacious Richter days may be doubted. Wood, Beecham, Ronald, and Hamilton Harty have each worked upon a lighter balance of tone-values, and the gain in the qualities of suppleness and responsiveness is undoubtedly great, partly due to the strong infusion of younger men, mainly the product of the Royal Manchester College of Music. Probably Hamilton Harty is more difficult to 'place' than any other English conductor. Some of the younger conductors have matured much more rapidly than he, but in his readings there is always an incalculable element, an unexpected, wayward treatment which often surprises and delights, much as a sudden burst of sunshine illumines and transforms a landscape. He may lack the imperious powers of a Richter or a Ronald, as well as the galvanic qualities of a Beecham; but he is infinitely more companionable, and the geniality of his Hibernian temperament warms everything he touches. If you feel inclined to question these views, hear him play Brahms's No. 2 or Dvorák's New World or Beethoven's No. 7. His tendency to speed for speed's sake occasionally leads him to lamentable excesses; these are really miscalculations, and memory recalls in recent concerts two conspicuous instances in Elgar's works: In the South, where the great 'steam-roller' motif, symbolical of Roman law and order, lost all real significance; the other was in the 'Praise to the Holiest' chain of choruses in Gerontius. Hamilton Harty may not be aware of the fact, but he played Part 2 in six minutes less time than any other distinguished conductor has done; in a work so contemplative in style the essential qualities are needlessly sacrificed in such a bustling reading. I wondered whether he had any real affinity for such a score as Gerontius. After a recent West-country experience of Elgarian choral singing, it must be confessed that the secrets of interpretative power in this idiom are only partially revealed to our Manchester singers. This remark would also hold true of the three Gerontius soloists on this occasion.

At Manchester Berlioz has never lacked fervent disciples from Hallé's day onward. Hamilton Harty, on the platform and in the Press, is in the direct line of succession. This season his readings of the Fantastique, the Lear Overture, and the Te Deum have witnessed to the intensity of his conviction. On the Te Deum Beecham lavished time, pains, and money; Balling also, in his day, worked at it. Under all these men this great theme has never gripped the imagination; it would seem to be one of those works to which Berlioz's own phrase (used in another connection) may not inaptly be applied—of the à peu près order.

The Strauss Bürger als Edelmann Suite has been performed here twice during the past year, and on a recent occasion (November 16), Hamilton Harty gave it with the most sustained fastidious playing I have heard from the Hallé band for many years. This concert was a notable instance of Harty's flair for fine programme drifting: Bach's third Brandenburg Concerto for strings; Mozart's fifth Piano-forte Concerto (played by Bauer); Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme Suite; In the South: César Franck's Symphonic Variations for piano-forte; Delius's Dance Rhapsody; and a Tarantelle by Martucci. Two nights later a Saturday popular programme was just as felicitous in its lay-out. In this period Lamond, Suggia, Bauer, and Casals were heard in successive weeks; the old-stagers are fond of telling us of the great players heard in their younger days. The generation that can hear such piano-forte and 'cello playing need have no vain regrets: there may or may not have been better, but this much is certain, that to-day there is a higher and more exacting standard in these matters.

The Brand Lane series has brought many notable singers and players, but Sir Henry Wood came late on the scene, and the New Year period will bring him more frequently in our midst. Nothing of great moment has happened in the choral world, but Dr. A. W. Wilson at the Cathedral is maintaining the monthly performance of a Bach Cantata. The most notable visitors to our chamber concerts have been the Léner and Flonzaley Quartets, and to the Bowdon series the London Chamber Music Players, who gave at the first concert Piano-forte Quartets of Brahms, Schumann, and Fauré.

The C.W.S. Male Choir continues its work upon the usual lines of unaccompanied choral songs and distinguished soloists. At the Blackpool Festival I heard the C.W.S. Orchestra play under Mr. Langtry. It is to be hoped that at no distant date a choral concert may be given with orchestral accompaniment. Works like Brahms's Alto Rhapsody or Rinaldo, Schubert's Song of the Spirits over the Waters, or Wagner's Love Feast of the Apostles, would supply a welcome variation.

MANCUNIAN.

DEERING'S COUNTRY CRYES

The members of the Musical Association listened on December 5 to a paper by Sir Frederick Bridge—whose birthday it was—on Deering's Country Cryes, and on New Fashions, a Fancy by William Cobbold. At the outset the lecturer referred in eulogistic terms to the labours of the late Dr. Southgate, who up to the very end of his life devoted himself with extraordinary enthusiasm to the task of deciphering old manuscripts, with the result that he—Sir Frederick—had been able to recover many remarkable pieces of music of the early 17th century. With regard to the Fancy by Deering on Country Cryes, Dr. Southgate had spent his last years going through the manuscripts, but he died before it was possible to revise the results of his work. Since then the task had been carried out with the assistance of Miss Ethel Higgins and Mr. Jeffrey Pulver.

The title Country Cryes was not quite accurate. In the London Cryes the composers worked the various Cryes in the vocal parts above their own original parts for the strings. In Deering's piece, now under notice, the form was similar, but there were only two genuine Cryes, and it would therefore be better entitled Country Scenes. The vocal music was for the most part simply a setting of the words of the poem. The text was interesting, and one would like to know who wrote it. It represented all the scenes of a day in the country in Shakespeare's time. Beginning with an opening clearly Welsh in character, it diverges abruptly into Somersetshire, while at the end there is a charming Harvest Home which is purely English. This last was perfectly well-known, and might still be heard in Cornwall. Included are calls to the cattle and poultry and then to the hounds, with encouraging sounds to the horses. After an allusion to 'His Majesty's brown baker,' which proved that the Fancy was written in the reign of James I., we get the Town Crier, who announces that the children of the Free School are giving a play, after which the swarming of the bees is depicted by means of a buzzing in the bass voice for about twenty bars, while the player of the tenor viol is directed to drum with the back of his bow on one note. So far as the lecturer knew, this was the first example of such an effect in English music. The Fancy ends with the Harvest Home already mentioned. The work was then performed, and proved a very vigorous and interesting composition.

The other piece by William Cobbold, of which only one movement was performed, was not of quite so high merit, though interesting in its way, particularly as the composer used many old tunes, including a version of 'Greensleeves,' which, in the lecturer's opinion, was quite the best specimen of that tune that he had met with. Sir Frederick remarked that the tunes as a whole seemed to him to be better and more complete than many reproductions he had seen in books. What was the meaning of it all he could not grasp. There were some doleful anticipations of what was going to happen to the world, while, on the other hand, New Fashions were extolled.

MUSIC IN IRELAND

The Belfast Philharmonic Society gave a concert in Ulster Hall on November 17, the principal item being Vaughan Williams's Sea Symphony, with Miss Elsie Cochrane (soprano) and Mr. Hiorace Stevens (baritone), conducted by Mr. E. Godfrey Brown. Mr. J. H. MacBratney was solo organist and accompanist.

The Kreisler recitals at Belfast (Ulster Hall) on November 24, and at Dublin (Theatre Royal) on November 25, were marked by unbounded enthusiasm for the great violin virtuoso. At Belfast and Dublin all seats were sold two days prior to the recital.

The Belfast Symphony Orchestra gave the second concert of the season at Wellington Hall on November 25, under Mr. E. Godfrey Brown, the chief items being Dvorák's fifth Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Casse-Noisette Suite.

St. Ultan's concert, in the Engineers' Hall, Dawson Street, Dublin, on November 17, in aid of the Babies' Hospital, attracted a good audience. Schumann's Quintet (Op. 44) for pianoforte and strings and Tchaikovsky's Trio received fine interpretations. Miss Mary May Maguire contributed some acceptable vocal items.

At the Royal Dublin Society's recital, at the Abbey Theatre, on November 20, the Carl Fuchs Trio gave a delightful performance, though the acoustic properties and surroundings were not favourable. Probably the best item was Beethoven's B flat Trio.

A Festival Service for Dublin parochial choirs was held in St. Patrick's Cathedral on November 23, and the singing reached a good level. Dr. George Hewson presided at the organ. At the morning service, on Sunday, November 26, a new anthem, The Transfiguration, by Miss Ina Boyle (winner of one of the Carnegie Trust prizes), was sung for the first time.

After a successful three weeks' season at Dublin, the Carl Rosa Opera Company opened a three weeks' season at the Grand Opera House, Belfast, on November 27 (with Mr. Cuthbert Hawley as conductor), and had a most satisfying reception.

German organists are again being imported to Roman Catholic churches in Ireland. Within the past three months three important posts were given to Germans—the latest being Herr Kreisinger, from Cologne, who has been appointed organist of Longford Cathedral.

His Excellency T. M. Healy, first Governor-General of the Irish Free State, is a fine musician, and has often delighted social circles by songs to his own accompaniment.

MUSICAL FESTIVAL IN SOUTH AFRICA

The establishment of the Durban Orchestra under Mr. Lyell-Taylor was signalled by a number of festival performances, chief among which were a series of presentations of Elgar's Dream of Gerontius. The Durban Musical Association, which has grown to large dimensions under Mr. Lyell-Taylor, prepared the Dream of Gerontius, Faust, and Cavalleria Rusticana, and the same works were rehearsed under the direction of Mr. John Connell by the Johannesburg Philharmonic Society and the Pretoria Choral Society—two societies with a record for pioneer work, as readers of the *Musical Times will remember who read the account of the first tour of the Festival Choir in South Africa in the summer of 1921. In addition Mr. Connell secured the formation of a new choral society at Potchefstroom, which also took part in Faust with the Durban Orchestra and the Johannesburg Philharmonic Society under his conductorship there. The Durban performances under Mr. Lyell-Taylor were very successful; large audiences attended, and the enthusiasm was most infectious. Eighty members of the Johannesburg and Pretoria Choirs journeyed five hundred miles each way to attend the Festival at Durban, and fifty members of the Durban Society returned the visit to Johannesburg, where the performances were under the direction of Mr. Connell. T.R.H. Prince and Princess Arthur of Connaught attended the Pretoria performance of Gerontius, and the Festival movement has received a new impetus by these artistic schemes.

The Rand choralists are drawn largely from professional and civil service sources, and they sing with a degree of fervour and intellectual quality which gives to these performances an atmosphere not elsewhere to be found in South Africa. It is to be hoped that English audiences will have an opportunity for hearing this choir during the British Empire Exhibition in 1924 when, if it journeys to England, its members will no doubt benefit by hearing choral performances, and they may even react to a certain extent on the 'Home of Choral Music.'

Mr. John Booth journeyed specially to Africa to sing the part of Gerontius, and throughout his tour of the country (during which he has appeared with the Capetown Orchestra in Wagnerian excerpts as well as at the Choral Festival performances at Johannesburg and Pretoria) his fine singing was much appreciated. B.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

The concert of November 16 brought a first hearing of the Russian composer Lazare Saminsky's Symphonie des Montagnes, which failed to rouse much interest. It was followed by Tchaikovsky's pretty and unimportant Serenade for string orchestra, Op. 48. Thanks to its delightful freshness, the fourth Symphony of Glazounov, which came after the interval, met with a decided success, partly due to the refreshing dash and vigour with which it was played. On November 23 and 26 we heard Mahler's ninth Symphony, certainly the most despondent of all his compositions. Its exorbitant length (the first movement alone requiring a matter of forty minutes) in both instances absorbed the entire programme. On November 30 M. Alexander Schuller played the Violin Concerto by Busoni, and earned a triumph, which might have been the climax of the evening but for Ravel's La Valse closing the concert. To learn the height of virtuosity in orchestral playing one ought to hear this piece at Amsterdam under Mengelberg.

On December 3, a comparatively insignificant fragment from a music-drama by Brücken Fock could only partly enlist the attention of an audience overwhelmed by Moritz Rosenthal's playing. The César Franck commemoration concert brought only well-known works such as the D minor Symphony, three orchestral pieces from Psyché, Le Chasseur Maudit, and the Variations Symphoniques, with Madame Eleanor Spencer at the pianoforte.

On December 10 a new Symphonic Elegy by R. Mengelberg, the nephew of the conductor, created a favourable impression.

At last we have had the sensation of hearing Schönberg's Pierrot Lunaire, of which work, however, I crave permission to withhold my personal opinion. Very gratifying, on the other hand, was the acquaintance with the Léner Quartet, this being its first time of appearing at Amsterdam. The players created a very high opinion by their flawless performances. Among many ordinary recitals that of so highly-equipped a singer as Madame Birgit Engell should at all events be recorded. Mr. Percy Grainger has strengthened his newly-regained popularity with us by a series of solo recitals. Partly as a curiosity I should mention two evenings given by Madame Yvette Guilbert with her ladies' choir, which from a historical point of view (Six siècles de la chanson française) presented much that was interesting enough, though the harmonic settings of some of the more ancient musical items may be open to criticism.

W. HARMANS.

GERMANY

BERLIN

When the managers of the Berlin Philharmonic Society engaged the services of Werner Wolff, they placed an energetic and trustworthy conductor at the head of this distinguished orchestra. His artistic qualities shone especially in his reading of Schreker's Chamber Symphony, which abounds in rich orchestral effects and combinations of sound.

Having the doors of the opera-houses closed against him, Paul Ertel produced excerpts from his opera Santa Agata at one of the symphony concerts conducted by Prof. Rudolf Krasselt. Whosoever has followed the development of Paul Ertel must have noticed that from a new romanticist he has gradually moved with the stream of the impressionists. The tone-pictures of his Santa Agata contain a wealth interest, and it is hoped that the composer's life-work may be crowned by a stage performance of his beautiful score, which is worth half a dozen Italian operas.

* September number, 1921, page 654

REGER FESTIVAL AT BRESLAU

The Max Reger Festival at Breslau at the close of last season was a great success. Breslau, although not a festival town, has ever been a 'Reger' town, and when it is remembered that the Germans in Silesia have a severe struggle against the encroaching Polish and Slavish element, nothing could be more opportune than this enthusiasm for the sterling music of a typically German composer. The larger works played in the course of five concerts included the Symphonic Prologue to a Tragedy, a piece of cyclopean strength; the Thiller Variations, Op. 100, which belong to Reger's 'classic' period, and the Ode To Hope, a happy ending after the hopelessly tragic Prologue.

For the playing of the Violin Concerto, Op. 101, which lasts as long as Beethoven's ninth Symphony, Adolf Busch received an ovation unparalleled in the musical history of Breslau. Culminating points of the programme were the Böcklin Suite and the powerful 'Hundredth Psalm.' In this Festival Breslau gave proof that with Stuttgart it is thoroughly qualified to celebrate Reger commemorations.

A NEW SYMPHONY BY KEUSSLER

At Breslau, Gerhard von Keussler conducted the first performance of his Melodramatic-Symphony To Death, a composition which as regards novelty and boldness in idea and execution occupies a special position. It represents a new synthesis of word and music. It is impossible adequately to describe this 'melodramatic-symphony,' because the terms Melodrama and Symphony have a subtle implication. Word and tone receive a symbolic strength which makes it difficult to find analogies in daily life for their metaphysical and mystic links, because the work appeals equally to feeling, fancy, and intellect. The voice is the herald of a beautiful text, written by the composer, the orchestra interprets in four independent movements, which formalists possibly look upon as the scheme of the traditional symphony. It would be wrong to speak of action, although there is a fiery discussion—a dialogue between the hero and the figure of death. Keussler's music is the art of a solitary, independent artist—an art which strengthens the faith in all that is ethical in music.

A NEW ORATORIO BY STÖHR

When at the close of last season Dr. Richard Stöhr, of Vienna, produced at Dresden his new oratorio The Lost Son, its success was so great that it had to be repeated on the following day. The Singakademie, the Lehrergesangverein and the Philharmonic Orchestra combined forces to realise the intentions of the composer. In the tutti movements Stöhr is not particular as to the means employed, and his diction sometimes borders on the trivial. But in the a cappella choruses and soli the music is beautiful to a high degree. The copious use of wood-wind emphasises the Oriental element.

Stöhr's almost pathological preference for wood-wind instruments was manifested at a matinée when a Sonata for flute and pianoforte and a Trio for pianoforte and two bassoons were performed. It was amusing when the comedians of the orchestra struck up a funeral march, but the rest was monotonous.

OLD TREASURES

From time to time we read of the discovery of art treasures hitherto unknown. Generally they are works of no great moment. But any new autograph of John Sebastian Bach is worth recording. Thus Dr. Werner Wolffheim found in the possession of a Berlin family the autograph vocal parts of a wedding cantata for solo soprano and alto with the title, Vergnügte Pleiessstadt (Merry town on the Pleisse). Unluckily there are no instrumental parts, and in order to make the work fit for public performance Prof. Georg Schumann has added an accompaniment. In this form the cantata was produced at the first concert of the Berlin Singakademie.

This being the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the death of Heinrich Schütz, two letters discovered by Herbert Brehle, at Bautzen, wherein the composer recommends one of his pupils as town organist, come opportunely.

A hitherto unknown work by Friedemann Bach, the cantata Gott fahret auf mit Jauchzen was successfully performed at Halle a/S. at the annual Festival of the Evangelische Kirchenmusikverein of the province of Saxony, under the direction of Karl Klanert.

At the fourth 'Modern Concert Evening,' arranged by Edith Weissmann, of Hamburg, Julius Weissmann produced his new Divertimento, Op. 38, for clarinet, bassoon, horn, and pianoforte, with Walter Gieseke as pianist. The work was well received.

F. ERCKMANN.

NEW YORK

The opening week of the season at the Metropolitan Opera House brought Der Rosenkavalier, not heard for more than five years, along with all other German operas, it was relegated during the war. Madame Jeritza's Octavian was beautiful to look upon, but there was no illusion concerning her sex—she was always a woman and never a youth. The rôle of the Princess was entrusted to Florence Easton, who sang it with all her usual beauty of tone and with better diction than any German in the cast. Paul Bender, one of the new German members of the Company, appeared as Baron Ochs. It was delightful again to hear the charming music, with its wealth of waltzes, the 'presenting of the rose,' and the final Trio.

Montemezzi's L'Amore Dei Tre Re, with its fascinating vocal score and wonderful orchestration, was also given in the first week. For ten years this opera has been a favourite with music-lovers, and each season we welcome Lucrezia Bori as the unhappy Fiora and Adamo Didur as the blind King, who originated the rôles. Edward Johnson, an American tenor, who made himself famous in Europe and later sang with the Chicago Company, made his débüt as the lover Avito. His voice and his artistry make him a valuable acquisition to the forces of the Metropolitan. The attractions of the first week were further enhanced by the appearances of Feodor Chaliapin in two operas, Boris Godounov and Mefistofele, his portrayal of Boito's malevolent Mephisto being given for the first time in America. The giant Russian's personality is overpowering and his popularity increases.

Wagner came into his own during the second and third weeks of the season, Walküre being first heard and Tristan quickly following.

A newcomer, an American girl whose stage name is Queena Mario, made her débüt as Micaela in Carmen.

In the first four weeks of the season the Metropolitan has produced twenty-one operas. As the number usually given in the twenty-three weeks is about thirty-six, only fifteen remain to be presented during the ensuing nineteen weeks. But many of the repetitions will be heard with a change of singers, as Mr. Gatti's policy of engaging artists for a half instead of the whole season is more and more in evidence each year.

The symphony orchestras continue their search for novelties, but most of the discoveries are trivial or tiresome. Mr. Strinsky seems to be the most successful explorer, as Vaughan Williams's Pastoral Symphony, first heard in America under the baton of the composer at the Norfolk Festival last June, has been given at a Philharmonic concert.

Mr. Damrosch in searching for novelties found Saint-Saëns's Carnival of Animals, which the composer never allowed to be played in public while he was alive. It might be added that it is unfortunate that he did not leave instructions that it should not be played after his death. This zoological fantasia is supposed to depict the actions or antics of lions, elephants, hens, turtles, kangaroos, donkeys, birds, and so forth. Some of the descriptions are amusing, some merely silly. Of the fourteen movements the funniest is called 'Pianists,' and M. Cortôt imitated the practising of children so perfectly as to set the audience in a roar. But what have pianists—old or young in embryo or maturity—to do with a menagerie? The foundation of the Carnival is entrusted to two pianofortes, though the orchestra 'butts in' continually. The whole composition is too absurd to place on the programme of a serious concert.

A new orchestra has appeared under the title of the 'City Symphony Orchestra, dedicated to the service of the people of New York.' Its aim is to give just as good music as do the old-established orchestras, at half the price. Dirk Foch (from Holland), well-known on both sides of the ocean, is the conductor. Forty concerts are announced for the season, some to be given in the evening, some in the afternoon. The first opened with César Franck's Symphony and Scriabin's Poem of Ecstasy. The third concert introduced the first soloist, Elena Gerhardt, who sang very beautifully Mahler's five Infant Death Songs set to music from Ruckert's poems.

In the immense number of recitals that deserve mention naturally Paderewski's name comes first. It is five years since he has played here, his last appearance having been at the reception in the Metropolitan Opera House given to Marshal Joffre. Neither the critics nor his friends are agreed as to where to place him as an artist to-day. If the technique is not the same, what matter? And in our undivided admiration for him as a man and a patriot is not criticism out of place?

No more delightful recitals have been given than those of Felix Salmond the violoncellist. Half of a recent programme was devoted to music of the 17th century, the names of Eccles, Vivaldi, Sammartini, and Veracini appearing as composers for his instrument, along with such moderns as Henry Hadley, César Cui, and Glazounov. Salmond never makes a show instrument of his 'cello, but plays it seriously, entrancing his listeners with his true musicianship and great beauty of tone.

M. H. FLINT.

PARIS

There have been a number of first performances at most of our symphony concerts, but chiefly of slight works. Some of these proved to be quite charming—as Hahn's Études Latines in revised orchestral form, and Pierné's clever settings of two Ballades of Paul Fort at the Concerts-Colonne (well sung by M. Paul Parmentier); Caplet's Prières, delightfully sung by Mlle. Madeleine Grey at the Concerts-Lamoureux; and others not conducive to excitement, such as Alexandre Georges's song-cycle Sapho at the Concerts-Colonne, and Simia's Vision at the Concerts-Lamoureux. Le Borne's Symphonie Concerto for violin (Brailowsky), pianoforte (G. Bouillon), and orchestra, played at the Concerts-Pasdeloup, is an effective work, about which the one surprising thing is that at the time when it was written (1888) it was refused by Colonne under the pretext that it was 'too revolutionary.' This, coming from a conductor who always enjoyed the reputation of being progressive, casts a strange light upon the way in which the word 'revolutionary' may be used, for assuredly there is nothing in this Symphony which Saint-Saëns, for instance (who was the very antipodes of a revolutionist), would not have endorsed—even as far back as 1888.

Robert Siohan's orchestral dirge, In Memoriam, played at the Concerts-Pasdeloup, is impressive, terse, bold, and well-balanced in its unadorned proportions.

It is not easy to dispose in a few words of Darius Milhaud's Serenade, which had a very mixed reception at the Concerts-Colonne. Not that in itself it is to any degree complex in texture or obscure in tendency: on the contrary, it is a brisk, unpretentious little thing, carried out in a cheerfully humorous vein, and to be taken or left according to the impression which it produces. This, in fact, is what I am always tempted to do, without further bothering about the ideals which Milhaud stands for and asserts, at times, rather clamorously. At the concert of his works recently given by Wiener at the Théâtre des Champs Élysées, I found not a little to take and plenty to leave. The programme began by a short instrumental triptych, entitled Le Printemps, which proved altogether delightful. After that came a set of Rag-Caprices for pianoforte, which were feeble; and, lastly, an important work, the cantata Le Retour de l'Enfant Prodigue. Here I really began to be baffled. The first two parts seemed absolutely meaningless; the third impressed me rather favourably; the fourth left me indifferent; the fifth contained things which I found quite telling. There is no doubt that Milhaud, despite the unequal quality of his output (he appears always to be writing at high speed), is steadily driving towards his end, and has succeeded in compelling no small measure of interest. The public here is watching him attentively, and plenty of opportunities are afforded for hearing his music.

Stravinsky, too, is more popular than ever. He was enthusiastically cheered when he appeared at the pulpit of the Orchestre Philharmonique to conduct his Feu d'Artifice, the Oiseau de Feu Suite, and excerpts of his Rossignol (well sung by Mlle. Marguerite Bayle and M. Soullier). Paris, let us note, has not yet heard his famous Symphonies d'instruments à vent.

The same concert afforded a first hearing of Kœchlin's Ode Funèbre à la Mémoire des Jeunes Femmes Défunes, for chorus, orchestra, and organ. It proved a very inadequate performance of what appears to be a fine work instinct with genuine poetic emotion. The Ode is, however, not quite so strikingly original as the recently published pianoforte pieces and chamber music works by the same composer.

Albert Roussel's charming Festin de l'Araignée is very much to the front just now. It has been successfully revived at the Opéra-Comique, and concert performances have been given both at the Conservatoire and at the Concerts-Pasdeloup.

This cursory review of orchestral events may end with the mention of Goossens's By the Tarn, performed at the Concerts-Colonne (and, by the way, an essential word dropped out of the first line of the last paragraph, p. 882, col. 1, of my previous letter: 'less systematically ignored' is what I intended to write), and of an excellent performance at the same Concerts of Beethoven's fifth Concerto by Robert Casadesu.

This young artist is, among the most gifted of his generation. Of his elders, three deserve special notice for their recent achievements: Robert Schmitz, whose recital of works by Bach and Debussy was altogether enjoyable; Mlle. Blanche Selva, who devoted her second recital to Bach, Couperin, Chopin, d'Indy, Ravel, and Franck; and Ricardo Viñes, who at the Théâtre des Champs Élysées gave a most attractive variety of French music from Franck to Poulenc, following up with pieces by Monpou, de Falla, and Turina's new Exaltation (quite good).

At the Salle Erard, Miss Dorothy Griffiths devoted the programme of her recital to works old and new of various schools, not including the British. Mlle. Micheline Kahn, a harpist of great distinction, assisted by Mlle. Dettelbach, Madame Bonenfant, and the Poulet Quartet, devoted the whole of her programme to Fauré, Ravel, Schmitt, Honegger, and Debussy. At André Salomon's concert we enjoyed excellent performances of Ravel's Trio, Schmitt's Sonate Libre, and Fauré's second Quintet, in which the Carembat group took part. Concerts of this order are frequent, and when one lives at Paris there is no excuse for not being thoroughly posted in the matter of contemporary French output. I am unable to notice all, and must end the list of recitals of modern music with mention of the excellent contributions, at the Salle Erard, of Mlle. Vaurabourg and M. Alexanian ('Cello Sonata by Hindemith, Sonata for 'cello unaccompanied by Wellesz, 'Cello Sonata by Honegger, pianoforte pieces by Milhaud and Prokofiev), and of Mlle. Herr Japy and M. Neubert, who introduced a Sonata for viola alta and pianoforte by Egon Kornauth, a pupil of Schreker.

In this turmoil of activity Armand Parent's concerts at the Salon d'Automne continue to hold their own. I can recall the time when this was the only place where chamber music could be heard between summer and Christmas. Things have altered indeed of late!

Particular interest attaches to the concert-lectures given by the Cercle Musical Universitaire at the Sorbonne. In turn Amédée Gastoué and André Pirro have lectured, the former on 'Gregorian Song,' the latter on 'The Art-Song in the 15th and 16th centuries,' many attractive examples being provided by way of illustration.

César Franck's centenary is being commemorated by concerts of his works at the Concerts-Colonne, the Concerts-Pasdeloup, and others.

A Finnish artist, M. Suohlati, has introduced to us the kantele, a characteristic national instrument carrying thirty-six strings, and whose tone is not unlike that of the harpsichord, although it lends itself to very peculiar effects. He sang, to its accompaniment, many beautiful folk-songs, winning golden opinions both for the music of Finland and for his skill as an interpreter. A. BOLD.

ROME

Like most revolutions, the recent pacific—but none the less extraordinary—Fascist revolution at Rome has been accompanied by music, and what was at first a mere party song has been raised almost to the dignity of a national hymn. I say 'almost,' because time alone will show whether Giovinezza will implant itself in Italian life as Mameli's hymn did in 1848. It was, however, impressive to hear the municipal band adjoin Giovinezza to the other national airs played at the beginning of the weekly concerts, immediately after the famous Fascist 'march on Rome.'

Political events have not disturbed the musical life of Rome, which so far is still suffering from the summer somnolency which in Italy lasts nearly up to Christmas. The Sala Bach has had the honour of opening the season, and promises to take on new vigour and accomplish greater things under a fresh direction—that of Giuseppe Christiani (the well-known maestro of Sta. Cecilia). Christiani himself, aided by a double quartet and a solo violin and flute, gave the opening concert on November 21, with a programme of Bach.

The following week the famous Budapest Quartet, which was passing through Rome, gave a concert with the Quartets of Beethoven (Op. 59, No. 1, F major), Schumann (Op. 41, A major), and Borodin (No. 2, D major).

Whilst awaiting the reopening of the Augustean on December 8 with Verdi's Requiem, and the Costanzi on St. Stephen's Day with Siegfried, we had a few odd concerts to remind us that music was not entirely dead in the capital. Particular praise goes to the very first concert of the season, given on November 11 in the Costanzi, under Edward Vitale's direction. The programme included the Symphonies of The Maschere (Mascagni), Tell (Rossini), and Vespi Siciliani (Verdi), Respighi's transcriptions of antique lute airs and dances, an Italian song by Alaleona, Mancinelli's Cleopatra Overture, and Catalani's A sera, with Van Westerhout's Ronde d'amour.

'Celebrity' concerts have been initiated by the pianist, Salvador Ordóñez Ochoa, who opened the series himself.

An excellent beginning to its annual cycle of lectures was made by the Roman Press Association in dedicating the first conference to music, and, more precisely, to a commemoration of Debussy. Signor Elio Gianturco discussed the master's compositions, and illustrated his remarks by the performance of a short Debussy programme.

The Accademia di Sta. Cecilia has suffered two grave losses this month by the deaths of Caesar Dondini, who was professor of declamation, and Stanislaw Falchi, who for fifteen years was director of the Lyceum. Some of the best-known musicians of to-day passed through Falchi's hands, such as Molinari, Baiardi, Gui, Santoliquido, Tommasini, and R-fee. As a composer he was known as author of a three-Act opera, The Devil's Trill, but after the success of that work he voluntarily resigned the pen to dedicate himself to teaching.

Within a few days of Falchi's death Rome suffered another serious loss in the person of Philip Mattoni, who died on November 12 at the age of seventy-four, after having been connected with St. Peter's for half a century, first as singer and then as organist of the Cappella Giulia. As an organist, Mattoni occupied a high position amongst artists, and as a composer was well-known for his liturgical works, Masses, psalms, &c., and, above all, for his famous Miserere, which of late years has been sung in St. Peter's in Holy Week in place of the famous composition of Allegri.

LEONARD PEYTON.

TORONTO

Almost might November have been termed 'pianist month' at Toronto. It was rather startling to find in the advance notice list that Paderewski, Hoffman, Rachmaninov, and Ernest Hutcheson (twice) were booked in succession, the first three within eleven days of each other. Yet still more surprising were the audiences. Paderewski could have filled two halls (seating three thousand), the Hoffman concert was exceedingly well attended, and the house for Rachmaninov was practically sold out.

Paderewski returned to us after seven years' absence with the same warm-hearted appeal. His generous though fiery personality roused his hearers to a wild demonstration of enthusiasm previously unknown here, for the Toronto people are noted for their reserve. The reward—three-quarters of an hour of encores, and among them the Liszt Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2—was well worth the loss of dignity. The full programme contained the Variations Sérieuses of Mendelssohn; the Schumann Fantasia, Op. 17; the Sonata (Op. 57) of Beethoven; some Chopin, and some Liszt. Hoffman also gave the Variations Sérieuses.

The Russian Grand Opera Company visited us for three days. No Company has ever encountered such hardships in so short a history. Under the direction of Leo Feodoroff, this organization toured the Russian provinces and Siberia during the war, afterwards visiting China, Singapore, Manila, Java, India, Japan, and America. The personnel includes twenty-four principals, a chorus of thirty-five, a small but most competent symphony orchestra of sixteen, three conductors (Michael Fiviesky, Victor Vasilieff, and Eugène Fuerst), a corps de ballet, and complete technical staff. The standard attained in performance cannot be better described than in the Company's press notice:

'America has for the first time the enviable opportunity for hearing the heretofore cloistered masterpieces of Russian opera, presented with an authenticity and fidelity, a sincerity and devotion rarely met with in the field of operatic production.'

Boris Godunov, The Snow Maiden, The Czar's Bride, Eugene Onegin, and La Juive were given. Never had we found more enjoyment in a group of operas as a whole, despite the drawbacks of weak libretti, and very provoking vibrato on the part of most of the soloists. Chorus, orchestra, interpretation, and acting were of a standard far superior to any ever before known in Canada.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra had not been heard here for ten years. The oldest organization of its kind in the States, its members show a high standard of musicianship only to be gained by long experience together. Pierre Monteaux conducted the Brahms Symphony No. 1, Clouds and White Peacock, Op. 7, No. 1, by C. T. Griffes (a young American composer who died two years ago at the age of thirty-six), and Liszt's Les Préludes. The soloist, Frieda Hempel, is so well known in England that there is no need to describe her singing.

The following artists have been heard in recital: Martinelli and Alda, Calvé, Ernest Hutcheson, Ethel Peake (late of Beecham Opera), Mr. and Mrs. Watkin Mills, Cameron McLean, Arthur Blight (baritone), and Ernest Seitz (pianoforte). H. C. F.

VIENNA

MUSICAL DEMOCRACY

Our great artists no longer regard their Vienna appearances as a profitable financial scheme. Vienna concerts are merely a matter of prestige, and are most frequently sandwiched between appearances in the cities of our neighbouring Czecho-Slovak republic, which is the 'valuta' paradise of Central Europe at present. Moreover, the number of 'paying' concerts (paying from a box-office view-point) is narrowing down more and more, and even the 'valuta' concerts, which furnished the majority of last season's musical entertainments, have now virtually stopped, when the average cost of an orchestral concert exceeds the sum of eighteen million crowns. Rather than face empty benches, concert-managers have recently adopted the plan of selling the bulk of their tickets outright to the various trades unions at greatly reduced prices and, encouraged by the success of this measure, the trades unions have now gone a step further. They frequently hire a big hall at their own risk, and buy a whole concert: orchestra, conductor, soloists and all, at a lump sum from the concert-managers, who are naturally willing to encourage these ventures. Thus the masses have recently been able to hear some of the finest concerts at exceedingly low prices, and the deplorable state of the local concert business has at least benefited one class of music-lovers, which had been virtually excluded from the concert-halls in those times when visiting foreigners and, to a smaller degree, wealthy natives, were crowding the houses. Now managers are glad to fall back on the support of the middle and lower classes.

Independently of all these more or less unorganized experiments, the Socialist party of Austria is continuing its musical pioneer work. The socialist Volksheim, with its six or seven dependencies in the various poor districts of the city, is regularly holding series of Sunday evening concerts (instrumental, vocal, and chamber music), with the assistance of some of our most prominent artists, while the workers' orchestral series still draws huge crowds of music-loving people of the middle and lower classes. The promoters of these concerts are slowly and cautiously enlarging the scope of their programmes, and their hold on the public is now sufficiently strong to justify the inclusion in the concerts of some modern and ultra-modern compositions. The latest event in this cycle was one of more than local importance, introducing a new and heretofore unknown young Viennese composer, Franz Salmhofer, with an Overture to a mediæval drama called Der Ackermann und der Tod, and a concert piece for solo trumpet and full orchestra. Both compositions are perhaps a promise rather than a fulfilment: Salmhofer is still a very young man. His music is brimful of ideas and ideals, and he bids fair to become a composer to reckon with. In the same concert, Jascha Horenstein, the Russian modernist composer-conductor, introduced to the Vienna labouring class Mahler's first Symphony. A still more daring venture was the inclusion in the programme at another of these workmen's concerts of Arnold Schönberg's Verklärte Nacht, in an arrangement for stringed orchestra. The experiment was successful in every respect, the performance, under Erwin Stein, was very dignified, and the reception it found at the hands of the audience, consisting chiefly of working people, intelligent beyond expectation. On the whole, this venture was particularly happy as an attempt at bringing the work of Schönberg—most misunderstood among modern composers—more closely to the minds of wider circles of music-lovers. The need for such an undertaking is clearly demonstrated by the general apathy evinced by the Vienna public towards the most recent propaganda concerts of the Schönberg-Verein. A mere handful of people, consisting solely of Schönberg's friends and pupils, gathered on the last occasion to hear Anton Webern's Five Movements for string quartet, familiar from the Salzburg Festival, and Alban Berg's Quartet in two movements, Op. 3, which, even at a first hearing, gave the impression of a strong and virile composition.

CONCERTS

Generally speaking, the programmes of all orchestral concerts move within the narrow realm circumscribed by the works of Beethoven, Brahms, Bruckner, and Mahler. The Philharmonic Orchestra—which recently opened the subscription cycle, following the return from South America of its conductor, Felix Weingartner—makes no exception to the rule, and its list of novelties is even more meagre this year than ever before. Weingartner's own Variations on a theme of Reizenauer, the Fireworks of Stravinsky, and Ottorino Respighi's second Symphony are the only new works scheduled for performance by this foremost among our orchestral organizations. Still, public interest in these concerts is enormous, and the house is sold out three times for the entire series.

Of visiting conductors we heard a young American, resident at Paris, Mr. Chester McKee, who made a promising début as a composer-conductor with a lengthy earlier work by Henri Rabaud entitled Procession Nocturne, and a symphonic poem for soprano of his own, Dagmara, which was interesting despite a certain lack of contrasting colour. Wilhelm Komor, from Budapest, introduced as a novelty to Vienna a Humoresque for chamber orchestra by Leo Weiner, apparently one of the Hungarian composer's early works, and Georg Høeberg, from Copenhagen, in a programme devoted entirely to music by his countrymen, presented a Sinfonia svastika by Louis Glass, a Violin Concerto by Hakon Børresen (splendidly played by Julius Thörngerg), and Carl Nielson's Symphony Das Unauslöschliche, of which all but the last-named piece proved weak and imitative music. Several orchestral and operatic selections by Karl Futterer, a Swiss composer, were poor music of the operetta variety. Two Intermezzos from the opera Der Artz der Sobeide, by Hans Gal, first performed in the Konzertverein cycle under Löwe, were equally melodious, but of a considerably higher and more legitimate order.

THE SCHUBERT FESTIVAL

Schubert has been the feature of the local concert programmes this month. Both the Rosé and Mairecker-Buxbaum Quartets have given complete cycles of his chamber music compositions, practically every vocal recital included at least one group of his songs, and Schubert Symphonies reigned supreme on most symphonic programmes. The Philharmonic Orchestra, under Weingartner, gave a Schubert memorial concert, and an official Schubert Festival Week was inaugurated by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde.

In connection with the Festival Week, an exhibition of the numerous valuable Schubert relics and manuscripts was opened. Among the exhibits was a leaf which shows on one side a Beethoven song in the master's own handwriting, and on the other the original manuscript of a Schubert pianoforte composition.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

JOSEPH SEYMOUR, on December 2, aged sixty-eight. Born at Cork (Irish Free State), on May 14, 1854, he studied under his father, who was organist of SS. Peter and Paul, Cork, and in 1873 went to Malines, where he continued his organ studies under Lemmens, after which he went to Ratisbon, where he had the advantage of being a pupil of Haberl. After his return to Ireland he was appointed to his father's position in 1878, and three years later was given the post of organist of St. Andrew's, Westland Row, Dublin, which he held for nearly twenty years. He graduated Mus. Bac. at Dublin University in 1892, and was editor of the Lyra Ecclesiastica from 1884 to 1891. He was also for a time professor of music at the Training College, Drumcondra, and examiner for the Royal Irish Academy of Music, and was one of the founders of the Feis Ceoil. As a composer he wrote four Masses, an operetta called An Irish May-Day, numerous Motets and part-songs, and was editor of Curwen's Latin Series, including Masses and Motets in Tonic Sol-fa as well as in Staff Notation. He was in indifferent health for the past few years.

H. B. DICKIN, secretary of the Federation of British Music Industries, at the age of fifty-two. Educated at Christ's Hospital and at Sidney Sussex College, he took up a career as music-master in various schools, but abandoned it about 1909-10 in favour of musical journalism. For several years assistant musical critic to the Morning Post and afterwards to the Daily Telegraph, he did great service by his kindness and fluent, unaffected writing. He found his true bent, however, in his work for the Federation of British Music Industries, for besides being a musician and a writer he was a capable organizer of business. His special achievement was the scheme of newspaper publicity which has done service to British music industries since its inception two years ago. It is said that Mr. Dickin's articles and paragraphs have been published in over a thousand newspapers and periodicals in all parts of the world.

JOSEPH HUBBALL STILLIARD, at the Cloisters, Windsor Castle, in his seventy-seventh year. He was taken ill on November 15, the forty-fifth anniversary of his appointment to St. George's Chapel. He was a member of an old Birmingham family, and as a boy sang in Aston Church choir. Before beginning his long connection with St. George's Chapel he held posts at York Minster, Gloucester Cathedral, and St. Paul's Cathedral. In his prime he was considered to be one of the finest altos in the country. A chorister to the last, he sang, during the unconsciousness that immediately preceded his death, the alto of a setting of the Nunc dimittis in which he first took part about forty years ago. It was his last utterance.

Mrs. VOGT, wife of Dr. A. S. Vogt, at Wellesley Hospital, Toronto. She was an accomplished musician, and a member of the Mendelssohn Choir during her husband's conductorship. The many friends of Dr. Vogt in this country will join us in a sincere expression of sympathy.

COMUS AT ETON

The Masque of Comus, with music by Dr. Arne, was performed at Eton College on December 11. A talented company had been brought together by Mr. Hubert Langley, and the revival, excellently carried out in every particular, made a highly popular and very interesting entertainment. The music, which is melodious throughout and appeals to all alike, was well presented. The cast included Miss Elizabeth Mitchell-Innes as the Lady, Miss Betty Potter (at short notice) as the Nymph, Miss Lettice Rate as the Attendant Spirit, and Mr. Langley as Comus. Miss Muriel Rate conducted an orchestra of strings and oboes, and Miss Kathleen Talbot earned the chief honours as 'producer.'

CONTENTS.

	Page
Henry Littleton (with Portrait)	17
The Truth about Gounod. By F. Corder	20
Arthur Bliss. By Edwin Evans	20
A Question for Critics. By Alfred Kalisch	24
Innovation and Cliché in Music. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	25
Nietzsche and Bizet. By John W. Klein	27
Has Music Descriptive Power? By Eric Blom	30
Books on Orchestration: An Historical Sketch. By Adam Carse	31
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	33
Poetry and Modern Choralism. By Arnold Fettes	35
Dr. Vaughan Williams's Mass	36
Occasional Notes	37
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	39
New Music	40
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	49
Church and Organ Music	49
Competition Festival Record	52
The Amateurs' Exchange	54
Mr. W. W. Cobbett on Chamber Music	54
Letters to the Editor	57
Sixty Years Ago	58
Sharps and Flats	58
Trinity College of Music	58
The Gervase Elwes Memorial	59
London Concerts	59
Students' Operas	62
Bach's Mass at Oundle	62
Music in the Provinces	63
Manchester and District	65
Deering's Country Cryes	66
Music in Ireland	66
Musical Festival in South Africa	67
Musical Notes from Abroad	67
Obituary	71
Comus at Eton	72

Music:

John Ball shot them all. Four-Part Song. By ADAM CARSE 41

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. Portrait of Henry Littleton. Printed in Colour.
2. 'Whether I find thee.' Part-Song. By Edward Elgar.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

CARSE, ADAM.—"John Ball shot them all." Four-part Song. (No. 959, The Musical Times.) 2d.
CAVENDISH, MICHAEL.—"Six Ayres to four Voyces." Transcribed by PETER WARLOCK and PHILIP WILSON:

- "Wanton, come hither." (No. 1408, Novello's Part-song Book.) 2d.
- "Say, shepherds, say." (No. 958, The Musical Times.) 2d.
- "Fair are those eyes." (No. 1409, Novello's Part-song Book.) 2d.
- "Farewell, despair." (No. 1410, Novello's Part-song Book.) 2d.
- "Sly Thief." (No. 1411, Novello's Part-song Book.) 2d.
- "What things more cruel." (No. 1412, Novello's Part-song Book.) 2d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

CORRI, GHITA.—"Church of Christ Incarnate." Hymn. 1½d. Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.
CRASTON, E. S.—"The merciful and gracious Lord." Harvest Anthem. 3d.
ELGAR, EDWARD.—Romance. From Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte. 3s.
—"Light of the World." From "The Light of Life." String Parts (4), 2s. 8d.
HAMILTON-GELL, REV. A. W.—Seven Christmas Carols and Hymns. 3d.
HARWOOD, BASIL.—Rhapsody. (No. 14, Original Compositions for the Organ by BASIL HARWOOD.) 3s.
ARMAN, ROBERT F.—"The Hunt Cup," or "Chanticleer's Race." A Part-song for Mixed Voices. 1s.
—"Ye Olde Song." Carol for Christmas. 3d.
KARG-ELERT, SIGFRID.—"Homage to Handel." 54 Studies in Variation Form. (No. 89, Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series.) 3s. 6d.
MARCHANT, STANLEY.—"Nonsense Songs." Words and Illustrations by HUGH CHESTERMAN. 5s.
MOUNTFORD, FRANKLYN.—"See, by the watch-fire's cheerful glow." Carol. 3d.
CONNOR-MORRIS, G.—Communion Service in E flat. (No. 66, Short Settings of the Holy Communion.) 2s.
PURCELL, HENRY.—"Nymphs and Shepherds." Arranged as a Two-part Song by GEORGE RATHBONE. (No. 207, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 3d.
RICHARDS, IVOR.—Sevenfold Amen. 1½d.
SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 367, contains the following music in both notations.—"Alo and Aloft." Unison Song by R. T. WHITE. "Cradle Song." Carol. (Unison, with optional Three-part Chorus.) By G. VINCENT EVANS. 2d.
SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.
No. 1346. "Song of the Shoemakers." Unison Song. GUSTAV HOLST 2d.
SHERLOCK, E. L.—"Peace on earth." Christmas Carol. 1½d.
SPENCE, REV. HORACE.—"The Reproaches." A simple setting, suitable for singing in unison or harmony. (No. 1074, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 2d.
SULLIVAN, ARTHUR.—"The long day closes." Arranged for s.s.a.a. (No. 476, Novello's Trios, Quartets, &c.) 4d.
TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:
ROBSON, R. W.—A Summer Song. Part-Song. 3d.
TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

- No. 2399. "Only a pin." Part-song for T.T.B.B. A. H. BREWER 3d.
- No. 2401. "How far is it to Bethlehem?" Christmas Anthem. GEOFFREY SHAW 2d.

WADELY, F. W.—Three Short and Easy Postludes (Second Set). (No. 90, Original Compositions for the Organ, New Series.) 2s. 3d.

WILLIAMS, GERRARD.—"The Isle." Part-song for s.s.a. (No. 477, Novello's Trios, Quartets, &c.) 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BACH, J. S.—The Little Book of Chorales. Arranged for Chorus and Men's Voices. By CECIL FORSYTH. 35 cents (1s. 6d.).

LEMARE, E. H.—Twelve short Improvisations for the Organ. Book 2. $1 (4s.).

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address. 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

Musical Directors in Search of Something New should procure

ELKIN & CO.'S 'PIANO AND STRINGS' SERIES

A collection of good modern pieces in the lighter style, arranged for Piano, Two Violins, 'Cello, Double-Bass (optional).

- | | | | |
|--------------------------------|--------------|---------------------------|------------------|
| 1. CARISSIMA | Edward Elgar | 8. REVERIE | Edward MacDowell |
| 2. ROSEMARY | Edward Elgar | 9. DREAM CASTLES | Brian Hope |
| 3. INTERMEZZO | Cyril Scott | 10. NOCTURNETTE | Brian Hope |
| 4. PASSACAGLIA | Cyril Scott | 11. TWO EASTERN SONGS | Agnes Mary Lang |
| 5. THREE LITTLE WALTZES, No. 1 | Cyril Scott | 12. CORONACH | Edgar Barratt |
| 6. THREE LITTLE WALTZES, No. 2 | Cyril Scott | 13. MENUET ANTIQUE | Robert Elkin |
| 7. VESPERALE | Cyril Scott | 14. MOONLIGHT ON THE LAKE | Roger Quilter |

(INTERMEZZO from "Where the Rainbow Ends.")

Price each 2s. net.

No fee or permission necessary for public performance.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

MOLLENHAUER FLUTES AND PICCOLOS

MESSRS. J. MOLLENHAUER & SONS possess a hundred years' world-wide reputation as makers of first-class Wood-Wind Instruments. Their Flutes and Piccolos are unrivalled in purity of tone, pleasing intonation, and solidity of mechanism, and are consequently used by the leading artists in every land.

Catalogue from—

FAUPEL BROTHERS,

4, 5, OLD CHANGE, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.4.

Telephone: City 5693.

MUSIC COMPOSED TO WORDS; Piano

Accompaniments to Airs, Melodies Harmonized. Compositions REVISED. Transpositions. Band Parts. Commissions undertaken for special Music, Words, or Complete Songs. Send MSS. or Lyrics for Quotation, or state requirements.—Mr. L. Charles McKellow, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

LAST pre-war model SCHIEDMAYER Drawing-Room GRAND PIANO, for SALE. New condition and in the perfection of touch and tone. A superb instrument. Substituting upright on account of want of room. Apply, "G. T.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ST. LUKE'S CHURCH, Chelsea, S.W. TENOR and BASS WANTED. £16 each. Apply to Organist, c/o Mr. Hinder, The School House, King Street, Chelsea, S.W.

TENOR VACANCY, Christ Church, Lancaster Gate. Terms on application to Organist.

ST. JOHN'S, Notting Hill, W. ALTO, TENOR, and BASS required. Salary, £16 per annum. Write, J. S. Robson, 33, Colville Terrace, W.11.

ALTO (Lady) WANTED at once for Presbyterian Church Choir, Bayswater, W. Must have good voice and read well. Two services Sunday, Friday rehearsal, and occasional services as required. Salary, £15 per annum. Apply, by letter only, stating experience, to Charles R. Willis, 9, Milman Road, N.W.6.

ST. MARK'S, North Audley Street, W. Assistant ORGANIST required. Churchman, Communicant. £25 per annum, and extras. Light duties. Must be good extempore player and Accompanist; all professional choir. Best music only. Write, Maurice Vinden, The Fawns Manor, Bedfont, Middlesex.

ORGANIST & CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. Mary's, Brookfield, Dartmouth Park Road, N.W.5. Salary £100. Catholic Services. Knowledge of Plainsong essential. Apply, by letter only, to Vicar.

ORGANIST REQUIRED for Clarendon Park Wesleyan Church, Leicester. Three manuals. Applications, stating age, qualifications, and salary required, to Thos. Holt, Kenilworth, Stonegate Road, Leicester.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Dalry Parish Church. Salary £80. Good scope for qualified musician. Applications and testimonials to be lodged with Rod. McDonald, Session Clerk, Dalry, Ayrshire, not later than January 10.

LADY, L.R.A.M., requires post as ORGANIST in Church or Chapel. Small remuneration. Must be within ten miles' radius of Reading. Apply, "J. S. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

YOUNG LADY (holding advanced grade certificate in Organ Playing) seeks post as ASSISTANT in return for Organ Practice. Apply by letter, "E. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TENOR (£25). St. Jude's, Earl's Court. Good Reader essential. Letter, Choirmaster, 9, Marlborough Road, W.5.

PIANIST REQUIRED for two Services every Sunday. Near Notting Hill Gate. State experience. £26 per annum. "R. P.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O.—Secure your Models for January Exam. Valuable hints. Send 5s. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC FOR LENT.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Edited by EDWARD ELGAR and IVOR ATKINS. 5s.; paper boards, 7s.; cloth, gilt, 9s. Vocal Parts, 2s. each. Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 19s. per 100.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. 4s.; paper boards, 6s. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 19s. per 100.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Abridged, as used at St. Paul's Cathedral, 3s.; paper boards, 5s. Book of Words, with Music to the Chorales, 8d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. John.) J. S. BACH. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST. G. F. HANDEL. 6s.; paper boards, 8s.; cloth, gilt, 10s. Abridged edition for Church use, 2s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) J. HAYDN. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) CH. GOUNOD. 2s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ("Der Tod Jesu"). C. H. GRAUN. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s. Choruses only, 2s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. H. SCHÜTZ. 2s.

PASSION MUSIC (from the Oratorio "St. Peter"). By SIR JULIUS BENEDICT. 3s.

OUT OF DARKNESS. (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. GEORGE HENSCHL (Op. 30). 5s.

OUT OF DARKNESS (De Profundis). (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Composed by CH. GOUNOD. English or Latin words. 2s.

ZION'S WAYS DO LANGUISH. Soprano Solo and Chorus, from "Gallia" (Motet). CH. GOUNOD. 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, &c., as sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, preceding Bach's Passion on Tuesday in Holy Week. Arranged by J. STAINER. 4d. Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The Music composed by J. BARNBY. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Set to the well-known Ancient Chant, as arranged and harmonised by VINCENT NOVELLO. Price 3d.; Ditto, Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. (Chant Setting.) The Music composed by EDGAR PETTMAN. Price 2d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by GREGORIO ALLEGRI. As used at St. Paul's Cathedral Lenten Services. Edited by GEORGE C. MARTIN. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by G. P. DA PALESTRINA. Edited by W. BARCLAY SQUIRE. Latin and English words. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F sharp minor. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words, 8d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. A simple Unison Arrangement with Organ Accompaniment, 14d. *Orchestral Parts of the works marked * can be had.*

THE STORY OF THE CROSS

FOR VOICES AND ORGAN

With Short Interludes, giving opportunity for Meditation.

THE WORDS BY
THE REV. E. MONRO
SET TO MUSIC BY

BUTTON, H. ELLIOT 3d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (Sol-fa, 14d.) 4d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (Sol-fa, 14d.) 4d.
SOMERVELL, ARTHUR (Sol-fa, 14d.) 4d.
STAINER, J. (Sol-fa, 14d.) (also with Welsh words) 4d.

Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100.
Large Type Edition, 2s. 6d. per 100.

THE REPROACHES

SET TO MUSIC BY

DYKES, REV. J. B. 4d.
GOUNOD, CH. 3d.
HOYTE, W. S. 6d.
PALESTRINA (together with the proper plain-chant melodies) (Edited by W. S. Vale) 6d.
SPENCE, REV. H. (for singing in Unison or Harmony) 2d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (Double Choir) (unaccompanied) 4d.

THE BENEDICITE

SET TO MUSIC BY THE FOLLOWING COMPOSERS.

ADLAM, FRANK (in F, Chant Form)	2d.
BAIRSTOW, E. C. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter)	4d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in E flat)	2d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in G)	2d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in D, Unison)	4d.
BEST, W. T. (in C). (Sol-fa, 14d.)	4d.
BLAIR, HUGH (in G)	2d.
BRIDGE, J. F., JAMES TURLE, and HAYES	2d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT (in D)	2d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT (Shortened Form)	2d.
COBB, G. F. (in G)	3d.
COULDREY, H. R. (Chant in G)	4d.
COULDREY, H. R. (in D, Chant Form)	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	3d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	6d.
ELLIOTT, M. B. (in G)	2d.
ELLIOTT, R. B. (in G)	2d.
EYRE, ALFRED J. (in E flat)	3d.
EYRE, ALFRED J. (No. 2, in F)	2d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (in F, Chant Form)	6d.
FROST, PERCY H. (in D)	3d.
GADSBY, HENRY (in G, Chant Form)	2d.
GALE, C. R. (in D)	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in C, Chant Form)	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in G, Unison)	2d.
GODFREY, A. E. (in C)	4d.
GODFREY, A. E. (No. 2, in G)	4d.
H. B. C. (Three Chants)	2d.
HERVEY, F. A. J. (in A flat, Chant Form)	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in E flat)	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in D)	2d.
HUGHES, W. (in E flat)	2d.
LIFFE, FREDERICK (No. 1, in E flat, Chant Form)	2d.
LEMARE, E. H. (in B flat)	4d.
LYDD, C. HARFORD (in E flat, Chant Form)	3d.
LUCAS, P. T. (in A flat, shortened form)	2d.
MACPHERSON, CHARLES (in F, rhythmic setting)	6d.
MARTIN, G. C. (No. 1, in F; No. 2, in E flat; No. 3, in G)	6d.
MATTHEWS, T. R. (in E flat)	3d.
MERBECKE (arranged by GEORGE C. MARTIN)	3d.
MILLER, C. E. (second setting) (in G, Chant Form)	3d.
PETTMAN, EDGAR (No. 1, in C; No. 2, set to Double Chants)	2d.
PETTMAN, EDGAR (in E flat)	2d.
PULLEN, J. (in E flat)	14d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (in B flat)	6d.
SLATER, W. (in F)	2d.
SMITH, BOYTON (in A flat)	2d.
SMITH, CHAS. W. (in C). S.A.T.T.B., also simplified for S.A.T.B.	3d.
STAINER, J., and B. BLAXLAND (in F, Chant Form)	2d.
STAINER, J., R. DE LACY, A. GIBBS, and F. CHAMPNEYS	2d.
STAINER, J., W. WINN, and F. WALKER	2d.
Ditto (Welsh words). (Sol-fa, 14d.)	2d.
STAINER, J., J. TURLE, and H. S. IRONS	3d.
STAINER, J. (in D, Chant Form)	2d.
STEWART, C. HYLTON (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter)	4d.
BARNBY, J.	2d.
FOSTER, JOHN	2d.
SMITH, MONTEM (two settings)	2d.
TURLE, J. (two settings)	2d.
WICKES, C. A. (two settings)	2d.
TOZER, FERRIS (in G)	3d.
TOZER, FERRIS (in A). Short and simple	3d.
WEST, JOHN E. (in G)	6d.
WEST, JOHN E. (in C)	2d.
WESTBURY, G. H. (in C)	2d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (in D) (Shortened Form)	2d.
WOOD, W. G. (in D)	2d.
WRIGLEY, G. F. (in G, Quadruple Chant)	2d.

THE OFFICE OF "TENEBRÆ"

AND

DIRECTIONS FOR SINGING

"THE PASSION"

FOR USE IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND

EDITED BY

CYRIL W. MILLER.

Price Two Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

THE PASSION A MEDITATION

ON THE
SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST
FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS

BY
J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s. Words, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Words only, 1½d.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)
FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
COMPOSED BY

ANTON DVORÁK.

(Op. 58.)

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY FRED. J. W. CROWE.

Price Five Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 3s. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100. Vocal parts, 1s. each.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts on hire.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED

WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s. Tonic Sol-fa, 2s.
String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. Full Score, MS.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS SELECTED, AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED, BY

HAROLD MOORE.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. Strings parts, 9s. 6d.
Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s. String Parts, 15s. 6d.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR

TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.
Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100. Words of Hymns, 6s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

FOR USE DURING THE SEASON OF LENT, AND ON GOOD FRIDAY, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY CHOIRS

BY

E. V. HALL.

Price Tenpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, with Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY

VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FERRIS TOZER.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

VIA DOLOROSA

A DEVOTION

FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS

SUITABLE FOR THE SEASONS OF LENT AND PASSIONTIDE

THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."

Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity"
Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."

Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing."

Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.

Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 3s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W. 1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

O LAMB OF GOD.

FOR T. and B. SOLI.

From R. WALKER ROBSON'S

COMMUNION SERVICE IN F, forms an excellent Prelude to The Crucifixion.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

IN THE YORK SERIES.

809. COMMUNION SERVICE, B minor... Arthur Henry Brown 6d.
813. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, B minor

Arthur Henry Brown 4d.

815. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, B flat C. W. Parnell 6d.

816. LIGHT (S.A.T.B.) ... T. Tertius Noble 4d.

817. TO MY LOVE (T.T.B.B.) ... T. Tertius Noble 4d.

818. WHEN I AM DEAD (S.A.T.B.) ... T. Tertius Noble 4d.

819. SAVE US, LORD, OR WE PERISH (S.A.T.B.) T. Tertius Noble 4d.

820. Ditto (T.T.B.B.) T. Tertius Noble 4d.

821. BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD (S.A.T.B.) T. Tertius Noble 5d.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

Performed at the Leeds Musical Festival.

ODE TO DEATH.

POEM BY

WALT WHITMAN.

SET TO MUSIC FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

(Op. 38).

Price, One Shilling and Sixpence.

String Parts, 3s. 4d. Full Score and Wind Parts on hire.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HOMAGE TO HANDEL

54 STUDIES IN VARIATION FORM

FOR ORGAN

ON A GROUND BASS OF

HANDEL

BY

SIGFRID KARG-ELERT

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

By ALFRED H. ALLEN

Organist Collegiate Church of The Holy Trinity, Stratford-upon-Avon.

SONATA FOR ORGAN.

Half-a-Crown net.

MOTET FOR CHORUS AND ORGAN.

"Blessed are they that mourn."

Sixpence net.

HYMN FOR THE DEPARTED.

Sixpence net.

Essay, with Foreword by Sir W. H. HADOW, C.B.E.

FROM THE ORGAN LOFT.

Half-a-Crown net.

LONDON: STAINER & BELL, LIMITED.

OXFORD: BASIL BLACKWELL.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

CATHEDRAL ORGANISTS

PAST AND PRESENT.

A RECORD OF THE SUCCESSION OF ORGANISTS

OF THE

Cathedrals, Chapels Royal, and Principal Collegiate Churches of the United Kingdom, from about the period of the Reformation until the present day.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES, EXTRACTS FROM THE CHAPTER BOOKS, ANECDOTES, Etc.

By JOHN E. WEST.

Price ... Nine Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SOLOS FROM THE SACRED CANTATAS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

In eight Books—each Book, Two Shillings.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

- Air WITHIN MY HEART OF HEARTS ("A Stronghold Sure").
- Air OUR JESUS HATH FOR AYE ("God goeth up").
- Air MY HEART EVER TRUSTING ("God so loved the world").
- Air O GRANT US, MIGHTY LORD ("Jesus, now will we praise Thee").
- Air SIGHING, WEEPING ("My Spirit was in heaviness").

ALTO.

- Air THOU, WHOSE PRAISES NEVER END ("Bide with us").
- Recit. { THE FATHER HATH APPOINTED HIM ("God goeth up").
- Air { MY SPIRIT HIM DESCRIBES ("God goeth up").
- Air INTO THY HANDS ("God's time is best").
- Air REJOICE, YE SOULS, ELECT AND HOLY ("O Light Everlasting").

TENOR.

- Air LORD, TO US THYSELF BE SHOWING ("Bide with us").
- Recit. { WHY HAST THOU THEN, O GOD ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
- Air { FAST MY BITTER TEARS ARE FLOWING ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
- Air REJOICE, O MY SPIRIT ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
- Recit. { THE MIGHTY GUARDIAN ("Thou Guide of Israel").
- Air { HIS FACE MY SHEPHERD LONG IS HIDING ("Thou Guide of Israel").
- Air AND WHY ART THOU, MY SOUL, SO FEARFUL ("When will God recall").

BASS.

- Recit. { HE COMES, THE LORD OF LORDS ("God goeth up").
- Air { 'TIS HE, WHO ALL ALONE ("God goeth up").
- Recit. { IT IS NOT MINE ("God so loved the world").
- Air { ON MY BEHALF " " "
- Recit. { YEA, THIS THY WORD ("Thou Guide of Israel").
- Air { WHOM JESUS DEIGNS " " "
- Air YET SILENCE ("When will God recall").

SECOND SET.

SOPRANO.

- Air OPEN WIDE, MY HEART ("Come, Redeemer").
- Air FATHER, WHAT I PROFFER ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
- Air COME, VISIT, YE GLOWING ("How brightly shines").
- Air I HAVE WAITED FOR THE LORD ("If thou but sufferest").

ALTO.

- Air GOD'S ENSAMPLE THUS TO FOLLOW ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
- Air JESUS SLEEPS ("Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth").
- Recit. { INCLINE THINE EAR ("Lord, rebuke me not").
- Air { THE LORD HATH HEARD ("Lord, rebuke me not").
- Air ALL EARTHLY POWERS FROM GOD INHERIT ("Praise thou the Lord").

TENOR.

- Recit. { THE SAVIOUR NOW APPEARETH ("Come, Redeemer").
- Aria { COME, JESU, COME ("Come, Redeemer").
- Air WHAT VOICE IS WITH THE TEMPEST ("From depths of woe").
- Air TUNEFUL HARPS AND VOICES ("How brightly shines").
- Air THOU ART MY GOD ("Lord, rebuke me not").

BASS.

- Air THE PASCHAL VICTIM HERE WE SEE ("Christ lay in death's dark prison").
- Air DO THINE ALMS ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
- Air WITH JESUS WILL I GO ("Wailing, crying").
- Recit. { AH, WHEN ON THAT GREAT DAY ("Watch ye, pray ye").
- Air { BLESSED RESURRECTION DAY ("Watch ye, pray ye").

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH. CLOTH, TEN SHILLINGS EACH.

No.	No. 1.	No. 5.
1. Interlude	Th. Dubois	1. Jour de Noces J. Stuart Archer
2. Chanson de Matin	Edward Elgar	2. Festival Prelude on "Ein feste Burg" W. Faulkes
3. Fantasia on the old melody "Urbs Beata"	W. Faulkes	3. Legend Harvey Grace
4. There is a green hill far away	Ch. Gounod	4. Allegretto Pastorale H. M. Higgs
5. Marche Triomphale	Alexandre Guilmant	5. Benediction Nuptiale Alfred Hollins
6. Ave Maria	A. Henselt	6. Sursum Corda John N. Ireland
7. Grand Chœur No. 2.	Alfred Hollins	7. Alla Marcia John N. Ireland
8. Andantino in D flat	Edwin H. Lemare	8. Adagio Cantabile Edwin H. Lemare
9. Chanson Triste	P. Tschaiikowsky	9. Fanfare J. Lemmens
10. Prelude to "Lohengrin," Act I.	R. Wagner	10. Intermezzo B. Luard-Selby
11. Romanza	W. Wolstenholme	11. Easter Morn John E. West
12. Allegretto in E flat	W. Wolstenholme	12. Finale in B flat W. Wolstenholme
No. 2.	No. 6.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).
1. Chanson de Nuit	Edward Elgar	1. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26) Beethoven
2. Alla Marcia	Myles B. Foster	2. Blest are they that mourn (Requiem) Brahms
3. Minuetto	Alexandre Guilmant	3. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35) Chopin
4. Lied	H. Hofmann	4. Funeral March William Faulkes
5. Barcarolle	H. Hofmann	5. Funeral March ("Saul") Handel
6. Spring Song	Alfred Hollins	6. I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah") Handel
7. The Curfew	Edward J. Horsman	7. Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte") Mendelssohn
8. Pastoral in E	Edwin H. Lemare	8. O rest in the Lord ("Elijah") Mendelssohn
9. Ave Maria d'Arcadelt	Franz Liszt	9. Marche Solonnelle Schubert
10. Cantique d'Amour	Theo. Wendt	10. Marche Funèbre Tschaiikowsky
11. The Seraph's Strain	W. Wolstenholme	11. Romance in A flat H. Sandford Turner
12. Le Carillon	W. Wolstenholme	12. Festal Commemoration John E. West
No. 3.	No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1. Scherzo in A flat	Edward C. Bairstow	1. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26) Beethoven
2. Melody	S. Coleridge-Taylor	2. Blest are they that mourn (Requiem) Brahms
3. Serenade	H. Hofmann	3. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35) Chopin
4. Bridal March	Alfred Hollins	4. Funeral March William Faulkes
5. Berceuse	Edwin H. Lemare	5. Funeral March ("Saul") Handel
6. Melodie in E	S. Rachmaninoff	6. I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah") Handel
7. Aubade	A. Strelzki	7. Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte") Mendelssohn
8. Nocturne in C sharp minor	P. Tschaiikowsky	8. O rest in the Lord ("Elijah") Mendelssohn
9. Procession to the Minster ("Lohengrin")	R. Wagner	9. Marche Solonnelle Schubert
10. Passacaglia	John E. West	10. Marche Funèbre Tschaiikowsky
11. Fantasia upon the Plain-song Melody "Ad cœnam Agni"	Healey Willan	11. Finale from "Symphonie Pathétique" Tschaiikowsky
12. Allegretto in A flat	W. Wolstenholme	12. Lament John E. West
No. 4.	No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1. Arietta	S. Coleridge-Taylor	1. Chorale Prelude, "In dulci júbilo" J. S. Bach
2. Souvenir de Printemps	Joseph Holbrooke	2. Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio") J. S. Bach
3. Andante in D	Alfred Hollins	3. Quem Vidistis, Pastores W. T. Best
4. Pavane in A	Bernard Johnson	4. Venite in Bethlehem W. T. Best
5. Harmonies du Soir	Sigfrid Karg-Elert	5. December—Christmas Morn Frederic H. Cowen
6. An Eton Memorial March	C. H. Lloyd	6. Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols William Faulkes
7. Allegro alla Marcia	A. L. Peace	7. For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah") Handel
8. Visione	J. Rheinberger	8. Pastoral Theodore Kullak
9. Chant sans Paroles	P. Tschaiikowsky	9. Chorus of Shepherds J. Lemmens
10. Prelude to Act III. ("Die Meistersinger")	R. Wagner	10. Christmas Pastoral Gustav Merkel
11. Allegro Pomposo	John E. West	11. A Christmas Pastoral B. Luard-Selby
12. Canzona	W. Wolstenholme	12. Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.") John E. West

SHORT PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

These Short Preludes are intended for use chiefly as Introductory Voluntaries to Divine Service, more especially in those churches where the time allowed for such is, of necessity, somewhat limited.

No.	Book I.	Book IV.
1. Andante Grazioso	Thomas Adams	1. "Elevation"—Andante e Legato Thomas Adams
2. Andante	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Religioso Myles B. Foster
3. Largamente	George J. Bennett	3. "Simplicity"—Andante Barry M. Gilholy
4. Andante Religioso	Myles B. Foster	4. Largamente R. G. Hailing
5. Andantino	Alfred Hollins	5. "Dialogue"—Andante Grazioso Charles H. Lloyd
6. Adagio Cantabile	Alfred Hollins	6. Andantino Arthur W. Marchant
7. Larghetto	Charles J. May	7. Con Moto Moderato William Sewell
8. Andante con Moto	John E. West	8. Andante Amabile William Sewell
9. Andantino quasi Allegretto	John E. West	9. Andante Clement M. Spurling
10. Andante	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Sostenuto F. Cunningham Woods
Book II.	Book V.
1. Andante con Moto	Thomas Adams	1. "Invocation"—Andante Grazioso Thomas Adams
2. Con Moto	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante con Moto Percy E. Fletcher
3. Moderato	H. A. Chambers	3. Poco Adagio Myles B. Foster
4. Marziale, poco Lento	Myles B. Foster	4. Andante Espressivo Ignace Gibsons
5. Moderato	Alfred Hollins	5. Adagio Alfred Hollins
6. Andantino	Alfred Hollins	6. Poco Lento Charles H. Lloyd
7. Adagio	Charles J. May	7. Andante Dolente Arthur W. Marchant
8. "Hymnus"—Andante e Sostenuto	John E. West	8. Andantino con Tenerezza William Sewell
9. Andante Serioso	John E. West	9. Andante con Moto Clement M. Spurling
10. Adagio	W. Wolstenholme	10. Adagio Molto F. Cunningham Woods
Book III.	Book VI.
1. Moderato e Legato	Thomas Adams	1. Dolente Edmund T. Chipp
2. Moderato	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Sostenuto Myles B. Foster
3. Andante con Moto	George J. Bennett	3. Andantino R. G. Hailing
4. Andante	H. A. Chambers	4. Con Moto Alfred Hollins
5. Grazioso molto Espressivo	Myles B. Foster	5. "Communion"—Cantabile J. Lemmens
6. "Song without Words"—Con Moto	Alfred Hollins	6. Andante Religioso Arthur W. Marchant
7. Andante	Alfred Hollins	7. Lento Charles J. May
8. Andante Dolente	John E. West	8. Larghetto Albert Robins
9. Andante Pastorale	John E. West	9. Adagio e Mesto William Sewell
10. Adagio	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Affetuoso William Sewell

NOVELLO'S POPULAR PIANOFORTE ALBUMS FOR YOUNG PERFORMERS.

HUBERT BATH DOLL'S-HOUSE SUITE

Price Three Shillings.

ERNEST NEWTON WOODLAND DANCES

Price Three Shillings.

FRANCESCO BERGER EIGHTEEN LITTLE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

HUBERT G. OKE THREE PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN HAPPY THOUGHTS

Price Four Shillings.

SCHUMANN PIECES FOR THE YOUNG

Part I., Price 2s. ; Part II., Price 3s.

ARNOLD KRUG TEN LITTLE PIECES

Op. 109.

In two Books. Price Three Shillings each.

SCHUMANN THREE PIANOFORTE SONATAS

(Part III. of Pieces for the Young).

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

ARNOLD KRUG SCENES FROM FAIRY-LAND

In two Books. Price Four Shillings each.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

TH. KULLAK TWENTY-FOUR PIECES

Op. 62 AND 81.

In four Books. Price Two Shillings each.

CLEMENT M. SPURLING OUR VILLAGE IN SUMMER

Price Two Shillings and Threepence.

MAX MAYER BAGATELLES

Price Five Shillings.

E. A. SYDENHAM SIX SHORT AND EASY PIECES

Price Three Shillings.

MENDELSSOHN SIX CHRISTMAS PIECES

Price Two Shillings.

TSCHAIKOWSKY CHRISTMAS ALBUM

In three Books. Price Two Shillings each.

FRANCESCO BERGER FIRST STEPS AT THE PIANOFORTE

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHÉMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

PRICE, COMPLETE, FIVE SHILLINGS; SEPARATELY, 2s. 3d. EACH.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Violin and Pianoforte complete	6	0	Full Score (Full Orchestra)...	15	0
Violin and Pianoforte separately, each	2	3	Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra	9	0	Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra	10	5	Strings, each Number	3	0
Ditto, for Full Orchestra	17	5	Separate String Parts, 8d. each.
			Military Band Arrangement	19	0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

EUGÈNE GOOSSENS.

SUITE FOR PIANO

FROM THE INCIDENTAL MUSIC TO

EAST OF SUEZ

NOW BEING PERFORMED AT HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Price 5s. net.

CIMAROSA-MALAPIERO.

LA CIMAROSIANA. Suite. Five Symphonic Fragments for Orchestra, arranged for Piano by ERIC BLOM.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

JOHN R. HEATH.

POEM. "In the Heart of the Country." Violin and Piano.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W. 1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 960.—Vol. 64
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

FEBRUARY 1 1923

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-SECOND SEASON, 1922-23.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 3, AT 2.30 P.M.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS - ELGAR
THE HYMN OF JESUS - - - HOLST

MISS OLGA HALEY.

MR. JOHN ADAMS.

MR. HAROLD WILLIAMS.

Conductor MR. ADRIAN C. BOULT.

SATURDAY, MARCH 3, AT 2.30 P.M.

HIAWATHA - - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

MISS DORIS VANE.

MR. WILLIAM BOLAND.

MR. FREDERICK TAYLOR.

Conductor MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

At the Organ - Mr. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, K.C.V.O., Mus.Doc., F.R.C.M.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

LECTURES on "The History of Music," will be given by Dr. H. W. Richards on Wednesdays, February 7 and 14, at 3.15.

ORGAN RECITAL, Monday, February 5, at 3.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, February 10 and 24, at 3.

CHAMBER CONCERT, Monday, February 19, at 3.
A Prize of Twenty-five Guineas has been generously offered by W. W. Cobbett, Esq., for a Phantasy Quartet for Strings by ex-students who have left the Institution during the past ten years and who gained at least a bronze medal for harmony. Further particulars on application to J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: Sir HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus.Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

The College offers a complete Course of Musical Instruction to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of 70 Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

There is a JUNIOR DEPARTMENT for pupils under sixteen.

Examinations for the Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) in all subjects held twice a year in April and September.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND
(Founded by Sir S. Ernest Palmer, Bart., F.R.C.M., for the encouragement of All British Composers and Executive Artists).

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 8, p. 127; Augener, p. 254; Peters, Vol. 2, No. 4.)

Pastorale in E, César Franck. (Novello.)

Thems and Variations in D, from Serenade, Op. 8, Beethoven. Best's Arrangements, No. 75, p. 985. (Novello). This Arrangement only.

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the July, 1923, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for January, 1923.

Regulations may be had on application.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

(CORPORATION OF LONDON.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL ... SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.G.S.M.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical subjects and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Opera, and Film work.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

SPRING TERM began January 8th.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools Examinations (open to general public), free.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

ROYAL

MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.

Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1922-1923.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

for instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS

(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council).

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

A HOLIDAY COURSE OF LECTURE LESSONS and Demonstrations in Modern Methods of Music Teaching will be held from January 8th to 11th (inclusive), 1923.

LECTURERS.—Miss Lilian Bucke, Miss Desirée MacEwan, Mrs. Spencer Curwen, Mr. Benjamin Dale, Dr. Stanley Marchant, Mr. Frederick Moore, and Mr. Ernest Read.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Thirty-first Year.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE

Western Correspondence College.

Principal: DR. GERTRUDE BEST,

Mus. Doc., Durham, L.R.A.M.

Expert Preparation for Degrees, Diplomas, and Local Examinations in Music.

SPECIAL COURSE FOR L.R.A.M. PAPER WORK.

MANY RECENT SUCCESSES.

Address, THE STUDIO, GLOUCESTER.

JOHN B. WOOD, MUS. BAC:

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M.

THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

EXPERT TUTORS.

THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY,
COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
INTERPRETATION,
FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
FOR MUSICIANS.

Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institutions have been enrolled as pupils.

Write,

6, BOLTON ROAD, FARNWORTH, POLTON.

APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.

Correspondence Courses in this subject will be given as under:—

(a) First General Course.

(b) Advanced Course.

(c) Course with an additional section for Teachers.

(d) Advanced Course for Teachers.

Further particulars from the Secretary,

(DEPT. A) THE WARDROP CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE,
21, BEDFORD ROW, LONDON, W.C.1.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

DEGREES IN MUSIC.

EXPERT AND INDIVIDUAL TUITION
BY CORRESPONDENCE

FOR

Oxford Preliminary Arts, Durham Matriculation,
A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O., Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc.

Also for B.A. and B.Sc.

The Staff includes highly qualified Graduates in Music, Arts, and Science.

For Terms address:

MR. J. CHARLESTON, B.A. (Hons. Oxon. and Lond.),

14, Elsham Road, Kensington, W.14.

Break away from the Old Senseless 'Practising'

Did you ever stop to think how hopelessly out of date is the old method of teaching the Piano? Constant practising is supposed to be indispensable—but what is it? Merely a short-sighted attempt to bludgeon the mind into insensibility, and to get the muscles to act automatically. By eliminating the old senseless 'practising' which has ruined many a budding musician, the Easy System—'FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD'—dispenses with all the old heart-breaking drudgery of practice. This system is based upon the experience of a practical pianist who has made the science of easy pianoforte playing his life-study.

15,000 Successful Pupils.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

Read my Illustrated Book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing."

This explains fully how I teach the System by Postal Lessons, with details of the very reasonable fee charged. SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE and other eminent musicians use this, THE ORIGINAL POSTAL SYSTEM. No apparatus or special music necessary—just an easily acquired method with much quicker and better results.

Apply for book to-day, but DO NOT OMIT to state whether average or advanced player, or, if a beginner, whether you can or cannot play at sight a simple hymn-tune. The book will be sent free of charge and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C.1.

THE
CHARLES A. GILLETT
SCHOOL OF
MODERN PIANOFORTE PLAYING.

WEIGHT TOUCH.

SPECIALISED INDIVIDUAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS designed particularly for the BUSY TEACHER, KEEN STUDENT, and ENTHUSIASTIC AMATEUR—who realises the importance of SPECIALISED INDIVIDUAL TEACHING, A SOUND KNOWLEDGE of WEIGHT TOUCH and its ACTUAL APPLICATION.

Do you realise that the want of knowledge of the MODERN METHOD of WEIGHT TOUCH is probably the only barrier between you and the music you desire to express?

Teachers still following the OLD UNSCIENTIFIC KNUCKLE TOUCH with all its drudgery and disappointments will find the CHAS. A. GILLETT method refreshing and progressive, and will be able to meet the exceptional technical demands made by the modern composer.

The "Gillett" teaching is being adopted by large numbers of professional Musicians and Soloists; many holding the highest degrees—Mus.Doc., Mus.Bac., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., A.T.C.L., F.T.C.L., A.G.S.M., A.L.A.M., &c., who endorse, by their letters of testimony, the great benefits to be derived from this course.

Coaching for all recognised examinations.

Write to-day in confidence, stating your individual difficulties and the names of one or two pieces you play. If you prefer to call and discuss the lessons by all means do so.

Private Lessons and Consultations Day and Evening.

An Entirely New Departure
HARMONY FOR PIANISTS

BY

DR. PERCY RIDEOUT,
D.MUS. LOND., A R.C.M.

*Being Harmony in Pianoforte Idiom—
without written exercises.*

A COURSE OF INSTRUCTION BY CORRESPONDENCE in CHORDS and ORNAMENTAL DEVICES, together with their TEMPERAMENTAL VALUE as bearing on MUSICAL APPRECIATION and INTERPRETATION, the whole being based on and ILLUSTRATED by music written for the Pianoforte.

AN ESSENTIAL PART OF PIANISTS' EQUIPMENT, affording a CLEAR INSIGHT into the MATERIAL FORMING THE STRUCTURE OF MUSIC, and ITS MEANING.

The foundation of the Art of Style and Interpretation.

For further particulars, apply—

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT
Pianoforte School,

(Studio M.T.), 11, South Molton St., London, W.1.

MR. CHARLES TREE

Islington Choral Society. Lecture. Mr. Hirst, Sec., Jan. 9, 1923:

"From an educational point your Lecture must rank very high—as an entertainment the enthusiastic reception was proof."

Glasgow. Lecture. The Rev. Grove White, January 11, 1923:

"A delighted audience. But under the ripples of laughter was keen appreciation of the wisdom and practical knowledge imparted concerning the great art of speech and song. To listen to his theory, so efficiently exemplified, was a rare treat to the big audience."

Falkirk. Lecture. The Rev. J. A. Dean, January 12, 1923:

"Mr. Tree's method is unconventional, his matter uninvolved. He has conviction and he convinces. We listen to one with respect who can prove his theories by demonstration. Few things are more difficult than to be entertaining and instructive. In the combination Mr. Tree is pre-eminent."

How to ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE PRODUCTION. 5/2.

EXERCISES ON THE "BEL CANTO" (New, 1922), 3/7.

(If difficult to obtain, write author.)

Address: 14, COURTFIELD GARDENS, KENSINGTON, S.W.5.

MORECAMBE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

MAY 3, 4, and 5, 1923.

SYLLABUS OF COMPETITIONS

is now ready, and may be obtained (price 6d., post free), from W. C. FAWCETT, Secretary,
Musical Festival Office, Morecambe.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,

Mus. Doc. Lond.

SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING

See Page 85.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE.

R.C.O. EXAM., JANUARY, 1923.

We have much pleasure in announcing the following Successes (M.C.C. Students):

F.R.C.O. - - - - 3

One of the successful Students (F.R.C.O.) writes:

"I went into the examination-room feeling confident that 'nothing could me dismay.'"

That is a fine spirit to enter the examination-room with, but it is just that spirit that the M.C.C. tuition engenders.

When a Student has worked through a carefully-graduated course, when he has been trained to build up his exercises step by step, when he has seen model workings showing exactly the style required, then he approaches the examination in a spirit of confidence, and invariably emerges triumphantly from the ordeal.

Let us into your secrets—how many times you have failed, what marks you have gained.

All communications are CONFIDENTIAL.

M.C.C., 201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

VOICE TRAINING

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

Dame Clara Butt writes: "I advise all would-be Singers and all interested in the Teaching of Singing to take the 'Simplex' Course. They will find it most helpful."

Mr. Ben Davies writes: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

For Full Particulars, address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Pupils prepared for A.R.C.M. and A.R.A.M. Exams.

Notice of last Pupils' Concert:

"A number of Mr. Albert Garcia's pupils sang excellently at the concert which they gave on Wednesday evening. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8,
Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 Book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority. . . ."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

CALISTHENICS

FOR THE MUSCLES USED IN SINGING

As taught and perfected for 20 years.

Astonishing increase of POWER, QUALITY, RANGE, and EASE of SINGING assured by five minutes' practice
twice (better three times) daily.

No more sore or relaxed throat, or strained voice.

BY CORRESPONDENCE, £3 3s.

THOS. CHURCH SAXBY, L.Mus.T.C.L.,
UNDERCLIFFE, LEWES.

WILLIAM WOLLER

(Dip. Leip. Cons.)

PROFESSOR OF SINGING.

CLASSICAL AND OPERATIC VOCAL COACH.

75, GUNTERSTONE ROAD, WEST KENSINGTON, W.14.

Complete Specialised training for Vocalists (Soloists and Teachers).

Special attention to RESTORATION of MISUSED VOICES.

A few recent Testimonials.

"It would be difficult to find a voice so impaired that Mr. Woller could not completely restore."

"Foremost among the leading Voice-Producers and Singing Masters of this country."

"You have done my voice more good in these few lessons than all the years under other professors."

"Of the many Singing Teachers I have known I have never met one so exceptionally successful with all his pupils as William Woller."

"You attack the subject with such convincing mastery that we know at once that we are on the right road."

"It is well we have in our midst Singing Masters like Mr. Woller who have the intuitive intelligence necessary to apply the result of enlightened research to each individual singer."

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.

TEACHING SINGING AND ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS

Numerous Successes both in Singing and Elocution Exams. at
L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation.

Also Special Short Instructional Courses in Voice-Production and
The Art of Teaching Singing, to meet particular requirements of the General Practitioner in Music.

MR. W. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

INGLESIDE, GOLDSWONG TERRACE, NOTTINGHAM.

To all Pianists, Violinists, and 'Cellists

THE TECHNIQUER.

STEWART MACPHERSON, Esq., F.R.A.M.
and "THE TECHNIQUER."

"I can honestly say that, after doing a great deal of writing—a daily task with me—I find great benefit after a few minutes' use of 'The Techniquer.'"

"The effect is to render the hand at once flexible, and is equivalent to at least half-an-hour of actual practice. So that, when one begins to play, a good deal of unnecessary labour is saved for the actually musical side of one's practice—and to a busy man, that is an asset not to be despised."

"Hand Development," with 15 photos, 1s. 6d.

Full particulars of "The Techniquer" from the Secretary,

Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O.,

'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale,

21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

CLACTON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

The above Council invite offers to provide an Orchestra for their Band Pavilion from and including March 30th (Good Friday), to June 29th next, the conditions of engagement being:

The Orchestra to consist of eight male musicians, to include pianist to accompany vocal items, &c., as required.

Two performances to be given each day, 1½ hours afternoon, 2 hours evening, seven days per week.

The Council to have the option of increasing from time to time the strength of the Orchestra up to fifteen as the season progresses. Quotations should include rate per extra musician provided beyond the eight mentioned above.

The members of the Orchestra to wear evening dress if required.

The Council will provide a piano, an organ, and music-stands

Quotations, which must be inclusive of all charges, should be sent, to the undersigned, under sealed cover, endorsed "Orchestra," not later than Noon on Wednesday, February 7th next, accompanied by copies of recent testimonials, particulars of previous engagements, &c.

The Council do not bind themselves to accept any offer received.

GEO. T. LEWIS,

Clerk to the Council.

Town Hall,

Clacton-on-Sea.

11th January, 1923.

STUDY AT HOME FOR YOUR DIPLOMA

Complete and Individual Preparation for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc., and all Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

These Postal Courses enable you to study at home, in your own time, and at your own convenience.
Their thoroughness is made manifest by the great number of successes achieved by Dr. Sprankling's pupils at all the leading examinations for diplomas and degrees.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

1. First and Final Mus. Bac. and
Mus. Doc., London and Durham,
1923.

Numerous Successes in Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc., including 2 Final
Mus. Doc. last month.

2. A.R.C.M. (April and September).

Full Preparation, including Scheme for Self-Preparation in Aural Tests, and Annotation of Test-Pieces.

Numerous Successes at A.R.C.M.

3. KEYBOARD HARMONY.

For Pianists and Organists.

A Postal Course intended to help students in Practical Work at Piano and Organ—and as an aid to Examination work and Sight-Reading.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

PRACTICAL WORK—PERSONAL LESSONS IN LONDON AND BRISTOL.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
48, LINDEN ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone Bristol 3033.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE.

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A., A.C.P.

MATRIC.: SUCCESSES - 85

MUS. BAC.

Tuition until you gain the Degree.

£20

A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.

We attribute the SUCCESSES of our Students to the following causes:

1. The Courses are carefully graduated.
2. Students are taught to build up their exercises step by step.
3. A special preliminary Course is sent to students who are weak in any subject.
4. If a student does not make satisfactory progress under one tutor, he is at once placed under another.

L.R.A.M.

1. SINGING.
2. PIANOFORTE.
3. AURAL TRAINING.
4. VOICE CULTURE.
5. ELOCUTION.

Gain No. 3 or No. 4 and secure a good

TEACHING APPOINTMENT.

L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte.)

A successful Student writes: "The Lessons in Phrasing, Fingering, Touch, Pedalling, Teaching, Notes on 'Method in Study,' and corrections to papers were excellent and thorough in EVERY DETAIL."

L.R.A.M. (Singing.)

"I was complimented by the Examiners on my paper on 'Vocal Physiology.'"

A.R.C.M.

This examination is now held in April and September. The teaching of Musical Appreciation is a new subject, and as it is our one desire to keep up-to-date, we have commissioned a well-known tutor with an intimate knowledge of the requirements to draw up a special Course.

Students with some knowledge of the subject are advised to take up our Special Course of Ten Lessons, for the April Examination, 1923, but those with an elementary knowledge should commence at once on our Ordinary Course of Twenty Lessons and sit for the September Examination.

A. Mus. T.C.L.

This examination is entirely theoretical. The results achieved by M.C.C. Students are well-known.

FREE -

MODERN GUIDE TO MATRIC.,
MUS. BAC., A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A. Mus. T.C.L.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

FRANK CARLETON

(TENOR).

ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, Etc.

"Mr. Carleton is the possessor of a powerful tenor voice of rare range and capacity, and his rendering of the song, 'How lovely are Thy dwellings' (Liddle), was a fine performance."—

Northwich Guardian, July 14, 1922.

Address: 58, Hazel Street, Audenshaw, near Manchester.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT

TENOR

St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.

108, Stapleton Hall Road, Stroud Green, N.4.

MILLARD THOMPSON

(L.T.C.L.), TENOR.

17, Forest View Road, Higham's Park, E.17.

MR. ALBERT FRISBY.

BASS.

Oratorio, Lenten Cantata, Concerts, &c.

70, St. George's Road, Forest Gate, E.7. East 3337.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.).

BASSO-CANTANTE.

OF QUEEN'S HALL, KINGSWAY HALL, ETC.

Bookings include:

"Messiah," "Elijah," "St. Paul," "Creation,"
 "Holy City," "Last Judgment," "Crucifixion,"
 "Olivet to Calvary," "Penitence, Pardon, and Peace,"
 "Hiawatha," &c.

"ELIJAH,"—"He maintained his interpretation at a high level, but as usual he excelled in the dramatic numbers."—

Middlesex Chronicle, 21/10/22.

"His enunciation left nothing to be desired."—

Manchester Guardian, 20/11/22.

Now booking for Ballad and Choral Concerts, Oratorio.

Available for Passion Music in London or Provinces.

For vacant dates, apply,

33, HOUNSLOW AVENUE, HOUNSLOW, MIDD.X.

Phone: Hounslow 41.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.

8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

SOLO PIANIST.

For terms, vacant dates, &c., apply to
 ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MEMORISE YOUR MUSIC.

LILIAS MACKINNON

undertakes to develop

PERFECT MEMORY FOR PIANISTS

in Six Correspondence Lessons for £3 3s.

EVERY PUPIL SUCCESSFUL.

Write for Booklet, with Testimonials,

1, Paultons Square, Chelsea, S.W.3. 'Phone: Kensington 4289.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN

VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
 FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT,
 MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.

Nearly 700 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
 (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A., Performer and Teacher.

Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.

"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
 Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

STUDY AT HOME
FOR YOUR DIPLOMA.

See Page 85.

SYLVIA WHYTE

WRITER OF LYRICS.

Words written to any Music.

Lyrics of every description to order.

Collaboration or Revision of Plays and Librettos.

19, Clifton Gardens, W.9:

and Actors' Club, 98, Charing Cross Road, W.C.2.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-EIGHT YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

* * * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Sir HENRY WALFORD DAVIES, Mus.Doc.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND. ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,

Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. D. and MUS. B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L. Mus. L.C.M. (1922 List), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-nine. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus.B., Dunelm.,

F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations, Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, Essay Models, Sight-Reading, and Practical tests in 6 Lessons.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

A WELL-KNOWN PROFESSOR OF THE

PIANO HAS VACANCIES for two or three really KEEN and EARNEST pupils (amateur or professional) desiring public concert experience. Exceptional opportunity. Moderate fees. West-End Studios. Write full details, "B." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-22 ... 204 Correspondence Pupils successful.

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-22 ... 50 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
 c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by
 ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
 Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus.Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 400 Successes in Mus.D., Mus.B., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C., makes a speciality of PREPARING Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes. 5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone. Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus.Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: DURHAM—Final Mus.Bac.: 2 out of 3 passes, both at first attempt. Mus.Bac. "Exercise" (3), after preliminary course in Composition. Also First Mus.Bac. (2). All in 1922. Over 130 Successes at Durham. The Durdans, Reigate

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges. Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus.Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
- (2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
- (3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
- (4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham, including September, 1922.
2 L.R.A.M. successes, January, 1923.

RECENT SUCCESSSES IN PAPER WORK:

- | | |
|-------------------------|--------------------------|
| 6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914. | 11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914. | 12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915. |
| 5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915. | 9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916. | 8 A.R.C.O., July, 1916. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917. | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1917. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. | 10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920. | 6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. | 7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921. | 8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921. |
| 5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922. |
| 8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. | 6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. |

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. AND A.R.C.O. PAPER WORK.

A SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for the JULY, 1923, F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examinations IS NOW COMMENCING. The chief reason why this system of tuition is so successful is that pupils are taught how to work. Experience has proved that a large number of candidates fail because they do not reach a high enough standard in their work.

The examination tests so far as Harmony is concerned are certainly more difficult nowadays than formerly, and a higher degree of musicianship is essential. That this can be attained by means of these lessons has been proved beyond doubt, for pupils who have worked through this course have been successful at every F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examination since January, 1909.

Every pupil is instructed how to write Musical Counterpoint. Numerous examples are given which clearly show that it is quite possible to produce good music (from a harmonic and melodic point of view), even under the many restrictions and limitations imposed by the laws of Counterpoint.

Modern Counterpoint for F.R.C.O. is dealt with thoroughly by means of an article in which the principles are clearly explained, with musical illustrations, and with the aid of this the working of a given melodic theme becomes easy and interesting.

The whole aim of this method is to teach the principles which underlie all highly artistic music, and also the application of these principles to examination work, so that a pupil who is thus equipped is enabled not only to pass the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. examination, as the case may be, but also to develop to the utmost the musical ability with which he is endowed.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.O., "TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus.Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

DR. TAYLOR teaches through the post any musical subject. Accompaniments written or revised. Successful preparation for all exams. Portland Place, Lancaster.

THE CLIFTON COOKE SCHOOL OF SINGING. Established 1888. "Pre-eminent for Professional Training." Principal: Mr. Clifton Cooke (Author of "Practical Singing," Kegan, Paul & Co.), offers exceptional advantages to serious professional students. Periodical competitions for valuable Free and Assisted Scholarships. For interview address Secretary, 20M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

EASTBOURNE.

DOWNMEADE BOARDING SCHOOL FOR BOYS. Modern education with special musical training if desired. Prospectus on application to the Headmaster, F. E. Wilson, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

SOLO and CHORUS BOYS supplied for Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Apply to Organist, St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.3.

ALTO WANTED for Parish Church, Wandsworth. Good Reader essential. £15. Apply, Organist.

CHRIST CHURCH, Crouch End, N. Additional ALTO and TENOR Singers (light, high voices) REQUIRED. £15 per annum. Apply, Dr. Walker Robson, Tregaron Avenue, Crouch Hill, N.8.

ALTO REQUIRED for St. Stephen's, East Putney. Good reader. Light duties. £15 Apply, A. R. Saunders, F.R.C.O., 14, Geraldine Road, S.W.18.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL.

There is a VACANCY for a LAY-VICAR CHORAL (Tenor). Age under thirty-three. Apply, before March 1, to Rev. M. Hardey (Sub-chantor). The Close, Lichfield.

TENOR REQUIRED for St. Peter's, Belsize Park, N.W.3. £16. Write, "Organist," 42, Heath Street, Hampstead.

TENOR and ALTO REQUIRED, All Souls,' Langham Place, next to Queen's Hall. Write "Organist."

SOLOISTS WANTED.—First-Class Baritone and Soprano for "Elijah," by Coatbridge Choral Union, with full chorus and orchestra, March 21, 1923. Terms, Duff, 13, Torrissdale Street, Coatbridge, Lanarkshire.

WINCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—BARITONE LAY-CLERK WANTED. Stipend, £130 per annum. Apply, with testimonials (copies only), to The Precentor.

REQUIRED, ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for St. John's Presbyterian Church, Allen Street, Kensington. Salary £60 per annum. Applications to be sent to Dr. J. C. Philip, 5, Queen Anne's Gardens, Bedford Park, W.4.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED, Great Ilford Parish Church. Hope-Jones three-manual organ. £80 per annum. For conditions of appointment, &c., stamped addressed envelope to Vicar, Ilford Vicarage, Essex.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. Peter's, Athlone. £60, with good prospects of schools and tuitions. Apply, Rev. J. F. Anderson, St. Peter's Rectory, Athlone.

CHOIRMASTER - ORGANIST for St. Luke's Church, West Kilburn, to follow capable voice-trainer. Devout Churchman. State salary required. Apply, Rev. Geo. E. Higgins, The Vicarage.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Carlisle Road Presbyterian Church, Londonderry. Apply, stating qualifications and salary expected, to Rev. David Hay, M.A., Victoria Park, Londonderry, Northern Ireland. A good opening in the city for private tuitions.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. Peter's, Hereford. Fine new organ, ancient civic Church, large scope. Salary according to attainments. Apply by letter to Vicar, before February 10.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST REQUIRED to give Services in return for Practice. Good organ. Light duties. Write, "G. J. M.," 1, Damer Terrace, Chelsea, S.W.10.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, F.R.C.O., many years' experience, can ACCEPT POST immediately. Anglicans or Plain-song, Choral Eucharist, &c. Good choir and organ essential. Very successful choir and voice trainer. Recitalist, but considers accompaniment as chief object. "Cantor," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

STUDENT-ORGANIST (gentleman) would take week-day Services in City Church, with a view to deputising on Sundays later on, in return for organ practice. "C. D.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CATHEDRAL Organist DESIRES POST in England or Scotland. Has had wide experience in all branches of church-training. Good organ essential. Apply, "S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BACH'S PASSION (St. John) at St. Anne's, Soho, during Lent. With Full Orchestra and Organ, Saturdays, February 17, 24, and March 3 at 3.30 p.m., then on Fridays, March 9, 16, 23, and Wednesday in Holy Week at 8 p.m. Also Good Friday at 4 p.m. For tickets send stamped addressed envelope to Rector, 28, Soho Square, W.1. North and South Galleries are free and unappropriated.

ACCOMPANIST (ex-service man) desires engagements. Has accompanied well-known artists. Terms moderate. "Accompanist," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WEST-END STORES requires BUYER for PIANO Department. Previous retail experience essential. Write, giving full particulars of experience, age, and salary required, to "Borthos," c/o Streets, 30, Cornhill, E.C.3.

FOR DISPOSAL.—A well-established TEACHING CONNECTION at Frome, Somerset, yielding good annual income. Introductions secured for other public posts filled by present teacher. Further particulars from Gregory, 18, Christchurch Street West, Frome.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for Sale.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—CRAMER BABY GRAND. New two and a half years ago. Cost £235. Accept £150. Can be seen in London. Apply, Box No. 1, Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED.—Mustel, Apollo, Holt, or Mason & Hamlin Organ, two or three manuals. Write details, "J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BECHSTEIN Upright, equal new, 85 guineas; Broadwood Grand, fine condition, 90 guineas. Write, "J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THE LATEST IMPROVED PEDALS AND STOOL. Complete 2 Pedals and Foot-stool, £1 1s. For those unable to reach the ordinary piano pedals. They can be fitted to any piano, leaving the ordinary pedals free for those who can use them. By these Adjustable Pedals any child or small person can sit correctly, rest the feet, and use the Pedals in comfort. All users of them are delighted with them; they are so effective and simple. Apply, T. McSorley, 72, King Street, Leigh, Lancashire. Sent post free to any part of England.

REAL BARGAINS.—New 5-Key D Concert Flute, 26s.; New Cithara, 18s. Good instruments. Miss "H. T.," 49, Palace Road, Streatham Hill, S.W.2.

MUSIC COMPOSED TO ANY WORDS. Compositions Revised (Songs, Hymns, Waltzes, &c.). Publication arranged. Melodies Harmonized; Transpositions; Orchestration; Band Parts. Send your Lyrics or Music for Quotation. Mr. L. Charles McKello, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address, 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

MUSIC COPYING.—12-stave sheet, 9d. (Transpositions extra). M. J. Morris, 114, Alexandra Road, Hampstead, N.W.8.

BARITONES, BASSES, and CONTRALTOS should buy Song, "THE SILENT LAND" (Oakley). Compass, A to D. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover St., W.1.

SOPRANO VOCALISTS should buy Song, "SLEIGH BELLS" (Oakley). Compass, C to G. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

THE BECHSTEIN PIANO needs little recommendation to cultured tastes. Its beautiful tone and incomparable touch—qualities which have gained for it the esteem of every music-lover, and have set a standard to the world—are as exquisite and as characteristic as ever.

Write or call for Catalogue.

126, NEW BOND STREET
LONDON, W. 1.

TELEPHONE: GERRARD 2653.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments made.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

MOLLENHAUER FLUTES AND PICCOLOS

MESSRS. J. MOLLENHAUER & SONS possess a hundred years' world-wide reputation as makers of first-class Wood-Wind Instruments. Their Flutes and Piccolos are unrivalled in purity of tone, pleasing intonation, and solidity of mechanism, and are consequently used by the leading artists in every land.

Catalogue from—

FAUPEL BROTHERS,

4 & 5, OLD CHANGE, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.4.

Telephone: City 5693.

FOR SALE.—Quarter-size 'CELLO, nice tone, good condition. £10. Mrs. Greening, 32, Norton Road, Hove.

VIOLONCELLO (French), Bow, and Case, each perfect and new. £8. Write, 15, Eleanor Road, Forest Gate, London, E.15.

BENEDICITE, by J. S. STEANE, in Chant Form. Price 2d. Eleventh Thousand sold.

NUMBER SEVEN (JANUARY, 1923) NOW READY.

"THE ORGAN"

A QUARTERLY REVIEW FOR ITS MAKERS, ITS PLAYERS, AND ITS LOVERS.

Price Two Shillings (post free, 2s. 3d.).

Annual Subscription, Nine Shillings (post free).

The type used is fairly large and easily readable, the size of the page 10-in. by 7½-in., and the margin and pagination so arranged that the separate issues can be bound to make a comfortable volume.

CONTENTS: No. 7.

THE ORGANS OF THE ABBEY CHURCH AT WESTMINSTER. The Rev. ANDREW FREEMAN, Mus.B.
CONCERNING THE CONSOLE. ORLANDO A. MANSFIELD, Mus.D., F.R.C.O.

THE FOUNDERS OF MODERN ORGAN BUILDING. R. MEYRICK ROBERTS.

THE ORGANS OF THE CHURCH OF SAINT-ETIENNE-DU-MONT, PARIS. FÉLIX RAUGEL.

THE WATER-ORGAN OF THE ANCIENTS. D. BATIGAN VERNE.

THE LATE JAMES JOHN WALKER. WALTER G. ALCOCK, M.V.O., Mus.D.

CONTEMPORARY ORGAN PEDALLING. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Mus.D.

A DEPUTY ORGANIST, A LETTER, AND A MORAL. The Rev. ANDREW FREEMAN, Mus.B.

REVIEWS OF BOOKS AND MUSIC.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR. (SEVEN PLATES; SEVEN ILLUSTRATIONS IN TEXT.)

PRESS OPINIONS.

"Our new quarterly contemporary, The Organ, has started so well that there will be no doubt as to its success."—The Musical Times.

"A cordial welcome must be given to a new quarterly, The Organ . . . The newcomer makes its début very effectively with its well-written and informative articles."—The Church Times.

"Well produced and adequately illustrated."—The English Mechanic.

"The periodical promises to be one of permanent value and interest."—The Music Student.

Published at the Office of "MUSICAL OPINION," 13, Chichester Rents, Chancery Lane,
London, W.C. 2.

WHAT TEACHERS SAY ABOUT THE MUSIC TEACHER

"The teaching articles have been a tremendous help to me; in fact, the whole paper, especially in working up for my L.R.A.M. diploma."

"The Music Teacher' is a help and inspiration in every way. Thank you so much for such a valuable magazine."

"Thank you very much for the advice for my voice. It has helped me a great deal."

"I am indeed grateful to you for 'The Music Teacher.' It is so well compiled; no searching here, there, and everywhere for an item of interest. The special articles on Piano, Singing, Theory, are most excellent features; in fact, just what every Musician should have."

"I am extremely grateful for all the delightful articles which appear month by month in 'The Music Teacher.' I really do not know how I should get along without its cheerful help."

FREE SPECIMEN COPY.

To "THE MUSIC TEACHER," Montague House, Russell Square, London, W.C.1.

Please send me a complimentary copy of "THE MUSIC TEACHER" post free, as mentioned in the "Musical Times."

Name (Mr., Mrs., or Miss).....

Address.....

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL.

WEEKLY ORGAN RECITALS

EVERY THURSDAY EVENING AT 6.30 P.M.

The Recitalists for the remainder of the present Series are as follows :

- FEB. 1st. DR. ALFRED HOLLINS, F.R.C.O., of Edinburgh.
 „ 8th. DR. H. G. LEY, M.A., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., of Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.
 „ 15th. SIR IVOR ATKINS, MUS.DOC., F.R.C.O., of Worcester Cathedral.
 „ 22nd. MR. H. F. ELLINGFORD, MUS.BAC., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., of St. George's Hall, Liverpool.
- MAR. 1st. MR. REGINALD GOSS-CUSTARD, F.R.C.O.,
 of St. Michael's Church, Chester Square.
 „ 8th. MR. EDGAR T. COOK, MUS.BAC., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., of Southwark Cathedral.
 „ 15th. DR. ALAN GRAY, F.R.C.O., of Trinity College, Cambridge.
 „ 22nd. DR. E. C. BAIRSTOW, F.R.C.O., of York Minster.

One of the chief objects of these recitals is to give those interested an opportunity for hearing the finest Organ music played by Organists of the front rank on a modern instrument and under ideal conditions acoustically.

THE “DISCUS” ORGAN BLOWER

Is installed and giving complete satisfaction in over a thousand Cathedrals, Churches, Theatres, and Cinemas in Great Britain alone. This fact is eloquent, as well as convincing testimony, to its efficiency and durability. It is the most satisfactory method of mechanical organ blowing, and as the motive power may be oil, gas, or electric motor, the “Discus” is suitable for churches in any locality. The application of a “Discus” equipment to an organ ensures a steady supply of wind being instantly available, and enables the organist to obtain the best possible effects from the instrument. The “Discus” blower is the most scientifically designed machine for organ blowing purposes on the market. It is made of metal throughout, of the best quality combined with high grade workmanship. Being entirely free of complicated mechanism, a minimum of attention is required, and very many years of satisfactory services ensured. Efficiency and reliability are fully guaranteed with each “Discus” equipment we instal.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOKLET.

*Sole Makers, Watkins & Watson, Organ Blowing Specialists for the past thirty years.
 Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ Blowing.*

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

B. WATKINS AND WATSON
 WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams : “HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON.”

Telephone : NORTH 2039.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the College and at certain Centres in January last.

FELLOWSHIP (F.T.C.L.).—Archibald J. S. Day, Herbert C. Morris, M.A.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Joseph L. Alker, George L. Baggaley, Eleanor W. Baillie, Eleanor M. Blake, Frederick P. Bowley, Eileen M. Brown, Wilfred T. Burden, Florence C. Cooper, Vincent Dampier, Florence, N. Daniels, Madeleine M. Dowling, Daisy L. Eley, Herbert H. Grove, Hannah Hadgkiss, Helen J. Hume, Gwenllian M. Johns, Elsie M. King, Maud M. Kinnaird, Margaret Mather, Freda L. Nield, Edith M. Parkin, Doris Porter, Lucy M. Robins, Hazel L. Rogers, Kathleen M. Saunders, Francis C. R. Sealey, Leonard Spencer, Constance E. Squires.

ORGAN.—John Brooks.

VIOLIN.—Frank E. I. Bilbe.

SINGING.—Edith M. Cave, Emily W. Stanley.

ELOCUTION.—Constance Gregory, Mary Harrison.

ASSOCIATES IN MUSIC (A. Mus. T.C.L.).

THEORY AND PRACTICE OF COMPOSITION.—Hilda Brundrett, Wilfred Carrington, Edward Carter, Christopher H. Evans, Roy Evans, William E. Jacques, Florence I. Kenyon, Florence E. Marlow, Jessie Muirhead, Ada Rimmer, Dorothy M. Saywell, Joe Smith, John L. Walker, Clarence G. Worley, Sarah E. Wright, John Younger.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Lilian Anthony, Lilly Ashton, Madge K. Aust, Beatrice E. M. Ball, Martha Barker, Marion E. Boyce, Evelyn I. Brightman, Hilda M. Brittain, Winifred M. Brook, Louisa D. Cobb, Primrose Cobb, Doris E. Cook, Hilda J. Covill, Marion Cowland, Maggie Cragg, Phyllis M. Davies, Hilda A. Evans, Horatio Ferrer, Cyril N. Gerrans, Marjorie Griffiths, Beatrice Grindley, Daisy Hamblin, Gilbert Hart, Gladys M. Hayward, Beatrice H. Heard, Polly Hillaby, Elizabeth Holt, Lena Hooper, Dorothy Howard, Kathleen M. Howe, Marion Jackson, Isabel Jeffrey, Elizabeth M. Jones, Edward Keane, Alice Kirkwood, Clara H. Knight, Rosina M. Knight, Jessie D. Lamont, Phyllis K. Lockett, Clara Lucas, Lilian A. McCutcheon, Constance K. Maslin, Hylda Mayne, Doris M. Mingay, Dorothy E. Newell, Annie Peacock, Kate M. Ricks, Cyril Royle, Nellie B. V. Scott, Eric A. Smith, Gladys B. Smith, Margaret M. Smith, Evelyn K. Stoneham, Marian E. Thompson, Florence A. D. Tucker, Eva N. Walker, Elizabeth M. Waters, Grace H. Watts, Marjorie Wills, Ella M. Woolcott, Percy Wright.

ORGAN.—Cecil V. Andrews, Eric J. Downs, Theophilus J. Parr, George W. F. Sadler, Reginald C. Sidebottom.

VIOLIN.—Kathleen M. Howe

VIOLA.—Winifred T. Stiles.

SINGING.—Harold C. George

ELOCUTION.—Sybil A. Cox, Hilda M. Gamble, Frances M. Gill, Muriel K. Slater, Muriel A. Smith.

CERTIFICATES.

THEORY AND PRACTICE OF COMPOSITION.—Godfrey A. Cooper, Reginald Hutchinson.

PIANOFORTE.—Madeleine A. Bardiot, Veronica M. Brown (Hons.), Joan Campbell, Dorothy J. Cook, Florence M. Davidson, Frederick W. V. Handley, Hilda D. Leonard, Mavis H. Light (Hons.), Jessie Norman, Jessie M. Phillips, Vera L. Tutt, Sarah M. Williams.

SINGING.—Florence A. Cosford (Hons.), Violet M. Crocker, Doris M. Veal.

EXAMINERS: Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D., Prof. J. C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. D., Sir Frederic H. Cowen, Mus. D., W. Creser, Mus. D., Edward d'Evy, F.R.C.O., A. E. Drinkwater, M.A., Dawson Freer, Fred J. Gostelow, F.R.C.O., H. A. Harding, Mus. D., E. F. Horner, Mus. D., Charlton Keith, A. W. Ketelbey, S. Myerscough, Mus. B., G. Oldroyd, Mus. D., C. W. Pearce, M.A., Mus. D., Alec Rowley, F.R.C.O., E. Stanley Roper, B.A., Mus. B., Joseph Speaight, A. J. Slocomber, J. Warriner, Mus. D.

NEXT EXAMINATIONS in APRIL, 1923. Last day of Entry, March 12.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships Regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

THE SEVCIK

VIOLIN METHOD, OP. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9.

There is nothing in the world to excel these Opera. They were the works of a Master in his years of super-creative power.

Age 30 to 50; 1885-1905.

From 1900 to 1910 they produced KUBELIK, KOCIAN, and a dozen other brilliant stars.

No other works or weary elaborations can reduce the brilliance or concentrated pedagogic effect in these works.

Op. 1. School of Violin Technics. I., 5/6; II., 6/6; IV., 4/6; V., 5/6.

Op. 2. School of Bowing Technics. I., II., V., each 2/6; III., IV., VI., each 2/-.

Op. 3. Forty Variations. 2/6.

Op. 6. Violin Method for Beginners. 7 Parts, 1/6 each.

Op. 7. Studies Preparatory to the Shake. I. & II., 4/- each.

Op. 8. Changes of Position and Preparatory Scale Studies. 3/6.

Op. 9. Preparatory Studies in Double Stopping. 3/6.

"AIDS TO THE STUDY OF THE SEVCIK METHOD."

Gratis and post free.

It is put simply and clearly by one of the most experienced London Professors, and will prove that it is the best of all Methods in the long run.

"THE LITTLE SEVCIK."

A Practical Concentration and Simplification of Op. 6, and is THE METHOD OF ALL METHODS FOR BEGINNERS.

Price 3/6 net.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR,' GRAHAM P. MOORE'S 'FIRST PRINCIPLES.'

Publishers of 'SEVCIK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES,' MACFARREN'S 'THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSON,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

Copyright Owners of the Steingraber Edition for Great Britain and the Colonies.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SIX TRADITIONAL MELODIES

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE DUET

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

No.

1. FELTON'S GAVOTTE.
2. ENGLISH FOLK-SONG—"How delightful to see."
3. IRISH MELODY—"Silent, O Moyle."
4. SCOTCH MELODY—"Wi' a hundred pipers."
5. WELSH MELODY—"Loudly proclaim"
("Ymadawlad y Brenin").
6. ENGLISH FOLK-SONG—"The Keys of Canterbury."

N.B.—These duets are so arranged that in Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 6 the Primo part, and in Nos. 4 and 5 the Secondo part, may easily be played by a boy or girl not very advanced in technique.

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FEBRUARY 1 1923

CONTENTS.

	Page
Moussorgsky as a Song Writer.—I. By Ernest Newman	93
Arthur Bliss. By Edwin Evans (concluded) ...	95
Robert Jones and his Prefaces. By Philip Heseltine	99
Franck's Organ Music. By Harvey Grace ...	100
Some Ancient Conceptions of Rhythm. By C. F. Abdy Williams ...	105
Dr. Hulbert's Lectures ...	106
The Music of Tibet. By T. Howard Somervell ...	107
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvo-coressi	108
New Music ...	109
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' ...	112
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' ...	113
Occasional Notes ...	114
Church and Organ Music ...	119
The Royal College of Organists. Diploma Distribution	119
Competition Festival Record ...	124
The Amateurs' Exchange ...	124
Letters to the Editor ...	125
Sharps and Flats ...	126
Royal Academy of Music ...	126
Trinity College of Music ...	126
Union of Graduates in Music ...	127
Dinner and Presentation to Mr. Edwin Evans (with Portrait) ...	127
Incorporated Society of Musicians: Annual Conference	128
Rutland Boughton's Bethlehem ...	128
Opera in London ...	128
London Concerts ...	130
Music in the Provinces ...	132
Music in Ireland...	134
Leeds Musical Festival ...	134
Preston Choral Society ...	134
British Music in Serbia ...	135
Musical Notes from Abroad ...	135
Obituary ...	139
Miscellaneous ...	140

MUSIC.

'Spring bursts to-day.' Easter Carol. By GEOFFREY SHAW ...	115
--	-----

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this Number:
'Jesus Christ is risen to-day.' Short Anthem for Easter.
By C. V. Stanford.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines ...	0	3	0
Three Lines ...	0	3	4
For every additional Line ...	0	0	10
One inch (displayed) ...	0	10	0
Half a Column ...	2	0	0
A Column ...	4	0	0
A Page ...	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.
A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions,
Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 19 (FIRST POST).

MOUSSORGSKY AS A SONG WRITER

By ERNEST NEWMAN

I

There are times when the critic and historian wish that their tasks could be simplified by the destruction of all the music of the last four centuries that really does not matter; think, for instance, of all the minor works of Mozart, Haydn, and Beethoven that the conscientious historian feels he must read through, though hardly one of them is worth performing to-day. Perhaps before long the musicologues will have to consider seriously the question of a wholesale sacrifice of second- and third-rate music, for the simple reason that it will soon be impossible for any one man to get even a superficial knowledge of all that has been written even by the leading composers. Some day, no doubt, an international committee will be formed to decide which of the works of the past are worth reprinting, and which can be allowed to lapse into oblivion without humanity as a whole being a penny the worse.

That is one point of view. There is another, however, with which the critic, groan as he may at the magnitude of his task, is equally in sympathy. He feels that if he is to understand a composer thoroughly he must know intimately everything that the composer has written. The psychologist in him is stronger sometimes than the æsthete. He does not enjoy a bad piece of art as art, but he may be profoundly interested in it as a revelation of the artist; as Oscar Wilde said of Browning, 'The process by which the fool arrives at his folly is as dear to him as the ultimate wisdom of the wise.' A man's mind being all of a piece, the critic feels that he dare not neglect any manifestation of it, for a poor piece of work may throw a good deal of light on the best. It is often, indeed, only through a study of an artist's weaknesses that we can understand his strength; and so, though the reading of the inferior work of a composer may give the critic no æsthetic pleasure at all—being something like trying to make a meal of tares while the wheat lies at one's hand on the next table—it may give him a good deal of pleasure by making it possible for him to see the composer as he really was, with his defects as well as his qualities, and with the two always acting and reacting on each other.

The men of the second rank are, for this reason, often more fascinating studies than the men of the first rank. They 'abide our question' as the latter do not. One simply holds up his hands in amazement before the beauty of Mozart; we have as little hope of being able to understand and explain the source and processes of that beauty as of accounting for the rhythm of the solar system. But the partial failures of art are more like our humble selves. We take the same interest in discovering the causes of their failure as the physician does in discovering the reason for a man's failure to be perfectly healthy. And of all the partial failures who thus intrigue us, Moussorgsky is perhaps the most interesting, because in no other composer is there so vast a distance between the best and the worst. Take up one page of his work, and you see a genius; take up another page, and if that is all you know of Moussorgsky you may be forgiven for writing him down a mere amateur. An artist so 'contrary' as this is an irresistible attraction to the psychologist.

The new volume of thirty-nine of Moussorgsky's songs just issued in this country by Messrs. Bessel (21s. net), makes the complete study of him easier. The book does not contain all Moussorgsky's songs. It lacks the Songs and Dances of Death, the Children's Songs, and the cycle entitled Sunless. But it contains, besides well-known songs such as The Musician's Peep-Show, The Song of the Flea, and Yeremoushka's Cradle Song, the seven songs formerly published as Romances et Chansons (three of which—Savishna, Hopak, and Gathering Mushrooms—represent the finest flowering of Moussorgsky's gifts as a song-writer), and a number of other songs that will be quite new to most English students, for they have hitherto been obtainable only with some difficulty, and only in the original Russian settings. All the songs in the Bessel volume have English and German words, and the majority of them French. A few of them have the Russian words also.

Moussorgsky's songs are now and then as amateurish as his pianoforte pieces, but the amateurishness is not always so instantly apparent as in these. There is no genre, in fact, in which the amateur has so good a chance as the song: indeed, the man who cannot write at any rate one good song in his lifetime has hardly a right to the title of musician. Quite competent songs are now poured from the world's printing presses at the rate of several hundreds a month. The most consummate technique can be expended upon a song: but you can also put together quite a fair specimen with the bare minimum of technique. At the same time, while one or two amateurish lyrics may pass muster, few things reveal the defects of a composer's technique like a collection of songs. If his resource is limited, if he has only the one invariable way of facing—or evading—a difficulty, if his thinking or his technique runs to clichés, trust to a reading of twenty or thirty of his songs at a time to find him out. And no one, I think, can spend an afternoon working through the whole of Moussorgsky's songs without, if not actually finding him out, at any rate finding out a good deal about his little weaknesses.

The first thing that strikes us in them is the curious way Moussorgsky flits about from one style to another, without, apparently, being able to make up his mind which is the one most suited to him. We meet with much the same phenomenon in his operas: the love scene between Dmitri and Marina in Boris Godounov, for instance, is impregnated with an Italianism that contrasts oddly with the pronounced Russian flavour of the rest of the opera. But in the songs the medley is even more remarkable. It is not a mere matter of choice of subjects: other composers besides him have dabbled by turns in the tragic, the humorous, the sentimental, the pathetic, the graphic, the realistic. But they have employed the same general musical idiom in all of them, as a dramatist preserves the same general speech idiom for all his scenes and all his characters. Moussorgsky, however, experiments in styles so different from each other that they hardly seem to be the work of the same man. One view of the matter is that this shows his versatility. Another view, equally rational, is that it shows his limitations. It is doubtful whether any man who keeps dodging from one style to another can produce much first-rate music in any of them. Getting good ideas is only one half of the composer's job, and not the more difficult half. His real difficulty is in making for himself a language of his own over which he has perfect control, that will be at his service at any moment to express anything. This is 'technique' in the fullest sense of the word—something that the schools and the text-books cannot teach, but that every composer has to make for himself, an instrument that is his instrument and no one else's. Such an instrument is not made by means of a passing experiment or two; it means long and steady work in one direction.

Now Moussorgsky was always experimenting, but never so completely rooting himself in any method that the next work in that method grew, as it were, of itself, and grew further. Under the influence of Dargomijsky he begins a setting of Gogol's comedy The Matchmaker, in which he tries to write a sort of 'prose' music that rejects melody for a series of imitations of the inflections of the speaking voice. But he leaves it unfinished, in order to work out the 'folk' style of Boris Godounov. The Matchmaker experiment did his technique (that was weak enough to begin with) hardly any good: and Boris Godounov itself, for all its genius, is obviously the work of a man who is learning as he goes along. Khovantchina makes no such technical advance on Boris as Lohengrin, say, makes on Tannhäuser, while the inspiration is often much weaker. Moussorgsky's other unfinished opera, The Fair of Sorochinsk, essays yet another style.

I am not now attempting an estimate of the various musical values of these operas. I am only trying to establish the point that no composer who takes up and then drops one method after another in this casual fashion can hope to achieve complete technical mastery in any of them. He will remain something of the dilettante to the end of his days: and it is lucky for him if he happen to be a dilettante of genius, as Moussorgsky was. We may say, if we like, that Moussorgsky's lack of consistent practice at technique kept him all his life a bit of an amateur: but probably the real truth is the inverse of this—that he never had in him the making of a sound technique, and that he took no steps to acquire it because he could not see that he needed it. The dilettante in him was too strong for that.

As with his operas, so with his songs. He coquetted in turn with four or five genres. There are the 'patter' songs—if I may refer to them in this perhaps not very respectful way—the songs in which, as in The Matchmaker, he imitates the speaking voice, as well as the fixed intervals of the musical scale will allow him to do so. There are the songs in the folk style. There are the realistic songs, such as The Goat, and the songs that are partly patter, partly realistic, such as The Seminarist. There are one or two songs—such as Tell me why, O maid—in the fluent conventional idiom of the West, an idiom as remote from that of the songs in the folk style as Cologne is from Kiev. Some of the songs simply 'illustrate' the words point by point, and the total effect, though expressive, is somewhat shapeless, as indeed Boris Godounov as a whole is. In other songs—such as Gathering Mushrooms—the Russian folk idiom at its purest is magically blended with Western form at its purest. It is rather difficult to believe that the faultlessly dressed and carefully barbered Moussorgsky of this song is the same as the unwashed, uncouth 'native' of some of the other songs. No collection of fifty songs by any other composer would show anything like the same variety of styles; and I repeat that if the variety shows the many-sidedness of Moussorgsky's mind and the number of his interests, it shows also his inability (except in some half-dozen splendid songs) to beat out a really good technique for himself. Almost everywhere we find unmistakable touches of the amateur.

I shall be told, perhaps, that it is not amateurs who hit upon such surprising new effects as Moussorgsky often does. I venture to reply that anyone who has seen a great deal of amateur composition knows that the amateur is always hitting upon surprisingly new isolated effects. He is often more adventurous than the professional, especially as regards harmony. We have to take the thick with the thin in these matters. It is highly probable that had Moussorgsky been brought up in Germany and put through the usual technical mill from early childhood he would not have put on paper a number of the things he did. By this I do not mean that his harmonies were ever 'wrong.' I know no harmony of his, in his works as we now have them, that does not justify itself by its context. Whether it be a fact that some of his harmonies were nonsensical and Rimsky-Korsakov did him a service in correcting them, or whether Rimsky took too academic a view of them and 'corrected' them needlessly, we cannot say till we have an opportunity of studying the original score of Boris that Messrs. Chester have promised us. The dilettantism that I find in many of Moussorgsky's songs is quite another matter. It is very difficult to describe it in words, and it would take an enormous number of musical examples to demonstrate it convincingly. It shows itself mainly in a lack of resource in the handling of the material; Moussorgsky is full of clichés (personal clichés, of course) of melody, of harmony, of rhythm, and of elaboration. At the same time there are dozens of audacities—many of them very happy audacities—upon which a more academically trained composer would probably not have ventured. The happy audacities are the outcome of Moussorgsky's genius: the others are the outcome of his dilettantism: I have seen many such novel strokes in the manuscripts of amateurs. We must, as I have said, take the thick with the thin. But we must also distinguish between the thick and the thin, which, I am afraid, the earlier panegyrists of Moussorgsky did not always do. His music no longer has its first novelty for us. It should be possible now for anyone who is familiar with his work as a whole to separate the idiosyncrasies that are the flashes of genius from the idiosyncrasies that are merely the fumbblings of an inadequately equipped technician.

(To be continued.)

ARTHUR BLISS

By EDWIN EVANS

(Concluded from January number, page 23.)

The Conversations which followed were written in 1920, and performed for the first time in January, 1921. They consist of five pieces for violin, viola, violoncello, flute (alternating with bass-flute), and oboe (alternating with cor anglais). The sub-titles are: 'The Committee Meeting,' 'In the Wood,' 'In the Ball-room,' 'Soliloquy,' 'In the Tube at Oxford Circus.' Although their instrumental ingenuity is conspicuous, much of their interest is polyphonic, especially in the first and last numbers. 'The Committee' seems to have had a chairman of more than usual obstinacy, who contrived to have his own way by persevering in spite of interruptions. If realism had been intended, Bliss would doubtless have infused more hatred into the other parts. But he is not a realist in the sense that Moussorgsky was. He is preoccupied solely with musical effects, and finds music even in the rumble that drowns conversation in the Tube—where, by the way, he appears to come upon a sentimental idyll, perhaps when returning home by the last train. Even more idyllic is the scene in the wood, from which the following is quoted:

Ex. 2.

CONVERSATIONS ('In the wood').

The ball-room episode is the one that I find least interesting of the five, but perhaps the composer, like myself, has observed the curious solemnity of people who dance. 'The Soliloquy,' for cor anglais, is, on the other hand, an absorbing piece of unaccompanied cantilena.

It was also in January, 1921, that Miss Viola Tree produced The Tempest at the Aldwych Theatre. It was not so much a production as a selection from a series of productions in various styles. Decorative scenes designed by Hugo Rumbold alternated with pseudo-realistic vistas of our own Channel coast. If I remember rightly, there were even real sea-shells against the back-cloth of 'these yellow sands.' There were almost as many composers as it takes to present a revue. The contributors were Arne, Sullivan, Raymond Rôze, Frederic Norton, and Arthur Bliss. Bliss's share consisted of an Overture, the storm-music of the opening scene, and a weirdly fantastic musical incantation announcing the 'strange shapes' that provide the banquet. The score is for tenor and bass voices, trumpet, trombone, a large array of timpani, side-drum, tenor-drum, bass-drum, gong, and pianoforte. There were some who resented the regulated effect of drum-rhythms in place of stage-thunder, but since the poet asks us to believe the storm to be of Prospero's manufacture, a disciplined thunder, with nicely calculated ebb and flow, does not seem incongruous to his phantasy. This music has been heard in the concert-room, at home and abroad, and has naturally provoked differences of opinion. The notion of a symphony for percussion instruments only is, however, not new. Unless I am mistaken Delage has written one, on the basis of the Hindu Tiger Dance, for a ballet on an Indian subject. Moreover, Bliss does not limit himself to percussion, though he gives it here a preponderating part. In the theatre the effect was remarkable, though it had the disadvantage of showing up the imperfections of the production. The only way in which congruity could have been preserved would have been by permitting Bliss to furnish all the music associated with the invisible world of magic forces, and restricting his collaborators, dead and living, to the human elements. But precisely because Bliss's music was theatrically admirable, it has proved unsuited to the concert-room.

Meanwhile Bliss had completed two other works both of which are dated 1920: the Concerto, which was first performed on June 12, 1921, and the two Orchestral Studies which were heard for the first time at a rehearsal of the Patron's Fund on February 17, 1921. The Concerto is for pianoforte and tenor voice, accompanied by strings, drums, and xylophone. Once more Bliss employs the voice as an instrument, but as its resources of timbre reside in consonants as well as vowels, he found himself impelled to use words, not for their meaning, but again for phonetic effect. Unfortunately words have a meaning, whatever composers may say, and when a group of them coheres, giving a literary association not out of keeping with the mood of the music, the composer's intention is stultified. This happened more than once during the first performance. Musically the ideas and the method of presenting them appeared slightly at variance, some of the former being reminiscent of an earlier and more romantic Bliss than the one who returned to us from the wars. The form, too, is almost classical. Yet much of the music has that alert and springy gait that is so characteristic of the composer, and the following quotation proves that his rhythmic energy has not deserted him:

Ex. 3.
XYLOPHONE.
Allegro.

PIANOFORTE CONCERTO.

8va

PIANO. f

STRINGS. f

8va

Despite its lack of unity the Concerto contains so much that is both effective and interesting, that one hopes to renew acquaintance with it, perhaps in a revised form. Probably that is the composer's intention, for the work has not been published and, so far as is known, has had only two performances.

Of the two Orchestral Studies it is enough to state that they are exactly what they purport to be, that is to say, studies in orchestral colour. One resembles a nocturne, and the other is more animated; both abound in venturesome moments, but, though they have had several public performances, it is doubtful whether Bliss attributes permanent value to them. But they were, no doubt, helpful as preliminary studies for the much more important work that was to follow.

This was the Mêlée Fantastique, performed for the first time at the Promenade Concerts on October 13, 1921, and repeated by Eugène Goossens and his orchestra on November 9, at Queen's Hall. It is significant that this work is dedicated to the memory of the late Claud Lovat Fraser 'a great and lovable artist,' for, apart from being friends, the two had much in common. In his own sphere Lovat Fraser had a pronounced hatred for all that was turgid, and particularly for uncertain colour. If a colour-scheme was lacking in precision, he regarded it as 'mud,' and did not scruple to say so. He detested compromise in such matters. In his own stage-work he planned that colour should stand out from colour with an incisiveness that eliminated all compromise or subterfuge, and no effect of his was ever blurred at the edges. Arthur Bliss pursues the same ideals in sound and design as did Lovat Fraser in colour and design.

As for the emotional significance of the music, we are at least permitted to surmise that the dedication affords a clue. At the risk of implying more than the composer intended, one may discern in the brisk rhythms and honest cheerfulness of the greater part of the music something of the peculiarly lovable nature of Lovat Fraser, ever alert, ever active, and ever sensitive. If this is justified, then the quiet ending assumes the character of an elegy, a last tribute. To go beyond this is dangerous, for it would be foreign to the composer's creed to allow music to be governed by non-musical considerations.

But there is enough in this to reconcile the earlier, cheerful mood of the work with its elegiac close. The rhythms are brilliant, and many of their combinations are most dexterous and ingenious. The texture of the music is remarkably clear in view of these complexities, but harmonically it is of course characteristic of the composer. The following may serve as an illustration:

EX. 4. 'MÊLÉE FANTASQUE.'

B

During 1921 he set for soprano voices two nursery rhymes by Frances Cornford, The Ragwort with pianoforte and clarinet, The Dandelion with clarinet only. These have met with great success everywhere. The first composition of 1922 consisted of Three Romantic Songs to poems from Walter de la Mare's Songs of Childhood, introduced by Anne Thursfield in a programme of the Classical Society on January 18.

The recent publication of Mr. Percy Scholes's monograph on the subject dispenses me from the need of dwelling in detail upon the Colour Symphony. It is however advisable to comment upon the adoption of the title. Despite the arguments urged by Mr. Scholes to convince the composer of the advantages to be gained with a distinctive title, the associations of colour are too vague for safety. How is the newcomer to know whether Bliss intends the title to be read scientifically, as indicating music based upon the relative frequency of colour vibrations; or in reference to those associations which sound is capable of evoking, and which, as we know only too well, differ with the individual; or in conjunction with the literary and poetical connotations of colour; or the distribution of colours in the present political situation? Wild as it may seem, the last suggestion is not the least feasible, for, in point of fact, the composer had in view colour in its heraldic sense; and the hues adopted by political parties, and formerly by the Suffragettes, are nothing more than the modern equivalent of heraldry. Omitting concrete objects, such as precious stones, it will be seen that the headings of the four movements bear out this interpretation. The association of red with revelry is a form of bunting. The royal purple is purely heraldic. The blue of loyalty and the green of hope are only a little less so.

The four movements are described as follows: 1. Purple, the colour of amethysts, pageantry, royalty, and death; 2. Red, the colour of rubies, wine, revelry, furnaces, courage, and magic; 3. Blue, the colour of sapphires, deep water, skies, loyalty, and melancholy; 4. Green, the colour of emeralds, hope, joy, youth, spring, and victory. The first and third are slow movements, the second a scherso, and the fourth fugal. The reception of the work at the Gloucester Festival is still fresh in mind, but an opportunity for confirming or modifying first impressions will occur when it is repeated at Queen's Hall on March 10. Perhaps the investigation of such comments as were made on the English 'pastoral' character of the 'blue' movement, and on various resemblances, chiefly with Stravinsky, is best deferred until the work has become more familiar. One need, however, not wait so long to dismiss as merely superficial the references of this kind that have been made to the conclusion of the scherso, and to the rhythmic pulsation which underlies the third section. If such devices as these were to be copyrighted it would be the end of musical progress. There is more interest in discussing the supposed resemblance of the first fugal subject:

Ex. 5.

Andante moderato.

COLOUR ' SYMPHONY.

Viole.

to the manner of Schönberg. This has a certain superficial plausibility, but no more. Remove what may be termed the 'dressing' of the idea, and the latter resolves itself into a straightforward diatonic theme of robust character, which one might label as English. Schönberg's ideas can be stripped in the same way, but the residue nearly always betrays affinity with Schumann or Mendelssohn. The contrast is further accentuated by the shape of the second fugal subject:

Ex. 6. Cl.

' COLOUR ' SYMPHONY.

which bears the distinct imprint of Bliss and none other.

The works upon which he is now engaged include the Oboe Concerto, which was not completed in time for the performance announced at the Promenade Concerts, and a ballet The Mask of the Red Death, after Edgar Allan Poe.

In any other country but this, Bliss would long ago have been recruited for the theatre, probably by somebody as far-sighted as Diaghilev proved himself to be in thus recruiting Stravinsky, when the latter was younger and less experienced than Bliss is to-day. That he comes before the public with chamber music, concertos, and symphonies, is chiefly due to the fact that the English theatrical world is not, in this or other matters, populated with far-sighted people. Even the word 'theatrical,' when applied to music, carries with us a suggestion of tawdriness, and therefore a tinge of reproach. But there is a 'fine art' of the theatre, and time will probably show that it is Bliss's vocation. There is scarcely a work of his that does not suggest scenic action. He belongs to the theatre as much as Lovat Fraser, and practically for the same reasons, and some day he will be discovered just as Lovat Fraser was discovered. The recruiting of both was delayed by that tendency of the theatre to place reliance upon those who do it the most injury by blurring what should be clear. The strong lights of the stage demand definition in speech, in action, in decoration, and in music. In their place we are constantly given slipshod enunciation, undisciplined action, colour-schemes of the kind that Fraser denounced as 'mud,' and music which fuses where it should detach.

Though his later works have been on a larger scale than those which first drew attention to his gifts, and therefore require a more solid inner construction, just as the inner supports of a large building demand different planning from that of a cottage, the principle underlying his method remains the same. Whether the notes are many or few they are not squandered, but employed for definite purposes. It is the same with his use of timbre. When he employs an instrument he does so for the purpose of producing an effect such as it alone can give, and not because it happens to be handy to reinforce another, or to supply what is known as texture. This gives his music a certain quality of transparency. It does not of itself produce lucidity, which after all is a quality of thought, but it provides a clear and lucid means of expression, of which it only remains for the composer to make the best use. But just as in ordinary speech the habit of employing a clear mode of expression is conducive to fostering the habit of clear thought, this way of writing music has often compelled the contemporary composers who adopt it to clarify their own thought when other methods would have left them quite content to remain obscure.

LIST OF COMPOSITIONS

1918. Madame Ney (for soprano and six instruments). (J. & W. Chester.)
 1919. Rhapsody (for soprano and tenor voices and seven instruments). (Stainer & Bell.)

1919. Rout (for soprano and chamber orchestra). (Goodwin & Tabb.)
1919. Conversations (for five instruments). (Goodwin & Tabb.)
1920. Concerto (for pianoforte and tenor voice, with strings and percussion).
1920. Two Studies (for orchestra).
1921. Incidental music for The Tempest.
1921. Mêlée Fantastique (for orchestra). (Goodwin & Tabb.)
1921. Two Nursery Rhymes (Cornford). (J. & W. Chester):
- (1.) The Ragwort (for soprano, clarinet, and pianoforte).
- (2.) The Dandelion (for soprano and clarinet).
1922. Three Romantic Songs (Walter de la Mare). (Goodwin & Tabb.)
1922. Colour Symphony.

ROBERT JONES AND HIS PREFACES

BY PHILIP HESELTINE

Of all the composers of that most brilliant period in the history of English music which comprises the last quarter of the 16th century and the first quarter of the 17th, no one has been more completely and more unaccountably neglected than Robert Jones, song-writer, theatrical manager, and controversialist. With the exception of one or two duets which appeared in Mr. Kennedy Scott's admirable 'Euterpe' series (the cessation of which is to be regretted) and a few hopeless travesties of his work printed by Rimbault and his untrustworthy like, none of Jones's songs were available in print until a few weeks ago when a representative selection was published by Messrs. Enoch under the editorship of Mr. Peter Warlock and Mr. Philip Wilson. And yet there is no composer of the period whose work seems more likely to make an immediate appeal, not only to musicians but to the most unsophisticated music-lovers to whom historical considerations count for nothing. His style is admirably simple and direct, and his light-hearted gaiety, his lyrical gift of melody, and his real sense of humour in music fully entitle him to be regarded as the Sullivan of his day—though in certain other respects the comparison does not hold good.

This Robert Jones is, as Dr. Grattan Flood pointed out in the Musical Times for October, 1921, quite a different person from his namesake, the pre-Reformation composer of Church music who was a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal in 1512. But it would seem that Dr. Grattan Flood is in error when he proceeds to say that the later Robert Jones was born about the year 1560. We learn from the preface to the latter's first book of songs that he had practised singing ever since he had practised speaking; and when he came to take his musical degree at Oxford in 1597 it was stated that he had studied music for sixteen years. We have therefore no reasonable ground for fixing the date of his birth any earlier than 1574 or 1575. Very little is known of his life, but his elaborate and vigorously-written prefaces and dedicatory addresses in the song-books throw a good deal of light on his personality and upon the relation that existed in his time between the composer and the public.

We must not forget that in those days there were no public concerts and no professional critics. Music was heard in the church and in the home, and every man was his own critic. But there was a musical profession—perhaps it would be more correct to say that there were two musical professions: the one secular, the other ecclesiastical. Certainly there were the two traditions, sharply opposed to one another; though the secular tradition, relying on oral methods for its persistence, has not been preserved for us by history. The result is that musical historians, ignoring the existence of the secular tradition, greatly exaggerate the importance of what they are pleased to call the homophonic revolution at the end of the 16th century. There was, in point of fact, no revolution at all, only a gradual process of fusion between the two traditions, each imparting new strength and vitality to the other—and we see this process at work all through the golden period of English music. After 1625 began the period of decline and decadence, illuminated only by the solitary genius of Purcell towards the end of the century, when polyphony decayed and the almost infinite resources of the modes were whittled down to the limitations of the two diatonic scales.

Now Jones was of the secular tradition, a descendant of the minstrel and the jangler of the Middle Ages, whose music, enjoyed by the multitude of high and low degree, was no doubt viewed with contempt by the respectable professionals of the rival tradition—more especially as the mediæval minstrel and, as we shall see from one of Jones's dedications, his later counterpart were looked upon as rather disreputable members of society. Hence the urgent necessity for patronage and regular employment either at Court or in the house of some rich nobleman.

The fact of his having taken a musical degree tends to show that Jones had a strong desire to be reckoned a serious musician of the established order; but his genius led him in another direction, and utterly deserted him, as did also his technical competence and his sense of humour, whenever he tried his hand at a work of grave and serious character: the result was almost always dull to the verge of the ridiculous. And whether we attribute it to his rather ludicrous achievements in this kind of music, or to his having neglected the larger forms and concentrated upon genial tunes and comic songs, the fact remains that he came in for a good deal of adverse and contemptuous criticism—to which, however, he lost no time and spared no pains in replying.

His first work was published in 1600 under the title of The First Booke of Songs and Ayres of foure parts with Tableture for the Lute. So made that all the parts together, or either of them severally may be sung to the Lute, Orpherian or Viol de Gambo. The wording, with its obscure second sentence, is precisely the same as that of the title of John Dowland's first book of songs, and is doubtless the work of the publisher, Peter Short, the assignee of Thomas Morley, who had at that time a monopoly for the printing of music-books. It was obviously not the composer's intention that the alto or tenor parts should be sung separately to the lute, orpherian, or viol de gambo, for the songs are true part-songs, that is to say, simply-harmonized tunes, having nothing in common with the polyphonic style of the madrigal. The ambiguous phrase was certainly meant to imply that if the three lower voices were absent the tune could be sung just as well to the accompaniment of the lute, orpherian, or viol de gambo. On this point there is an interesting passage in Thomas Campian's preface to his first and second books of songs :

These Ayres [he says] were for the most part framed at first for one voice with the lute or viol, but upon occasion they have since been filled with more parts, which who so please may use, who like not may leave. Yet do we daily observe that when any shall sing a treble to an instrument, the standers-by will be offering at an inward part out of their own nature ; and true or false, out it must, though to the perverting of the whole harmony.

On the other hand, we must not assume that Campian's methods were also employed by other composers. From internal evidence it is clear that certain songs of Dowland and Jones were definitely conceived as part-songs ; and three of Michael Cavendish's songs for the voice and lute reappear later in the same volume, one (Fair are those eyes) as an ayre for four voices with the lute, the other two (Wandering in this place and Every bush now springing) as madrigals for five voices unaccompanied.

Robert Jones's first book of songs is dedicated To the honourable and virtuous gentleman Sir Robert [brother of Sir Philip] Sidney, Knight governour under Her Majesty of the town of Vlushing, and the castle of the Ramekins in the low countries, and of the forts of the same appendant, with the garrison therein placed as well of horse as foot.

Your great love and favour, honourable Sir, ever manifested to all worthy sciences, hath emboldened me to offer up at your lordship's shrine these the unworthy labours of my musical travels. [sc. travails = works.] And though in respect of their weakness they may perhaps seem untimely brought forth, and therefore the unlikelier to prosper, yet doubt I not but if tendered by you they shall haply find gentle cherishing, which may be a mean to make them stronger, or else miscarrying, to encourage my endeavours to beget a better ; for as no art winks at fewer errors than music, so none greater enemies to their own profession than musicians, who whilst in their own singularity they condemn every man's works as some way faulty, they are the cause the art is the less esteemed and they themselves reputed as self-commenders and men most fantastical. Wherefore if this one censuring infirmity were removed, these my ayres (free I dare say from gross errors) would find everywhere more gratuitous entertainment. But since even those who are best seen in this art cannot vaunt themselves free from such detractors, I the less regard it being so well accompanied. Howsoever if herein I may gain your honour's good allowance, I shall think I have attained to the better end of my labours, which with my self and the best of my service rests ever more at your lordship's employment.

Your lordship's devoted in all dutiful service,

ROBERT JONES.

This is followed by an address To the Reader :

Gentlemen, since my desire is your ears should be my indifferent judges, I cannot think it necessary to make my travels or my bringing up arguments to persuade you that I have a good opinion of myself, only thus much will I say, that I may prevent the rash judgments of such as know me not. Ever since I practised speaking I have practised singing ; having had no other quality to hinder me from the perfect knowledge of this faculty, I have been encouraged by the warrant of divers good judgments that my pains herein shall at the least procure good liking, if not delight, which yet for mine own part I must needs fear as much as I desire, especially when I consider the ripeness of this industrious age wherein all men endeavour to know all things. I confess I was not unwilling to embrace the conceits of such gentlemen as were earnest to have me apparel these ditties for them : which though intended for their private recreation, never meaning they should come into the light, were yet content upon entreaty to make the encouragements of this my first adventure, whereupon I was almost glad to make my small skill known to the world, presuming that if my cunning failed me in the music, yet the words might speak for themselves, howsoever it pleaseth them to account better of that than of these, of purpose (as it should seem) to make me believe I can do something. My only hope is that seeing neither my cold ayres nor their idle ditties (as they will needs have me call them) have hitherto been sounded in the ears of many, they may chance to find such entertainment as commonly news doth in the world : which if I may be so happy to hear, I will not say my next shall be better, but I will promise to take more pains to show more points of music, which now I could not do because my chiefest care was to fit the Note to the Word. Till when, I must be as well content with each man's lawful censure as I shall be glad of some men's undeserved favours.

(To be continued.)

FRANCK'S ORGAN MUSIC

By HARVEY GRACE

The numerous articles called forth by the Franck Centenary naturally made no more than brief and general reference to his organ music. There were, however, some statements that call for correction. We were told (1) that Franck's organ works are seldom played in this country ; (2) that they are difficult to obtain ; and (3) that their cost places them beyond the means of the average organist. All three statements are easily disproved. At the office of this journal many hundreds of recital programmes are received in the course of a year, and I have observed that Franck figures in a very large proportion. His organ music is as easily obtainable as that of Guilmant or any other popular French composer. The cost of course varies with the value of the franc, so it is impossible to give a fixed price, but at the moment of writing the professional musician may buy the Chorals for 2s. 6d. each, the Pièce Héroïque for 2s., and so on—a cost that compares very favourably with that of any other good music.

Certain of Franck's organ works have had a considerable vogue in England ever since the Royal College of Organists began to draw on them for examination purposes. (The College syllabuses have contained the A minor Choral, the Pièce Héroïque, the Cantabile, and the Pastorale.) Franck's place in the organist's repertory is as secure as that of any composer after Bach, Mendelssohn, and Rheinberger. The bar to frequent performance of his music by the rank and file is its difficulty, not its price or inaccessibility. Excluding the two books of short pieces and the Andantino in G minor, it may all be graded as very difficult, whereas among the organ works of Bach, Mendelssohn, and Rheinberger, we find much that is excellent and at the same time modest in its demands on the player. Franck's easy examples are as a rule far below his average in quality. He wrote nothing so good and at the same time so easy as the numerous short Chorale Preludes of Bach, the less difficult movements of Mendelssohn, and the scores of admirable short pieces of Rheinberger. We come across a few gems among his two collections of harmonium pieces, but they are almost swamped by the many weak examples.

The fact is, Franck was born at an unfortunate time so far as church and organ music was concerned. The brilliant promise held out by the early French writers from Titelouze (1563-1633) to Clérambault had ended abruptly with the death of the latter in 1740. After a blank of nearly a century the silence was broken by Boëly (1785-1858), a learned writer who, curiously enough, did his best work when slavishly imitating others—chiefly Bach. Franck, therefore, had no tradition to carry on. The organ music of his time was that of the Lefébure-Wély type, and there are not a few traces of that cheerful writer in Franck's earlier efforts. Asked off-hand to name the composer of an organ piece opening in this skittish vein:

Ex. 1. Bourdon & Fl.

most of us would at once say 'Lefébure-Wély or Batiste.' But it happens to be by Franck—one of a large number of short and easy pieces written for an old organist friend in the provinces. We may say that the faux pas is 'only a little one,' but it is one of many such flippancies in Franck's early organ pieces; they show that here, as in other respects, there was an unusually wide gulf between the youthful and the mature composer.

Apart from the Andantino in G minor and these two books of easy pieces, which do not call for discussion, Franck's organ music consists of three sets of pieces, produced at rather long intervals—the Six Pièces (1862); the Three Pièces (1878); and the Three Chorals (1890). So far as mere bulk is concerned, this is a small output; it is of first-rate importance, however, not only in regard to quality, but also because (as we have seen) it appeared at a time when French organ music was at a very low ebb. (In fairness, we must not forget that the ball had been set rolling by Saint-Saëns, whose E flat Fantaisie and Three Rhapsodies were published a few years before Franck's Six Pièces. Saint-Saëns was then about twenty years old, and organist at St. Merry.)

When these first works of Franck appeared, Gigout, Widor, Salomé, and Dubois were mere lads, Guilmant was beginning to be talked about at Boulogne as a promising young organist, and Boëllmann was just starting his all-too-short life. The staple organ music of the time was that of Lefébure-Wély and Batiste. A public brought up on the light-hearted strains of these two composers probably turned a deaf ear to Franck's Six Pièces, but the group of young organists and composers took notice, and the result has been a store of organ music which for variety, brilliance, and clarity is second to no other school of to-day.

Although the Three Chorals are apparently the best known of Franck's organ music, I believe that in the long run the Six Pièces will rank above them on the score of quality and varied interest. One point in their favour is that they are free from the cloying chromaticism that spoils some pages of the Chorals. The accidentals with which some of their pages bristle are merely the result of Franck's want of thought in the matter of notation; the harmony itself is simple. For example, the Finale in B flat contains a long stretch in the forbidding key of A sharp major. There is no practical reason why the passage should not appear in B flat; it is simply an extreme example of Franck's weakness for sharps. The Prière also contains an exasperating passage that would lose much of its difficulty with a simple change of signature. The whole set suffers, too, from inconvenient laying out. Franck was as thoughtless in the matter of ledger lines as of accidentals, and calmly stacked them up when a change of clef would have saved trouble to himself and to his player.

We badly want a new edition of these works, with convenient lay-out and proper phrasing. In regard to the latter point Franck was very casual. He indicates the phrasing for a couple of staves, and then leaves it alone for a page. There are no doubt many players who are discouraged from working at these fine pieces by the lack of any help in fingering and pedalling, and by the inconveniences mentioned above. I hope that a brief discussion of the set and a few suggestions as to their performance will induce some players to make fuller acquaintance with them.

FANTAISIE IN C

Organ fantasias are usually long and stormy, but this one is short and quiet. The opening Poco lento is notable for its beautiful use of canon. The second subject—suggestive of a carillon—is imitated at the octave above:

EX. 2.
a tempo.

The canon is then repeated with a delightful counter-theme, suggestive of a certain famous 'sleep motive':

EX. 3.

The movement ends with a return to the less interesting material with which it opened. The few bars of bridge-passage that follow show Franck in a state of suspended animation, and are best omitted, the full close in C being followed by the Allegretto Cantando. It is surprising that this dainty movement is not well known. It is complete in itself, and so may be played separately; it is tuneful in the regular French organ cantilène style; and it contains some beautiful use of three contrasted manuals, e.g.:

EX. 4. Gt.

Players should note that Franck's indication of Trompette on the Swell must be taken with caution. On an average organ the stop so named would ruin the piece, but M. Alexander Cellier points out in his L'Orgue Moderne that the organ at St. Clotilde possessed 'a small Trompette, almost a hautbois, of great finesse and flexibility; this justified a registration which would ordinarily be hazardous, although possible upon the organ for which it was conceived by the composer.' We shall find the Swell Trumpet called on again in the middle section of the Pastorale. In both cases an oboe, or a gamba plus a soft diapason, will generally be more suitable. This attractive Allegretto is followed by yet another irritating bridge-passage and a short and simple—perhaps too simple—Adagio. The best use to make of the Fantaisie is to play the first movement and the Allegretto as separate pieces, or to join them up as a pair of contrasted quiet movements.

GRANDE PIÈCE SYMPHONIQUE

This fine though unequal work opens with a weighty introduction (Andantino serioso) which is disfigured by the too-numerous pauses. It leads without break into the first movement proper, the bulk of which consists of development of this theme, given out by the pedals ff:

EX. 5.

Contrast is provided by a suave second subject in minims in the relative major. There are traces of the influence of Lefébure-Wély in the passages where repeated chords are used as accompaniment, but the effect is better than it deserves to be. It would be difficult to overpraise the best parts of this movement, such as the two- and three-part treatment of the main theme immediately after its announcement:

Ex. 6.

The climax into which this is developed is a good example of what may be done with three-part harmony for manuals alone, and with no great amount of tone. The power is in the music itself, with its wide-ranging left-hand part and its gradual ascent of the keyboard. Unfortunately Franck lets this movement down by the five pauses on pages 22 and 23, and by the string of tame chords at the end of page 22. That they are mere registration halts is shown by the indications that accompany them. This being so we need not hesitate to omit the eight bars following the third pause on page 22. Similarly, unless we are enthusiastic about the letter rather than the spirit, we shall 'cut' the eight bars that follow this halt on page 26:

Ex. 7.

If we 'cut,' we must of course change the last chord from an inversion of the seventh into a plain chord of F sharp.

The Andante foreshadows the slow movement of the Symphony in its construction. It consists of an expressive Cantabile, followed by a five-page section (Allegro) of a Scherzo-like character. The Andante is then briefly restated with some effective canonic writing helped out by double pedalling:

Ex. 8.

The Scherzo section is of no great originality, but, neatly played at a sharp pace (not less than $\text{♩} = 120$) and in the right light registration, it is very effective. If we prefer to omit it, however, we need not hesitate to do so, as the two portions of the Andante join up into a very satisfactory whole.

Franck leads up to the Finale by passing in review subjects already used. Inevitably we are reminded of Beethoven's use of the device in the ninth Symphony, and the comparison leaves the advantage with Beethoven. Indeed, it may be doubted whether this kind of thing can ever be successful without the help of words, or at least of discordant interruptions such as Beethoven uses, and which are in fact almost as significant as words. Without such aids the marshalling of a number of themes produces merely an effect of scrappiness. Moreover, in the ninth Symphony, there is drama in the angry refusal of the various motives, and in the appearance of a new subject so fine that nobody is likely to regret the discarded. In Franck's piece the composer seems to be merely wondering which subject he shall take as a basis for the Finale—a choice that is best made privately. From the first it is clear that he inclines to the main subject of the first movement, and, after a final tussle, in which the theme of the Andante makes a strong bid for favour (note the insistence on its two-note figure in the right hand against the opening three notes of its rival in the pedal), the Finale blazes out thus, with a major version of the first movement subject over a grandly-rolling bass:

Ex. 9.

The quaver movement of the pedal is kept up for about thirty bars—a couple of pages of glorious music—after which we have a fugal section, the subject being a not too obvious derivative of the main theme. The texture of a good deal of the remainder is inclined to be thin, but judgment must not be passed on the appearance of the page or by the effect on the pianoforte. French organs as a rule have a sub-octave coupler but not an octave coupler, a fact that accounts for French composers' liberal use of the higher part of the keyboard in ff passages. Clearly Franck relied on the coupler here, for at the start of this thin portion he calls for all the sub-octave couplers (Ped. des 8^{ves} graves à tous les claviers). On small organs, minus both doubles and sub-octave coupler, it will be better to play some of the right-hand passages an octave lower. There is, however, still a problem in this section of the Finale. Franck gives no indication that the subject in the left hand should be soloed, yet it is clear that, if both hands are on the Great, the quaver figure in the right hand is made far too prominent. We may assume that he played the left hand on the Great and the right on the Swell or Choir—more probably the latter, as the Swell at St. Clotilde had no 16-ft., whereas the Choir had a Bourdon and was stronger in other ways than the Swell. This two-manual disposition would begin at bar 2, line 3, page 40, and would continue until the a tempo on the last page, when the right hand would join the left on the full Great until the end. On most organs it will of course be advisable to put in the Great-to-Pedal coupler during this soloing. If any reader has doubts about the necessity for some such arrangement as this, he should examine and try on his organ the effect of the dozen bars before the a tempo, especially these:

Ex. 10.

There can be no question that the tenor—a derivative of the subject—is the main theme, with the alto a good second. (A glance at the alto on its first appearance a few bars before shows that it too is an offshoot of the subject.) The high accompanimental figure is ugly and killing unless played on a second manual. This soloing leads to no difficulty save in the bar preceding the rall., where the left hand has to negotiate a very awkward tenth. But we know Franck's grasp was unusually big, so the presence of this stretch—impossible to most players—is no proof that Franck did not solo the whole of this long passage. Incidentally the movement gives us a good—or bad—example of Franck's carelessness in the matter of laying out. No doubt many players have failed to persevere with this splendid and difficult Finale owing to the awkwardness of such passages as that quoted above. Yet how much easier Franck could have made it! Thus:

Ex. 11. Sra

And had the whole movement been in G flat it would have been still easier.

The Pièce Symphonique is rarely heard—its length, difficulty, and loose construction are against it. But it may be improved and tightened up into a reasonably lengthy work by the omission of the middle section of the Andante, of the introduction to the Finale, and of the two passages suggested as cuts in the first movement. As an extreme measure we may even omit the opening Andantino serioso, and start straight away with the pedal solo on page 18. More vandalism! a reader protests. But this is very mild cutting by the side of that applied for years past to Wagner and Shakespeare. When reasonable and careful cutting enables us to keep a fine work in the repertory, there is everything to be said for it. The crime is not in cutting, but in clumsy cutting.

(To be continued.)

SOME ANCIENT CONCEPTIONS OF RHYTHM

BY C. F. ABDY WILLIAMS

The story told by Mr. Ernest Austin in a letter to the Musical Times of November, 1922, brings to mind other things connected with the musical 'feet' by the ancients, who loved their 'rhythms' as much as modern harmony writers love their chords. Plato goes so far as to say that the morals of a people are more affected by the rhythms they use than by their melodies.

The words dactyl, spondee, anapaest, and so on, now almost exclusively used by poets, were originally musical terms at a time when the poet and composer were one and the same person. They all implied a strictly proportional division of time, a feature that is an absolute necessity to music, but would be ridiculous or repellent if applied to the recitation of modern poetry. Hence, though they have for convenience been adopted by poets, they are not applicable in their true sense to any modern language.

All ancient theorists, without exception, derive the poetic-musical feet, which are our simple bars, from a theoretically indivisible unit of time called the primary time. It is usually translated by our quaver. The combination of two 'times' in one note made the 'long,' equivalent to our crotchet. Four and eight primary times in one note produced the equivalents of our minim and semibreve.

These writers all agree in giving the dactyl  the first and most important place in musical feet. It formed the basis of the hexameter. Aristides Quintilianus (fl. about A.D. 50) says that the dactyl, and other feet that commence with the thesis, or down beat, produce on the mind an effect of calmness. He and many others tell us that the name is derived from dactylos, a finger, which consists of one long and two short joints. It gave the name dactylic to all duple-measure rhythm.

Time was beaten audibly by foot or hand. From pictures and statues and vases we know that the conductor used little cymbals in his hands and wooden clogs on his feet, to increase the noise of beating the time. In museums are to be seen many examples of these small cymbals; also of the sistrum, a kind of rattle, specially connected with the music of the Temple of Isis. All this noise would not meet with the approval of a modern audience; but the ancients differed from us in many of their ideas of art. It is known, for instance, that the Greeks painted their beautiful marble statues; that their theatre had no curtain, and all scene-changing took place in full view of the audience.

Opposed to the dactyl, but still in the same species, was the anapaest  Aristides considers that this is one of the 'exciting' or 'agitated' forms, since it begins with the up-beat, or arsis. It was used for military marches, and in the final chorus of the play the performers marched off the orchestra by way of the parados to an anapaestic song. It was also used for satire and ridicule. From Liddell and Scott's lexicon we learn that the word anapaistos means 'struck back,' 'rebounding.' Hence, a dactyl reversed.

When the Spartans were at war with the Messenians they were told by an oracle to apply to Athens for a leader. The Athenians, not wishing for their success, sent them the most inefficient general they could find in Tyrtaeus, a lame schoolmaster. But Tyrtaeus turned out to be a poet. His elegies inspired the Spartans to constancy, and, still more, his anapaestic marches, sung with the aulos, so roused the soldiers as they advanced to the attack that they fought with a vigour and spirit that eventually led them to complete victory.

The next foot of the dactylic species is the spondee  and the major spondee . Aristides tells us that this foot was so named because it was used in the spondee, or libation, a small portion of wine which was solemnly poured out to the gods at a feast. The spondee was accompanied by a hymn whose rhythm consisted of feet of two equal long notes. The libation was the precursor of the 'grace' sung in monasteries, in college halls, and at City dinners. Aristides continues that from its grave character the spondaic foot was appropriate to hymns to the gods, to religious festivals, and sacrifices. So much was this the case that the official aulos-player, whose presence was necessary at every sacrifice, was sometimes called the spondaulos.

This use of the spondee was unconsciously resuscitated by Luther and his contemporaries when they invented the chorale; and it has formed the basis of the majority of hymn-tunes in the Reformed churches since his time to the present day.

As to the calming effect of the spondaic rhythm, many successive authors down to Boethius (born about A.D. 473) tell the story of how Pythagoras was one night examining the stars, when he found a lover trying to set fire to the house of his innamorata, being maddened by jealousy, and by an aulos which was playing in the Phrygian mode. The philosopher ordered the auletes to change to spondaic rhythm; this at once sobered the young man, and brought him to a reasonable temper.

Of the pyrrhic  and the double pyrrhic or proceleusmaticus  Aristides tells us that, being very rapid, they are impetuous and lively, and proper for warlike dances and contests in the games. Some theorists, who will not allow that a foot can contain less than three primary times, do not recognise the pyrrhic, and call it a vulgar innovation, not a real foot. Bacchius Senior calls it the hegemon, but, unlike Aristides, he does not inform us why he gives it this name. Mr. Austin gave an account of it in his letter above mentioned.

The verb iambizein means to speak evil, to lampoon. It gave the name iambus to the form  since this was the rhythm at first used only for scurrilous songs. But the importance of the iambus for serious music was early recognised, and soon gave the name 'iambic species' to all music in triple measure. Aristides says that iambic and trochaic rhythms have great vivacity and fire; but that the triple time in which the two members have respectively the value of four and eight primary times, namely the orthios  and semantos  are specially dignified on account of the slowness of their movement. Whether these were used for hymns we cannot say. The ancients had no metronome by which they could regulate the tempo. In its place they used the beating of the human pulse. If the primary time was taken to coincide with the beats of the pulse, the pace was 'moderate,' neither fast nor slow. If the primary time was quicker or slower than the pulse the tempo (agoge) was 'rapid' or 'slow' respectively. As all pulses differ in their pace, and also differ from time to time in the same individual, the tempo must have varied a good deal. Probably, however, being practical people, they left it to the performer to take the tempo he felt best fitted, and used the pulse only for theoretical purposes.

The trochee  derives its name from trochos, a wheel, a boy's hoop, a running pace. It is something that runs or moves very fast. Aristotle says it is voluble and rapid, and suitable for dancing. Hence it also had the name of choreus, from chorus, a body of dancers. Plutarch informs us that Terpander invented the rapid trochaic dance. Sometimes the trochee was dissolved into the still more rapid tribrach,

Quintuple measure was called pæonic, from the pæon  and the pæon epibatus  It was a very favourite rhythm for sacred dances and for hymns. The well-known hymns to Apollo discovered at Delphi in 1893 make large use of pæonic rhythm. Recent research in the domain of English folk-song has shown very decidedly that quintuple rhythm is not the 'unnatural' thing it was considered till comparatively recently, but a very natural and easy rhythm to master when once understood, as explained by Aristides, that its bar should be imagined as divided in the way we have shown in the pæon epibatus.

We have only referred to the most elementary forms of foot. The compound measures described by Aristides are said by him to be more 'pathetic' than the simple measures. There were also 'mixed' rhythms of triple with duple; and it is interesting to see our youngest school of composers unconsciously resuscitating some of the complicated ancient Greek rhythmical forms that our fathers endeavoured to explain away as impossible for the mind to assimilate or tolerate. They are, in fact, doing for the ancient 'mixed rhythms' what Luther did for the spondee when he revived it for religious use in his chorale.

DR. HULBERT'S LECTURES

A series of four lectures on 'Eurhythm' will be given by Dr. H. H. Hulbert at 160, Wardour Street, London, W., on February 7, 14, 21, and 28, at 8 p.m. Admission is by card of invitation, which can be obtained from Messrs. Novello at the above address. The synopses of the lectures are as follow:

LECTURE 1.

Eurhythm—Its theory, practice, and value in voice-training.

Its effect upon appreciation, conception, and expression—Its application to accomplishments—Its bearing upon the attitude and poise of the artist—The sense of touch in music and games—The sensation of tone—Conviction and self-control—Artistry and sentiment.

LECTURE 2.

Eurhythm the basis of musical pronunciation.

The cerebral apparatus of speech—Thought in diction—The movement-feeling word-understanding centre—The sounds of the English language in speech and song—The vowel shapes and the articulatory positions—The neutral vowel and the 'R' sounds—The combined sounds.

LECTURE 3.

Eurhythm—Its importance in breathing for voice.

The vocal apparatus—Different kinds of breathing—Thoughtful breathing and tonicity—Diaphragmatic and Intercostal breathing—The Abdominal press—The breathing centre for voice—Breathing exercises.

LECTURE 4.

Eurhythm—Its bearing upon voice and health.

The laws of movement—Value of Music in exercises—Happiness versus worry—Resisting power of body—The hygiene of voice—Eurhythmic exercises—Remedial work.

THE MUSIC OF TIBET

BY T. HOWARD SOMERVELL

The Mount Everest Expedition of 1921 brought back many fine photographs and important observations, but with regard to the music of the country, in response to inquiries, all we could learn was the fact that 'The Tibetans had quite jolly little tunes, and made a deuce of a row with trumpets and things.' When, in 1922, I found myself about to start for that mysterious land, I was (being a keen listener, though an ignorant student of music) naturally eager to find out something concerning these 'jolly little tunes' and (more especially perhaps as an ardent lover of Stravinsky) the 'deuce of a row.' I was a bit apprehensive of the quarter-tones and things which are traditionally associated with the music of the East, but I managed before entering Tibet to invent a rough notation for the recording of these mysterious intervals. Imagine my relief and delight at finding that the tunes of Tibet were in the pentatonic scale, and those of Nepal in the diatonic. But more of the tunes anon. Let us first talk about the instruments on which they are played. These are not very many in number, but comprise wood-wind, brass, percussion, and strings.

The principal item in the Tibetan orchestra is the percussion. There are drums of all sizes, from the small one made of the top of a human skull to drums several feet in diameter. In addition there are cymbals and gongs of various sorts. The Tibetans employ two wind instruments—a long straight trumpet, some 10-ft. in length, and a kind of cor anglais, played with a double-reed and provided with seven holes, which are equidistant, and comprise an octave, therefore sounding in the scale of whole-tones. The foregoing instruments are employed in the temples, and with them the lamas accompany the Devil Dances which are so important a feature in their worship.

Mendicants and private individuals use two stringed instruments. The Tibetan violin, the more elaborate of the two, has four strings, tuned a fifth apart, Nos. 1 and 3 sounding A, Nos. 2 and 4 sounding the D below. The bow has two hanks of Yak-hair, threaded between strings 1 and 2, and between 3 and 4 respectively. Thus, when pressed against No. 1 string, it sounds No. 3 also, and when pressed in the opposite direction it plays on Nos. 2 and 4.

The fingering is done on all the strings at once, which necessitates their being close together at the nut, the pressing of the bow alone determining which pair of strings shall sound. In addition to this violin there is a one-stringed banjo-like instrument on which tunes are sometimes played, but which is more often twanged to one of the characteristic rhythms mentioned below.

Our coolies, collected almost entirely from the tribes of Nepal, beguiled the hours by singing native songs, which had a curious appeal by reason of their lilt and by the fact that they were almost invariably in the diatonic major scale. Some of these airs are arranged as a short Overture to the film of the Expedition's work now being shown at Philharmonic Hall. But across the border of Tibet a different type of tune is found, nearly always in the pentatonic scale. At one or two temples where the cor Tibetanglais, if I may so call it, is used, the tunes are naturally in the scale of whole-tones. But men working in the fields in the same places sing pentatonic tunes, and these must be considered as the national mode. I have heard Tibetans whistling arpeggios of common chords, and, strangely enough, of diminished sevenths; but never a semitone, which they do not seem to appreciate as an interval. They may strike E and E flat in this way, but never in succession.

The Tibetan music that we heard divides itself into three sections. First, the airs sung by the people and played by mendicant fiddlers (these are in the pentatonic scale); second, the chanting of the lamas; and, third, the more orchestral music of the temples. The folk-tunes are simple, usually repeated many times, and almost always in the pentatonic scale. They suggest the negro 'Spirituals.' The music played in the interval at the Everest film, and orchestrated by myself (very amateurishly, I fear), consists of a number of these airs. The mendicant fiddlers play delightful little tunes suggestive of the Scottish Highlands, in the pentatonic scale, or, more rarely, in the scale of whole-tones.

The chanting of the lamas is usually of the form quoted here :

an occasional rise of a fifth or an augmented fifth being characteristic. Sometimes, especially if an air is sung, the supertonic is held by a second deeper voice as a kind of ground-bass. It is interesting to notice that when such a note is held as an accompaniment it is always the supertonic, which the Tibetans apparently consider as the root of their scale. Thus in the pentatonic scale, C D E G A, D is the note so employed.

Sir Henry Walford Davies, who was very interested in the Tibetan music played at Philharmonic Hall, considers the supertonic to be the natural root of this scale, for, starting from D with the two perfect intervals—fourth and fifth—we arrive at G and A; starting from G and A we arrive at C, D, and E, and in this way, from two successions of perfect fourths and fifths, the whole pentatonic scale is built up from the root. Sir Henry told me that he believed that if the world came to an end to-morrow and were reinhabited, music would start in this fashion and the pentatonic scale be therefore the first mode or scale to appear. Be this as it may, it is remarkable that so many primitive or isolated peoples, such as the Highland Scotsman or the Tibetan lama, use the pentatonic scale. Appended are three typical Tibetan tunes—the first originally heard on the violin, the second sung in the fields, and the third on the cor anglais :

So much for the airs themselves. The Tibetan Orchestra, which plays more organized music at the larger temples during religious festivals, was intensely interesting to listen to, although a trifle monotonous after a few hours.

The music of a Tibetan orchestra consists generally of the following component parts: (1) Rhythm, kept up in the drums and cymbals, and never ceasing even when the other parts are silent; (2) The drone-bass, played on two of the long trumpets, and consisting almost invariably of two notes a minor seventh apart; (3) The air, often monotonously repeated hundreds of times, played on the cor anglais, or rather its Tibetan equivalent.

The rhythm of the percussion instruments is always one of three:

The music played during the Devil Dance film being shown at Philharmonic Hall will give a better idea than any musical score or quotations of the sound of the Tibetan orchestration. The reader may be able to imagine it by considering that the rhythm of the percussion is continuous, and lasts throughout the day (for a concert in Tibet is a whole-day affair). The drone-bass goes on most of the time, with or without the air on the reed instrument. In addition, there is the chanting of the lamas from time to time, sometimes unaccompanied, occasionally in two parts, in which case the lower part, as already mentioned, is a ground-bass of the supertonic. The music and Devil dancing fit in with one another very adequately, and in a crude way seem to me to be a very high form of art; for, after all, sincere art is almost always good, and whatever the primitive nature of both music and dancing, this intensely serious presentation before the awed populace of the sights and sounds they will meet with after death is an attempt at religious instruction of the most sincere and practical kind. We hope that those who see the reproduction of these ceremonies at Philharmonic Hall will thereby obtain a real intellectual treat; we are at any rate safe in saying that neither Tibetan film nor Tibetan music have been produced in London before. This entertainment, with its accompanying films of travel across Tibet and of climbing 27,000-ft. on the world's highest mountain, is to be continued, it is hoped, until the first week in February. The profits from the show are to be used for the equipment of a similar expedition next year. We look to the public to prevent Britain from being forestalled by another nation in this great adventure, as she has been in the conquest of both the Poles.

We have received the 1923 edition of A Kalendar of Hymns Ancient and Modern and the English Hymnal (Humphrey Milford, Oxford University Press, 6d.). This invaluable guide in the selection of hymns should be on the desk of every parson and choirmaster.

Music in the Foreign Press

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

FRANCK'S UNPUBLISHED WORKS

Nothing could be more welcome and more instructive than Julien Tiersot's contribution to the history of Franck's early evolution, under the title Unpublished Works by César Franck (Revue Musicale, December). He starts by remarking that very little is known of the first fifty years of Franck's life; the only standard critical biography, Vincent d'Indy's, says very little of the period before 1870. And most of the works which Franck wrote during this period have remained unpublished.

Tiersot divides the manuscripts which he has examined into various groups: firstly the school tasks, consisting of exercises in harmony, counterpoint, and fugue (1883-40); then original compositions written during childhood, during youth, and from 1847 onwards.

The first group comprises the four-part Fugue with three subjects, 'well worthy [Tiersot says] of being transcribed for keyboard and performed,' with which Franck won his prize in 1840. In the second are mentioned 'Variations for pianoforte upon an aria from Le Pré-aux-Clercs, by César Franck, age eleven years and a half, Op. 5,' songs and an O Salutaris, a Pianoforte Sonata (in the style of Beethoven's early works), a Symphony for full orchestra, Op. 13 (performed, according to a note pencilled on the MS., at Orleans in 1841, but probably written far earlier), and a second Pianoforte Sonata in which the 'cyclic' principle is already applied.

At the beginning of 1848 Franck had completed a tone-poem inspired by Hugo's Ce qu'on entend sur la montagne, which, judging by Tiersot's description and the examples quoted, should be well worth knowing. (Tiersot's contention that on the strength of this work, Franck is to be considered as having forestalled Liszt in inventing the genre of the tone-poem is not altogether admissible: Liszt's Mazeppa Etude, for instance, in its final form (1837), might be adduced as proof to the contrary.)

Three important works for chorus and orchestra, La Tour de Babel (1865), La Plainte des Israélites, and Cantique du Moïse, are mentioned further and described as heralding the style and architecture of Les Béatitudes and La Rédemption.

Tiersot concludes his article by remarking that:

The case of a composer withholding from publication practically the whole of his output during the first half-century of his life is almost unique; and that although Franck's unpublished works may be less significant than those upon which his fame rests, we should welcome the possibility of studying César Franck's individuality during the first stages of his creative career.

The Monde Musical (December) reports an address by Vincent d'Indy to the members of the Société Française de Musicologie upon certain early works of César Franck:

Between 1837 and 1847, Franck's music reveals, from the melodic point of view, the influences of Monsigny, Méhul, Gluck, and Beethoven; and, as regards writing, those of Liszt, Thalberg, and Alkan. The imitation of Liszt is particularly obvious in a Chant du Pâtre for pianoforte, which, however, is quite characteristic of Franck's own individuality. All the early pianoforte pieces are in the same shape—an Allegro between two expositions of one theme, with or without an introduction.

FRANCK'S INFLUENCE

In the Revue Musicale (December) André Schaeffner disengages certain characteristics of Franck's influence. It is unfortunately impossible to give more than an inadequate outline of this remarkably thoughtful essay:

Franck, in spite of appearances, is something of an experimentalist. His methods are altogether classical, and the discipline of his mind leads him to disengage from the study of classical masterpieces a tendency towards ever-increasing unity, logic, and economy, with the result that in his work a strong chain of relationships will come to connect every detail with the whole. Thus, his first step is to attune himself to tradition as conceived by him, never to break away from it. He writes nothing of which he does not find an example, at least embryonic, in the past. But what he does is to apply his own instinct and his fecund empiricism to the solution of every problem of form and architecture. So soon as he knows that the structure is quite firm he allows free play to his fancy. 'The waves of chromaticism play round the granite of diatonism; one stronger wave, and all will be submerged: from Franck's last works to Debussy's first, the distance is bridged merely by a quickening in the speed of successive tonal waves.' Many of his followers are content with adopting his structural methods, without displaying any of the spiritual and imaginative qualities which ensure the vitality of his music. The works of Franck's maturity are characterised by an economy which is the fruit of long experience. His followers start, without previous experience, from the point which he reached gradually. Premature discipline and diffidence render them incapable of proceeding further. Others (like Magnard and Roussel) remain open to the suggestions of their own experimental instinct.

The same issue contains articles on Franck's influence abroad. As regards this country, Harvey Grace writes:

Franck's influence on British composers is slight, partly because his works have not been known until a comparatively recent date, and also because certain main characteristics of his music are out of fashion. We are witnessing just now a reaction against classical methods of working-out; and in the matter of chromaticism, our palates favour sharper, more pungent flavours. But it is likely that ten years hence Franck's influence will be greater.

Henry de Groot writes:

Franck has exercised no direct influence on Dutch music, but the composers of his school to whom we owe so much of to-day's conceptions have certainly influenced the younger generation of our composers. It is chiefly chromaticism, one of the revelations due to Franck, that has carried weight with them. Some of our composers resort to cyclic form, but for reasons generally more psychological than purely formal.

V. Stepan writes that the lofty spirit and splendid architecture of Franck's music correspond closely to Czecho-Slovakian ideals.

BRITAIN'S ULTRA-MODERNIST AND FUTURIST

COMPOSERS

These, as enumerated by Vittorio Ricca (Critica Musicale, November), are:

John Ireland, Frank Bridge, John Tyrwhitt, Emil Goossens, Josef Holbrooke, Benjamin Dale, Arnold Bax, J. MacEwen, and many others.

In the course of the article attention is called to the lack of confidence in British art which is a characteristic feature of a not inconsiderable fraction of the British public.

RIMSKY-KORSAKOV AND BORIS GODOUNOV

In Il Pianoforte (December) Gino Roncaglia concludes an article on Boris Godounov, which he has studied in Korsakov's revision, with the following words:

But the question arises, How far were Moussorgsky's intentions respected? Where does his contribution end and Korsakov's begin? Which beauties have been preserved unaltered, which improved, which spoilt? If we possessed Moussorgsky's original score, those questions might be investigated.

Whence it would appear that all the things written on the two versions of Boris Godounov, beginning with Pierre d'Alheim's contribution in his book, Moussorgsky, of 1896 (which is the very first students of Moussorgsky might be expected to consult), may still escape the attention even of eager investigators.

New Music

A NEW LENTEN CANTATA

Percy E. Fletcher's sacred cantata, The Passion of Christ (Novello, 3s.), is a setting of some words adapted by Mary Bradford Whiting from the libretto of an oratorio written by Metastasio, which was first performed with music by Caldara in 1730. The music is laid out for chorus, with soprano, tenor, and bass (or baritone) solos, and an organ accompaniment. The composer has evidently had in view the needs of choirs of quite modest resources, and has consistently avoided anything in the nature of intricate writing whether for voices or for organ. The music is always melodious and singable, and much of the work is expressively treated. Probably most choirs will avail themselves of the optional 'cut' in the chorus 'Light dawns.' By so doing they will skip one of the weakest spots of the work; the part-writing here is decidedly feeble, and the rather trivial theme is strikingly reminiscent of a well-known children's hymn. Two hymns, in which the congregation may join, are introduced. A varied arrangement of the tunes is provided, but the use of this is optional. We note that in each case the composer has made use of the—to many musicians—irritating trick of introducing the flat seventh before the Amen. It should be added that the work is also scored for small orchestra, including a special organ part for use with both complete and incomplete orchestral combinations, and is published in Tonic Sol-fa (2s.). The time required for performance, including hymns, is about forty-five minutes. For short Passiontide services certain numbers may be omitted.

For choirs which are not in a position to tackle the more elaborate settings of the Passion, this little work should provide a welcome change from certain well-worn Lenten cantatas. G. G.

CHORAL MUSIC

Two Bach Cantatas have lately been added to Novello's Octavo Edition—Christians, grave ye this glad day and O Christ, my all. The former calls for skilful soloists, and gives ample opportunities to a good choir. The latter contains treatments of no less than four chorales. The chorus work is expressive and fairly simple; soprano, tenor, and bass soloists are needed. Granville Bantock's Grass of Parnassus is a pleasantly flowing part-song for S.A.T.B. It is not difficult so far as the notes are concerned, and can be made effective by a choir whose strong point is soft, sustained singing. John Pointer's Rough wind that moanest loud calls for a choir with ample resources, as the writing is largely in seven parts. Sung with the right breadth and sonority, this setting of Shelley's well-known lines would be very impressive. These two part-songs are published by Novello.

Stainer & Bell have issued for the Carnegie Trust Cyril Bradley Rootham's Brown Earth, a striking setting for chorus, semi-chorus, and orchestra of a poem by Thomas Moulton. The semi-chorus is beautifully employed for remote effects. The work is quite short.

From Bayley & Ferguson come six part-songs by Kenneth G. Finlay, a new writer, who, as a choral composer, has the root of the matter in him. Logie Kirk is in folk-song style for S.A.T.B.; for S.S.A. there are Here a pretty baby lies, The feathers of the willow, and an arrangement of Ay waikin', O. Of these the first-named is perhaps the best—a beautiful setting of Herrick's poem. Mr. Finlay has also arranged for T.T.B.B. My love is like a red, red rose and Ye banks and braes. Of these we prefer the former. In Ye banks and braes the excursion into the tonic minor at the close of each verse is not in keeping. The composer is to be commended for his care in the matter of verbal accent.

Eugène Goossens's Silence, written for the Gloucester Festival, has just been published by Chester. Difficult though it be, it shows far more sympathy with the choralist than some of us might have expected from the composer. There is no denying its beauty. We hope that Mr. Goossens will follow up this start as a choral writer, and turn his attention especially to unaccompanied work.

Paxton's have just issued an edition of the St. Matthew Passion in which the music is given both in Old Notation and Tonic Sol-fa. Such an edition will be a boon to many. Our only complaint is that a good many of the pages are uncomfortably crowded. This happens especially in the double choruses—the very places, of course, in which clearness is especially desirable. In future dual-notation editions we hope both type and page will be slightly larger. The version used is that of Sterndale Bennett.

So large a parcel of part-songs and madrigals comes from Curwen's that only brief discussion is possible. There is always room for good, straightforward choral versions of fine national airs, and here are six from Ireland, arranged by Stanford: Lay his sword by his side, How dear to me the hour, My gentle harp, They know not my heart, Quick! we have but a moment, and Oh for the swords. As will be seen from the titles the words are from Moore's Irish Melodies. The settings are for S.A.T.B., and are well within the powers of the average choir. They would serve well for quartet singing.

A somewhat more sophisticated folk-song setting is George Dyson's version for S.A.T.B. of Up in the morning early. Felix White's John Anchor is a capital part-song for T.T.B.B. His Marriage Song for S.S.A., unaccompanied, is cleverly written, but at the quick pace called for it would be risky so far as intonation is concerned. Mr. White is apt to spoil his work by over-chromaticism. This is especially noticeable in his Beethoven, a setting for mixed voices of Sir William Watson's sonnet. One finds oneself longing for a few bars of diatonic writing. This part-song, by the way, should be attempted only by choirs able to attack complex seven-part writing. A large choir is needed, too, for Cyril Jenkins's Impressions, as the four parts are divided most of the time. The best parts of this effective work are the simplest. There is a sense of effort about some of Mr. Jenkins's chromatic flights. Granville Bantock's T.T.B.B. setting of Suckling's The Fond Lover is spoiled by the terribly platitudinous opening. Eric Fogg has provided yet one more setting of Herrick's To Blossoms. This is for S.S.A., accompanied. It is expressive, and fairly difficult. The same composer's The Centipede (S.A.T.B.) is a short, humorous affair; it would perhaps be more effective as a quartet than as a part-song. C. F. Chudleigh-Candish's Song of the Armada for T.T.B.B. and pianoforte is commonplace in idea and treatment. E. Markham Lee's The Shepherd's Holiday is a capital little two-part song in canon for equal voices of mezzo-soprano compass. C. Armstrong Gibbs has written straightforward music for T.T.B.B. to the familiar old song Hey nonny no! Men are fools that wish to die. Two short works by Maurice Besly show a knack of getting effect by simple means—O Lord, support us, a S.A.T.B. setting of a beautiful 16th-century prayer, and Sleep, a poem by Keats. Both are for unaccompanied singing. Granville Bantock's Jack and Joan, for S.A.T.B., provides opportunities for light and spirited singing. The words are taken from Thomas Campion's Divine and Morall Songs. The music is frankly commonplace, with its successions of thirds and sixths, but the flowing rhythm and the light 'la la' accompaniment will make the song attractive. Gerrard Williams's arrangement for soprano and contralto soli (or semi-chorus) and mixed-voice chorus, unaccompanied, of the traditional Three Ravens is unnecessarily bleak, and some of the imitative writing is a trifle obvious.

Michael Cavendish has been comparatively overlooked so far in the revival of our old music, but that his claims are considerable is proved by his Six Ayres to Four Voyces, which have just been transcribed by the enthusiastic Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson, and published in separate numbers by Novello. The quick ones are particularly good. Wanton, come hither, and Say, shepherds, say, sung as they should be sung, are two of the sprightliest and most attractive part-songs I have met with for a long time (I say 'part-songs' advisedly, for both have little of the polyphonic texture of the madrigals of their period). The last page of Say, shepherds, say, has a rhythmic scheme that fairly takes hold of one. These six little pieces should be examined by choral conductors, as they are only moderately difficult, and (despite the wails about the expensiveness of choral music) they cost a mere twopence each.

One would like to discuss fully Sydney Grew's Polymetric Edition of 16th Century Vocal Music (Curwen), but space does not allow. The numbers to hand so far are Morley's April is in my mistress' face, and Weelkes's O care, thou wilt despatch me and Hence care! thou art too cruel (under one cover), Wilbye's Adieu, sweet Amaryllis and Draw on, sweet night. Mr. Grew contributes to each number a preface dealing with the rhythm of this old music, and adds a biographical and critical sketch of the composer. Without practical experience of its working with an average choir I hesitate to express too decided an opinion on Mr. Grew's system of barring. I cannot resist an impression, however, that it is needlessly complicated. After all, singers and conductors who cannot discover and express the right flexible rhythm through their own musicianship and commonsense are hardly likely to do so by such aids as frequent changes of time-signature, a liberal use of five-four, seven-four, ten-four, and constant cross-barring with dotted lines. The time-signature of Wilbye's Draw on, sweet night is given as three-four, four-four, two-two, yet there appears to be no difficulty in realising the rhythmic scheme with the ordinary signature of C or four-four. So elaborate a system as Mr. Grew's is likely to make singers regard the problems set up by such music as being more formidable than they really are. When all is said and done, a choir that can sing good modern part-music with the right freedom is a goodish way on the road to success with the older polyphony, and learned talk about amphibrachs and bacchics is not really helpful. Even the title of the series is unnecessarily forbidding. Is not almost all good choral music more or less polymetric? Heaven forbid that I should throw cold water on any attempt to aid our singers in the study of this fine old music, but I cannot help feeling that here, as in other branches of the art, such a thing as a fool-proof edition is undesirable, even if it be possible. Performers must not have their thinking done for them.

Havergal-Brian's It was a lover and his lass, for S.S.A., is a really fresh and original affair, with some arresting harmonic touches that are in the picture. It needs spirited singers and a skilful pianist. The same composer's The Phantom Wooer is a setting for S.A.T.B. of some gruesome words of Thomas Lovell Beddoes. The music is appropriately uncomfortable, both to singers and hearers—so much so that a choral society which rehearsed it thoroughly for a month or two would then wind up with either a collective nervous breakdown or a rebellion.

H. G.

NEW CHURCH MUSIC

During the coming months Elizabethan music will be very much discussed in this country. Some new publications will therefore be viewed with special interest by church musicians. Under the editorship of Sydney Grew there appears Byrd's O God, give ear, No. 1 of Psalmes, Sonets, and Songs of Sadnes and Pietie, 1588 (Curwen). This beautiful work is for five voices—soprano and contralto in unison, two tenors, baritone, and bass. In places where the first tenor part is uncomfortably high, small notes indicate optional singing by contraltos. Mr. Grew contributes a preface in which the subject of metre is minutely discussed, and advice given on the proper rendering of 16th century music. A short biography of Byrd is added. We wonder if this edition is not over-edited, and whether the multiplicity of time-signatures is really necessary.

One of the latest additions to the Tudor Church Music series published for the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust by the Oxford University Press (Humphrey Milford) is a Magnificat and Nunc dimittis by William Byrd. Dr. Fellowes is the editor, and the service appears in F minor—a minor third above the original pitch. It needs a choir of ample resources, as altos and tenors are frequently divided. Apart from this its difficulties are not great.

Simpler than the above, and well within the powers of the average parish church choir, is a setting of the same canticles by Thomas Tomkins (circa 1575-1656). The editor is Edgar T. Cook, and he has transposed the music from C to E flat. This useful and effective setting is for four voices, and is published by Novello.

From Stainer & Bell come three splendid works by Byrd—his Masses for three, four, and five voices. If we remember rightly these three Masses were sung at Christmas at Westminster Cathedral under Sir Richard Terry. The editor is Dr. Fellowes, and we understand from the publishers that he is now preparing an edition for use in the English Church.

Passing to present-day music, John Pulein's setting of the Te Deum in D (Faith Press) may safely be recommended. The vocal writing is strong and vigorous, and though not elaborate or difficult it never lacks interest. It is dedicated to the organist and choir of Rochester Cathedral.

A revised edition of Alex. Morvaren Maclean's The Annunciation (Novello) has now been issued. It is a setting of Bible scenes for soprano, mezzo-soprano, tenor, and bass soli, chorus, and orchestra. The work is difficult, and contains a considerable amount of eight-part writing. The choral work is impressive, and the elaborate orchestral accompaniment is skilfully developed. Adequately performed it should have an imposing effect.

A new Easter anthem, Jesus Christ is risen to-day, by Sir Charles Stanford (Novello), is a setting of the well-known Easter hymn. The music is laid out for double choir—Decani and Cantoris—but there is actually very little in the nature of real eight-part writing. The first verse is set to a strong theme, sung by all the basses in unison, the other voices entering imitatively at the cadences with Alleluias. The second verse is sung in four-part harmony, unaccompanied (Decani), the organ coming in with the Alleluias sung by Cantoris at the end of each line. The third verse opens quietly with a theme given to the basses, the treatment generally being similar to that of the first verse. At the close all voices come together in triumphant Alleluias, forming an imposing finish.

In the Easter carol, Spring bursts to-day (Novello), Christina Rossetti's words have been set to fittingly joyous music by Geoffrey Shaw. Intended for unaccompanied singing, this admirable little work would well repay any time spent on its preparation.

G. G.

The Ealing Philharmonic Society gave an excellent concert of 'English Music of Yesterday and To-day' on January 18, under the direction of Mr. E. Victor Williams. Among many good things Stanford's The Blue Bird may be specified as an example of choral interpretation. The instrumental music included two Suites for strings, by Purcell and Parry.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

No doubt many of you observed a week or so ago that two music critics wrote notices of an operatic performance which they heard by wireless telegraphy. One writer was too unwell to leave his home, so a friend ran round with a set of gadgets, made the connection in a few minutes, and, the critic being unable to go to the opera, the opera came to the critic. In the other case the critic was on a visit, or was pursuing, in some wild northern region (Golder's Green, I think the settlers call it), and, instead of making Covent Garden an excuse for hurrying away, he found one of the natives who had a wireless set, and, by the gift of a string of beads or some other simple gewgaw, obtained permission to make use of it. Critics will not be able to do all their work by the fireside just yet, but they may look forward to such slippered ease in the not very distant future. The progress made lately is remarkable. Six months ago I had my first experience of music by wireless, and the effect left so much to be desired that I was unable to take it seriously. Without the headpiece, the sound—(via a gramophone horn) were barely audible. With one, they were not to be endured. A tenor nasally wept his way through 'Lohengrin's Farewell,' his sobs being punctuated by crackling noises, Morse signals, and remote syrens. To say that I heard a violin solo would be to state the case feebly. The sound, magnified, and brassy rather than stringy, bored its way into my skull in a manner suggestive of a surgical operation. A pianist took a turn. Maybe he was a normal player with a normal instrument, but as I listened, I seemed to see clenched fists smiting huge keys with senseless fury. It was not a pianoforte solo, but a cataclysm. I removed the headpiece in a hurry, and went away convinced that music by wireless needn't be written about for some years to come. But on January 20 I sat by a friend's fireside, and heard two Acts of Aida and a couple of La Bohème, with Melba bringing down the house, and I am convinced that the invention which a year ago seemed like a futile toy is about to create something like a revolution in the musical world.

Naturally, the first question that is being asked everywhere is 'How will the broadcasting of concert and operatic performances affect the box-office?' So far the reply seems to be that the box-office will gain. The optimists who say this bid us to look at the case of the gramophone, which (they tell us) by increasing the knowledge and appreciation of good music, has sent many people to the concert-hall.

I am inclined to doubt the assumption, and even if I thought it were correct I should have to point out that the analogy does not hold. The most the gramophone could do for me in the way of opera is to provide at considerable expense records of short items, and before I can use those records I have to buy a good gramophone at a cost of anything from ten pounds upwards. A wireless set can be got for a good deal less, and (as I have said) the other night it enabled me to hear a complete operatic performance, with all sorts of more or less interesting trimmings—the quiet confused sounds of the audience getting seated and rustling its programmes, the tuning of the orchestra (the wood-wind gurgles and twiddles were so near and clear as to be startling), the applause that greeted the conductor, and the 'calls,' and highly emotional speech of the prima donna at the end. More: a voice (apparently at my elbow, but really at the broadcasting station) helps me to see as well as hear, by saying in a confidential hope-I-don't-intrude tone such helpful things as 'Mimi is about to enter'; 'It is now day, and the people come out of the inn'; 'The market women enter, bearing [of all things!] market produce.' I am an enthusiast for the gramophone, and I believe that it will continue to do much for us that wireless can never do. For example, it can give us music of a type that is not likely to be broadcast, and it has the further advantage of being always available. Wireless, on the other hand, is bound to cater for the general taste and to work at fixed times. But wireless will beat the gramophone hollow when we want to hear a whole concert or opera, and, moreover, we are not bothered by having to jump up to change records and needles and to wind up motors. Wireless wins hands down, too, so far as ensemble effects are concerned. For example, the climaxes in Aida the other night were quite thrilling, despite the fact that one seemed at times to be listening through the wrong end of a telescope, so to speak. The gramophone gives us more power, especially in records of the Caruso type, but it has the contrary effect of a single thing magnified. (Thus Heifitz, so far as sonority is concerned, is far better heard through the gramophone than in the concert-hall.) And it cannot yet give us (as wireless opera does) the effect of a tremendous lot going on.

Bearing in mind that this Covent Garden broadcasting was fixed up at short notice, and that it is apparently the first attempt to transmit opera direct from the stage, it cannot be denied that the success is astounding and the possibilities practically unlimited. Do I exaggerate? If you think so remind yourself of two facts: (1) Melba singing at Covent Garden was plainly heard not only all over Great Britain but also at Copenhagen, Paris, Stockholm, and Madrid. (2.) A few days ago conversation was carried on between London and New York so distinctly that an American speaker sounded at times as if he were telephoning from a mere mile away. After this who can set a limit to what is possible in the way of long distance music? Already Melba is talking of being the first to sing from London to New York. And she'll do it soon.

The gramophone may or may not have increased the number of concert-goers, but we may be sure that in the long run wireless will not do so. There are too many advantages in listening at home. If you don't like an item you have only to take off your receiver; you may dodge such irritating things as encores, ovations to perspiring prima donna conductors, and so forth. In the concert-room there is no escape.

Discussing this subject with a wireless enthusiast the other day, I expressed the opinion that the day of the concert in its present form will soon be past, and I was interested to hear from my friend that our best-known novelist-scientist had in conversation with him some years ago prophesied the same thing. The services of our leading performers will be retained by the broadcasting company, and daily concerts (afternoon and evening) will be transmitted to all the world and his wife. A subscription fee will have to be charged, for the present system of free-gratis-and-all-for-nothing is obviously one that cannot continue. How a charge is to be made is not clear, seeing that the purchase of a set gives one the freedom of the ether. Will there be an appliance of the gas-meter type, by means of which listeners will be charged so much per thousand feet of music? Be this as it may, it needs no great daring or imagination to foretell that public concerts, as we know them to-day, will gradually diminish until only a few outstanding soloists or an occasional choral or orchestral performance of special interest, will draw us up to town. Opera will be affected later, when success crowns the experiments now being made in the direction of wireless photography. Already enough has been done to justify the belief that eventually scenes as well as sounds will be transmitted.

How music by wireless will affect professional performers seems to be clear: it will gradually squeeze out all but the handful of tip-toppers—just the few specialists in their various departments, who will be sufficient for the provision of the daily programmes. Composers, teachers, and publishers will probably suffer little, if at all, for people will always enjoy making their own music to some extent, and choral and orchestral societies will continue to flourish because of their social attraction. The evening press will, I believe, be badly hit. Thousands of folk, who at present buy an evening journal for some special item, such as cricket and football results, will prefer to get it free by wireless. Finally, the British National Opera Company is to be congratulated on its enterprise in this matter. How soon it will regret its success remains to be seen. I have already come across a few people who will in future take their opera at home in preference to going out for it. But the B.N.O.C. can easily make things right by broadcasting only on occasional evenings, and in shortish extracts—just enough to whet the public appetite, and no more. By the way, is it too late to plead for the disuse of those hideous terms 'listening-in' and 'broadcasted'? If you are not listening-in are you listening-out? As for 'broadcasted,' it will be time to defend the word when we speak (for example) of bread being casted on the waters.

LADY BEECHAM'S PRESS AGENT

Mr. Hannen Swaffer devoted a column of the Daily Graphic of January 8 to my discussion of those Merchant of Venice press notices. Mr. Swaffer slipped in one respect. He took my imaginary 'wangling' of Mr. Scholes's paragraph and classed it with the feats of Lady Beecham's press agent. However, as the fictitious example was no worse than some of the real ones, no harm was done. A few days later Mr. Swaffer wrote in the Daily Graphic:

Lady Beecham informs me that, although she thinks her press agent could have been more discriminative in his selection of press notices, the article in the Musical Times, quoted in the Daily Graphic, does great injustice to her son's opera. The Musical Times gave the impression that all the newspaper criticisms were bad, whereas, as a matter of fact, there were many exceedingly favourable, particularly those in the Daily Telegraph and Morning Post.

The answer is easy. My object was, primarily, not to show whether the opera was good or bad, but to draw attention to a scandalous misuse of newspaper notices. If there were 'many exceedingly favourable,' why didn't the agent rely on these instead of distorting unfavourable pronouncements? And, if the Daily Telegraph critic was 'exceedingly favourable,' why was it necessary to take the praise he bestowed on one of the performers and pretend that it applied to young Adrian's music? A complaint as to 'great injustice' comes funnily from people who treated the critics with a degree of unfairness that staggered even that tough-hided race.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

For once in a way no orchestral, band, or chamber music records have been received for notice. Presumably the manufacturers look on this part of the year as one in which the gramophonist's fancy lightly turns to dance and song, and to little else. There are, however, one or two good string and pianoforte solo records. For example, here is Thibaud, delightful in the familiar Tambourin of Rameau, and brilliant in his own version of Wieniawsky's showy Saltarello (H.M.V. 10-in.).

Capital, too, is a 10-in. Æ.-Voc. of Lionel Tertis playing Kreisler's Rondino, and a tuneful movement from d'Ambrosio's Petit Suite No. 2.

Less satisfactory in several ways is a H.M.V. 12-in. d.-s. of Cedric Sharpe's performance of Saint-Saëns's Le Cygne and W. H. Squire's arrangement of Drink to me only. Surely this graceful melody of Saint-Saëns calls for the minimum of rubato. Mr. Sharpe's swan is quite a temperamental fowl, with an occasional leaning in the direction of rag-time. There is a tendency to sentimentalise Drink to me only, thanks partly to the arranger. Mr. Squire's success as a popular ballad composer is due largely to an invertebrate harmonic idiom that is quite out of place in the treatment of folk-song. I need only point out that, like the tenth-rate organist, he cannot resist the temptation to emasculate the close by giving it a plagal cadence with the flattened submediant.

Another violoncello record is one of Maurice Dambois in Chopin's Nocturne in D flat and a Canzonetta of Du Port. The phrasing of the Chopin strikes me as being matter-of-fact, and lacking in the dreamy elegance called for.

Lamond is heard on a H.M.V. 12-in. d.-s. in the Minuet from Beethoven's E flat Sonata, Op. 31, No. 3, and Glinka's L'Alouette. The former, being a good reproduction, needs no comment. The Glinka is very brilliant and enjoyable. Another excellent pianoforte record is that of Rachmaninov in his own transcription of the Minuet from the L'Arlesienne Suite No. 1. (H.M.V. 10-in.). The only fault about these pianoforte records is an occasional effect of a rather jangling overgrown musical-box.

The English Singers are to the fore with a fine H.M.V. 12-in. d.-s.—Gibbons's What is our life? and Tomkins's When David heard. Both show an advance on previous records in several respects. The balance and blend are better (although the high notes of the bass occasionally cut through the texture with some edgy tone) and the words are clear. Both these madrigals happen to be of a type that is better suited to a largish choir than to single voices. They are as big in their way as a Handel chorus, and could well carry as much tone. However good the performance by soloists may be, there is inevitably a sense of effort in the more exacting passages. Moreover, this splendid Gibbons work has a sombre weight about it that can be realised only when sung by a choir.

But we know that at present the gramophone gives better results with a few voices than with many, so we may be thankful when the few are so good as are these English Singers. The madrigal by Tomkins will probably be a revelation to many, as the composer is rather overshadowed by Byrd, Gibbons, and Weelkes. It is a setting of David's lament for Absalom, and the music rises to climax after climax of emotion. Of course the purely personal character of the text disappears, and the effect is that of a crowd lamenting. But the result is so fine that nobody will complain if the expression is general rather than intimate. I may as well repeat that users of these madrigal records will ensure full profit and enjoyment only by obtaining a copy of the music.

The other choral record in this month's batch unfortunately calls for hard words—or rather the performance does. The record is an all-too-faithful reproduction of some sloppy singing of sentimental arrangements of Darling Nelly Gray and Sally in our Alley. I hate saying harsh things, and when people are doing their best I will go a long way round in order to avoid saying them. But the Criterion Singers, having good voices and the ability to sing well together, are, judging from this record, either not doing their best or are hazy as to the difference between the best and the worst. Short phrases are broken up, the time and rhythm are constantly sacrificed to some superficial emotional effect, and all the cheap tricks of the worst male-voice quartet are duly trotted out. So much is this the case that I was at first in doubt as to whether the singers were burlesquing some of their weaker brethren. I am sorry to make myself unpleasant over this record, but the influence of the gramophone is now so widespread that anything calculated to lower the popular idea of what constitutes good part-singing should not be allowed to pass without protest.

Some vocal solo records call for little more than bare mention. The singing is, as a whole, good and the reproduction capital—better than the music deserves in most cases. 'Ballade de Jeanette' from Levaude's Le Rotisserie de la Reine and 'Les Larmes' from Massenet's Werther, sung by Leila Megane (H.M.V. 10-in. d.s.); Schubert's Wohin? sung by Frieda Hempel (H.M.V. 10-in.); When love is kind, sung by Lucrezia Bori (not a good fit; this simple old ditty needs less shrewish treatment) (H.M.V. 10-in.); the 'Waltz Song' from Tom Jones, sung by Caroline Hatchard (Æ.-Voc. 12-in.); Non più andrai, sung by Eric Marshall (a very spirited piece of singing, with the orchestral accompaniment exceptionally well recorded) (Æ.-Voc. 12-in.); Molly Carew's The Piper of Love, and Melville Gideon's Weaver of Dreams, sung by Kathleen Destournel (Æ.-Voc. 10-in. d.s.); H. F. Best's Eileen Adair and Gene Williams's Caravan, sung by Sydney Hamilton (Æ.-Voc. 10-in.); Monk Gould's The Curfew and Ciro Pinsuti's The Raft, sung by Robert Radford (alas! that R. R. should lavish that voice of his on such tosh!) (H.M.V. 12-in. d.s.).

There remain only a capital batch of dance records from the Æolian Vocalian Company. They are all foxtrots, and most of them are played by American bands, and abound in funny noises. But there are signs that the composers' slender stock of ideas is petering out. All kinds of sources are now being tapped. Yankee Doodle is made the basis of the Yankee Doodle Blues; the Japanese National Anthem is disrespectfully treated in Japanese Moon. (This foxtrot, by the by, has a couple of passages in which the whole-tone scale is exploited with amusing results.) Schubert's F minor Moment Musical is drawn on by another bankrupt mind; a fragment of Tchaikovsky's March Slave crops up elsewhere, and there are other petty larcenies. But I can forgive a good deal when the performance is so crisp and the rhythms so well handled as they are in these dance records. It may not be a very high-class thing that these bands set out to do, but such as it is, they do it with gusto and conviction. When all our performers of good music are anything like as all-alive-oh, we shall see queues at the concert-hall more often than we do at present.

Occasional Notes

In order to show that the book trade is rapidly returning to pre-war conditions, the December issue of The Bookseller and the Stationery Trades Journal gave a statistical table of works published during 1922. Books dealing with music make an unexpectedly good show, no less than a hundred and eighteen being published and ten appearing in new editions. This points to a healthy public interest in the art, for comparatively few of these works are of a purely technical character. As will have been seen in our review columns during the past year, the great majority are for the lay reader. It is worth noting that the Bookseller's list classifies the works under forty-nine heads, and that, in regard to total, music comes sixteenth, hard on the heels of 'Sports, Games, and Pastimes,' 'Topography,' and 'Travel and Adventure,' and well ahead of 'Bibliography and Literary History,' 'Natural History, Biology, and Zoology,' and 'Poetry and the Drama.' Top place of course goes to 'Fiction,' with well over the thousand; the bottom of the poll to—can you guess?—'Aeronautics,' with one new book, and 'Philately,' with three.

A few months ago we drew attention to the steadily increasing popularity of The Apostles. Our belief that this great work, laid aside for good reasons during the war, will quickly establish its position wherever it is adequately performed, is strengthened by a letter from Dr. Harding, conductor of the Bedford Musical Society. He tells us that the Society's performance of The Apostles last season was so much appreciated that requests for a repetition have been received from all sides. It will therefore be given again on May 27.

The hundredth performance of The Immortal Hour at the Regent Theatre is a matter for congratulation all round. A modest bouquet may even be cast to effete old London for playing up so well. Who would have expected Rutland Boughton and Fiona Macleod to run where Arnold Bennett could not even get going? And not at art-y Chelsea, or Hammersmith, or Hampstead, but—at of all unlovely places—in the Euston Road! We hope to record at least another hundred performances. The success of a work of this type is full of significance for the future of British opera. Readers who have not yet visited the Regent are advised to do so, and they may be recommended also to prime themselves first either with a copy of the

(Continued on page 119.)

EASTER CAROL

Words by CHRISTINA ROSSETTI

Music by GEOFFREY SHAW

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED ; NEW YORK : THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A

Quick and with energy

SOPRANO

ALTO

TENOR

BASS

Spring bursts to-day, For Christ is ris'n, and

Spring bursts to-day, For Christ is ris'n, and

Spring bursts to-day, For Christ is ris'n, and

Spring bursts to-day, For Christ is ris'n, and

(For practice only)

Quick and with energy

all the world's at play ; Sweet spring is come at all the world's at play ; Sweet spring is come at last, all .. the world's at play ; Win - ter is past, Sweet spring is all the world's at play ; Win - ter is past, Sweet lightly

lightly

lightly

lightly

mf

mf

mf

mf

last, is come at last. Up lift thy head, O pure white li - - ly, spring is come at last. Up lift thy head, O pure white li - - ly, come, is come at last. Up lift thy head, O pure white li - - ly, spring is come at last. Up lift thy head, O li - - - ly, through the through the win - ter dead; Be - side your dams, Leap and re-joyce, . . . you through the win - ter dead; Be - side your dams, Leap . . . and re-joyce, . . . you through the win - ter dead; Be - side your dams, Leap . . . and re-joyce, . . . you win - ter dead; . . . Be - side your dams, Leap, leap and re-joyce, you mer - ry - ma - king lambs. All herds and flocks, . . Re - mer - ry - ma - king lambs. All herds and flocks, . . Re - mer - ry - ma - king lambs. All herds and flocks, Re - joice, . . re - mer - ry - ma - king lambs. All herds and flocks, Re - joice, . . re -

A little slower

- joice, all beasts of thick - ets and of rocks. Sing, crea - tures, sing, sing, .

- joice, all beasts of thick - ets and of rocks. Sing, crea - tures, sing, sing, .

- joice, all beasts of thick - ets and of rocks. Sing, crea - tures, sing, sing, .

- joice, all beasts of thick - ets and of rocks. Sing, crea - tures, sing, sing, .

A little slower

crea - tures, sing, . . . An - gels, and men, . . . and birds and ev - 'ry thing, crea - tures, sing, . . . An - gels, and men, . . . and birds and ev - 'ry thing, crea - tures, sing, . . . An - gels, and men, . . . and birds and ev - 'ry thing, crea - tures, sing, . . . An - gels, men, birds and ev - 'ry thing,

Still a little slower

an - gels, and men, . . . and birds and ev - 'ry thing. . .

an - gels, and men, . . . and birds and ev - 'ry thing. . .

an - gels, and men, . . . and birds and ev - 'ry thing. . .

an - gels, men, birds and ev - 'ry thing. . .

Still a little slower

JESUS CHRIST IS RISEN TO-DAY

SHORT ANTHEM FOR EASTER

BY

C. V. STANFORD

(Op. 192, No. 3.)

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY, CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro con spirito

ORGAN

mf

Dec.
SOPRANO

ALTO

TENOR

BASS

Je - sus Christ is ris - en to - day, . . .

Can.
SOPRANO

ALTO

TENOR

BASS

Je - sus Christ is ris - en to - day, . . .

JESUS CHRIST IS RISEN TO-DAY

- lu - ia! Al - le
 - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia!
 Our tri - um - phant ho - ly day,
 - lu - ia! Al - le
 - lu - ia! Al - le
 - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia!
 Our tri - um - phant ho - ly day,
 Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia!
 - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia!
 Al - le - lu - ia!
 Who did once, up - on the Cross, Suf - fer to re - deem our
 - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia!
 - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia!
 Al - le - lu - ia!
 Who did once, up - on the Cross, Suf - fer to re - deem our

(2)

JESUS CHRIST IS RISEN TO-DAY

Al - le - lu - ia! Hymns of praise then

Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia! Hymns of praise then

Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia! Hymns of praise then loss. Hymns of praise then

Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia!

Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia!

Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia!

loss.

let us sing Un - to Christ, our heav'n - ly King,

let us sing Un - to Christ, our heav'n - ly King,

let us sing Un - to Christ, our heav'n - ly King,

let us sing Un - to Christ, our heav'n - ly King,

Al - le - lu - ia!

Al - le - lu - ia!

Al - le - lu - ia!

Al - le - lu - ia!

Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia!

JESUS CHRIST IS RISEN TO-DAY

ia! Al - le - lu ia! ia! Al - le - lu ia! ia! Al - le - lu ia! ia! Al - le - lu ia! ia! Al - le - lu ia! But the pains that ia! Al - le - lu ia! ia! Al - le - lu ia! ia! Al - le - lu ia! ia! Al - le - lu ia! But the pains that

Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia! He . . eu - dured . . . Our sal - va - tion

Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia! Al - le - lu - ia! He . . en - dured . . . Our sal - va - tion

(5)

JESUS CHRIST IS RISEN TO-DAY

Al - le - lu - ia !

Al - le - lu - ia !

Al - le - lu - ia !

Al - le - lu - ia !

Al - le - lu - ia !

Al - le - lu - ia !

hath . . . pro - cured ;

Now . . a - bove the sky . .

hath . . . pro - cured ;

Now . . a - bove the sky . .

cres.

Al - le - lu - ia !

Al - le - lu - ia !

sf Al - le - lu - ia ! . . . f

He's King, . . . Where the an - gels ev - er

Al - le - lu - ia !

Al - le - lu - ia !

sf Al - le - lu - ia ! . . . f

He's King, . . . Where the an - gels ev - er

f

(6)

JESUS CHRIST IS RISEN TO-DAY

The musical score is arranged for four vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and piano accompaniment. Each vocal part has a melodic line with lyrics in Italian and English. The piano part provides harmonic support with chords and moving lines. The tempo/mood is marked 'senza rall.' (without slowing down).

Vocal Parts:

- Soprano: - ia! A - - - - - men.
- Alto: - ia! A - - - - - men.
- Tenor: - ia! A - - - - - men.
- Bass: - ia! A - - - - - men.

Piano Accompaniment:

The piano part consists of two staves. The right hand plays chords and moving lines, while the left hand plays a bass line. The tempo/mood is marked 'senza rall.'.

(Continued from page 114.)

vocal score or libretto (Stainer & Bell) or with a copy of Mr. A. J. Sheldon's booklet 'Notes on The Immortal Hour,' which may be bought at the theatre. And it is to be hoped that a seat will be filled by the writer of the note which appears in 'Sharps and Flats' on page 126.

A few months ago, discussing Mr. Neville Cardus's book on cricket, 'Feste' mentioned Mr. Ernest Newman's liking for the prize-ring, and also alluded to the fact that Mr. Thomas Moulton, an occasional contributor to this journal, wrote football reports for the Weekly Dispatch. How things get round, and improve on the journey, is shown by the following extract from a recent issue of our entertaining contemporary, The Musical Courier:

Le Courier Musical says that an English composer, Ernest Neroman, enjoys himself in acting as referee for boxing matches in his off moments (can this be merely a slight mistake for the celebrated Earnest [sic] Newman?); and that Thomas Monet, a contributor to the Musical Times, is a football reporter otherwise. Which reminds us that two venerable New York critics, Messrs. Krehbiel and Henderson, started out as baseball reporters for daily papers; that Henderson is still a great yachting reporter and wrote an authoritative textbook on navigation; and that Dr. Sigmund Spaeth, no longer with the daily press, used to write music criticisms and tennis reports with either hand and equal facility.

Messrs. Earnest Neroman and Thomas Monet will thus see that they are in good company.

We are asked to state that the Archbishops' Committee on Church Music, having made considerable progress with its task, will be glad to consider suggestions from persons interested in the subject. In order to define the limits within which suggestions should be kept, we remind readers that the Committee's terms of reference are 'To consider and report upon the place of music in the Worship of the Church, and, in particular, the training of Church musicians, and the education of the clergy in the knowledge of music as a branch of liturgical study.' Communications should be sent to the hon. secretary, Mr. E. G. P. Wyatt, Rustington Hall, near Littlehampton.

No doubt our friend Mr. Stanley Roper enjoyed the following Evening Standard paragraph as much as the rest of us:

A CHAPELS ROYAL CHOIR FEAT.—The choir of the Chapels Royal can rise creditably to an occasion. For the last four Sundays the organ in the Marlborough House Chapel has been out of order, so that the boys have had to go through the services without any musical accompaniment at all. This has been done without a false quaver, and proves how thoroughly Mr. Stanley Roper, His Majesty's organist and choirmaster, has trained the choir.

We can assure the writer that unaccompanied singing, 'without a false quaver,' is not uncommon even in mere parish churches. Indeed, it is often indulged in, without being made necessary by a refractory organ.

The Evening Standard enthusiast goes on:

The Marlborough House Chapel is very small, and the congregation rarely exceeds twenty. The only member present recently who probably did not feel the service strange without the music was Queen Alexandra's sister, the ex-Empress of Russia, who for so long attended the services of the Russian Orthodox Church, where the ritual always is without music. The old and ignorant distinction between music and singing dies hard.

Elgar's Violin Concerto has just had its first performance in South Africa, and a very successful one it was, judging from the Cape Times report. The players were Miss Ivy Angove and the Cape Town Municipal Orchestra, under Mr. Theo Wendt. Both soloist and conductor are well known in this country, and their many friends will be glad to hear of their co-operation in bringing Elgar's work to South African audiences.

We fancy there will be a rude awakening for all concerned in the following modest announcement which appeared in the Daily Telegraph of January 2:

TO CONCERT ORGANIZERS.—Mr. ——— (M.A. Oxon.) has the greatest pleasure in RECOMMENDING for their utterly unsurpassable excellence as pianists and impromptu composers, the Misses ——— and ———, ——— Worthing. Offers of engagements for picture palaces, concert parties, dinners, and as accompanists will be treated with silent contempt. PUBLIC CONCERTS ONLY. Distance no object.

For utterly unsurpassable assurance this is surely the entirely illimitable limit.

Church and Organ Music

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

DIPLOMA DISTRIBUTION

On Saturday, January 20, Dr. Alan Gray, President of the College, presented the diplomas to the recently elected Fellows and Associates.

Among those present were Sir Hugh Allen, Mus. Doc., vice-president, and the following members of the Council: Dr. W. G. Alcock, M.V.O., Dr. Harold Darke, Dr. Eaglefield Hull, Dr. H. G. Ley, Dr. Charles Macpherson, Dr. Stanley Marchant, Dr. H. W. Richards, Dr. F. G. Shinn, and Dr. H. A. Harding, hon. secretary.

Dr. Harding made the following announcement: For the Fellowship diploma there were eighty-four candidates, of whom twenty-four passed; for the Associateship diploma there were a hundred and forty-six candidates, of whom fifteen passed. The Fellowship Lafontaine Prize was awarded to F. W. Rushton; the Fellowship Turpin Prize to F. Dodson. The Associate Lafontaine Prize was awarded to C. E. Jarvis; the Associate Sawyer Prize to H. H. Sykes.

The diplomas were then presented to the successful candidates.

PASSED FELLOWSHIP, JANUARY, 1923

Altham, G., Burnley	Manton, W. A. J., London
Askow, N. Market Drayton	Murray, A. J., London
Austin, G., Worcester	Neill, W., Edinburgh
Chapman, D. J., Mus. B., Eccles	Pocock, P. W., Egham
Crompton, E., Radcliffe, Lancs.	Renton, Miss M. T., London
Darch, R. F. J., London	Rushton, F. W., London (Lafontaine Prize)
Dent, E. M., London	Rushworth, T. A., Manchester
Dodson, F., Huddersfield (Turpin Prize)	Sampson, G., New Beckenham
Frost, A. S., Slaithwaite	Seymour, E. A., London
Hardy, R. K., London	Temple, A. E., London
Haylett, F. E., London	Tucker, A. E., Bath
Jones, S. W., London	Warren, A., London

PASSED ASSOCIATESHIP, JANUARY, 1923

Allsop, A. H., London	Morgan, J., Blaenavon
Dawes, T. G., Brighton	Newman, F. E., Lowestoft
Harris, E. A., London	Parsons, F. A., Bangor,
Higgins, G. J., Bristol	Co. Down, Ireland
Hughes, O., London	Phillips, E. V., London
Jarvis, C. E., Port Sunlight	Sayers, G. W., Gt. Yarmouth
(Lafontaine Prize)	Sharrocks, F., Rochdale
Lickfold, L. A., Portsmouth	Sykes, H. H., Huddersfield
Macshane, A. H., Broadstairs	(Sawyer Prize)

THOMAS SHINDLER, Registrar.

Appended are the Reports of the Examining Boards :

FELLOWSHIP ORGAN-WORK

We are glad to be able to express our opinion that there has lately been a decided advance in the standard of organ playing at these examinations. Certain gross faults, such as the excessive and inartistic use of the Swell pedal, have been much less in evidence than they were even a few years back. And in the matter of registration most of the candidates seem to have realised the fact that a slavish attention to the printed stop and dynamic directions must be always subjected to a consideration of the characteristics of the particular organ they are playing, and the acoustic qualities of the building in which it stands.

The rendering of the other tests calls for a few remarks. Candidates are rather apt to ignore the printed metronome marks. A faultless rendering of the vocal score at a very slow pace will certainly serve them no better than one played at the correct tempo even if the latter be not entirely free from mistakes.

The standard of extemporisation is still too low, but it is pleasant to be able to record a distinct improvement under this heading.

ALAN GRAY (Chairman).
CHARLES MACPHERSON.
A. HERBERT BREWER.

FELLOWSHIP PAPER-WORK

There seemed to be a lack of definite aim in the examples of free (modern) counterpoint, which on the whole were disappointing. Imitative writing should have been more in evidence. There was decided improvement in the strict scholastic counterpoint. The harmonization of the given first violin part for string quartet was satisfactory, but the technique of string writing was often weak, and displayed a lack of experience.

There was a want of variety and device in the working of the ground-bass. The contrapuntal idiom should be introduced more freely in the setting of music to words. Square-cut part-song writing seldom obtains pass marks in this composition test.

The present-day attention given to aural training is producing good results. There continues to be a great improvement in writing down the dictated ear-tests.

F. J. READ (Chairman).
J. FREDERICK BRIDGE.
WALTER PARRATT.

ASSOCIATE ORGAN-WORK

The examiners found a marked absence of all-round ability. Many candidates were able to play the set pieces fluently, but in the tests showed a deplorable lack of musicianship. On the other hand, a good number of candidates played the tests passably and even well, and yet in the set pieces showed faulty technique and crude interpretation. Not infrequently the spirit of the music was completely misunderstood. This showed itself in many ways, e.g., the flow of a movement would be held up for a change of stops, or the effect of a climax spoiled by too early addition of heavy stops. The brisk rhythmical figures in the Bach Fugue were often stodgy, and registered too heavily. The Bach Trio was sometimes played with badly balanced manuals, or with an uncoupled 16-ft. pedal. The Allegro of Stanford often became muddy owing to lack of pace and clear definition. In the Intermezzo of Frank Bridge the treatment was usually too rhapsodical, and the two bars of cross rhythm in the middle section were hardly ever played correctly. Technically there was a general want of neatness and finish, the left hand being generally the offender; pedals were not prompt, and few candidates seemed to realise the possibility of phrasing a pedal part.

On the whole, the score reading and transposition were better, though there is still much room for improvement. Candidates should remember that the ability to transpose and read from vocal score with certainty and confidence is part of the equipment of every organist. The metronome time in these tests should be more carefully observed; some candidates come to grief by playing them too fast—this was most noticeable in playing from score. In the transposition test several candidates pedalled the bass an octave lower than written, thus spoiling the outline of the part.

The accompaniment test was still poor; elementary misreading of chords was quite common, and the simple unharmonized melodic phrase was often played with wrong note-values. Many candidates began far too loudly, apparently forgetting that they were playing the accompaniment of a quiet solo, and that the introductory bars should have been in keeping. Both introduction and accompaniment, were, as a rule, registered in a manner more suitable for a large choir than for a soloist.

E. T. SWEETING (Chairman).
E. T. COOK.
HARVEY GRACE.

ASSOCIATE PAPER-WORK

Counterpoint.—The standard, as a whole, was very good. It should be observed :

(1.) That as one of the chief characteristics of counterpoint is imitation, florid counterpoint would gain in musical value if some of the entries were imitative.

(2.) That in adding parts to a given part in the style of the Polyphonic School of the 16th century it is assumed that candidates will attempt some imitation and not confine themselves to 'plain counterpoint,' especially when the given part obviously lends itself to fugal treatment. They should also attempt to reproduce the free rhythmical accentuation of the separate parts that is such a characteristic feature of the period.

Melody.—This was not well done. With few exceptions candidates showed a poor sense of natural harmonic progression.

Figured Bass.—The standard was below the average, the chords being badly placed and little attention given to the contour of the melody.

Fugue.—The counter-subject was generally poor and the knowledge of the principles of double counterpoint very superficial. Few candidates showed that they really understood what constituted a good bass, and few ventured beyond moving in thirds and sixths with the subject. A study of 'The Forty-Eight' is an obvious corrective.

Modulation.—This showed a general lack of musical sense.

Questions.—Candidates should be more precise.

STANLEY MARCHANT (Chairman).
C. H. KITSON.
H. A. HARDING.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

It is my pleasant duty to congratulate the recipients of the diplomas on their success in a severe examination, and one that is not likely to become less severe in the future. You have been told on previous occasions that our object in these examinations is to insure, so far as examinations can insure, that successful candidates shall not be merely organists but good all-round musicians. This is undoubtedly our aim. But to-day I am going to talk to you about the organ, and why it is not so appreciated as it ought to be by many musicians who do not play upon it. Yet the organ is increasingly popular. Walking along the streets of the City, we may see organ recitals announced on every Church door, and some of these, at all events, are always crowded. The experience of many, including myself, is that a purely Bach recital draws the largest audience, so that the taste of the public is shown to be sound. But having in mind the existence of the prejudice I spoke of, I approach my subject rather in the spirit of Calverley (Lines on hearing the Organ) :

'But I've heard mankind abuse thee,
And, perhaps it's rather strange,
But I thought that I would choose thee
For encomium, as a change.'

I should add that the organ Calverley heard was of the barrel variety. He is aware of its defects:

'Tell me, Grinder, if thou grindest Always, always out of tune?'

and

'Tis not that I care so greatly
For the same thing played so oft.'

In spite of which he sings:

'Dearly, dearly do I love thy grinding.'

Now organists themselves have been partly to blame for this want of appreciation. They have been liable to adhere too closely to their organ-stool, and have not attended sufficiently to their general musical 'culture,' if I may use a word that has been rather discredited in recent years. But as regards the organ, what are its defects? Shortly, the following: Deficiency of attack; inability to vary the tones, save by mechanical means; and the ponderosity arising from these same unvaried tones. Now no instrument is perfect. The absolute want of sustaining power in the pianoforte is surely a defect. The violin, perhaps the most perfect of instruments, cannot get on by itself, and harmony except in two parts is denied it, save at the cost of somewhat painful effort. This is also the case with the wind family, which comprises purely melodic instruments. These have the additional disadvantage of specialised tone, which renders their unduly continued use unpleasant. I imagine critics are apt in their minds to estimate the organ by comparing it with the orchestra, but surely it is unreasonable to compare the efforts of a lone man at a solitary instrument with the results obtained by fifty to a hundred players, operating on about twenty kinds of instruments! Now as to the organ's admitted defects. Let us first of all consider 'attack.' I submit that strictly speaking the only instruments that have real attack are those of the string family. There can be no mistake as to the correctness of the term in their case. But in all other instances—save perhaps in that of the pianoforte, where we have second-hand relations with strings, and the trumpet, where the quality of tone seems to justify the term—the word 'attack,' as we use it, means simply prompt speech and entry. And of these requirements the organ is quite capable, if the action is good. But the 'bite' of the strings is badly wanted, and I have often thought that our pedal might be improved by the addition of a stop of pianoforte wires controllable as to power by the player. This evenly prolonged tone is undeniable, and if people don't like it, then there is nothing more to be said. It is this very characteristic that gives the organ its majestic effect, which everyone on occasion must admit. Minor objections are that it combines badly with orchestra, a characteristic that probably is largely due to its temperament. Some acute ears find pain even in the combination of pianoforte and orchestra for the same reason, therefore I do not think that there is any future for organ concertos, and where, as in many choral works, organ and orchestra must be combined, it is probably desirable that the organist should, so far as he can, put his major thirds in the corner. An organ to sound its best demands: (1) A good player; (2) That it is a good specimen of its kind; (3) That the building be sympathetic. The first two items are required by all instruments. We all know what a fine violinist makes of a poor fiddle. In the same way it is astonishing how well a good player will make a bad organ sound, as in his case the sounds are made for him. He can produce his results only by rhythm and phrasing, two necessities which were much neglected by most organists in the past and by some in the present. An organ also requires a more sympathetic building than other instruments, and in particular it calls out for headroom for its pipes. Now what is to be said in favour of this despised instrument?

- (1.) It can produce sounds, high and low, unobtainable otherwise. I do not attach so much importance to the first, but surely the low notes are extraordinarily valuable. What a magnificent effect is that of a big 32-ft., and, indeed, of the whole of a fine pedal organ! And what a poor thing an orchestral pedal-point is compared to that obtainable on the organ! I venture with due modesty to suggest that every orchestra would be enriched by the addition of a set of big pedal-pipes.

- (2.) The organ is capable of considerable colour apart from its proper tone, the Diapasons. Here, again, we must compare its possibilities with single instruments, and not with the orchestra, and its nearest rival, the pianoforte, is far behind it in range and variety of colour. The imitation of the orchestral wind has been carried to a remarkable pitch, though no one would venture to compare these imitations with their originals inspired with living breath. The same may be said of the modern so-called 'string stops.' But of course all these must be used with reserve. It is bad registration, as it would be bad orchestration, to use these specialised tones incessantly.
- (3.) The rolling tone of the Diapason family is surely a splendid thing. It is this that has inspired Milton in many passages, and it is interesting to note that Sir Arthur Quiller Couch, in a recently published volume, ascribes to the poet's practise of the organ the rhythm of his verse: that majestic rhythm that pervades Paradise Lost from end to end—a rhythm that no other poet has possessed. Tennyson, too, calls Milton the 'God-gifted organ voice of England.'
- (4.) The organ is pre-eminently a contrapuntal instrument. I should have said that this was universally admitted; but the other day I met with a queer freak of criticism denying this. The writer maintained that Bach only wrote in this style for the organ, because he always wrote contrapuntally. This theory has the merit of novelty, at all events. Bach's Clavier Fugues are perfect and beautiful things, but surely the Organ Fugues are bigger?

There is another charge against the organ—that with the exception of Bach none of the great masters have written for it. It is rather hard nowadays to know who the great masters are, or even whether there were any. We used to think pretty well of Beethoven, but at the present time he seems to be a favourite target for bricks thrown by our younger critics. I met with the following the other day:

'The next item was Beethoven's interesting Quartet, Op. 130. We wish this composer had confined himself to his posthumous works.'

Apart from the pious wish, the epithet 'interesting' is delightful. It is just the word that people use in acknowledging the receipt of new works about which they find it hard to say anything.

Well, let us use the term 'prominent composers,' and run through their names since the time of Bach. Handel we know was a great organist, and I think that if the English organ of his time had possessed the pedals to which he had been accustomed, he might have written organ works instead of concertos. But I do not know that we have missed much, as Handel's instrumental music compares badly with that of Bach, and with his own choral works. After Handel and Bach the whole style of music changed—Bach was forgotten for nearly a century, and the irresistible attraction of the swelling orchestra and the expanding opera were powerful counter-attractions. The musician was no longer necessarily a church organist, as he had generally been, and if a musical boy did not happen to belong to a choir he did not learn the organ, which only existed in churches. All the 'prominent composers' learnt the clavier or pianoforte more or less, and many of them wrote for it incidentally; but why should they write for the organ if they had never learnt it? Thus Haydn studied the clavier and violin, which were quite sufficient to occupy him. Weber and Wagner were absorbed in opera, the former being a fine pianist. Schubert may have done a little at the organ, but his principal interest was the violin. Beethoven seems to have played the organ as a boy at Bonn, but he may have been put off by its quality, for Hopkins with unusual decision says of this organ, 'It is not a good instrument.' It has the distinction of having all its metal pipes made of lead. Chopin wrote entirely for the pianoforte. Berlioz, who is reported to have been only an indifferent pianist, confined himself to orchestra and opera; but in his book on orchestration he writes apropos the incompatibility of organ and orchestra, 'The organ is the King, the orchestra the Emperor.' Why should any of these composers have written for the organ? Now for those who were players of it. I quote an account from one of Mozart's letters on a visit to Stein, an organ and clavier maker of Augsburg:

'When I told Herr Stein that I should like to play on his organ, he was greatly astonished. "What! a man like you, a clavier player, willing to play on an instrument which allows of neither piano nor forte, which has no douceur, no expression, but goes on always the same!"

"All that has nothing to do with it. To my mind the organ is the King of instruments."

'We went into the Choir. I began to prelude, at which he laughed with delight, then followed a fugue. "I can well believe," said he, "that you enjoy playing the organ when you play like that."

Don't you think we all, organ critics included, would have laughed with delight if we had heard Mozart play? I cannot say why Mozart should not have written for the instrument he admired so much. In those two wonderful Fantasias in F minor written for a mysterious piece of mechanism called a musical clock, he shows what he could have done, but it is quite likely that the execution of these pieces would have been impossible on the organs of that day—at all events as they appear in Mr. Best's arrangements. I need not dwell on Mendelssohn. He played the organ whenever he could get at one, and his Sonatas to my mind rank with his Concert-Overtures as his most original and characteristic compositions. Schumann was, or intended to be, a pianist, and his BACH Fugues and the Sketches were primarily intended for the pedal pianoforte, which came under his notice just at the time of his discovery of Bach. Of non-German musicians the old French composers wrote for the organ, as is the case at the present day. The same with Italy, but in both these countries the pedal-board was either illogically arranged or absent altogether, as in England. A hundred years ago there was born in Belgium a great composer and a great organ composer. César Franck was the oldest of the remarkable men who have raised French organ music from the standard of Wély and Batiste to that of Widor and Vierne. The latest estimate of Franck's work is that his feeling for the organ coloured the whole of his compositions—sometimes, it must be confessed, to their disadvantage. At about that time there was also a man who, if he had lived, must have become a great composer. I refer to Reubke, the pupil of Liszt and friend of Wagner, who died in 1858 at the age of twenty-four. Grove is silent concerning him; but his only known work, an illustration for the organ of the 94th Psalm, has secured him immortality. The influence of Wagner is obvious in the slow movement, after which he breaks gloriously free in the superb Finale, which is really great music. The conclusion therefore that I come to is that nearly all of these composers did not write for the organ because they did not play it. And consider the obstacles to their acquiring the mastery of the instrument. If they had made an appointment with Master Hugues of Saxe-Gotha, and he had secured them a blower, they would have had to climb his 'rotten-planked, rat-riddled stairs' into a dusty and messy organ-loft to be confronted with what must have been to our ideas an extraordinarily clumsy piece of mechanism, with a touch so heavy that their pianoforte playing would have been ruined. Nevertheless Mendelssohn managed to play both instruments very well. In these days Barker and his successors have done away with heavy touches, and our consoles, as we call them, are models of elegance. Some of us, however, will remember what the old organs of fifty years ago were like, and they must have been even more clumsy and lumbering a hundred years earlier. The future of organ music is promising. The fine French school includes the names of many composers famous in other fields also, and in England during the last twenty-five years or so we have had a number of works from our leading writers including, I am glad to say, some of the younger ones. I will conclude with one striking fact. No less than three great composers turned to the organ when they knew they were dying. In these circumstances Bach dictated one of his most beautiful and touching choral preludes, perfect in art and moving in its pathos; Franck's last work on his death-bed was to correct the proofs of his Three Chorals; and Brahms's sole posthumous publication was also a set of choral preludes, of which the concluding number, judging from the words, must have been his very last composition, written when he knew he was doomed. Sir Hubert Parry's case might be considered to a certain extent as similar, as nearly all his organ works and certainly all the choral preludes were written in the last years of his life. Cynicism might explain these facts on the ground of decline of mental power or senility; but this is not a word that could be applied, for example, to Sir Hubert, by any who knew him, or heard the last wonderful address that he delivered from this chair. I would prefer to think that the minds of all these great men, as their end approached, turned towards an instrument which has always been associated with religious feeling, and that through it they found the most adequate means of expressing their last thoughts to the world.

The following pieces from the Fellowship and Associate Organ work Tests were played upon the College organ by Dr. Henry G. Ley:

Sonata No. 5, in C (1st movement) ...	J. S. Bach (Associateship)
Pastorale No. 4, of six pieces ...	César Franck (Fellowship)
Fantasia and Fugue in G minor ...	J. S. Bach (Fellowship)
Psalm-Prelude No. 1 ...	Herbert Howells (Associateship)
Allegretto from the fourth Sonata ...	Mendelssohn (Associateship)

RECITALS BY BLIND ORGANISTS

The National Institute for the Blind has been asked to arrange for blind organists to contribute six recitals to the series of twelve now being given at 1 o'clock on Fridays at All Souls', Langham Place, W.1. Mr. W. Wolstenholme opened the series on January 5, followed by Mr. H. V. Spanner on January 19. The arrangements for February and March are as follows: February 2, Rev. H. E. C. Lewis; February 16, Mr. T. Percival Dean; March 2, Mr. Sinclair Logan; March 16, Mr. H. C. Warrilow.

THE ORGAN

The January issue of this excellent quarterly opens with a long article by Andrew Freeman on the organs of Westminster Abbey, with about a dozen illustrations, including three fine full-page plates. Illustrations of great interest are a feature, too, of an article by Felix Raugel on the organs of St.-Étienne-du-Mont, Paris. Dr. Alcock writes a sincere tribute to the late James John Walker, and the interest of the magazine is well maintained by other articles from Orlando A. Mansfield, D. Batigan Verne, Dr. Eaglefield Hull, F. Meyrick Roberts, &c.

The Bach recital has arrived at the Town Hall stage of popularity. At Johannesburg Town Hall recently Mr. John Connell, the city organist, made up one of his lunch-hour recital programmes from the works of the old man—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, first movement of Sonata No. 1, Bourrée in G, and Prelude and Fugue in D. After this no Church organist need have qualms. We are particularly glad to see the Sonata movement and Bourrée in the above programme. Many of the dances from the Suites can be made very effective on the organ, and are the best of foils to Bach's real organ music. And there are still plenty of people who need an occasional reminder that Bach was as much at home with his wig off writing dances as he was with it on writing fugues.

An exceptionally interesting recital of organ music based on Christmas themes was given by Mr. Archibald Farmer at the Presbyterian Church of England, Muswell Hill. His programme included Maleingreau's Vers la Crèche (on Veni Redemptor); pieces on old French Carol tunes by Le Bégue, d'Aquin, Boely, Franck, and Ropartz; and on Christmas hymn-tunes by Buxtehude, Pachelbel, Buttstedt, Bach, and Reger, rounded off by Karg-Elert's fine Improvisation on In dulci jubilo. Mr. Farmer announces a series of four historical recitals on Fridays at 8 p.m. The first took place on January 19, the remaining recitals being on February 9 (French), March 2 (English), and March 23 (general).

Some excellent music has been heard at St. Martin-in-the-Fields on the Saturdays in January: Parts 1 and 2 of the Christmas Oratorio, Holst's Songs for Voice and Violin, songs by Farnaby, Mozart, and Vaughan Williams, String Quartets by Beethoven and Elgar, &c. The singers were Miss Beatrice Hughes Pope, Miss Elsa West, Mr. Norman Stone, and Mr. Eustace Belham; the string players, Mesdames Elsa West, Elsie Bernard, Emily Wingfield, and Hildegard Arnold. Messrs. Bernhard Ord, L. Stanton Jefferies, and the Rev. G. Sydenham Holmes were at the organ.

Mr. A. M. Gifford, of Hunstanton, writes asking if any of our readers can identify an organ work of Lemmens, opening thus:

Mr. Gifford has examined all the works of Lemmens published in this country, but without success. Perhaps the readers who can help our inquirer will kindly send him a post-card direct.

We are frequently asked for suggestions as to the arrangement of a Bach programme. Here is a good example, played by Mr. J. A. Sowerbutts at St. Lawrence Jewry on January 2: Toccata in D minor (Doric); Chorale Preludes—(a) Help me now to praise God's goodness, (b) The old year's past, (c) In Thee is gladness; Andante (Trio-Sonata No. 4); Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor; Fantasia in G; Chorale Preludes—(a) O man, bewail thy grievous sin, (b) Our Father, (c) By the Waters of Babylon; Fugue in E flat ('St. Ann').

A course of six lectures on Ecclesiastical Music will be given at King's College: February 5, Hymn practice of tunes by Bach, &c.; February 12, 'Old Welsh Tunes,' by the Rev. Prof. C. F. Rogers, illustrated by a choir directed by Dr. Mary Davies; February 19, Hymn practice of Welsh tunes; February 26, a Parish Concert, Part I, by the King's College Hostel Singers; March 5, Hymn practice of Old English tunes; and March 12, a Parish Concert, Part 2.

The musical service at Southwark Cathedral on February 17, at 3, will provide a scheme of exceptional interest—The Bach-Elgar Fantasia and Fugue; Goossens's Silence, Holst's Hymn of Jesus, Franck's Symphony, Bax's Of a Rose I sing, and Parry's Blest Pair of Sirens. The orchestra will be the London Symphony. Mr. E. T. Cook will conduct. No tickets are required.

Mr. Edwin Lemare, senior, has resigned his post of organist at Holy Trinity, Ventnor. Mr. Lemare is eighty-two years old, and was appointed to Holy Trinity in 1862—over sixty years ago.

Mr. Ambrose Porter announces a series of recitals at St. Matthias's, Richmond, Surrey. The next two take place on February 13 and 27, at 8.15. The programmes are excellent.

A graceful tribute was paid to the memory of Ernest Farrar at St. Hilda's, South Shields, on January 26, when the choir sang anthems by Farrar, and Mr. John Pulein played six of his organ pieces.

We are asked to announce that the choral services at Winchester Cathedral, which have been suspended on certain mornings since 1919, are now restored.

ORGAN RECITALS

- Mr. H. Matthias Turton, Holy Trinity Church, Leeds—Fugue in E flat, Russell; Musette, Dandrieu; Rhapsody, Harwood; Finale (Sonata in G minor), Prutti.
- Mr. Burton G. Pennock, St. Matthew's, Ponders End—Finale (Sonata No. 4), Mendelssohn; Imperial March, Elgar; Fantasia on two Carols, West.
- Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Boiton Parish Church—Concerto in G, Handel; Choral on 'Jesu the very thought,' Parry; Final, Franck.
- Mr. Arthur Meale, Central Hall, Westminster—Concerto, 'Cuckoo and Nightingale,' Handel; 'St. Francis preaching to the Birds,' Liszt; Fantasia in E minor, Silas; Fantasia and Fugue on BACH, Liszt; Le Coucou, Daquin.
- Mr. J. A. Sowerbutts, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Grand Pièce Symphonique, Kunc; Meditation, René Vierne; Sonata, Reubke; Interlude, Cocker; Fantasy-Prelude, 'Resurgam,' Harvey Grace.
- Mr. Philip Miles, St. Lawrence Jewry—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Pastorale, Franck; Preludes on 'Sleepers, wake,' Bach, and 'Bryn Calfaria,' Vaughan Williams; Slow movement from String Quartet, Debussy; Introduction and Passacaglia (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger.
- Mr. B. Langdale, St. George's, Barnsley—Sonata in G, Elgar; Andante ('Surprise' Symphony), Haydn.
- Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, Grosvenor Street Wesleyan Chapel, Manchester—Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Dithyramb, Harwood; Two Arabesques, Debussy; Prelude on Darwall's 148th, Harold Darke; Imperial March, Elgar.
- Mr. Francis W. Sutton, St. Margaret's, Westminster—Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Evening Song, Bairstow; Andante (Sonata No. 4) and Magnificat, Bach; Fantasia in E, Wolstenholme.
- Mr. Sidney R. Cole, College Presbyterian Church, Parkville—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Prelude in D flat, Chopin; Paraphrase on Handel's 'See the conquering hero comes,' Guilman; Albumblatt in C, Wagner.
- Mr. Herbert S. Mountford, Nechells Wesleyan Church, Birmingham—Ode Héroïque, Cyril Scott; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach.
- Mr. Cyril S. Christopher, Wesley Church, Dudley—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Prelude and Angel's Farewell ('Gerontius').
- Mr. N. S. Wallbank, Hexham Abbey—Fugue à la Gigue and Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Pastorale, Franck; Evening Song, Bairstow.
- Mr. Arthur Fountain, Richmond Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in A minor and Trio in D minor, Bach; Rhapsody, Howells.
- Mr. Frederick J. Tarris, All Hallows', Bromley, E.—Fantaisie in E flat, Saint-Saëns; Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach.
- Dr. William Prendergast, Winchester Cathedral—Largo and Allegro, Wolstenholme; Chorale Prelude, 'In Thee is gladness,' Bach; Maestoso, Marcel Dupré; Carillon, Boëllmann.
- Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Stephen's Walbrook—'It Sposalizio,' Liszt; Fantasia-Sonata, Rheinberger; 'The Wanderer' Fugue, Parry; Choral Prelude, 'I give to thee this farewell,' Bach.
- Mr. C. H. Trevor, SS. Peter and Paul, Olney, Bucks—Allegro from Trio in C minor and Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Allegro in B flat and Introduction and Allegro in E, John Stanley.
- Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End—Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Andante from String Quartet, Debussy.
- Mr. Arthur G. Gardner, St. Anne's, Brislington—Idylle and Pastorale, MacDowell; Fantasia-Sonata, Rheinberger.
- Dr. A. C. Tysoe, Newcastle Cathedral—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Willan; Allegro Maestoso (Symphony No. 3), Vierne; Prelude and Fugue on BACH, Liszt; Academic-Festival Overture, Brahms.

- Mr. Eric Brough, St. Lawrence Jewry—Fantasia and Fugue in B flat minor, Rheinberger; Choral No. 2, Franck; Fantasia on 'Come, Holy Ghost,' Bach; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke.
- Mr. H. E. Wall, St. Matthew's, West Kensington—Chorale-Improvisation on 'Sleepers, wake,' Karg-Elert; Variations on 'Vater unser,' Mendelssohn.
- Miss R. H. Hull, Limpsfield Parish Church—Overture in C minor, Hollins; Finale (Sonata No. 1), Mendelssohn.
- Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; 'Gothic' Suite, Boellmann; Nuptial March, Guilman.
- Mr. A. E. Jones, Bolton Town Hall—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Finale (Symphony No. 3), Beethoven; Overture to 'Raymond.'

APPOINTMENTS

- Mr. Ernest C. Edwards, organist and choirmaster, St. Luke's, Eltham.
- Mr. Henry F. Hall, organist and choirmaster, Clapham Congregational Church.
- Mr. Frederic Lacey, organist and choirmaster, Claygate Parish Church.
- Mr. Frederick Mason, organist and choirmaster, St. Peter's, Sheringham, Norfolk.
- Mr. Charles Massey, organist and choirmaster, St. Simon and St. Jude, Anfield, Liverpool.
- Mr. W. J. Maynrey, organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, East Sheen.
- Mr. Paul Rochard (organist of Kendal Parish Church), organist of Union Lodge No. 129, Kendal.
- Miss Laura Slingsby, organist and choirmaster, St. Paul's, Marylebone.
- Mr. Alexander Squires, organist and choirmaster, St. James's Garlickhithe, E.C.

Competition Festival Record

THE LEEDS COMPETITIVE FESTIVAL

The first Leeds Competitive Festival will be held on March 21-24 at the Town Hall, Albert Hall, and Albion Hall. The classes number forty-five, and it is known at the time of writing that the entries (which close on February 1) exceed a thousand. Several well-known choirs intend to take part. Mixed-voice choirs in the open class are to sing Brahms's Our fathers trusted in Thee, Elgar's Death on the Hills, and Marenzio's Yield up your ancient fame; male-voice choirs sing Bantock's The Ballade and Holst's The Homecoming. There are three classes for dramatic ensemble, one for parties of commercial employees. The profits of the Festival go to the National Institute for the Blind. The provisional list of adjudicators includes Prof. Granville Bantock, Sir Frank Benson, Mr. Arthur Catterall, Dr. Henry Coward, Mr. H. Plunket Greene, and Mr. Hamilton Harty.

THE LONDON FESTIVAL

The London Musical Competition Festival will be held at Central Hall, Westminster, on March 5-10 and 12-17. No description can be attempted of so huge and complicated an affair beyond remarking that the number of classes has advanced, by seven, to a hundred and twenty-eight; that twenty-one adjudicators are appointed; and that the hon. secretary has our best wishes. He is Mr. T. Lester Jones, of 130, Belgrave Road, Wanstead, London, E.11.

Nobody can be a frequent attendant at choral contests without observing that the competitors often lose points through their conductor's ignorance of the technique of conducting. We notice that the Thanet Festival Committee, evidently with this fact in mind, has announced a lecture on conducting, at the Wesleyan Hall, York Street, Broadstairs, on February 17. The lecturer will be Mr. Ernest Read. This is a lead that might well be followed in other districts.

We regret that unusual demands on our space compel us to hold over discussion of some competitive festival questions raised by correspondents.

CARDIFF.—In an Eisteddfod held during Christmas week, New Tredegar Choir was the first of three in singing Crowns of golden light by Mr. T. Hopkin Evans (who adjudicated), and of three male-voice choirs which sang Cyril Jenkins's Fallen Heroes, the Williamstown Choir won first place.

THE HARTLEPOOLS FESTIVAL.—This meeting, suspended during war-time, was revived on Boxing-Day. Mr. Arthur T. Akeroyd awarded the first place among male-voice choirs to Hartlepoons Excelsior (Mr. A. J. Smith).

MANCHESTER.—The fourteenth New Year's Day Eisteddfod attracted few choral entries. The successful choirs were Cambria Male-Voice, Manchester (Mr. Llew. Hughes); the Novello Glee Party; and in the chief class St. John's Wesleyan, Weaste (Mr. J. T. Edwards). Dr. Caradog Roberts and Mr. G. W. Hughes adjudicated.

MIDDLESBROUGH.—Only two choirs entered for the chief contest of the Eisteddfod on January 1. Cleveland Harmonic (Mr. Gavin Kay) proved superior to Middlesbrough Apollo (Mr. T. Nicholas) in Bantock's Ballade. Prof. Granville Bantock and Mr. Dan Price adjudicated.

RHYL.—Colwyn Male Choir and Prestatyn and District Choral Society were successful in an Eisteddfod held on December 26.

COMPETITIONS IN FEBRUARY AND MARCH

BEDFORD.—March 3-12. The Hon. Secretary, 95, Ashburnham Road, Bedford.

CARDIFF CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY.—March 22. Mr. W. L. Stedman, 84, Windway Road, Victoria Park, Cardiff.

EARLESTOWN.—March 3. The Hon. Secretaries, 14, Lawrence Street, Earlestown.

ECCLES.—March 30 and 31. Mr. Ben Harris, 8, The Park, Eccles, Lancs.

EDINBURGH.—February 24 to March 3. Mr. David Latto, 27, George Street.

GLASGOW SOCIALIST FESTIVAL ASSOCIATION.—March 15, 16, and 17. Mr. W. H. Martin, 109, Bath Street, Glasgow.

LEEDS.—See above. The Hon. Secretaries, 8-9, Pearl Buildings, East Parade.

LINLITHGOW (West Lothian Festival).—March 15 and 16. Mrs. Mackenzie, Longcroft, Linlithgow.

LONDON.—See above.

MORPETH (The 'Wansbeck' Competitions).—March 23 and 24. Miss Fullarton James, Stobhill, Morpeth.

OAKLANDS CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH (Shepherd's Bush, London).—February 8. Mr. C. T. Cracknell, 24, Ellingham Road, W.12.

PEOPLE'S PALACE (E. London).—Junior competitions on February 21 and 24. Rev. C. J. Beresford, 392, Commercial Road, E.14.

The test-pieces at the recent 'semi-national' Eisteddfod in London were as follows, and not as quoted in our last issue: Male Choirs: The Winds (E. T. Davies), and The voice of the torrent (Leon Paliard). Mixed voices: How sweet the moonlight sleeps (Emlyn Evans) and Worthy is the Lamb (Handel).

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Gentleman, singer and accompanist, desires to meet another (or lady) similarly qualified, for reciprocal assistance.—F. G. W., c/o Musical Times.

An amateur orchestra, in course of formation, has vacancies for all instruments (wind and string). Forest Gate district.—S. F. HARMER, 26, Tylney Road, Forest Gate, E.7.

Lady vocalist (trained) wishes to meet lady or gentleman pianist for mutual practice, in Crouch End district.—Apply L. G., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist would like to meet keen violinist and 'cellist to form a trio.—D. M. E., 8, Ardoch Road, Catford, S.E.6.

Amateur violinist would like to join trio or duo, for mutual practice; W. London preferred.—G. D., c/o Musical Times.

An experienced first violinist and 'cellist would be glad to meet experienced amateur second violinist and viola player for the weekly practice of string quartets; vicinity of London.—R. H., c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist (experienced London amateur, gentleman) desires to meet good vocalists, either sex, for mutual practice and introduction, at Birmingham.—J. N., c/o Musical Times.

Enterprising Birmingham organist sought by two violinists to take on playing accompaniments from figured bass at sight. Corelli's forty-eight Trios and other music of same class for two violins and figured bass in parts, no keyboard transcription obtainable.—SMITH, 75, Southam Road, Hall Green.

West London district. Gentleman pianist wishes to meet instrumentalist for private practice.—R., 64, Wallingford Avenue, W.10.

Baritone desires to join or form good male-voice quartet, could find tenor for same.—Apply F. H., c/o Musical Times.

A young pianist (male) wishes to co-operate with a cornet or trombone soloist in Penge or Beckenham districts.—C. A. KENSETT, 114, Victor Road, Penge, S.E.20.

Violinist desires to meet lady or gentleman pianist, or pianist and 'cellist, to practise best music. London district.—H. H. G., c/o Musical Times.

An enthusiastic amateur, South-East London district, wishes to meet amateur instrumentalists (orchestral) in the same district who would be willing to co-operate with him in the formation of an amateur orchestral society.—A. S. M., c/o Musical Times.

Euphonium wanted to complete brass quartet. Good player and young man preferred.—Write or call, JOHN SYDNEY, 9, Birdhurst Road, Merton, S.W.19.

A good amateur quartet wishes to meet gentleman 'cellist, for weekly practices of classical and modern chamber music. Gentleman residing in N.W. district preferred.—B. D. S., c/o Musical Times.

Lady, excellent accompanist and sight-reader, wishes to meet a vocalist or instrumentalist for mutual practice.—B. G. B., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur vocalist desires to meet pianist for mutual practice. South London district.—Letters only, P. PARSONS, 2, Felday Road, Lewisham, S.E.13.

Letters to the Editor

THE PARSON PLAYS

SIR,—I am the parson of a tiny —shire village of two hundred souls, and as it happens I am fond of music. So there was no help for it; my people had to be taken in hand and brightened musically, as that was the particular brand of brightness that I could supply.

First, a church choir had to be made, and then made to sing, and then made to want to sing good music.

Next came the village Choral Society. Oh! the blandishments to get them to join!

'I can't sing, Sir.'

'Of course not, if you've never tried.'

In three years we have given six concerts and raised more than £30 for various good objects, and we feel distinctly pleased with ourselves. It is even said that other villages round are jealous.

The latest move was a sheer speculation. I can play the pianoforte a bit, and I hit upon the idea of announcing an hour's recital described as 'Pictures in Music,' to be held in the Village Hall. It was to be quite informal, and admission was to be free.

Would anybody come? If they came, would they stand it? I wondered . . .

Anyhow, from whatever reason, more than a quarter of the village turned up; they came from the big houses, they came from the cottages.

A few simple words on 'Absolute' and 'Programme' music, and then the 'Pictures'—each introduced by a short description in which I indicated the main points. Eagerly they listened for the pattering in Chopin's Raindrop Prelude and the striking in the Clock Prelude. Whether Chopin himself thought of rain or clocks doesn't much matter, for my purpose was to give my hearers a point of view. Then Mendelssohn's Duetto, followed by Sinding's Rustle of Spring, and so, after a few words explaining unusual scales, on to Rebikov's Giants' Dance, March Past—much appreciated, I fancy, by ex-service men present—and Old Women's and Old Men's Dances with their queer, unfinished closes. Grieg's Little Bird and Night Ride came next, and then Debussy's Gollywog's Cakewalk—not quite so easy for them to grasp, gollywogs and cakewalks being out of fashion down here. But Grovlez's Westminster Abbey had a great success with its bell, chorale, and organ, while the third movement of Schumann's Carnival Fest at Vienna, filled with the joy of the dance and closed with that splendid rushing trombone scale, brought the hour to a happy conclusion.

And I hear they want another!—Yours, &c.,

COUNTRY PARSON.

GARBLED REVIEWS

SIR,—'Feste' has ably exposed the degrading and farcical results of misquoting newspaper criticisms for the sake of advertisement. A scarcely less reprehensible matter (in my opinion) is the liberty which certain Editors allow themselves in cutting up and distorting—to say nothing of ignoring—letters addressed to them, especially if the opinions expressed are calculated to get in even a temporary dig at one of the members of the staff. It must in fairness be admitted that the Musical Times has been singularly just in this respect, recognising no doubt that a reasoned criticism of, or disagreement with, a writer's point of view cannot harm anyone by being aired. This is not the case with many other journals which devote a good deal of space to letters on musical matters. Not long ago a daily paper printed a report on the Leeds Festival in which it was stated that the performance of Delius's Appalachia was partly justified by the fact of the composer having been born at Bradford! This was very much resented by many admirers of Delius, and provoked a spirited retort from me, which was ignored. Some time afterwards I happened to discuss the matter with the musical Editor of the said journal, and was blandly informed that he could not possibly think of publishing adverse criticism directed against a colleague!—Yours, &c.,

ROBERT LORENZ.

26, St. James's Mansions, N.W.6.

January 8, 1923.

[Mr. Lorenz is quite right in principle, but we think he does not realise how many are the considerations—apart from the mere question of space—that lead to the editorial omission or blue-pencilling of correspondence. For example, we have deleted from his own letter a passage concerned with a two-year-old dispute about Stravinsky. As the debate in question caused a good deal of bitterness between individuals, without in the least advancing the cause of music, we think it is best left buried.—EDITOR.]

IN MEMORIAM DR. BUNNETT.

SIR,—It may be worthy of note to all interested in music, and especially those in organ matters, that the instrument originally built for the late Dr. Bunnett by Messrs. Hill & Son was purchased from him by the churchwardens and myself in 1908. Quite recently it was decided, after consulting our Parochial Church Council, that a tablet be fixed on the organ, and Dr. Bunnett was asked for and forwarded such wording as he deemed most fit.

Owing to unforeseen circumstances the project could not be carried to fruition, but there may now be some who would like to take a share in defraying the cost (which will not be large) of this proposed tablet, and thus help to do honour to the memory of the Doctor. The instrument is kept in good condition, and during the recent extensive church repairs the opportunity was taken for having it thoroughly overhauled by Mr. Norman, of St. Stephen's Road, Norwich.

Contributions will be gladly received by myself or my daughter, Margaret, from whom further information may be obtained.—Yours, &c.,

Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

GABRIEL YOUNG (Vicar).

January 11, 1923.

Sharps and Flats

I do not in the least object to a little music or a song or two in a play, but when a particular character is called upon by the dramatist to sing songs in the wings as part of the story and disturb the dramatic action by chortling to the audience from the stage, and rushing to the pianoforte at the slightest provocation, to sentimentalise over the ivories, I can only utter a sigh of regret and issue a decree of banishment of all such fripperies to the concert-platform.—Sydney W. Carroll.

A London journal says that Mr. Kreisler prefers to be described as a fiddler, and regards that term as dignified as 'violinist.' Well, there are fiddlers and there are violinists. Sometimes, playing his short pieces to please the mob, Mr. Kreisler is indeed a fiddler.—New Music Review.

Caruso did not invent the operatic sob. Those of long memory can recall lachrymose tenors before his time. . . . Why tenors, virtually alone of operatic singers, should find it necessary to play the baby in emotional climaxes, is one of those puzzling questions that seem to be answerable only by regarding them as a type apart.—Musical America.

There are doubtless many people who feel that their enjoyment of a concert would be enhanced if the lights in the auditorium were lowered. . . . LOWER THE LIGHTS! —Sewell Stokes.

I am completely at one with Mr. Sewell Stokes in his suggestion for lowering the lights. I attribute the insomnia from which I frequently suffer at concerts to the excess of light—and, of course, the noise.—Ernest Newman.

Abroad, if you are to know the leaders of musical thought, you are bound to meet them; for there a man must have more qualifications for talking about music than that of having started as a working journalist—or perhaps a printer's devil. Remember that critics in England are mostly disappointed men, hardly earning enough to keep body and soul together.—Ursula Greville.

It is my earnest hope that musical criticism plays no part in the newspapers patronised by those who make the real heart of the 'Old Vic.'—Dame Ethel Smyth, in the 'Old Vic,' Magazine.

The conditions of newspaper work do not favour ideal criticism . . . but we do what we can.—Richard Capell.

The value of every criticism depends upon the critic behind it.—A. B. Walkley.

The Immortal Hour is neither an opera nor a play, but a combination of both. The music is by Granville Bantock, and the story is that of King Cophetua and the Beggar Maid, with a characteristic little touch of mysticism and a different ending.—The Lyons Mail.

Fierce customer, hastily entering music shop: 'Mikado libretto!'

Nervous and apologetic assistant: 'Me no speaka Italiano.'—Daily News.

Mendelssohn was a bit of a milksop . . . There are degrees and varieties of feebleness in art; and for the special degree and variety that is met with now and then in Mendelssohn I can find no better description than—if I may coin the word—milksoppery.—Ernest Newman.

Whether or no Mendelssohn was a milksop his exquisite melodies will be played with rapture long after the name of Mr. Newman has perished from the earth.—C. T. Taylor.

It is no use playing Rachmaninov in places like Bermondsey.—Mr. — Pasquale.

. . . the dreadful Prelude of Lohengrin . . . the exquisite Adelaida of Beethoven.—Darius Milhaud.

Opera libretti in general seem to be written for the class of people for whom the Thompson-Bywaters hanging is provisionally followed by the mystery of the locked-up tailor.—Percy A. Scholes.

Why should a musical journalist nurse his cud of wrath against me when I ask for better treatment of native work? —Josef Holbrooke.

It is reported that when Kid Wagner, the champion featherweight boxer, was asked recently, 'Are you related to the great Wagner?' he answered: 'Related to him? I am the great Wagner.'—Musical Courier.

Viscount — has given £100 towards the restoration of the organ in Worcester Cathedral. It had been decided that the work of repair should not be commenced until £5,000 had been promised, but as the fund has now reached £4,999 19s. 2d., the work is to be put in hand.—Daily Paper.

It is thought that with a very little pressure his lordship may be induced to spring another tennence.—Punch.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The Royal Academy of Music is congratulating itself on the fact that Sir Henry Wood has kindly arranged to take an active and important part in the curriculum of his Alma Mater, in a capacity for which his name is a household word. At the commencement of this Term, Sir Henry's appearance as conductor at one of the weekly orchestral rehearsals—as well as at the Terminal Concerts of the School in Queen's Hall—will be inaugurated.

Another valuable development is the extension of the class for orchestral conducting. The direction of the orchestra will be in the hands of Sir Henry Wood and the Principal, and the various classes and lectures will be undertaken by the following Fellows of the R.A.M.: Messrs. Henry Beauchamp, Adam Carse, Frederick Corder, B. J. Dale, Spencer Dyke, J. B. McEwen, Ernest Read, and William Wallace.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The inaugural address of the present term was delivered by Sir Frank Robert Benson to an enthusiastic audience. Sir Frank entitled his address 'The music of your voice.' He said that he was one who very early in life had the difficulties of the use of the voice brought home to him, and he gave some interesting details of his first experiences in this connection. As was to be expected the discourse proved a very practical one, and contained much excellent advice, of which the following may be taken as an example: The speaker held that the only rule in voice production was that, laid down by the old actors: 'Take plenty of breath and open your mouth.'

At the conclusion diplomas and prizes were distributed to the winning students, and a programme of music given.

Of the seven successful candidates at the recent examinations in Music at the London University, four are students of this College, and three of these latter hold or have held Scholarships under a scheme which provides for a complete preparation for University Musical degrees to those who have passed the Matriculation examination, or hold an exempting equivalent. The names of the successful candidates are: Messrs. Richard J. C. Chanter, Mus.D., William Lovelock, Mus.B., George M. Matthew, Mus.B., Eric H. Thimann, Int.Mus.B. A very satisfactory record indeed.

In this connection the appointment of Miss Dorothy S. Marshall to a scholarship under the above-named scheme will be noted with interest.

The following scholarships have also been awarded as a result of the competition held at the beginning of the month:

Pianoforte: Gilbert Hart, Goldie Rosenways, Helen A. Horgan, Norman W. G. Tucker, Lily E. Walker, Elga V. Collins. Violin: Frank E. I. Bilbe, Mark Breiterman, Eric C. Coleridge, Hilda Elsaesser, Fred Maybank, Harold P. D. Rendell. Singing: Winifred E. Brightman, Edith Fletcher, Dorothy H. Fox, Florence L. Legg, William Mitchell, Myrtle C. Stewart, Alexandrina M. Stringer. Viola: Winifred T. Stiles. Violoncello: Reginald F. J. Kilbey, Gastone Marinari. Double-bass: Jessie Mason. Clarinet: G. W. Batchelor, Walter H. Scrutton.

The adjudicators were Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. C. W. Pearce, and Dr. E. F. Horner.

By the death of Myles Birket Foster this College has lost one of its strongest and most active supporters. For a number of years he had acted as examiner both at home and abroad, during which time he was also a member of the College Board Corporation, and finally a vice-president. He will be greatly missed.

The following Local Exhibitions have been recently awarded in connection with examinations held in the United Kingdom:

Senior Division.—Pianoforte: Elizabeth McGregor (Dublin), Eva Howlett (Grimsby), Norman W. G. Tucker (London), Mary Pratt (Worcester), Monica M. Kelly (Arklow). Singing: Annie Feay (Manchester), Beatrice Charnock (Bedford). Violin: Queenie Edgcombe (Plymouth).

Intermediate Division.—Pianoforte: Jacqueline Townsend (London), Ellen C. K. Brunson (Gloucester), Hilda M. L. Munro (Aberdeen), Phyllis C. Grover (London), Edith McIlwraith (Glasgow), John Emlyn-Jones (Bristol), Dennis M. Brierley (Southampton). Violin: Nora M. Carmichael (Belfast). Extra Exhibition (Pianoforte): Cecil Elbro (Walsall).

Junior Division.—Pianoforte: Margaret Harris (Bristol), James A. Cooke (Manchester), Daniel Dillys (Swansea), Bessie G. Hill (Birmingham), Edith M. Bennett (Norwich). Singing: Sydney W. Smith (London), Phyllis M. Ford (Golders Green), Kathleen Walker (Grimsby).

Elocution Exhibitions.—Senior: Nora Swann. Junior: Phyllis M. Bailey (Portsmouth), Enid M. Cooper (West Ham), Doris Rigley (Nottingham).

UNION OF GRADUATES IN MUSIC

The thirtieth annual general meeting of the Union of Graduates in Music took place at the Connaught Rooms on January 11, Dr. C. B. Rootham presiding. Dr. J. C. Bridge, Professor of Music in the University of Durham, was elected president for the ensuing year, and the following members fill the six vacancies on the Council: Mr. C. B. Edgar, Mr. A. M. Fox, Dr. A. T. Froggatt, Mr. R. H. Hunt, Mr. H. K. Moore, and Mr. H. Westerby. During the meeting an informal discussion on admitting to membership of the Union all graduates in music of the Universities throughout the British Empire, took place, the subject being introduced by Dr. E. F. Horner. At present only graduates in music of Universities in the British Isles are eligible for membership. After the meeting the annual banquet was held, and a very large number of members from all parts of the country assembled. Among those who proposed and responded to the toasts following the banquet were Sir Hugh Allen, Sir Frederick Bridge, Prof. J. C. Bridge, Prof. C. H. Kitson, Colonel Somerville, Dr. E. F. Horner, Dr. C. B. Rootham, Mr. E. J. Dent, Mr. R. W. Ffennell, and the hon. treasurer. The gathering was one of the best attended in the history of the Union, and much interest was shown in the next Annual Conference which, this year, is to be held at Durham in the summer, when it is anticipated there will be a record attendance of members.

C. L.

The 'East Anglian Association of Musical Societies' has been formed under the presidency of Dr. Frank Bates. The objects of the Association are the exchange of music, the recommending of principals and orchestral help, an information bureau, arrangements to avoid the clashing of dates, and, in general, help to the musical cause. About thirty choirs had affiliated at the date of a recent meeting of the Association.

A series of lectures on French musical history, given by M. Louis Bourgeois for the Institut Français du Royaume Uni, is in progress at 2, Cromwell Gardens, S.W.7. The subjects of the four remaining lectures are: (February 9) Gabriel Fauré; (February 23) Charpentier and Reynaldo Hahn; (March 3) Messager; and (March 9) d'Indy.

The annual West-End Festival of the Sunday School Choir will take place at the Royal Albert Hall on February 17. The programme to be performed by the choir and orchestra of a thousand under Mr. W. H. Scott includes selections from Beethoven's Ruins of Athens and Spohr's Last Judgment.

DINNER AND PRESENTATION TO EDWIN EVANS.

At Paganini's Restaurant, on January 21, a large company assembled under the chairmanship of Sir Hugh Allen, the guest of the evening being Mr. Edwin Evans. The object of the occasion was to express contemporary musicians' regard for Mr. Evans and to show their appreciation of his efforts on behalf of modern music, especially that of British origin. As a token of its feelings the committee presented Mr. Evans with his portrait painted by Mr. Wyndham Lewis. The hosts and hostesses were Arnold Bax, Lord Berners, Arthur Bliss, Adrian C. Boulton, Frank Bridge, A. Casella, Edward Clark, Louis Durey, Frederic d'Erlanger, Manuel de Falla, Armstrong Gibbs, Eugène Goossens, Gustav Holst, Herbert Howells, John Ireland, Cyril Jenkins, Ethel Leginska, G. F. Malipiero, Percy Pitt, Maurice Ravel, Florent Schmitt, Cyril Scott, Ethel Smyth, and Igor Stravinsky. Others present included Madame Adeline Genée, Mr. Augustus John, Mrs. Goossens, and Miss Dorothy Moulton.

Photo. by

[Herbert Lambert

EDWIN EVANS

The members of the International Society for Modern Music (at present assembled in conference in London) also attended.

The presentation was made by Mr. Eugène Goossens, supported by Messrs. Frank Bridge, M. Audra, Percy Scholes, and Col. Tatton.

Mr. Evans, in reply, said it was unique that the criticised should form themselves into a committee to honour the critic. After a strenuous fight lasting many years they had at last reached a time when the musical world, which was once an imperial state, was now a federal republic. It was twenty years ago that he wrote his first series of articles on the younger composers. If the critic concentrated on finding fault he was declared to be an impartial critic, but if he concentrated on finding out what was good he was at once put down as somebody's press agent.

Mr. E. J. Dent proposed the health of the foreign guests, Mr. Searchinger (United States) and Prof. A. Weissmann (Germany) replying.

INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS: ANNUAL CONFERENCE

This year the Incorporated Society of Musicians held its annual conference on historic ground—the Examination Schools at Oxford. The president, Dr. A. H. Mann, held a reception on the evening of January 2, and the official programme opened next morning. On behalf of the vice-chancellor, Dr. F. W. Pember, Warden of All Souls, welcomed the conference to Oxford, and Sir Hugh Allen gave an address. He spoke discursively and pithily on music at Oxford; the danger of too lightly entering the musical profession; the distinction between a musician who performed well and one who listened well; the competition set up by incompetent teachers with easily-won diplomas; how little a handle to a man's name mattered compared to the work he did; and so on. Sir Hugh hurriedly departed for London, leaving his audience wanting more.

That evening Dr. George Dyson gave a lecture on the texture of modern music. He spoke extempore, and played many examples at the pianoforte, so that his lecture is as difficult to sum up as Sir Hugh Allen's. He showed how modern harmonies grew from the multiple weaving of lines, from the 'splash' method, from following melodies in streams of parallel lines, from elliptical resolutions, from multiple tonalities, and the rest, all methods tending towards a twelve-note chromaticism. He showed the stimulus behind it all, drew some general conclusions, and succeeded not only in interesting but in enlightening his hearers.

'Interpretation' was discussed, on January 4, by Dr. Adrian C. Boult, who made an elaborate analysis of the subject. He pointed out the various degrees in which a work can suggest its own interpretation; the ways in which the secret of a work can be discovered; the different degrees of knowledge and ignorance which a conductor can bring to a new work or to an old work; the strength and the danger of tradition; the necessity for understanding the form of a work as a key to its meaning; the necessity for keeping your interpretations fresh by revision and openness to new ideas. Dr. Boult showed at every point how thoroughly he had probed the subject, and how conscientiously he approaches the tasks set before him in his own conducting.

On the evening of January 4, Mrs. Rosa Newmarch lectured on 'Czecho-Slovak-Bohemian Music,' dealing with the gradual rise of national aspirations during the time of German influence, the building of the Prague National Theatre, Smetana's work as leader of the national movement and its expression in his operas, the life and influence of Dvorák, and the modern tendencies under Janacek and the younger modern group.

The annual general meeting was held on January 5. The president pointed out the need for more urgent and practical application of the Society's principle of 'elevating the status' and improving the 'qualification' of bona fide members of the profession, and he added that the Society's financial position was critical, and could be dealt with only by a raised subscription or increased membership.

RUTLAND BOUGHTON'S BETHLEHEM

Bethlehem, as played and sung at Glastonbury seven years ago, is a musical setting by Rutland Boughton of portions of the ancient Coventry Nativity Play. Rather elaborately, he calls it a 'choral music-drama.' This Christmas-time the work reached London—first at Battersea and at Streatham Town Halls, then at Church House, Westminster. The Streatham Philharmonic Society, Mr. Haggis, the conductor, and Mr. Frederick Woodhouse, the baritone (who has sung in Glastonbury performances), have to be thanked for bringing it on to the London scene, and now there can be small doubt that it will become established here as part of the Christmas celebrations of many Londoners, just as in the western shires.

The dismalness of the first Battersea performance—rain, a half-empty hall, a belated start, and then a rendering that was often ill-assured—all this did not obscure the impression of a thing of great freshness, naturalness, and beauty.

Once Mr. Boughton has done it, it seems so much the obvious and right thing that the astonishment is that nothing has been done before quite like it, and we feel sure this sweet, humble, and attaching rehearsal of the Divine story will increasingly for years and years be a seasonable joy to English people. Mr. Boughton, nearly always so natural and unforced, has here more than ever done just what pleased him most without straining his ambition, and we think he has done nothing better. This composer, certainly not one of the most powerful in sheer musical imagination, has a hardly surpassed gift for the right, light, and unspoiled musical touch for a situation that has his sympathy. His sympathy goes out to frankness and simplicity, heartiness, homeliness, the natures of country folk and of children. A dozen other composers, equally good musicians, might have essayed such a Nativity cantata tinged with the rustic and festive spirit of an 'old-fashioned English Christmas,' and the result would have been an affectation. Mr. Boughton has not striven either to be archaic or to 'write down' to the insipidity supposedly appropriate to simple folk.

The carols, for instance, which bubble forth at short intervals—the composer, we are sure, wrote them to his own pleasure; and it is a piece of luck not too common in the ways of modern art that what this delightful artist likes best offers no difficulty to the immediate delight of just ordinary listeners. The carols are quite exquisite pages of unstrained part-song writing. In such scenes as the Virgin's Lullaby and the Watching Shepherds (they are shepherds with the accent of the Mendip Hills) there are few notes and just the right ones, so that listeners may take heart, saying that present-day art is not necessarily clouded, tumultuous, and hard.

If we must make an exception to Mr. Boughton's surety of feeling, it is not in the scenes of the Annunciation, of the Bethlehem stable, of the shepherds, or in the interspersed choruses, but in handling Herod that he has been a little baffled; he has had to look round for a moment and to summon in aid a rather operatic style, and a suspicion of falseness enters, heightened by the decoration and performance of Herod's scene—for somehow we feel it is not right that an English Christmas play of Coventry-cum-Glastonbury should be in the least affected by the Russian Ballet. Here, however, Herod has clearly borrowed some languishing young female attendants from Scheherazade. The music begins to make pretensions, and on the scene the Town began to affect the pure Country notion of a proper Herod.

Otherwise Miss Christina Walshe's decorations had the exquisite propriety of the music, and ought always to be held as one of the play's integral parts. We had, in some sort of mediæval garb, the chorus to right and left of the stage (an overflow in the orchestra). Such a scene as the Stable, with the blueness of its night-sky and of the Virgin's garb, carried the mind to the religious art of the primitives. Integrally part of the impression, too, was Miss Dorothy Silk in the part of the Virgin. Her mien, like her singing, the delicacy of it, the chastity, the calm, made, we venture to say, as lovely a composition as the present-day stage has known.

C.

Opera in London

COVENT GARDEN OPERA: NATIONAL COMPANY'S SEASON

Beginning on Boxing-Day and continuing for the next four weeks, the British National Company did good service by providing Londoners with grand opera at Covent Garden at a time they do not always have it. Incidentally the Company takes an historical position, for at the close of its season the house was handed over to revue, whose title, You'd be Surprised, evokes the reply, 'I am'; and I can hear the Maplesons, the Gyes, and the Harrises echoing a ghostly response. But there it is. Still, there is just a small crumb of satisfaction to the advocates of opera in the vernacular in the fact that the last representations of opera in the famous old place were given by British artists in their own tongue. Thus something has been gained, and shows that the present day finds a spirit abroad different from that of the past, which led Augustus Harris to say to a singer, who was taking up a part at short notice, 'Don't sing in English, or you'll ruin me.'

The season has been well supported (particularly by the patrons of the more moderate-priced seats, who represent the very people it is desirable to familiarise with grand opera), and the end was triumphant. That generous-hearted woman, Dame Nellie Melba, added her weight to the Company's appeal by appearing at two performances in the last week of the season. She not only packed the house at increased prices, but sang like the great artist she is, and moreover made a speech on behalf of the Company that, had the hat been handed round then and there, would have secured all the money wanted to keep opera going for years. She did not sing in English. I suppose she has never forgiven Carl Rosa for sending his linen to the wash before he had noted the appointment to hear Melba he had made on his cuff. We must take things as they are. Every right-minded person is willing enough to have opera in English, but few realise the enormous difficulties in the way. The chief of them is the supply of trained singers. Still those who have got or are getting their training have worked nobly during this season, and have shown us how much natural ability there is in the British singer.

For the most part the répertoire has covered familiar ground, which was a wise move, though I noticed that there was not the old enthusiasm on the part of the public for former favourites like Tannhäuser and Faust, and that there was a more ready disposition to hear Madame Butterfly—with a very charming Butterfly in Miss Maggie Teyte—and the tuneful operas generally. Humperdinck's Hansel and Gretel resumed much of its popularity. It was given every afternoon during the first week, attracting a remarkably juvenile audience for the first performance, and afterwards drawing those who wished to renew their youth. With two casts that included Miss Maggie Teyte, Miss Lilian Stanford, and Miss Doris Lemon in turn as the children, Mr. Frederick Collier, Miss Treweek, and Mr. Sydney Russell (as the Witch), it was a decided attraction. Special nights gave us Wagner opera in the shape of The Valkyrie and Siegfried, both creditably done with the assistance of Miss Florence Austral, Mr. Walter Hyde, Mr. William Boland, and Mr. Robert Parker, and Mozart nights—highly popular—have called forth The Magic Flute, one of the best representations the Company gave, thanks to the work of Miss Sarah Fischer, Mr. Tudor Davies, Mr. Norman Allin, and Mr. Raymond Ellis, The Seraglio, with accent on the 'rag,' and The Marriage of Figaro.

The general performances have included Trovatore, Cavalleria, Pagliacci, La Bohème, Samson and Delilah, Aida, with Miss Austral, and Bach's cantata Phaëus and Pan, in which Mr. Frank Mullings made his reappearance without contradicting the contention that Covent Garden stage is too small for him, and too large for this somewhat amateurish adaptation of Bach. Mr. Percy Pitt has been a tower of strength at the conductor's desk, and his example has been nobly followed by Messrs. Julius Harrison, Eugène Goossens, and Aylmer Buesst. Mr. Leslie Heward, a new recruit to the ranks of baton-holders, showed high promise and a welcome command of technique.

The season leaves a feeling of regret that there are not more opportunities for audiences and performers alike to hear opera. I should add, for the benefit of those who will turn to their Musical Times fifty years hence, that many of the performances were broadcasted by wireless telephone, and heard and relished by thousands, including listeners-in at Copenhagen, who heard the Melba Bohème perfectly. Possibly this fact may solve the question of an opera-house, by enabling that house to be in everybody's home, the wireless music being illustrated by a portable cinema showing the action. Perhaps. This is only 1923. F. E. B.

POLLY: THE SPIRIT OF ENGLAND

By the time these lines appear—a month after the date of production—Polly, the sequel to The Beggar's Opera, produced at Kingsway Theatre on December 30, 1922, will have completely established herself in the esteem of the public. The piece was designed by Gay to follow up the history and fortunes of his famous work. In

The Beggar's Opera he satirised society generally, but in Polly he proceeded to particularise by assuming an attitude that generally was 'agin' the Government,' with the result that the piece was promptly banned. It did not appear until fifty years later, when all the bite was taken out of it and its point lost. To-day few know what was behind the satire or even its direction, but the fact remains that there is an intention to 'chip' somebody somewhere, and that is enough for a public familiar with the delights of barbed chaff as expounded by W. S. Gilbert. There is great affinity between John Gay and W. S. Gilbert, in spite of the century that separates them, for neither hesitated to be sarcastic in public. Indeed to me it is perfectly clear that The Beggar's Opera was the forerunner of the Gilbert and Sullivan series, for the spirit in both is the same, and both got themselves into trouble for being a little too pointed—a fact that has caused to be lost to sight a very good example of the genius of the twain in Utopia Limited.

To-day all the political significance of Polly has faded, and the thing remains a joke, but hardly a Gilbertian joke, as Gilbert 'wasn't born until after that.' But it is through Gilbert that we can appreciate the spirit underlying the whole thing—the farcical pirates, the mumchance Indians, the amorous Ducat, the scheming Mrs. Trapes, the virtuous Polly, and the fickle Macheath; and, thanks to tradition, the present-day arranger of the libretto (certainly a necessary factor since our manners, if they have not improved, have changed) has maintained its spirit admirably. He is Mr. Clifford Bax, whose business it has been to 'edit' the whole thing, and make it presentable to present-day ears as well as eyes. He has done his work well, keeping faithfully to outline, though his last stroke, the reunion of Polly with Macheath, is his own arrangement with which everyone will agree, since her presentation to the Indian Chief was a little touch of 1728 that means nothing to-day.

The story as told is, briefly, how Polly, the most faithful of Macheath's wives, follows him from Hammersmith to Kingsway—pardon: from England to the West Indies—where, as Morano, he has become the chief of a pirate band. She is met on arrival by Mrs. Trapes, who tries to place her in the service and esteem of Ducat the planter. Mrs. Ducat realises that Polly's intention is not to be obliging when she learns from her true story, and helps her by disguising her in a youthful British cornet's uniform. Polly makes for the Pirate's lair, but her uprightness carries her through, wins her the support of the honest Indian Chief, and in the end enables her to bring Macheath to her side.

So much for the idea and story, which leaves us free to revel in the music. As with The Beggar's Opera, the industrious Dr. Pepusch was called in to find the tunes that fitted Gay's verse, and again he did the wisest thing, and caught all the various tunes he heard floating about the air in those tuneful and universally musical days. He cast his net rather wider than before, and enmeshed all kinds of melodies, including many of the beautiful French examples, and some of the Italian. Mr. Frederick Austin's business has been to collate these and re-dress them. Wisely he has kept to the old outlines and the old colours. He lives in the period with great success—not such a difficult business to the really musical, such as Mr. Austin is, for the reason that the spirit of this music is in our blood. We British are first and last melodists, and that which endures in our hearts is melody. I cannot but admire (while I sympathise with) the restraint Mr. Austin has put upon himself. The temptation to embroider these glorious old melodies of flowing outline, vocal quality, and innate expressiveness, is great. Mr. Austin has resisted it all, and has 'joined his flats' in a way that defies the majority. To his orchestral force—a body of appropriate colour represented by strings, harpsichord, flute, clarinet, trumpet, and drums—he has assigned a scheme of perfect dimensions. The mood is exact in every number, and in some it is so happy that the first-night audience would willingly have renewed it regardless of all else. I am thinking in particular of the contrasted styles of Polly's two songs, The world is always jarring and As sits the sad turtle alone. These the audience asked for again and again on their first hearing. I do not wonder at it. All my life I have been familiar with the delights of these 18th-century tunes and well acquainted with the fascinating contents of Clio and Euterpe, Pills to Purge Melancholy, and Calliope—productions of an age when people knew how to write melody, and music was music, not noise. Now others can participate in these delights presented to them with so much care and knowledge by artists like Mr. Austin, Mr. Bax, Mr. William Nicholson (who has designed the costumes and scenery), and Mr. Nigel Playfair, who has produced the whole.

The cast is happy in every respect, and the members one and all seem to enjoy themselves as much as the audience. Miss Lilian Davies makes a very charming Polly, tuneful of voice and pleasant in manner; Mr. Pitt Chatham a gallant Macheath; Miss Muriel Terry a most insinuating Mrs. Trapes; Miss Winifred Hare an excellent Mrs. Ducat; Mr. Percy Parsons a truculent Pirate Lieutenant; Miss Adrienne Brune a pleasing Jenny Diver, while the rest of the cast are well up to their work. The orchestra was in the charge of Mr. Eugène Goossens. The whole, including the costumes, the scenery, the action, and the presentation have been prepared with the care that is the due of a masterpiece of amusement. It is not difficult to foresee that here is the type of entertainment the public wants, and that, as becomes a sequel, Polly will follow The Beggar's Opera and hold its own for many a long day and night.

F. E. B.

London Concerts

THE ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

Because the contours of Handel's choral writing are mostly bluff enough to withstand sledge-hammer treatment, choral bodies have more often than not in the past concentrated upon them with all their vocal sinews. At its New Year performance of The Messiah the Royal Choral Society adopted the methods of discretion proper to it in treating other works under the new régime, and proved that it can develop eloquence equal in degree though different in kind. Mr. H. L. Balfour broke away from tradition as regards tempi, with results gratifying to all who have credited the Society with a wide capacity for achieving variations of light and shade. As an example 'For unto us' became an essay in tone-building, with reasonable and convincing climaxes at the words 'Wonderful!' 'Counsellor!' &c., so that a net result of a lifelike organism was produced. It was refreshing to hear the Overture and Pastoral Symphony brought up to a comparable plane of interpretation. As usual, the original accompaniments were retained, with Mr. R. Arnold Greir to assist in giving a good account of them at the organ.

H. F.

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

A programme of remarkable variety and interest was given by this choir at its concert at Bishopsgate Institute on December 21. Indeed, we can always turn to these enterprising singers and their excellent conductor, Mr. Harold Brooke, for a lesson in how to make quite ordinary means serve the highest musical ends. Among unfamiliar things were heard Ayres by Cavendish and Motets by Byrd, also a Suite for strings from the Gordian Knot United of Purcell, while Bach's Cantata Sleepers, wake, Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols, and Elgar's part-songs from the Greek Anthology (arranged in this case for mixed voices) represented better-known items.

The choir was obviously more at ease with the modern idiom than the older one of the Elizabethan writers, and showed its best form in the Elgar part-songs. These were given with clearness, point, and a felicitous touch that did not appear in the same degree in the performance of the older music. But those who have to deal with the Elizabethans know how difficult it is to phrase subtle polyphonic rhythms, and how easily they can become heavy and laboured. A word of criticism might perhaps be directed to the over-quick tempi adopted sometimes by the conductor, but on the whole he handled his forces with aptness and discretion.

The principal solos were undertaken by Mr. John Buckley, whose free, open voice served him well, and Miss Gladys Marloe, who left something to be desired in the way of impassioned utterance. Mr. H. W. Parsons, in a smaller rôle, must also be commended for his delivery of the tenor recitative in the Bach cantata. Valuable assistance was given to the choir by a small orchestra of well-known players, led by Mr. W. H. Reed, and also by Miss Maud L. Allwright at the pianoforte.

C. K. S.

FEDERATION OF MUSIC CLUBS

A concert given on January 16 at Chelsea Town Hall by the Goossens Orchestra, with E. Howard-Jones as pianist, calls for mention here, not so much for its programme and performers (though both were excellent) as for the idea that lay behind it. This was the inaugural event of the Chelsea Music Club, and that club is a unit in a new combination called 'The Federation of Music Clubs'—a body of but a few weeks' standing, with already a membership of fourteen clubs, comprising over two thousand music-lovers.

Full particulars of the new organization can be obtained of its hon. secretary, Miss Winifred Chamney, 16, Prince Edward Mansions, Pembridge Square, W.2. Its aims are clearly set out in a leaflet signed by Frederic Austin, Goossens, Howard-Jones, Sammons, Sir Henry Wood, and others, and, in brief, they amount to this—decentralisation, the collection of audiences (under the title of 'club') before the engagement of artists (and consequent saving of printing and advertising expenses), the linking of concerts in different localities into groups (so that the same programme may be given by the same performers with a considerable saving of cost and increase of efficiency through fuller rehearsal), the performance of new works (the cost of preparation of which for a single performance would be prohibitive), interchange with foreign countries, &c.

It all looks downright practical, and the only doubt that at the moment arises in one's mind is this: Is there going to be an unfortunate competition between this new body and the as yet none too well-established yet already very valuable British Music Society? As many of the signatories of the manifesto just mentioned are connected with the older society, no doubt this danger has been foreseen.

P. A. S.

MODERN VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE SONATAS

John Ireland's No. 2, J. B. McEwen's No. 5, and Respighi in B minor, made up the programme of Messrs. Sammons and Murdoch at Wigmore Hall on January 13. All are comparatively recent, the Ireland work having been composed six years ago, the Respighi about five years, and the McEwen presumably within the past few months, since this was its first performance.

Of the Ireland work not much need be said, as it is already well known, and can even be obtained (in a somewhat condensed form) as a Columbia gramophone record, made by these very players.

The McEwen work is called a Sonata-Fantasia. It consists of two movements, (a) Maestoso sostenuto—Doppio movimento animato—Tempo primo, and (b) Vivace. The first movement is somewhat brooding, the second has a good deal of the dance about it, and a somewhat Scottish flavour. Any criticism of such a work, based merely upon the impression from a first hearing, may be properly taken by cautious readers as open to revision upon fuller acquaintance, and, subject to this reservation, the opinion may be expressed that this work is interesting but lacks spontaneity.

Despite the announcement on the programme the Respighi work had been heard before in London—played by André Mangeot and Casella at one of Mr. Edwin Evans's lectures on 'Modern Music' in 1918. (The Dizionario dei Musicisti gives the first performance as taking place at the Accademia St. Cecilia at Rome in 1919, which is also evidently an error.) But the point of precedence is not important, since the work itself is not of outstanding merit, being very much the normal well-made, three-movement composition, generally a trifle on the side of dullness and never showing much of the modern sympathies with which the composer is usually credited.

P. A. S.

There was no need to think seasonable thoughts at the Christmas concert of the Oriana Madrigal Society. Such a programme would be equally welcome on May-Day or August Bank Holiday. The old and the new were equally well chosen and sung. As only contemporary composers are available for compliment we make special mention of Arnold Bax's Mater ora filium, Peter Warlock's Corpus Christi Carol, and Holst's This have I done for my true love; and we must not forget Charles Kennedy Scott, also very much alive.

M.

E. J. MOERAN

Mr. E. J. Moeran's ambition did not quite go the length of giving a one-man's show, for his concert at Wigmore Hall on January 15 concluded with the Ravel Quartet, but it was obviously given for the purpose of introducing two important works from his pen—a String Quartet in A and a Violin Sonata in E minor. The former is the earlier of the two, and its chief merits are concentrated in a sparkling and vigorous final Rondo. Its opening section suffers a little from the fact that its principal subject was apparently chosen more with a view to the mission it had to fill than for its intrinsic attractiveness. In this respect the Allegro of the Sonata shows a great advance, for its impetuosity is not hampered by technical obligations, although these are met as consciously as we have a right to expect in a modern sonata. In short, this movement falls into line, as the other did not, with the general spontaneity of Mr. Moeran's work. This quality is perhaps more pronounced in the slow movements of both works, though it is naturally less assertive in the lyrical mood. Where it leaps up to meet the listener is in the two final movements, the Rondo which has been referred to above, and the concluding section of the Sonata. Mr. Moeran, who has been working with John Ireland, inclines, like many other composers of to-day, to rely upon the pentatonic scale for the fashioning of his thematic material. It is this that gives it the flavour which is conventionally recognised as Celtic, though a film now showing proves it also to be Tibetan. In his case it has been hailed as Irish, and none can object. The flavour itself is good, but we cannot entirely overlook the circumstance that with the pentatonic scale it is next to impossible to go wrong. The composer's treatment is, however, remarkably interesting. The performers were Miss Harriet Cohen (who played with much charm a group of not very weighty pianoforte pieces before tackling the Sonata, in which she was joined by Désiré Defauw) and the Allied String Quartet, of which Mr. Defauw is leader. Both the concerted pieces were given with that assurance which denotes careful preparation and sympathetic interest. Hence the interpretation was excellent.

E. E.

BLOCH'S THREE JEWISH POEMS

It is perhaps not without significance that Mr. Ernest Bloch's Trois Poèmes Juifs, played for the first time in England, at the Queen's Hall Symphony Concert on January 13, are dedicated to the memory of the composer's father. Behind the eccentricities of their presentation move shadows and portents which it is only reasonable to credit with a strong racial origin. They are the expression of deep feelings, with which it is probably impossible for the Western mentality to claim a very lively sympathy. The composer of this 'Dance,' 'Rite,' and 'Funeral Cortège' achieves orchestral colouring peculiar to his subject-matter with the ease of a practised hand. But the significance of the idiom remains uncomprehended. Were it otherwise, the pieces might not appear somewhat long for what has been said. But perhaps it is as well that their meaning is somewhat a matter of guesswork, for one had an uncomfortable feeling, as when walking among Oriental scenes and people—which the music does not fail to conjure up—that if all were known the spectator might not find himself flattered. There is little evidence of organic growth in these atmospheric pictures, but their cleverness held the attention under the competent exposition of Sir Henry Wood.

H. F.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Miss Ivy Phillips sang at Wigmore Hall. A good voice, used on the right technical lines; an artistic sense, too, and even when we did not see eye to eye there was no mistaking her serious mental survey. Like most contraltos she finds perfect compatibility of diction and tone a difficulty. Sometimes the balance tipped one way, sometimes the other, yet it is fair to allow that they were often in concert. In an interesting programme two songs that stood out were Rutland Boughton's Immanence and The Piper of Arnold Bax. Mr. Harold Craxton's accompanying was a delight. Do concert-goers appreciate such exquisite art when in this supposedly ancillary position?

Miss Stella Wootton at the same hall sang easily and sweetly, but has not yet the physique to propel tones that count for very much. So far as it went her singing had no positive faults of note, and there was a certain pleasing freshness, only mitigated by a mixed programme that boasted Mozart and Debussy to begin with, but later descended too many degrees.

Miss Phyllis Lett, heard again at Æolian Hall after six months, at once struck me with her improved breath-control. In the result her attack was cleaner, her tone more solid, there was an adroiter (though still incomplete) welding of registers. The final skill is still lacking in the management of this lovely voice—the skill which suggests that considerations of technique are assimilated and all but forgotten. We applaud her for resisting the temptation—whispering at the elbow of the possessor of such a contralto voice—of freakish singing. But she is too sincere; she does not confound hollowness and depth, and does not annoy us with mere moans on notes below the stave. Only her vocal tenacity must become more uniform still if she is to hold the rank we hope for her. Some of her Schubert singing was the most impressive, notably The Wraith and Who is Sylvia? Miss Lett overloaded Debussy's Mandoline and Arnold Bax's Femmes, battez vos maris—songs of lightness—with too much lusciousness. The heavy gilding of lilies is her interpretative fault at present.

Miss Margaret Balfour was heard at one of the Æolian Orchestra's concerts. The dignity of her voice and of her manner is admirable, and admirable is the subjection in which she keeps her fine opulent tones. She has the art of making singing appear not, after all, so difficult. In beginning the phrases of Elgar's Where corals lie she conveyed comfortably that she had their end well in view and was mistress of their progress. Having got so far, Miss Balfour might well be a more adventurous interpreter. She satisfies the sensual ear. But the intelligence does not feed on sumptuous tone; it wants (among other things) sense from the words, and Miss Balfour's words are generally careless, and occasionally not words at all. Improved enunciation would give the actual music of her voice more variety. And finally she must be reproached for stooping to conquer with an item of balladry not meet for a civilised quarter of the town.

Mr. Philip Wilson raised the level of a recent ballad concert (Enoch's, on January 13) by singing some lute-songs of the Dowland period and type, newly transcribed by himself and Mr. Warlock—delicious trifles, though the accompaniments seemed very slight to engage the whole bulk of a modern pianoforte! Mr. Wilson quite spoils a good tenor voice by an excess of 'twangy' tone. Nasal resonance is one thing, but singing down the nose is another and not a good one. We recognise that Mr. Wilson is a keen lover and interpreter of music, and so hope he will get over this mannerism.

Perhaps without encroaching on a colleague's domain a word on the technique of some of the singing lately heard at Covent Garden is admissible. There were several beautiful voices; there were a few commandingly beautiful; there were some singers who made headway in spite of vocal handicaps; there are others who are in process of ruining good natural powers by striving after tones foreign to them. The example of the illustrious Caruso seems to have resulted in a harvest of his faults. We must put down to him, poor man, the recent showers of 'glottis strokes' (coups de glotte). And then, when Caruso choked back his breath in that wonderful way he had it is perfectly certain he knew what he was doing; but do his imitators? The imitators refrain from imitating his glorious cantabile, his intensity, his cumulative power—that would involve such tremendous application and hard labour as few of our singers care to face.

Miss Florence Austral and Mr. Norman Allin, together with (in a lesser degree) Mr. William Anderson, were voices that it was a great joy to hear—voices that would worthily adorn the most splendid of opera-houses. Such singers do not disturb us with apings. Miss Maggie Teyte, Miss Beatrice Miranda (apart from the poverty of her lower tones), Mr. Walter Hyde, Mr. Andrew Shanks, and Mr. Robert Radford were others who illustrated the English singing art of to-day. H. J. K.

Music in the Provinces

ABERDEEN.—The Bach Society, conducted by Mr. Willan Swainson, gave the following programme on December 21: Bach's God's time is the best, Holst's Two Psalms, and Dale's Before the paling of the stars.

BARNSTAPLE.—At the Musical Society's concert on December 11 the choir sang Parry's There is an Old Belief, Sterndale Bennett's Come, live with me, and other part-songs. A Sonata for flute and pianoforte by Barnett, and another for 'cello and pianoforte by Beethoven, were among the instrumental items. Dr. H. J. Edwards and Mr. Sydney Harper conducted.

BIRMINGHAM.—A Sunday night concert at the Futurist Theatre introduced the Leeds Trio to Birmingham. Mr. A. Cohen is its leader, with Messrs. Hemingway and Herbert Johnson for colleagues. Rachmaninov's Trio Élégiaque was beautifully played, and one desired to hear it again, but Franck's early F sharp minor Trio, though no less well played, offered us Franck before he had found himself. Mr. William Heseltine, of The Immortal Hour cast in London, was heard in several songs.—The Christmas season brought a concert by Madame Elma Baker. A seasonal appropriateness was secured by drawing on Christmas music by Bax, Vaughan Williams, and Holst. Boughton's choral arrangement of 'The Holly and the Ivy' carol from Bethlehem was in the programme.—Sir Henry Wood conducted the Festival Society's usual Boxing-Day performance of The Messiah.—Two days later the same work was given at Walsall by the newly-formed Free Church Choirs Society under Mr. Graham Godfrey.—At her recital on December 22 Miss Rebe Hillier sang Chausson's Chanson Perpetuelle, the Paul Beard Quartet and Mr. Michael Mullinar co-operating in the instrumental music. The occasion was the first appearance of the Quartet, whose members are Messrs. Beard, Cantell, Venton, and Dennis, of the City Orchestra.—Tchaikovsky's Trio was given at the first Mid-day concert of the year by Miss Marjorie Sotham and Messrs. Paul Beard and Johan Hock. At the second Miss Dorothy Silk sang some Brahms songs and a group of old English songs in her exquisitely refined manner.—Kunneke's light opera, The Cousin from Nowhere, which has had a wide success on the Continent, had its first English performance at the Prince of Wales Theatre on Boxing-Day.

BRADFORD.—Elgar's Quartet was heard on December 14 at a concert of the McCullagh Quartet.—On December 17 Mr. Julius Harrison conducted the Bradford Permanent Orchestra in Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony and Debussy's orchestration of Eric Satie's Gymnopédie, No. 1.—Mr. Erik Brewerton played 'Romantic and Descriptive Music' from Schumann to Tcherenpin on December 18.—The first movement of the Ninth Symphony was given at the Bradford Sunday Society's concert on January 7.—Choral performance has included The Messiah by the Bradford Festival Choral Society and a Faust selection by the Bradford Pioneer Choir.

BRISTOL.—Parry's Ode to Music, Holst's Hecuba's Lament, Granville Bantock's Sea Wanderers, Dunhill's Pilgrim Song, and the Bach-Elgar Fantasia and Fugue were performed at a recent concert of the Philharmonic Society. Mr. Arnold Barter conducted, and the English Singers sang Elizabethan music.—At the annual ladies' night of the Madrigal Society sixteen concerted pieces were sung, seven belonging to the Elizabethan period. The programme included All creatures now are merry-minded (Benet), Those sweet, delightful lilies (Bateson), Lady, see on every side (Marenzio), and Ye singers all (Waelrant). Mr. Hubert W. Hunt is the present conductor.—Three works of César Franck were performed at the second concert of Clifton Chamber Concert Party on December 12 in celebration of the Franck Centenary. These were the String Quartet, the Pianoforte Quintet, and the Prelude, Choral, and Fugue for pianoforte.—The Y.M.C.A. Brotherhood orchestra and male choir gave a benefit concert on December 13 for their conductor, Mr. W. S. Porter, the programme including Liszt's second Hungarian Rhapsody for orchestra, Neumann's chorus The rising storm, and The last days of Pompeii (Ritz).—At the annual concert of the Bristol Grammar School a choir of old and present boys sang unaccompanied part-songs, including Dicks's The Unseen Choir, the words of which were written by the Rev. Dr. W. S. McGowan, an old boy.

CAMBRIDGE.—On November 14, 1922, the C.U.M.S. experimented in giving a 'Popular Orchestral Concert.' The programme included the Ruy Blas and Freischütz Overtures, Mozart's G minor Symphony, the Peer Gynt Suite, the Aria on the G string, and Elgar's Gavotte (Contrasts, A.D. 1700, 1900). This concert was much appreciated, and on March 13 the Society will give another. It is hoped that very soon these events will become a regular institution, taking place at least once every term.—On the afternoon of March 14, in the Royal Albert Hall, a combined choir and orchestra from Oxford and Cambridge will perform Beethoven's Mass in D. The programme will probably include Vaughan Williams's Towards the Unknown Region, Cyril Rootham's Brown earth (for chorus, semi-chorus, and orchestra), and Stanford's first Irish Rhapsody.—On June 2-8 a Festival of British music will be held at Cambridge, and will include various kinds of music of the 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, and 20th centuries. There will be a choral and orchestral concert, a concert of chamber music, unaccompanied choral works, 18th-century opera, folk-dancing, and possibly a river-procession to the accompaniment of Handel's Water Music.—Prior to the Albert Hall concert, the C.U.M.S. choir and orchestra will perform Beethoven's Mass in D, at Cambridge, on February 9, the soloists being four of the 'English Singers.'

CARDIFF.—Madame Tetrassini, Mr. Lauri Kennedy, Mr. John Amadio, Signor Baggione, M. Bratza, and Mr. Ivor Newton gave a ballad concert on December 16.—At the Park Hall concert on December 17 the orchestra played Saint-Saëns's Le Rouet d'Omphale, and the vocalists were Mr. John Perry and Mr. Cuthbert Pardoe.—At the Capitol on the same date the chief feature was Schubert's Unfinished Symphony.—At the Park Hall concert on December 31 Litoff's Overture Robespierre and Coleridge-Taylor's Ballade in A minor were played by the orchestra. Mr. Adolphe Hallis, a South African pianist, played, and Miss Beatrice Miranda sang.

CHATHAM.—The Royal Marine Orchestra played a new Suite de Ballet, My Lady Dragon-fly, by Finck, on December 11.—On the same date was given the annual concert of the Medway School of Music and Mr. Leslie Mackay's Choir, the latter singing Sister, awake (Bateson), Elgar's It comes from the Misty Ages and Love's tempest, Austin's Lady-love mine (for female voices), Hey nonny no (Armstrong Gibbs), and Lo! country sports (Weelkes) (for male voices).—On January 2 the band of the Royal Engineers played Gade's second Symphony, Bizet's Patrie Overture, and a Festival March written by Lieut. Neville Flux, who conducted.—A new Suite by Arthur Wood was played by the same orchestra on January 9, at Brompton Barracks. The Suite, My Native Heath, gave impressions of Yorkshire. Tchaikovsky's first Symphony and Berlioz's Carnaval Romain Overture were also played.—Three modern Valses, by Percy Godfrey, were given a first performance by the band of the Royal Marines on January 8, under the composer. Dr. Hoby conducted Goetz's Symphony in F.

COLLINGHAM (Yorks).—Mr. Frank Mullings gave a song recital in Memorial Hall on December 16, and

Mr. Lloyd Hartley (pianoforte) played some Beethoven and Ravel.—At the Subscription Concert of January 7, Bach's Concerto for two violins was performed by Miss G. Davey and Mrs. J. S. Hartley.

CRAWLEY.—Parry's Pied Piper of Hamelin was given by the Crawley and Ifield Musical and Dramatic Society on January 4, Mr. Courtenay Robinson conducting.

DUMFRIES.—Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols and Dunhill's Tubal Cain, conducted by Mr. C. F. Eastwood, were in the programme of the Musical and Operatic Society's concert on January 1.

EDINBURGH.—The Corporation has been considering the promotion of concerts in Usher Hall and Waverley Market, but at a meeting on December 15 the suggestion was definitely negated, it being felt that the Corporation should not enter into competition with private enterprise.—At the Patterson orchestral concert in Usher Hall on December 18 the programme was made up of music either by Scottish composers or Scottish in its inspiring motive. Hamish MacCunn's Land of the Mountain and the Flood, William Wallace's Villon, Mackenzie's Benedictus, Max Bruch's Scottish Fantasy (with Miss Daisy Kennedy as solo violin), and Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony were included.—The programme of the Patterson orchestral concert on December 27 was drawn from the works of five Englishmen, an Irishman, and an Australian. It included Balfour Gardiner's Overture to a Comedy, George Butterworth's A Shropshire Lad, Stanford's first Irish Rhapsody, Elgar's Enigma Variations, Grainger's Shepherd's Hey, German's Welsh Rhapsody, and Landon Ronald's Suite The Garden of Allah.—The programme on December 30 was designed to interest young people, and was frankly popular. Sir Landon Ronald conducted.—Recent events of interest have included a week of The Beggar's Opera; Bach's When will God recall my spirit? and Byrd's Ave verum corpus, sung by the Bach Choir; visits by the Vatican Choir, Melba, and Backhaus; a first vocal recital by Mr. Jack Miller; a sonata recital (violin and pianoforte) by Miss Dorothy Chalmers and Miss Denise Lassimonne.—Dr. W. B. Ross gave the first of a series of eight weekly recitals in Usher Hall on January 7, introducing his programme with appropriate commentary, and giving information on the construction and history of each piece before playing it.—At the Patterson orchestral concert, on January 8, the programme included Beethoven's C minor Symphony, Strauss's Don Juan, Berlioz's Carnaval Romain Overture, and the closing scene of Götterdämmerung, with Miss Florence Austral as Brunnhilde.

EXETER.—At their annual concert, on December 29, the Isca Glee Singers sang an interesting arrangement by W. J. Cotton (the alto of the party) of In sheltered vale, for baritone solo and trio accompaniment, also Schafer's Come away, pretty maiden, Hatton's Summer Eve, and Horsley's By Celia's arbour.—The central feature in the programme performed by the Chamber Music Club on December 13 was Vaughan Williams's song-cycle, Five Mystical Songs, for baritone voice, vocal quartet, and pianoforte.

GAINSBOROUGH.—The programme of the Musical Society on December 13, included Stanford's Phaulraig Crohoore and two of Holst's Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda, Mr. Alan Stephenson conducting.

GLASGOW.—Under the conductorship of Mr. A. M. Henderson the Bach Choir sang at a recent concert the Church Cantatas O praise the Lord for all His mercies and God's time is the best.

HARROGATE.—Two concerts were given in the Royal Hall, on December 29, in aid of the Memorial Scholarship for students of conducting that has been inaugurated in memory of the late Julian Clifford. In the afternoon the programme was miscellaneous. At the evening concert an orchestra conducted by Mr. Julian H. Clifford played his father's tone-poem, Lights Out. Mr. Colombatti was the soloist in Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, and Mr. Hiawatha Coleridge-Taylor conducted four movements from the Othello Suite.

HULL.—Dr. Coward's Vocal Society and Mr. Walter Porter's Harmonic Society have both been occupied with The Messiah.—Recitals have been given by Backhaus and by a group of amateurs brought together by Mr. Russell-Starr and Miss Eleanor Coward.—The Carl Rosa Company, installed for three weeks at Alexandra Theatre, lent principals to the Hull Musical Union on December 30.

ILKLEY.—With Mr. A. T. Akeroyd as conductor, the Ilkley Vocal Society sang Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast on December 18.—At Ben Rhydding, on December 14, the Ghent Quartet from Leeds played chamber music by Haydn, Mozart, and Debussy.

LEEDS.—At the Industrial Theatre, Hunslet, on December 14, the Leeds Symphony Society gave an orchestral programme directed by Mr. Harold Mason.—Rossini's Stabat Mater (English adaptation) was sung on December 17 at Headingley Wesleyan Church.—The annual renderings of The Messiah, in the Town Hall, were given on December 18 by Leeds Choral Union (conducted by Dr. Coward), and on December 20 by Leeds Philharmonic Society under Dr. E. C. Bairstow. Both were exceedingly fine performances.—On January 7, the Oak Road Congregational Choir, under Mr. H. Atha, gave selections from The Messiah in Armley Gaol before four hundred prisoners.—At Leeds Parish Church Choir concert, on January 9, Bach's Clavier double Concerto in C major was played on two pianofortes by Dr. A. C. Tysoe and Mr. Herbert Bardgett. Stanford's Revenge and a miscellaneous programme followed.—Mr. Eugene Goossens conducted César Franck's Symphony, Stravinsky's L'Oiseau de Feu, and the first performance at Leeds of Turina's Procession del Rocío at the Saturday Orchestral Concert on January 13.—On January 10, Mr. Bensley Ghent's String Quartet gave the first of five chamber concerts, in Belgrave Lecture Hall.

LIVERPOOL.—The luncheon hour recital in Rushworth Hall on January 8 was given by the Edith Robinson String Quartet, who played Schumann's Quartet in A, the Giga Quartet of Tanéïev, and a Fantasy Quartet by Ernest Walker.—Mr. Joseph Greene gave a pianoforte recital at the Crane Hall afternoon series on January 10. Mr. Henry Wilkinson played cello music, and Miss Ethel Penhall sang.—Mr. John Tobin lectured at Blundellsands on January 11 on 'Chamber Music,' and illustrations played included a Concerto by Delius, Frank Bridge's 'Cello Sonata, the Violin Sonata of Eugene Goossens, and John Ireland's Fantasy Trio, the performers being Mr. Tobin, Mr. Walter Halton, and Mr. J. G. Matthews.

LLANDUDNO.—On December 20 the Llandudno Season Extension Choral Society sang The Creation at the Pier Pavilion, and on January 7 the Society gave Jesu, Priceless Treasure. The Winter Gardens Orchestra accompanied, and Dr. Caradog Roberts conducted.

NOTTINGHAM.—At an orchestral concert organized by Mr. A. Vernon Felton on January 9, Mr. Wilfred J. Helmsley conducted Finlandia, the Siegfried Idyll, and Mendelssohn's G minor Pianoforte Concerto, the soloist being Mr. Felton.

OXFORD.—The Bach Choir closed its year with a concert of Christmas music, which was sung under Sir Hugh Allen's direction. It included Bach's Sleepers, wake!; an anthem, Dominus illuminatio mea, for female voices, by Maurice Besly; and Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on old Christmas Carols.—At a recent concert the Eglesfield Musical Society, accompanied by two pianofortes, three trumpets, and a double-bass, sang Vaughan Williams's Towards the Unknown Region, Eugene Goossens's Silence, and Maurice Besly's Sleep and Freights. Mr. Besly conducted, and Mr. S. J. Ching, president of the Society, played the Variations by Brahms on a Theme by Handel.

PENZANCE.—The Choral Society performed St. Paul on December 15. Mr. Hugh Bramwell conducted, and choir and orchestra numbered a hundred and forty.

PORTISHEAD.—At the first concert of its fourth season the Choral Society performed Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast and Stanford's The Revenge on December 20. Mr. Alex Ransom conducted.

PORTSMOUTH.—On December 10 the band of H.M. Lifeguards played Gustav Holst's second Suite for military band and Liszt's second Hungarian Rhapsody.—The Philharmonic Society performed Verdi's Requiem on December 14, conducted by Mr. Hugh Burry.

ROCHESTER.—In December The Dream of Gerontius was performed by Rochester Choral Society and the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Hylton Stewart. This was the first concert of the Society this season, and its second performance of the work, the first having been given in 1914. The programme opened with the first movement of Franck's Symphony. In the choral work the semi-chorus was sung by a section of the Maidstone Choral Union, and the solo singers were Mr. Steuart Wilson, Miss Lilian Berger, and Mr. Clive Carey.

SCARBOROUGH.—A programme of Christmas music was given on December 19 at the Spa by the Scarborough Philharmonic Society, conducted by Dr. Ely.—Two successful performances of Hubert Bath's Wedding of Shon Maclean were given during New Year's week by the Hackness Choral Society. This organization has for the last two years won the Challenge Cup at the Eskdale Tournament of Song.

SHEFFIELD.—The outcome of a successful amateur performance of Lohengrin by the Sheffield Grand Opera Society was an offer to two members of the cast (Mr. F. Brindley and Miss Gertrude Gilpin) to play Telramund and Ortrud for the Carl Rosa Company. Mr. Brindley was able to accept.—December brought M. Pouishnov, Miss Olga Haley, and Mr. Eric Marshall in a 'Celebrity' list, Madame Suggia and the 'English Singers' to a Sheffield Subscription Concert.—Of many Messiah performances that of Dr. Coward's Musical Union was the most notable.—Rotherham Choral Society gave St. Paul, Mr. Granville Naylor conducting.

TREORCHY.—A Choral Festival was held at Noddia on December 25 and 26 by the Treorchy Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. J. T. Jones. The works performed were The Rose of Sharon, Verdi's Requiem, and Elijah—a great undertaking which the choir performed with credit.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—Three performances of Rutland Boughton's music-drama, Bethlehem, were given in the Town Hall, beginning on December 6, by the Glastonbury Festival Players.

WORCESTER.—Bach's Christmas Oratorio was drawn on to a considerable extent for a Christmas concert. In the age-worn College Hall the red cassocked singers lent an appropriate atmosphere, while the colour effect was pleasing to the eye. Carols predominated, some in arrangements by Sir Ivor Atkins made for the occasion, and his own charming Virgin's Lullaby also had a place. The Worcester Orchestral Society provided the accompaniments.

YORK.—At St. William's College, on December 18, a gramophone recital was given, of records from Sir Henry Walford Davies's lecture-demonstrations to teachers. The recital was promoted by the local British Music Society, and included reproductions of harpsichord music, songs, madrigals, and a Palestrina Mass sung by the Westminster Cathedral Choir.—Before the York Rotary Club, on January 7, Mr. W. Tuke Robson (Huddersfield) lectured on 'The Story of English Song,' and gave vocal illustrations.—York Minster was crowded on Boxing-Day for The Messiah, sung by a choir of two hundred and fifty (including a hundred and twenty singers from the Leeds Philharmonic) and full orchestra, conducted by Dr. E. C. Bairstow.

The current Music and Letters leads off with two articles of great interest to chamber musicians—'Of Quartet Playing,' by Adolfo Betti (Flonzaley Quartet) and 'The History of the Viola in Quartet Writing,' by Rebecca Clarke. The Editor writes learnedly, yet not without lightness, on 'The Minor Chord.' Other excellent articles are by Alexander Brent-Smith ('The Workmanship of Mendelssohn'), and a symposium on opera, by Hubert J. Foss, Nicholas Gatty, Clive Carey, and Rosa Newmarch.

IRELAND

Messiah concerts at Dublin, Belfast, Lisburn, Waterford, and other towns testify to the strength of tradition, even in Ireland.

On January 8, under the auspices of the Royal Dublin Society, Miss Dina Copeman gave a pianoforte recital, and displayed rare power as an executant, though at times her interpretation was unsatisfying.

Naturally, the chief musical event of the New Year at Dublin was the rich treat afforded by John McCormack's two concerts, in aid of the Mater Hospital and the St. Vincent de Paul Society, on January 16 and 18. These concerts were in fulfilment of a promise made last year, and McCormack, with characteristic generosity, gave every penny of the proceeds without any deduction whatever to these two deserving charities.

Walter McNally, who shared the triumphs of Margaret Sheridan at Milan, gave a concert at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on January 14, at which the chief attractions were Giuseppe Barsotti (tenor), Celso Diaz (violin), Dina Copeman (solo pianoforte), Louis Destree, Eileen Hayden, Norrie Finn, and Harry O'Donovan.

The Municipal Elections at Belfast completely swamped several projected concerts in that city.

LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT)

When most musical ventures are fraught with financial risk it is gratifying to record that the Leeds Festival of October last has resulted in a surplus of £653 8s. 8d., of which £500 is devoted to medical charities.

Though a revival after nine years' lapse, the 1922 Festival compares favourably with the pre-war one of 1913. But for the addition of the Entertainment Tax the prices of tickets were the same as last time, except for a slightly reduced charge for admission to rehearsals. What an incubus the Entertainment Tax is to musical enterprise is shown by the fact that it amounted to no less than £1,137 2s. 9d. Yet, excluding interest on the reserve fund, the receipts were £8,225 8s. 10d., as against £7,708 13s. 5d. on the former occasion.

Despite the great increase in the cost of concert organization, the net expenditure of £8,310 14s. 11d. was £56 4s. 10d. less than that of before the war. It is generally agreed that this did not result in any lowering of standard; indeed the artistic success of October's function was indubitable. The policy of eclectic programmes with a good sprinkling of modern orchestral works was endorsed by an increase of £287 9s. in the proceeds of tickets. In social status the Festival gained by the patronage of Royalty. It may be objected that the concerts produced little original composition, but the problem was to get the Festival once more on a sound footing. Economy with little loss of attractiveness was secured by the inclusion of several works, new to Leeds or at least novel, which were already part of the regular repertoire of the London Symphony Orchestra, consequently rehearsal expenses were reduced. Broadly, the artistic and pecuniary results of the event seem to show that the Musical Festival is by no means played out, and arrangements are already sanctioned for the next one, in 1925.

PRESTON CHORAL SOCIETY

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT)

There are so few opportunities in Lancashire for hearing Bach's Christmas Oratorio that a journey to Preston on Boxing-Day was worth while. Here the Choral Society (now conducted by Dr. F. H. Wood), with over a century of history behind it, had never before ventured on this music for its customary Boxing-Day concert. Whatever else may be thought of the performance, the playing of the thirty Hallé Orchestra men calls for the greatest praise, especially in the numerous obligati for wood-wind; the trumpeter also (Mr. A. Harris) triumphed famously, notably in the great chorus of the Festival of Epiphany at the beginning of Part 6. For the purposes of really effective interpretation the chorus was too unbalanced; a dozen or so tenors, however valiant, and fewer than thirty basses were no match for approximately a hundred and fifty women's voices, but the tone in all parts was free from impurity, and the choir sang with abundant verve throughout, and in the reflective passages with just expression. The freely-used organ increased the tonal mass, but at the cost of diminished rhythmical vitality. The solo singing of Miss Florence Mellors and Messrs. John Collett and Topliss Green was competent in many ways, but never made so sure an approach to the genius of the music as did Miss Muriel Brunskill in the contralto solos; she is clearly one of the elect as a Bach singer. 'Cutting such works is ever an unenviable and always an unsatisfactory business, but surely at the close of Part 2, after the bass recitative has called upon mortals to join with the angelicals 'in songs of praise for the joys this day doth bring,' to leave such an appeal in suspense and without the response of the concluding choral was the height of incongruity. There was nothing of a lukewarm nature in the Preston audience's reception of the work of Dr. Wood and his colleagues.

BRITISH MUSIC IN SERBIA

An orchestral concert consisting entirely of modern British music was conducted by Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill at the Opera House at Belgrade, on December 28. British music of importance had never before been played in Serbia, and so great was the interest evinced that every seat in the house was sold within a few hours of the opening of the box-office. The programme consisted of:

Vaughan Williams	...	Overture, The Wasps
Elgar	...	Enigma Variations
Elgar and Dunhill	...	Violin Solos, played by Bratza
Balfour Gardiner	...	Shepherd Fennel's Dance
Dunhill	...	New Symphony in A minor (First performance.)

SOME PRESS COMMENTS [TRANSLATED]

Pravda (Belgrade, December 30).—We have been agreeably surprised by the British music. We have discovered in it a charm of temperament never dreamt of, rhythm and colour, and a very pleasant and new musical idiom.

Politika (Belgrade, December 29). (Special article by Miloye Miloyevitch, eminent Serbian composer and writer on music.)—In spite of the fact that it was not at all advertised, the house was sold out immediately the concert was announced, for everybody wanted to hear English music. And what a surprise it was for those who did not know it at all! This music of spirit from the pens of Elgar, Williams, Gardiner, and Dunhill—who are in the first rank in England—ought to hold a permanent place in European concerts. They are masters of their business, whose thought, enthusiasm, and moderate temperament create works of great value, which are varied and strong in form.

Of Elgar's Variations.—It is a work of high value and beautiful style. Pseudo-classic in expression, it is remarkable for the disposition of light and shade, full of brilliancy, very rich in tone-reliefs, and highly complex.

Of the Symphony.—The principal work on the programme was Mr. Dunhill's Symphony. Whilst it is in the direct line of succession, which leads from Beethoven through Bruckner, Brahms, and Mahler, this Symphony is yet a free and modern exemplification of the sonata-like style which is the standard for symphonic composition. Mr. Dunhill has constructed characteristic themes which are very suitable for development, and employs plenty of contrasts. There is not only breadth but rhythmic finesse. The work had enormous success, which was due not only to Mr. Dunhill as composer but as conductor. Leading his players with quiet and moderate but persuasive gesture, this chef d'orchestre revealed a skill and a fund of experience that enabled him to hold the complete ensemble in his hands. Only such a conductor could accomplish as much in three rehearsals with so difficult a programme of music unfamiliar to the players.

Of The Wasps.—The impressionistic Overture to Aristophanes's comedy, The Wasps, by R. Vaughan Williams, who is slightly influenced by Maurice Ravel, is full of life and descriptive power, which under the baton of Mr. Dunhill became fluent and alive.

Vrema (Belgrade, December 29).—Through Mr. Dunhill were felt last night new expressions of English spirituality, especially in the most interesting and, to our ears, unusual sounding Variations by Elgar. The descriptive power of these is masterly. It is English national music free from the old influences. The Variations were warmly greeted by the whole audience. Curious, for us, was the Shepherd Fennel's Dance of Balfour Gardiner, which represents the merry festivities of rural life in England. We felt how far off we are from this restrained English joy.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

After many years of absence we renewed acquaintance with the Spanish violinist Joan Manén. He appeared in a solo recital, and on December 14 was the soloist of the Symphony Concert, playing Bruch's rather antiquated Scottish Fantasia and his own Variations on a Theme by Tartini. The orchestra items were Tchaikovsky's Serenade, Op. 48, and Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, which, thanks to Mengelberg's delightful reading, proved to have lost nothing of its freshness. In the subsequent concert Mlle. Simone Hersent, from Paris, made a splendid début with Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole. The soloist of the concert on December 21 was Madame Birgit Engell, who again captivated her audience by her fine interpretations of songs with orchestral accompaniment by Mahler and Strauss. On this occasion we heard a new composition by the American composer, Rubin Goldmark (a nephew of the composer of the Queen of Sheba). His work, entitled Requiem, for orchestra, proved to be an extremely laboured, lengthy, and generally unsatisfactory piece, that met with only a cool reception. Franz Schreker's Chamber Symphony was also in the programme, and its repetition did not bring much conviction of this composer's alleged superiority among present-day composers. At the concert on December 26 Corelli's famous Concerto Grosso and Bach's B minor Suite were two items which the hearer is always glad to be able to enjoy. On this occasion the excellent Parisian violoncellist, M. Gérard Hekking, gave a masterly reading of Schumann's seldom-heard Violoncello Concerto. Mengelberg having unfortunately to undergo an operation, this concert was conducted by M. Dopfer, who also directed the concert on January 4, when the scheme comprised Berlioz's Overture Carnaval Romain, Goudoever's Suite for violoncello and orchestra (the youthful composer himself sustaining the solo part), Strauss's Don Juan, and Saint-Saëns's B minor Concerto, played in superior style by M. Zimmermann. At the next concert Prof. Carl Fiedler gave a fine reading of Brahms's fourth Symphony. The concert on January 11—this being the last symphony concert conducted by Mengelberg prior to his departure for America—included a repetition of C. R. Mengelberg's Symphonic Elegy and Mahler's fourth Symphony. The vocalist of the evening was Mlle. Mia Peltenburg, who is winning for herself an assured position.

The first of the subscription concerts given by Madame Berthe Seroen and M. E. Cornelis, on January 6, proved to be remarkably successful in every way. The same may be said of the first chamber concert of the Concertgebouw Sextet, the players being heard in a Chamber Sonata by Handel, a Scherzo by Dopfer, Beethoven's Trio, Op. 11, in the original version (with clarinet), and as an interesting novelty for Amsterdam, Josef Holbrooke's Sextet, Op. 33, for pianoforte and wood-wind, which gained a cordial reception.

W. HARMANS.

GERMANY

THE INTERNATIONAL SOCIETY FOR CONTEMPORARY MUSIC

This Society, founded last year after the Salzburg Festival, gave two orchestral concerts at the Berlin Philharmonic, which may be considered to be the beginning of a new era in the artistic relations between Germany and the rest of Europe. The first, with Ernest Ansermet as conductor, became an outstanding event by the performance of Stravinsky's Sacre du Printemps, which produced extraordinary excitement among the audience that filled the hall. The second concert was noteworthy by reason of the fact that it enabled the Berlin public to become acquainted for the first time with the works of the young British composers, and certainly it will not be the last time.

Eugène Goossens, as conductor and composer, won the warm sympathies of an audience which began to realise that British music production, although very young, is going to have a stamp of its own: Goossens's tone-poem The Eternal Rhythm, a striking example of his growing individuality; Gustav Holst's The Planets, an arresting example of programme music as seen through an English temperament, did great credit to British art, which by the skill of the young conductor was presented in the most favourable light.

PAUL HINDEMITH AS OPERA COMPOSER

The name of Paul Hindemith is very familiar to those who had the chance of hearing his String Quartet at the Salzburg Festival. This work proved to be attractive in the highest degree by the absence of what may be called modern dogmatism. The spirit of youth expressed by it in the most natural way was confirmed by a one-Act opera performed at Dresden, under the direction of Fritz Busch, the young and strenuous conductor of the Dresden State Opera. Its title Murderer! Woman's Hope, sounds brutal, but the music is much more amiable than would be imagined in a work with such a name. Hindemith, though enormously gifted, promises more than perhaps he will be able to fulfil. He is not at all ashamed to confess the great influence that Richard Strauss has exercised on him in Salome and Electra, but nevertheless he foreshadows his own path in the field of opera, a field which does not allow a young composer to be enterprising so long as the general public remains attached to real melody in the old meaning of the word. Fritz Busch conducted the work in a manner befitting an ardent friend and advocate of the composer.

PHILIPP JARNACH, POLYPHONIST

Philipp Jarnach, a Spaniard born at Paris, belonging to the German school of composers but well known as an independent spirit, has a strong predilection both for the peculiar style of chamber music and for the necessity for a new Melos, which has been effectively carried out in a number of his fine songs. His Sonata for solo violin excels by the concentration of style characteristic of the modern school, but is of course very contrary to the feelings of the general public, including that part of it already accustomed to modern music. This work denies the instrument any sweetness, but by reason of its serious character never fails to win the sympathies of connoisseurs.

BAVARIA AND RHENAVIA

In Germany, as in every other country, there are many who oppose all that is new in music. Great differences in the character of musical life exist in the various towns, and usually the more different its tendencies the more interesting is the development of German music. Take, for example, Munich. Once a city where musical progress would find sympathy more quickly than anywhere else, it has now become the stronghold of reaction against modernism. Last year when the English conductor Dr. Adrian C. Boult appeared there, he brought to the notice of the public some works by British composers, but this year he felt compelled to perform a classical programme in which Brahms had an important part. This reactionary spirit of Munich is to a certain degree opposed at Nürnberg where, with all respect due to tradition, new works are more readily accepted. The pianist Walter Gieseke, for instance, one of the great apostles of the best modern music, was warmly received by Nürnberg.

At Cologne musical life is much more active than at either of the cities just mentioned, because Otto Klemperer and Hermann Abendroth do their best for the cause of new music. A new opera, Katja Kabanowa, by the Czechoslovakian composer Leo Janáček, was recently performed there, as well as the orchestral suite The Seasons, by Hermann Unger, in which his talent for fine instrumental colouring is revealed. Unger was a pupil of Reger. Besides these new works, Cologne is soon to see the première of Schreker's new opera, Irrelohe.

A NEW TE DEUM

The present psychological state of Germany is favourable for the production of ecclesiastical works. The same tendency towards mysticism which leads the German public to Bruckner, has given birth to a new work by Walter Braunfels in the form of a Te Deum. Among German composers Braunfels more than any other gives the human voice fullest liberty while not neglecting the instrumental part. His musical education was acquired in the spirit of Munich, and he reveals all the post-Wagnerian splendour and perfection. If Braunfels is not one of the most modern composers, certainly he is one of the most influential and is always true to himself.

SOME PLAYERS AND SINGERS

Foreign artists cannot, of course, earn any money in Germany under existing economic conditions, but they can earn a reputation. Of this privilege they make as much use as possible. Innumerable concerts by foreign artists are every night given in our halls. Among those which deserve special mention was the appearance of the Budapest String Quartet. This combination of four very young Hungarians is not to be confounded with other string quartets of the same nationality. They may be termed the true heirs of the Bohemian String Quartet, and some of the most perfect chamber music ever heard was given at their two concerts here. Their playing is emotional in the best sense, and they have a rare control over the resources of their art which never fails to awaken loud enthusiasm.

Among the soloists, there is a young violinist, Jenny Skolnik, who by the energy of her bow, her technical finish, and by her musical sentiment has become one of the favourite artists. She revealed all her excellent qualities recently when she played the Concerto of the Swedish composer, Kurt Atterberg under his personal direction. Then, too, there is the baritone Alexander Kipnis, who possesses a powerful voice. He is surely at the beginning of a great career.

ADOLF WEISSMANN.

NEW YORK

Rumour says that the subscribers of the various orchestras write to the conductors demanding new compositions. If rumour is truthful, one conductor shows his complete indifference to these requests, for Leopold Stokowski sometimes gives three concerts in succession to the same audience without a novelty in any of the programmes. Perhaps the Philadelphia conductor thinks he can afford to be independent in this way, as he always plays to sold-out houses. Maybe it was pressure from the listeners who reflect the restless spirit of the times that induced M. Monteux to produce Honegger's Horace Victorieux at a recent concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Perhaps, again, the able French conductor really thought the composition was worth producing, and, perhaps (once more) he thought he would serve up such a dose of ultra-modern music that he would not be asked for any more at present. Certainly the work met with a cool reception. Arthur Honegger, one of the famous Paris 'Six,' is said by his admirers to be 'immensely talented.' Horace Victor was written as a ballet for the stage. It was first given at Genève, a little over a year ago, and repeated at Lausanne, Paris, and London in less than six weeks. The story is an old legend, and the composer used a translation of Livy published in 1686. Although he spreads the incidents over eight episodes, and the combat between the three Horatii and the three Curiatii is supposed to take place in the fifth, no one could possibly mistake any part of the composition for a love feast. The illustration of mortal combat of the six men is fairly outdone by the combat between the various instruments as to which shall shriek the loudest, groan the heaviest, or wail in the most fiendish dissonances. From one point of view the work is clever, but why call such sounds music? There isn't a bar of music in the whole composition, and up to date no one has been heard to express the slightest wish to listen to it the second time, or even to see it given as a ballet, for which scenery and costumes have been designed by the late G. P. Fauchonnet.

Exactly opposite feelings were aroused by listening to a ballet pantomime by Blair Fairchild, called Dame Libellule (Lady Dragon-fly). Lady Dragon-fly is a flirt of the most heartless kind. On a warm summer afternoon she skims over the surface of a pond, dancing, and entralling a toad, a beetle, a snail, and a lizard, all basking in the sun. She coquettes with one after another, and the discarded ones fight each other till death. It is a gorgeous butterfly that finally appears and wins the love of the merciless flirt, and disappears with her. All this is told in a charming and dainty manner by the composer, who, though born an American, has lived for twenty years at Paris, with the result that his idiom is distinctly French. One longs to see it given as a ballet, and to hear the fascinating music with a pictorial setting. It would be pleasant to claim Mr. Fairchild as an American composer, but not at all fair from this example of his work.

The Apocalypse, a 'dramatic oratorio' composed by Paolo Gallico, which upwards of a year ago won a five thousand dollar prize offered by the National Federation of Music Clubs, had its first New York hearing at a recent concert of the Oratorio Society. Mr. Gallico, born in Italy, has so long made his home here that he is a good deal of an American, but this composition shows neither Italian nor American influences. It is rather a mixture of German and modern French schools, without marked individuality. The three parts are called 'Armageddon,' 'Babylon,' and the 'Millennium.' The text, by Pauline MacArthur and Paul Roche, is made up from selections from the Bible, apparently chosen without regard to their suitability for musical treatment. There is much good workmanship in the composition, but it is too monotonous to arouse enthusiasm. Seven soloists are called for, and the choir—under the new conductor of last season, Mr. Albert Stoessel—gave a creditable interpretation that proved the value of his leadership, the singing being better than that heard for a long time.

Mr. Kurt Schindler, with his Schola Cantorum, gave a Christmas concert that presented material culled in many fields. Of the fifteen numbers in the programme, more than half were novelties for New York listeners. There were two old Italian Christmas hymns; three old French Christmas songs; three Catalan songs; Russian children's folk-tunes, an anthem by Rachmaninov, and Basque folk-tunes arranged by Mr. Schindler. In some of the numbers boys' voices assisted the choir, and all the songs were sung in their original language, Latin, French, Catalan, Russian, and Basque. Mr. Schindler called attention to the fact that one of the Catalan songs was a good example of the 'migrating folk-song,' the melody being sung in at least four other countries.

In the recital field we are indebted to Mr. Ernest Hutcheson for his series of the five great masters of pianoforte music (Bach, Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin, and Liszt), each afternoon being devoted to one composer; also to Mesdames Gerhardt and Frieda Hempel.

The most remarkable of the new singers heard at the Metropolitan this year is Miss Elizabeth Rethberg, a young girl from Germany, who had no advance press-agent. The freshness and beauty of her voice, and its wide range and abundant power, were a great surprise to her audience when she made her début in Aida. If she was not quite so successful as Sieglinde, this may be simply that she was not fully at her ease, as she had sung the rôle only once before. Miss Rethberg is a great acquisition to the ranks of the Metropolitan, and if prophecy is of any use, she should have a great future before her. The second important revival of Mr. Gatti's season was Rossini's William Tell, superbly staged and finely sung by a strong cast, which included Rosa Ponselle and Giovanni Martinelli.

M. H. FLINT.

ROME

With the production of Siegfried under Otto Klemperer's direction at the Costanzi on St. Stephen's Day, the musical season has regained its normal activity, and everything points to its success. The Siegfried production was magnificent in all respects, and those who complained at the adoption of a foreign work for the inauguration of the season at the principal theatre of the capital, had an adequate reply from the pen of Signor Belli. The masterly critic of the Corriere pointed out that not only is Wagner universal, with no customs-barrier on his works, but also that a Wagner opera must necessarily be placed at the beginning of a programme on account of the immense labour of preparation and rehearsal entailed, which can be efficiently dealt with only when the theatre is as yet closed.

The Amici della Musica Society, ever in the forefront for genial initiative, inaugurated its season on December 9 with a commemoration of César Franck. A short discourse was delivered by Maestro Gasco, and the Society's players performed the Quartet and the Quintet.

Under its new direction, the Sala Bach has had a month of exceptionally brilliant activity. One of the most interesting concerts for English residents was that given on December 13 by Miss May Mukle, who passed through Rome en route for India. During her few hours' stay in the capital she was heard in a programme that included Grieg's Sonata in A minor and four English pieces.

Other concerts of exceptional interest have been that of Marco Enrico Bossi, the famous organist; of the violinist Karl Flesch; and of another celebrity, the Polish pianist Albert Tadlevski.

The latest of the concert-halls to open its doors has been the Sala Sgambati, the historic home of the Royal Roman Philharmonic Academy, which enters upon the hundred and second year of its existence under the masterly direction of Alexander Bustini, who has done much in late years to bring the Academy up to its present high level. The inaugural concert took place on Christmas Eve. Devoted to Christmas music, with the title of 'Tempore Nativitatis Christi,' and conducted by Alberto Cametti, the well-known 'maestro' of St. Luigi dei Francesi, the programme included Palestrina's Motet for six voices, O Magnum Mysterium, excerpts from Bach's Tempore Nativitatis Christi, Liszt's Christus, some Messiah choruses, and Berlioz's Overture The Flight into Egypt.

At the Augusteum the season opened with Verdi's Requiem Mass, which had not been heard at Rome since 1913. It was repeated four times, and had a magnificent success.

It is also worthy of note that at the time of writing the Parisian Quartet Capet is visiting Rome, and is performing the entire series of Beethoven's Quartets at Santa Cecilia.

LEONARD PEYTON.

VIENNA

CZECH 'PEACEFUL PENETRATION'

No more forcible demonstration is afforded of the tremendous revision which the European map has undergone, both politically and artistically, than the recent invasion by Czech artists of the Austrian capital. Prior to the 1918 revolution, when our Czecho-Slovak neighbours were still subjects of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, their national musical idiom was comparatively obscured, and all but suppressed, by the governing ascendancy of the Teuton element. Now, judging by the quality of the works offered by Czech musical bodies who have lately visited Vienna, the Czecho-Slovaks have achieved a national musical culture which is indeed astonishing. It was with a certain resignation that we became aware of the fact that, apart from its Philharmonic Orchestra, Vienna boasted no organization to rival the superb playing of the Prague Philharmonic Orchestra, under Vaclav Talich, which recently paid us an all too short visit. The two concerts that were given formed part of the Vienna-Prague Exchange Concert scheme, which provides also for a number of concerts at Prague by the Vienna Symphony Orchestra in February, under the direction of Franz Schalk. Frankness compels the statement that this is hardly a fair deal for the Vienna Symphony Orchestra, which is decidedly second-rate and hardly suited to convey a correct idea of Vienna's orchestral status. On the other hand, the Vienna programmes of the Prague Orchestra, which laid particular stress on presenting exclusively Czech music, hardly permitted of any judgment of the players' capacity for the classics, and a definite pronouncement on their qualities should be withheld pending an opportunity for hearing them play Beethoven or Brahms. There can be no doubt, however, of their powers when interpreting the music of their compatriots, e.g., Smetana and Josef Suk. The big Symphony of the last-named, entitled Asrael, a serious and scholarly work dedicated to the memory of the composer's wife and her father, Anton Dvorák, formed the programme of the second concert. The distinguishing quality common to the conductor, M. Talich, and to every member of the Orchestra, is one of abandon and enthusiasm, and a temperament which is a racial inheritance. All this holds true to an even greater degree of the Bohemian String Quartet, of which Suk is a prominent member. The fame of this Quartet is of long standing, and even in its present reorganized form the artists live up to the standard of excellence that has become traditional. Most important among the works presented was the new String Quartet, Op. 35, by Vitezslav Novak, a composition of moderately modern character and not entirely free from German influence.

Oscar Nedbal, Furtwängler's predecessor with the Vienna Tonkünstler Orchestra and now a prominent figure in Rumanian musical affairs, has returned to Vienna after a long absence. He displayed the same old 'athletic' methods of conducting, but also the same sound musicianship. Selections from his own comic opera Peasant Jacob—a work strongly influenced by Puccini and even more by memories from Nedbal's own operettas—and an Overture to a Marionette Play by Jaromir Weinberger, were the novelties of his programmes. The last-named piece, written by the Czech composer at the age of seventeen, is a wittier and more clever counterpart to Korngold's ballet, The Snowman, with which it is contemporary.

NOVELTIES

Recently we have heard a number of new compositions belonging to the Korngold species of music, but it may justly be doubted whether Korngold is one of the composers of whom we may anticipate a lasting and real influence upon the present musical generation. Himself a composite of the elements predominant in Strauss and Puccini, he belongs to the family of younger composers who prefer to appeal to the ear rather than to the mind. This characteristic is true of the Marionette music mentioned above (although the Weinberger work is more piquant than Korngold's ballet) and, to an even greater degree, of the Children's Songs by Wilhelm Grosz, the young Viennese, which were brought to a first hearing, the composer conducting, by Stella Eisner. These songs, for all their craftsmanship, yet contain a certain flippancy, a quality that is disclosed, on re-hearing, by the works of Paul Hindemith, who created somewhat of a sensation with his String Quartet, Op. 16, at the Salzburg Chamber Music Festival. What was then acclaimed as a triumph of melody over atonalism, induced only an amazed disappointment when the Hindemith circle gave us a second opportunity for judging the work at a recent Vienna concert. This feeling became more pronounced when we heard Hindemith's Violoncello Sonata, Op. 11, a work brought forward by his brother, Rudolf—himself first 'cellist of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra—who played it in collaboration with Stella Wang. The Hindemith manner, not to say mannerism, is dazzling at first sight, but it does not wear well; there is about this music plenty of dash, but little substance. Hindemith's latest work, a String Quartet, Op. 22, heard here in a private production, is considerably less superficial than the more familiar Op. 16.

Chamber music novelties have recently been particularly numerous. Mary Dickenson-Auner, the Irish violinist resident here, who introduced Béla Bartók's now famous Violin Sonata last year, gave a concert entirely of novelties. Included in her programme were Four Canons of her own composition which afforded evidence of a thorough mastery of counterpoint, in Reger's style, and a Handel Passacaglia freely paraphrased by Halvorsen. Szymanowski's Mythes, reminiscent of Ravel, were interesting by virtue of the novel flageolet effects employed (they are in the nature of the quarter-tone system), but the most important work of the evening was the new Duo, hitherto unperformed, by Zoltán Kodály. It is for violin and violoncello, without accompaniment, and, like the previous works of this composer, commands attention by straightforwardness and virility as well as by forceful national colour. Heinrich Knödt, a Vienna composer who has recently joined the atonal school, was represented in the programme of the Fitzner Quartet with an earlier Violin Sonata which moves on more conventional lines and is particularly happy in its first movement.

The Chamber Orchestra Concerts inaugurated by Rudolf Nilius, with the assistance of an orchestra formed of Philharmonic players, have been resumed with a performance of Schönberg's Chamber Symphony which evoked the same protest on the part of some conservative hearers that it has met with on previous occasions. A Christmas Music for orchestra and soprano by Hans Ewald Heller, enlisting the services of a talented young English singer, Miss Marjorie Perkins, received its first performance on this occasion. Its success was chiefly due to its unaffected melodiousness.

Leo Sirota, the Polish pianist, gave a rather belated première of the effective Pianoforte Concerto, Op. 1, by Rachmaninov, which has recently undergone alteration. Paul de Conne, a Russian pianist long connected with Viennese musical affairs, offered, as a novelty, the Concerto in B flat by Serge Bortkiewicz, which derives from the French school and is half-way between César Franck and Debussy. The new Eroica Sonata by Vitezslav Novak, a grateful and noble composition, was presented for the first time by Helene Stein-Koch, a splendid new pianist, and a distinctly 'Regerian' Pianoforte Sonata in C minor by Adolf Busch, the favourite violinist, was the novelty in the programme of Rudolf Serkin, a former child-prodigy and now one of the most serious among our younger pianists.

Of violinists, the greatest success this month fell to Francis E. Aranyi, a Hungarian, whose tone is remarkably big and full, and who, despite a pitifully poor orchestral accompaniment, impressed with Sibelius's heretofore unknown and rather dry D minor Concerto. An interesting incident connected with Aranyi's visit was the first Vienna performance, before a circle of musical professionals, of the new Violin Sonata by Paul A. Pisk, an immensely difficult but highly individual composition which ought to have a public hearing here and elsewhere.

A singular personality among the German concert-givers is Ludwig Wüllner, who, after a long and varied career as an operatic and Lieder singer, and even as a conductor, has again returned to recitation. Byron's Manfred, with Schumann's somewhat insignificant incidental music, is one of his most popularly admired feats. The performance was under the conductorship of Paul von Klenau, who made the most of its limited musical possibilities. Klenau has recently directed a performance of Haydn's Creation which, particularly as regards the choral part of the production, ranks among the most brilliant efforts heard here in a decade.

The evenings of the Ellen Tels Ballet are deserving of mention. The work of this company of Russian refugees is admirable in its simplicity and plasticity, and is, happily, as free from antiquated tip-toe coloratura as it is from freakishness. A sensation has been caused also by the dance conceptions of Anita Berber. These are morbid and risqué to an unprecedented degree, and attracted the masses and the critical alike.

OPERATIC EVENTS

The Vienna Volksoper is just now preparing the première of Josef Holbrooke's opera The Children of Don as a preliminary for that Company's forthcoming tour of England. The Holbrooke opera, as well as the proposed English season, have proved a stumbling-block for Gruder Guntram, Weingartner's co-director at the Volksoper, who had closed contracts for this tour during Weingartner's absence in South America. On his return Weingartner, dissatisfied with Guntram's arrangements, ejected him from his post, and for a moment the English scheme seemed endangered. The difficulty is now overcome, and if the threatened breakdown of the Volksoper can be averted, the English tour will materialise after all.

At the Staatsoper, also, attendance has been very poor, in spite of greatly reduced prices, and a crisis seems imminent. For the moment the Government intends greatly to reduce the personnel, both of officials and singers, in order to ease a deficit which is now approximately forty million crowns a night.

PAUL BECHERT.

PARIS

Polyphème, by Jean Cras, a lyric play in four Acts on Albert Samain's well-known poem, has been produced at the Opéra-Comique. This composer was hitherto known by a small number of minor works, all of which evinced sensitiveness and taste as well as skill. The same qualities are manifest in his Polyphème. Indeed, it may be said that he did all that could be done with this curiously transformed and somewhat sugary version of the Polyphemus myth. Samain, probably, was never intended by nature to become a tragic poet. His conception of a Polyphemus who, conventionally remorseful because jealousy leads him very near to murdering Galatea, whom he loves, seeks atonement in self-inflicted blindness, is—to say the least of it—passing strange and unconvincing. But the composer has dealt with all the situations in a spirit of earnest conviction, which is often infectious, and colours the poet's puppets with genuine humanity. The leading parts were well impersonated by M. Vanni-Marcoux, Madame Balquerie, and Mlle. Roussel. Albert Wolff conducted.

There have been no performances of new works at the Sunday Symphony Concerts, and I was unable to hear or to get reports concerning the one orchestral novelty recently played by the Orchestre de Paris, a tone-poem Torquemada, by Robert Le Grand. But other concerts have provided plenty of occupation.

Paris has heard at last Stravinsky's Symphonies d'Instruments à Vent, splendidly performed by the Société Moderne d'Instruments à Vent, Ansermet conducting. And Paris—or at least that portion which crowded the Théâtre des Champs Élysées, indulged in no violent reaction. There was applause, but no wild demonstration of enthusiasm; there were a few hisses, but these were half-hearted and brief—nothing which could compare with the reception of the same work in London, or with that which had been meted out a few days before to Milhaud's Études for pianoforte and orchestra, conducted by Golschmann, with Robert Schmitz as soloist. The protests, and protests against protests, more than once covered the voices of the instruments, and while the fourth Étude was being played, it became impossible to hear anything of the music. As a whole these Études are a remorseless piece of leg-pulling—or, we may say, of dry caricature.

A. BOLD.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

ALBERT C. HUNTER, on December 28, at Richmond, Surrey, aged seventy-eight. He was one of the few surviving original members of the Royal Choral Society. An enthusiastic church chorister, he sang at St. Mary Magdalene's, Paddington, from 1876 (at which time Richard Redhead was organist) until his removal to Richmond in 1882, when he joined the choir at St. Matthias, Richmond.

He was afterwards associated with St. Alban's, Teddington. He was a member of Leslie's Choir and the Madrigal Society, and sang at the Coronations of King Edward and King George, acting as choir steward on each occasion. He had been a member of the Court of Assistants of the Worshipful Company of Musicians since 1903, serving in every office save that of Master. In his prime he was a tenor of exceptional ability.

MYLES BIRKET FOSTER, on December 18, at Bedford Park. He was a son of the well-known painter Birket Foster. Born on November 29, 1851, at St. John's Wood, he studied at the Royal Academy of Music under Sterndale Bennett, Macfarren, Sullivan, Prout, Westlake, &c. He was organist successively at St. James's, Marylebone, St. George's, Notting Hill Gate, and the Foundling Hospital, being at the last-named from 1880 to 1892, during which period he was also choirmaster at St. Alban's, Holborn, and organist at His Majesty's Theatre. He was a Fellow of the Royal Academy of Music, and of the Royal College of Organists, and examiner for Trinity College from 1888 until a few years ago. A prolific composer, he met with wide acceptance, especially in regard to Church music. As a writer on musical subjects, he is best known by his Anthems and Anthem Composers (1901) and his recently published History of the Philharmonic Society.

EDWARD BUNNETT, at Norwich, on January 5, aged eighty-eight. Few musicians have had so long an active career—he played the violin in public when only six years old, and gave an organ recital (at St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich) as recently as October last. He was born at Shipdham, near East Dereham, Norfolk, and was a pupil of the famous Zechariah Buck at Norwich Cathedral. While a chorister he had the honour of joining Jenny Lind and Sainton-Dolby in 'Lift thine eyes.' He took his Mus.B. at Cambridge in 1857, being the first candidate passed by Sterndale Bennett, and became Mus.D. in 1869. He was well known as a composer of church and organ music of a popular type, and in many quarters 'Bunnett in F' has long been regarded (like 'Jackson in F' a century ago) almost as part of the Establishment.

CHARLES FREDERICK DAVIES, at Cleveland, Ohio, on December 4. He was born at Kensington in 1844, and was a pupil of Gauntlett, G. B. Allen, and Lefebure-Wély. He was one of the earliest Fellows of the College of Organists, and was the first organist of St. Alban's, Holborn. In 1869 he went to Canada, on the recommendation of Richard Redhead, to become organist of St. James's, Montreal. He afterwards held other posts, his last one being at Detroit. In 1913 he founded the Windsor (Ont.) College of Liberal Arts, now a prosperous educational institution. (We are indebted to Mr. William Kitching, of Detroit, for this information.)

WILLIAM SAMUEL BAMBRIDGE, at Marlborough, on January 10, aged eighty. He was appointed organist of Marlborough College in 1864, and held the post until his retirement ten years ago. A prominent Freemason, he succeeded Dr. John Ivimey as Grand Organist of England in 1911. He belonged to a family of footballers, three of his brothers—E. H., E. C., and A. L.—having been internationals. Mr. Bambridge had been a member of the Marlborough Town Council for about forty years, and was twice Mayor.

The Rev. W. GARRETT HORDER, at Ealing, on December 19, in his eighty-second year. A noted hymnologist (who claimed to possess a copy of every hymn-book ever published), he edited Anthems, Ancient and Modern (1908) and the well-known hymnal, Worship Song; wrote The Hymn Lover: An Account of the Rise and Growth of English Hymnology; contributed many articles to Julian's Dictionary of Hymnology; and compiled various anthologies. He was also author of a number of theological works.

OSCAR W. STREET, on January 10. He succeeded his father as secretary of the Madrigal Society in 1908. The family have been connected with the Society since 1795, and during practically the whole of the past hundred and thirty years a Street has been either a librarian or secretary. Oscar Street was an excellent oboist, playing in the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society.

The Musical Society of Timaru, N.Z., gave a miscellaneous programme on October 22 under the direction of Mr. A. W. V. Vine. Included in it were Elgar's O happy eyes and Pinsuti's Good-night, good-night, beloved, and Sterndale Bennett's The May Queen, formed the second half.

The West Middlesex Musical Society will give a concert performance of Tom Jones at Ealing Town Hall on February 7, at 8.

Mr. Jeffrey Pulver is writing for Messrs. Kegan Paul a 'Dictionary of Old English Music,' which it is hoped will be published shortly.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BACH, J. S.—"Amser Duw—Goreu Yw" ("God's time is best"). Cantata No. 106. Welsh version by the REV. GWILYM WILLIAMS. Edited by E. T. DAVIES. 2s.

BROWN, D. CUTHBERT.—"Smilax." Pianoforte Solo. 1s. 6d.

FLETCHER, PERCY E. "The Passion of Christ." A Short Sacred Cantata. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

PASCOE, C. F.—"Lord, this House is all Thine own." Hymn. An abbreviated and simplified arrangement. 1½d.

ROOKE, B. WARBURTON. Vesper Hymn ("O our God most Holy"). On Card, 3d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 368, contains the following music in both notations.—"A Flower Chorus." Unison Song. By PERCY E. FLETCHER. 2d.

SHAW, GEOFFREY. Six Traditional Melodies. Arranged for Pianoforte Duet. 3s. (For Contents see page 92.)

—"Spring bursts to-day." Easter Carol. (No. 960, The Musical Times.) 2d.

SMITH, B. M. BRYAN. "The New Song" and "Memory." Two Songs. 2s.

STANFORD, C. V.—"Jesus Christ is risen to-day." Short Anthem for Easter. (No. 1104, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:

FLETCHER, PERCY E.—"The Passion of Christ." A Short Sacred Cantata. 2s.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2404. "Rejoice in the Lord." Anthem for Advent. JOHN REDFORD. 3d.

WEST, JOHN E.—Cathedral Organists Past and Present. A record of the succession of Organists. New and revised Edition. Cloth, 9s. net.

WOOD, FREDERIC H.—"The Spirit of Spring." A Part-song for S.A.T.B. 4d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

JAMES, PHILIP.—"O blest is He that cometh." Anthem for Advent, Palm Sunday, or General Use. 25 cents (1s.).

LUTKIN, P. C.—"Twas the night before Christmas." Cantata for Children's Voices. 50 cents (2s.).

O'NEILL, NORMAN. "Come away, death." Part-song for Mixed Voices. 10 cents (4d.).

—"Tell me where is fancy bred." Song. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

—"It was a lover and his lass." Song. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

SAMMOND, H. S.—"Night is like a gipsy maiden." Part-song for S.S.A.A. 20 cents (10d.).

WEST ACTON Parish Church.—WANTED at once, TENOR and BASS (Paid). One Practice, two Services. Good readers, and communicants, essential. Vicar, St Martin's Vicarage, Acton, W.3.

THE Organist of the Foundling has a VACANCY for a PUPIL-ASSISTANT. Apply by letter, Dr. Davan Wetton, 79, Pembroke Mansions, Bayswater, W.2.

CHRIST CHURCH, Westminster Bridge Road, S.E.

HAYDN'S ORATORIO

"THE CREATION"

WILL BE PERFORMED ON

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17TH, AT 3 P.M.

Conductor : MR. W. G. WEBBER, F.R.C.O.

Soloists : MISS VERA SIDDONS.

MR. JOSEPH CONGDON.

MR. LESLIE BURRAGE.

Organist - - MR. HERBERT HODGE.

ST. NICHOLAS COLE ABBEY,
112, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.

GOUNOD'S ORATORIO

"THE REDEMPTION"

(SELECTION)

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, AT 6.15 P.M.

Miss GERTRUDE DUNTHORNE

Miss GERTRUDE VIVIAN.

Miss PHYLLIS EVENNETT.

MR. SIDNEY POINTNER.

MR. KENNETH ELLIS.

Organist - - MR. HERBERT HODGE.

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE, Mile End Road, E.

ELGAR'S

"KING OLAF"

AND PARRY'S

"BLEST PAIR OF SIRENS"

WILL BE PERFORMED BY

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES

(300 performers),

SATURDAY, 3rd MARCH, at 7.30 p.m.

Miss DOROTHY ROBSON

MR. JOHN ADAMS.

MR. HOWARD FRY.

Organist - - MR. HERBERT HODGE.

Conductor - - MR. FRANK IDLE, F.R.A.M.

BASS and TENOR REQUIRED for Holy Trinity Church, West Hill, Wandsworth. Good readers and soloists Light duties. Residing S.W. district desirable. £16. G. H. Godwin, "Hampton," Sutherland Grove, S.W.18.

ST. BARNABAS, Kensington.—ALTO, TENOR, and BASS required (£16 to £20); also CHORUS SINGERS (£8 to £10). Write, Ewart Dartrey, 8, Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn, N.W.6.

TENOR REQUIRED, St. Simon's Church, near Sloane Square, Chelsea. £10. Light duties. Communicant. Write, "H. B.," 63, Oakley Street, S.W.3.

WANTED.—Male ALTO. Sunday Evening Service. Good reader. Remuneration £15 a year. Apply, Choirmaster, Royal Military Chapel, Wellington Barracks, S.W.1.

TENOR.—St. Thomas's, Regent Street, W. Catholic. £15. Able to sing occasional Solo. Write, R. H. Clifford Smith, 56, Red Post Hill, North Dulwich, S.E.24.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. Mary's, Bromley, Kent. Good executant, successful choir-trainer and disciplinarian. Tonic Sol-fa an advantage. Salary £100. Apply, The Vicar.

Musical Directors in Search of Something New should procure

ELKIN & CO.'S 'PIANO AND STRINGS' SERIES

A collection of good modern pieces in the lighter style, arranged for Piano, Two Violins, 'Cello, Double-Bass (optional).

- | | |
|---|--|
| 1. CARISSIMA Edward Elgar | 8. REVÊRIE Edward MacDowell |
| 2. ROSEMARY Edward Elgar | 9. DREAM CASTLES Brian Hope |
| 3. INTERMEZZO Cyril Scott | 10. NOCTURNETTE Brian Hope |
| 4. PASSACAGLIA Cyril Scott | 11. TWO EASTERN SONGS Agnes Mary Lang |
| 5. THREE LITTLE WALTZES, No. 1 Cyril Scott | 12. CORONACH Edgar Barratt |
| 6. THREE LITTLE WALTZES, No. 2 Cyril Scott | 13. MENUET ANTIQUE Robert Elkin |
| 7. VESPERALE Cyril Scott | 14. MOONLIGHT ON THE LAKE Roger Quilter |

(INTERMEZZO from "Where the Rainbow Ends.")

Price each 2s. net.

No fee or permission necessary for public performance.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

TO ALL CHORAL SOCIETIES AND CHOIRS.

A New Part-Song for Mixed Voices

THE HUNT CUP

OR

CHANTICLEER'S RACE.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

J. H. SMITHWHITE.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ROBERT F. JARMAN.

Price One Shilling.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE LORD IS GRACIOUS

UNACCOMPANIED QUARTET (S.A.T.B.) OR ANTHEM.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ROBERT F. JARMAN.

Price Twopence.

BANKS & SON, STONEGATE, YORK.

JOHN BLACKBURN, LTD.,

(ESTABLISHED 1885).

PUBLISHERS OF CHURCH MUSIC,

Invite Composers to submit MSS. of

SACRED CANTATAS, ANTHEMS, or GLEES.

Prompt payments for those accepted.

JOHN BLACKBURN, LTD.,

The Great Yorkshire Music Publishers,

188, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

CANTATAS, &c., BY J. S. BACH

IN THE

WELSH LANGUAGE.

JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE

(JESU DYRCHAFEDIG)

MOTET

WELSH TRANSLATION

BY

REV. GWILYM WILLIAMS, B.A.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

BIDE WITH US

(AROS DI GYDA NI)

CANTATA

WELSH TRANSLATION

BY

REV. GWILYM WILLIAMS, B.A.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

JUST PUBLISHED.

GOD'S TIME IS THE BEST

(AMSER DUW—GOREU YW)

CANTATA

WELSH TRANSLATION

BY

REV. GWILYM WILLIAMS, B.A.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR LENT.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Edited by EDWARD ELGAR and IVOR ATKINS. 5s.; paper boards, 7s.; cloth, gilt, 9s. Vocal Parts, 2s. each. Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 19s. per 100.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. 4s.; paper boards, 6s. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 19s. per 100.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Abridged, as used at St. Paul's Cathedral, 3s.; paper boards, 5s. Book of Words, with Music to the Chorales, 8d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. John.) J. S. BACH. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST. G. F. HANDEL. 6s.; paper boards, 8s.; cloth, gilt, 10s. Abridged edition for Church use, 2s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) J. HAYDN. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) CH. GOUNOD. 2s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ("Der Tod Jesu"). C. H. GRAUN. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s. Choruses only, 2s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. H. SCHÜTZ. 2s.

PASSION MUSIC (from the Oratorio "St. Peter"). By SIR JULIUS BENEDICT. 3s.

OUT OF DARKNESS. (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. GEORGE HENSCHEL (Op. 30). 5s.

OUT OF DARKNESS (De Profundis). (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Composed by CH. GOUNOD. English or Latin words. 2s.

ZION'S WAYS DO LANGUISH. Soprano Solo and Chorus, from "Gallia" (Motet). CH. GOUNOD. 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, &c., as sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, preceding Bach's Passion on Tuesday in Holy Week. Arranged by J. STAINER. 4d. Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The Music composed by J. BARNEY. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Set to the well-known Ancient Chant, as arranged and harmonised by VINCENT NOVELLO. Price 3d.; Ditto, Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. (Chant Setting.) The Music composed by EDGAR PETTMAN. Price 2d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by GREGORIO ALLEGRI. As used at St. Paul's Cathedral Lenten Services. Edited by GEORGE C. MARTIN. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by G. P. DA PALESTRINA. Edited by W. BARCLAY SQUIRE. Latin and English words. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F sharp minor. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words, 8d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. A simple Unison Arrangement with Organ Accompaniment, 1½d. *Orchestral Parts of the works marked * can be had.*

THE BENEDICITE SET TO MUSIC BY THE FOLLOWING COMPOSERS.

ADLAM, FRANK (in F, Chant Form)	2d.
BAIRSTOW, E. C. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter)	4d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in E flat)	2d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in G)	2d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in D, Unison)	4d.
BEST, W. T. (in C). (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	4d.
BLAIR, HUGH (in G)	2d.
BRIDGE, J. F., JAMES TURLE, and HAYES	2d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT (in D)	2d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT (Shortened Form)	2d.
COBB, G. F. (in G)	3d.
COULDREY, H. R. (Chant in G)	4d.
COULDREY, H. R. (in D, Chant Form)	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	3d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	6d.
ELLIOTT, M. B. (in G)	2d.
ELLIOTT, R. B. (in G)	2d.
EYRE, ALFRED J. (in E flat)	3d.
EYRE, ALFRED J. (No. 2, in F)	2d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (in F, Chant Form)	6d.
FROST, PERCY H. (in D)	3d.
GADSBY, HENRY (in G, Chant Form)	2d.
GALE, C. R. (in D)	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in C, Chant Form)	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in G, Unison)	2d.
GODFREY, A. E. (in C)	4d.
GODFREY, A. E. (No. 2, in G)	4d.
H. B. C. (Three Chants)	2d.
HERVEY, F. A. J. (in A flat, Chant Form)	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in E flat)	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in D)	2d.
HUGHES, W. (in E flat)	2d.
ILIFFE, FREDERICK (No. 1, in E flat, Chant Form)	2d.
LEMAIRE, E. H. (in B flat)	4d.
LOYD C. HARFORD (in E flat, Chant Form)	3d.
LUCAS, P. T. (in A flat, shortened form)	2d.
MACPHERSON, CHARLES (in F, rhythmic setting)	6d.
MARTIN, G. C. (No. 1, in F; No. 2, in E flat; No. 3, in G) each	6d.
MATTHEWS, T. R. (in E flat)	2d.
MERBECKE (arranged by GEORGE C. MARTIN)	2d.
MILLER, C. E. (second setting) (in G, Chant Form)	3d.
PETTMAN, EDGAR (No. 1, in C; No. 2, set to Double Chants)	3d.
PETTMAN, EDGAR (in E flat)	2d.
PULLEIN, J. (in E flat)	1½d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (in B flat)	6d.
SLATER, W. (in F)	2d.
SMITH, BOYTON (in A flat)	2d.
SMITH, CHAS. W. (in C). S.A.T.T.B., also simplified for S.A.T.B.	3d.
STAINER, J., and B. BLAXLAND (in F, Chant Form)	2d.
STAINER, J., R. DE LACY, A. GIBBS, and F. CHAMPNEYS	2d.
STAINER, J., W. WINN, and F. WALKER	2d.
Ditto (Welsh words). (Sol-fa, 1d.)	2d.
STAINER, J., J. TURLE, and H. S. IRONS	3d.
STAINER, J. (in D, Chant Form)	2d.
STEWART, C. HYLTON (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter)	4d.
BARNBY, J.	2d.
FOSTER, JOHN	2d.
SMITH, MONTEM (two settings)	2d.
TURLE, J. (two settings)	2d.
WICKES, C. A. (two settings)	2d.
TOZER, FERRIS (in G)	3d.
TOZER, FERRIS (in A). Short and simple	3d.
WEST, JOHN E. (in G)	6d.
WEST, JOHN E. (in C)	2d.
WESTBURY, G. H. (in C)	2d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (in D) (Shortened Form)	2d.
WOOD, W. G. (in D)	2d.
WRIGLEY, G. F. (in G, Quadruple Chant)	2d.

THE STORY OF THE CROSS

FOR VOICES AND ORGAN

With Short Interludes, giving opportunity for Meditation.

THE WORDS BY
THE REV. E. MONRO
SET TO MUSIC BY

BUTTON, H. ELLIOT	3d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	4d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	4d.
SOMERVELL, ARTHUR (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	4d.
STAINER, J. (Sol-fa, 1½d.) (also with Welsh words)	4d.
Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100.
Large Type Edition, 2s. 6d. per 100.

THE REPROACHES

SET TO MUSIC BY

DYKES, REV. J. B.	4d.
GOUNOD, CH.	3d.
HOYTE, W. S.	6d.
PALESTRINA (together with the proper plain-chant melodies)	6d.
(Edited by W. S. Vale)	6d.
SPENCE, REV. H. (for singing in Unison or Harmony)	2d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (Double Choir) (unaccompanied)	4d.

THE OFFICE OF "TENEBRÆ"

AND

DIRECTIONS FOR SINGING

"THE PASSION"

FOR USE IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND

EDITED BY

CYRIL W. MILLER.

Price Two Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

THE PASSION A MEDITATION

ON THE
SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST
FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS

BY
J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s. Words, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Words only, 1½d.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)
FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA
COMPOSED BY

ANTON DVORÁK.
(Op. 58.)

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY FRED. J. W. CROWE.

Price Five Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 3s. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100. Vocal parts, 1s. each.
Full Score and Orchestral Parts on hire.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED
WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s. Tonic Sol-fa, 2s.
String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. Full Score, MS.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR
SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS SELECTED, AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED, BY

HAROLD MOORE.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. Strings parts, 9s. 6d.
Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s. String Parts, 15s. 6d.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR

TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

THE CRUCIFIXION A MEDITATION

ON THE

SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON

SET TO MUSIC BY

J. STAINER.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.
Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100. Words of Hymns, 6s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

FOR USE DURING THE SEASON OF LENT, AND ON GOOD FRIDAY, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY CHOIRS

BY

E. V. HALL.

Price Tenpence.

Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, with Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY

VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FERRIS TOZER.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

VIA DOLOROSA

A DEVOTION

FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS

SUITABLE FOR THE SEASONS OF LENT AND PASSIONTIDE

THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Three Shillings.

Paper boards, 5s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

A SHORT SACRED CANTATA

FOR LENTEN OR EASTER SERVICES, OR FOR GENERAL USE.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

MARY BRADFORD WHITING

(AFTER METASTASIO.)

THE MUSIC COMPOSED FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS, WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER

PRICE - - - THREE SHILLINGS.

Paper Boards, 5s. ; Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. ; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

String Parts, 12s. (in the Press) ; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SUCCESSFUL PERFORMANCES of this Devotional work have taken place at the University Church, Oxford; SS. Philip and James, Oxford; the Abbey Church, Bath; St. Mary's, Liverpool; the Parish Church, Bradford, Nuneaton, Southsea, Banbury, Chipping Norton, Kidderminster, Biggleswade, Kettering, Oldham, Tackley, Blackburn, Adderbury; St. Paul's, Weston-super-Mare, Bideford, Oldham (Australia), &c.

VIA CRUCIS

(THE WAY OF THE CROSS)

(8TH EDITION)

A SACRED CANTATA

DEPICTING THE THREE LAST SCENES OF

THE SAVIOUR'S LIFE ON EARTH

FOR

TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS.

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Choir and Congregation.THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FREDERICK ILIFFE, M.A.,

Mus. Doc., Oxon. ; Organist to the University of Oxford.

PRICE:

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. net. Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 1s. 4d. net.

Words only, complete, for the use of Congregation, 1½d. each, or 11s. 3d. per 100.Words complete, with addition of Hymn Tunes, 3d. each, or 22s. 6d. per 100.Orchestral Parts, for Strings, Two Horns, Two Trumpets, and Drums may be hired of the Publishers.

LONDON: A. WEEKES & Co., LTD.,

14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W. 1.

COMPOSITIONS BY

ALBERT HAM, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

"The Solitudes of the Passion"

A PASSIONTIDE CANTATA

For Solo Voices (Tenor and Baritone) and Chorus
With Hymns for Choir and Congregation.

Price 2s. 6d.

Musical Times: "A useful addition to the store of Choral Works for use in Lent and Passiontide, is Dr. Albert Ham's Cantata, 'The Solitudes of the Passion.' The words are Biblical and well-selected. The music is devotional and very singable."

SECOND EDITION.

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY

Price Five Shillings.

Extract from Musical Times, July, 1921:

"Dr. Albert Ham, a well-known English musician, who has for some years past figured prominently in the musical life of Toronto, Canada, has issued under one cover 'The Rudiments of Music and Elementary Harmony' (Novello). The plan and arrangement of the various sections differ in some respects from many other text-books, and the author 'has striven to deal particularly with those special points which, in his many years of teaching, he has found to be the bête noir of most students.' As a result the chapters on Time and Intervals will be found especially helpful. An Addendum gives some useful hints and suggestions on adding bar-lines and time- and key-signatures to a given melody. The section on Harmony takes the student as far as the dominant seventh, and includes chapters on modulation and the harmonization of simple melodies. Some useful test-papers are also provided. Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."

Part-Song for S.A.T.B. Price 3d.

"MUSIC, WHEN SOFT VOICES DIE."

Words by SHELLEY.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."

Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity"
Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value,"
Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing."

Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.

Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 4s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W. 1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

O LAMB OF GOD.

FOR T. and B. SOLI.

From R. WALKER ROBSON'S

COMMUNION SERVICE IN F, forms an excellent Prelude to The Crucifixion.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW PUBLICATIONS IN THE YORK SERIES.

809.	COMMUNION SERVICE, B minor ...	Arthur Henry Brown	6d.
813.	MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, B minor	Arthur Henry Brown	4d.
815.	MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, B flat	C. W. Parnell	6d.
816.	LIGHT (S.A.T.B.) ...	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
817.	TO MY LOVE (T.T.B.B.) ...	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
818.	WHEN I AM DEAD (S.A.T.B.) ...	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
819.	SAVE US, LORD, OR WE PERISH (S.A.T.B.)	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
820.	Ditto (T.T.B.B.)	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
821.	BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD (S.A.T.B.)	T. Tertius Noble	5d.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

Performed at the Leeds Musical Festival.

ODE TO DEATH.

POEM BY

WALT WHITMAN.

SET TO MUSIC FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

(Op. 38).

Price, One Shilling and Sixpence.

String Parts, 3s. 4d. Full Score and Wind Parts on hire.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

EASTER MUSIC.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise marked.

LENT.

ANTHEMS, Etc.

Great Day of the Lord (S. Solo) ...	J. Stuart Archer, 85244	3d.
O Saviour of the World (A.T.B.) ...	G. E. Ryley, 85109	4d.
*Cross of Calvary (Passion) ...	A. Redhead, 85177	2d.
*Passion of Jesus ...	Dr. Vincent, 85030	4d.
*Teachings of the Cross ...	Dr. Vincent, 85160	3d.

CANTATAS, Etc

By THE CROSS ...	F. N. Baxter, 85144	6d.
Church Cantata for T. and B. Solos, Quartet, and Chorus.
CALVARY ...	L. H. Fowles, 15102	2s.
Church Cantata for T. and B. Solos, Quartet, and Chorus.
DE PROFUNDIS ...	G. C. Richardson, 15055	2s.
Sacred Cantata for T. Solo, Quartet, and Chorus.
ST. MATTHEW PASSION... ..	Bach, 15154	3s.
Combined O.N. and T.S.F. edition.

EASTER.

ANTHEMS, Etc.

Alleluia! Alleluia! ...	Dr. Vincent, 85016	3d.
Christ both Died and Rose ...	F. C. Woods, 85161	4d.
Christ is Risen ...	B. Johnson, 85190	2d.
Christ is Risen ...	Dr. Vincent, 85104	4d.
I know that My Redeemer Lives ...	Dr. Vincent, 85031	4d.
Now Dawning Glows the Day ...	J. Stuart Archer, 85245	3d.
*Resurrection Morn, The (S. Solo) ...	Dr. Vincent, 85045	4d.
They have taken away My Lord ...	W. C. Filby, 85113	4d.
To Thee and to Thy Christ (Short) ...	H. E. Watts, 85194	3d.
Very Early in the Morning ...	Dr. Vincent, 85017	4d.

* Words only also published.

Of all Music Dealers, or, if offer No. 17 is mentioned, post free from:

PAXTON'S: LONDON, 22, HIGH STREET,
NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.2.

Send for complete Catalogue, (C. 201), post free.
Any of the above may be seen through our "On Approval" Dept.

By ALFRED H. ALLEN

Organist Collegiate Church of The Holy Trinity, Stratford-upon-Avon.

SONATA FOR ORGAN.

Half-a-Crown net.

MOTET FOR CHORUS AND ORGAN.

"Blessed are they that mourn."

Sixpence net.

HYMN FOR THE DEPARTED.

Sixpence net.

Essay, with Foreword by Sir W. H. HADOW, C.B.E.
FROM THE ORGAN LOFT.

Half-a-Crown net.

LONDON: STAINER & BELL, LIMITED.

OXFORD: BASIL BLACKWELL.

ORGAN MUSIC

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

No.		s.	d.
1.	DITHYRAMB ...	2	6
2.	COMMUNION ...	1	0
3.	INTERLUDE ...	1	6
4.	PÆAN ...	3	6
5.	SHORT POSTLUDE ...	1	0
6.	REQUIEM ÆTERNAM ...	2	3
7.	ANDANTE TRANQUILLO ...	1	6
8.	CAPRICCIO ...	2	6
9.	TWO SKETCHES ...	1	6
10.	CONCERTO IN D MAJOR ...	3	0
11.	THREE CATHEDRAL PRELUDES ...	3	0
12.	SONATA No. 2, IN F SHARP MINOR ...	3	0
13.	FANTASIA "CHRISTMASTIDE" ...	3	6
14.	RHAPSODY ...	3	0

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

EASTER ANTHEMS.

*Above all praise and all majesty	Mendelssohn	2d.	*Know ye not	Edward C. Bairstow	2d.
*Alleluia! now is Christ risen	T. Adams	4d.	Let God arise	M. Greene	8d.
*Alleluia! the Lord liveth	Cuthbert Harris	4d.	Light's glittering morn	John E. West	6d.
*All hail, dear Conqueror	T. Adams	2d.	Lord, before Thy footstool bending	Spohr	4d.
*All men, all things	Mendelssohn	3d.	Lord Christ! when Thou hadst overcome	Haydn	2d.
As Christ was raised	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	*Lord, Thy arm hath been uplifted	Spohr	3d.
As Christ was raised	H. W. Wareing	4d.	Lo! the winter is past	*B. Farebrother and H. Gadsby, ea.	4d.
As it began to dawn	M. B. Foster	2d.	Lo! the winter is past	B. Luard-Selby	2d.
As it began to dawn	C. Vincent	4d.	Magnify His Name	G. C. Martin	6d.
As Moses lifted up the serpent	F. Gostelow	4d.	Morn's roseate hues	G. W. Chadwick	4d.
As we have borne... ..	J. Barnby	2d.	*Most glorious Lord of Life	John E. West	2d.
*At the Lamb's high feast	E. V. Hall	4d.	*My beloved is mine	*R. Walker Robson	4d.
At the Sepulchre... ..	H. W. Wareing	6d.	My beloved spake... ..	H. Purcell	8d.
*Awake, awake, with holy rapture sing	John E. West	4d.	My heart is fixed, O God	W. A. C. Cruickshank	6d.
*Awake, thou that sleepest	J. Stainer	8d.	My heart was glad	A. Carnall	6d.
Awake up, my glory	*J. Barnby and B. Haynes, ea.	2d.	Not unto us, O Lord	H. Gadsby	8d.
Awake up, my glory	F. Iliffe	3d.	*Not unto us, O Lord	T. A. Walmisley	2d.
Awake up, my glory	M. Wise	4d.	Not unto us, O Lord	John E. West	6d.
*Be glad, O ye righteous... ..	H. Smart	6d.	*Now dawning glows the day of days	David Stanley Smith	2d.
*Be glad then, ye children	Alfred Hollins	2d.	*Now Christ is risen	G. B. Allen and John E. West, ea.	2d.
*Behold, the Angel of the Lord... ..	B. Tours	2d.	Now is come Salvation	Percy E. Fletcher	4d.
*Behold the Lamb—All glory to the Lamb	Spohr	2d.	*Now late on the Sabbath Day	S. Coleridge-Taylor	4d.
*Blessed be the God and Father	S. S. Wesley	3d.	*Now on the first day of the week	H. Lahee	2d.
*Blessed be Thou	Kent	6d.	O clap your hands	M. Greene	6d.
Blessing and glory	Boyce	2d.	O clap your hands	J. Stainer	8d.
*Blessing, glory	B. Tours	6d.	O clap your hands (s.s.a.)	E. H. Thorne	8d.
*Break forth into joy	J. Barnby	2d.	O clap your hands	T. T. Trimmell	4d.
*Break forth into joy	T. R. Prentice	8d.	*O come, let us sing	M. B. Foster	4d.
*Break forth into joy	B. Steane	4d.	*O death, where is thy sting?	A. Herbert Brewer	2d.
*Christ being raised from the dead	G. J. Elvey	2d.	*O death, where is thy sting?	Alfred Hollins	6d.
Christ being raised from the dead	S. Webbe	2d.	*O give thanks	J. Goss	4d.
Christ both died and rose	E. W. Naylor	4d.	O give thanks	S. S. Wesley	6d.
Christ is risen	J. M. Crament and G. B. J. Aitken, ea.	4d.	O give thanks to the Lord	H. J. King	4d.
Christ is risen	G. J. Elvey	2d.	O give thanks unto the Lord	W. Wolstenholme	2d.
Christ is risen	Warwick Jordan	6d.	O Lord, from Whom all good things do come	John E. West	3d.
Christ is risen	E. H. Thorne	2d.	O sing unto the Lord	J. Varley Roberts	4d.
Christ is risen	J. V. Roberts and E. A. Sydenham, ea.	4d.	*O Sons and Daughters, let us sing	H. A. Chambers	2d.
Christ our Passover	*J. Goss and O. King, ea.	2d.	*O voice of the Beloved	Henry John King	4d.
Christ our Passover	E. V. Hall	4d.	*On the first day of the week	E. M. Lott	2d.
Christ our Passover	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	*Open me the gates of righteousness	Myles B. Foster	2d.
Christ our Passover	B. Tours	2d.	*Open me the gates	F. Adlam	6d.
Christ the Lord is risen again	E. V. Hall	6d.	*Praise His awful Name	Spohr	3d.
Christ the Lord is risen to-day	E. V. Hall	4d.	Praise Jehovah	Mendelssohn	6d.
*Christ was delivered for our offences	C. H. Lloyd	2d.	Praise the Lord, ye servants	B. Steane	4d.
*Come, let us join our cheerful songs	E. V. Hall	4d.	*Rejoice in the Lord	*J. B. Calkin and G. J. Elvey, ea.	2d.
*Come with high and holy gladness	Hugh Blair	4d.	Rejoice in the Lord	G. C. Martin	8d.
*Come, ye faithful, raise the anthem	E. V. Hall	4d.	*Sing praises unto the Lord	W. A. C. Cruickshank	8d.
*Come, ye faithful, raise the strain	E. V. Hall	4d.	*Sing praises unto the Lord	G. Gounod	8d.
*Come, ye Saints (s.a.t.b.)	H. Elliot Button	2d.	Sing to the Lord	Mendelssohn	10d.
*Come, ye Saints (Unison)	H. Elliot Button	4d.	*Sing ye to the Lord	E. C. Bairstow and C. Harford Lloyd, ea.	4d.
*Death is swallowed up in victory	Alfred Hollins	4d.	Ten thousand times ten thousand	E. Vine Hall	4d.
*Far be sorrow, tears, and sighing	E. V. Hall	4d.	Ten thousand times ten thousand	Ferris Tozer	6d.
For it became Him	Oliver King	2d.	Thanks be to God	J. W. Gritton and Oliver King, ea.	4d.
For us the Christ	Ch. Gounod	3d.	*The Day of Resurrection	E. Vine Hall	4d.
*From Thy love as a Father	Ch. Gounod	2d.	*The end of the Sabbath	A. Carnall	2d.
Give thanks unto God	Spohr	6d.	*The first day of the week	B. Steane	4d.
*God hath appointed a day	B. Tours	2d.	*The Lord hath brought us	E. H. Thorne	2d.
*God, Who is rich in mercy	G. M. Garrett	6d.	*The Lord hath done great things	H. Smart	6d.
*Great is the Lord	Hayes	6d.	*The Lord is King... ..	J. Pittman	2d.
*Hallelujah!	Handel	4d.	*The Lord is King	T. T. Trimmell	2d.
*Hallelujah! Christ is risen	B. Steane	2d.	*The Lord is my strength	S. Coleridge-Taylor	4d.
Hearken unto Me... ..	M. B. Foster	4d.	*The Lord is my strength	W. H. Monk and V. Novello, ea.	2d.
*He is risen	H. Gadsby	2d.	*The Lord is my strength	H. Smart	2d.
*He shall swallow up death in Victory	F. R. Greenish	4d.	*The Lord is risen	G. M. Garrett	6d.
He that spared not His own Son	F. E. Gladstone	4d.	*The Lord is risen again... ..	B. Luard-Selby	4d.
*He that spared not His Son	W. G. Alcock	2d.	*The Lord liveth	A. W. Marchant	4d.
He will swallow up death in Victory	Wesley	2d.	*The Lord omnipotent reigneth	Thomas Adams	6d.
I am He that liveth	T. Adams	6d.	The promise which was made... ..	Ed. C. Bairstow	6d.
*I am the Resurrection	Roland Rogers	6d.	*The strain upraise	A. Sullivan	2d.
I declare to you the Gospel	W. A. C. Cruickshank	6d.	*The strife is o'er, the battle done	B. Luard-Selby	2d.
If Christ be not raised	Charles Macpherson	6d.	*The strife is o'er, the battle done	G. Rathbone	4d.
*If we believe that Jesus died	B. Luard-Selby and J. Goss, ea.	2d.	*The strife is o'er	B. Steane	2d.
If we believe that Jesus died	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	*They have taken away my Lord	J. Stainer	2d.
*If ye then be risen with Christ	M. Vinden	6d.	*This is the day	S. C. Cooke, Basil Harwood, & J. H. Maunder, ea.	4d.
If ye then be risen with Christ (Two-part)	Ivor Atkins	6d.	*This is the day	E. H. Lemare and E. V. Hall, ea.	6d.
*If ye then be risen with Christ	M. B. Foster	4d.	*This is the day	G. A. Macfarren and *J. Sewell, ea.	3d.
If ye then be risen with Christ	H. M. Higgs	6d.	*This is the day	A. W. Marchant	4d.
If ye then be risen (Two-part)	J. Naylor	2d.	*This is the day	*J. H. Maunder and J. Turle, ea.	4d.
*I heard a great voice	F. W. Wadely	2d.	*Tis the spring of souls to-day (Cantata)	E. H. Lemare, ts. 16d.
I will always give thanks	G. F. Cobb	6d.	*Unto the Paschal Victim bring... ..	John E. West	2d.
I will always give thanks	J. B. Calkin	6d.	*Upon the first day of the week... ..	Myles B. Foster	2d.
I will extol Thee	J. Clarke-Whitfield	6d.	When Christ, who is our life, shall appear... ..	J. V. Roberts	3d.
I will go unto the Altar of God	C. M. Hudson	6d.	When my soul fainted within me	J. F. Bridge	2d.
I will greatly rejoice	C. Harris	6d.	*When the Sabbath was past	M. B. Foster	2d.
I will love Thee, O Lord	W. A. C. Cruickshank	4d.	*Who is like unto Thee?... ..	A. Sullivan	8d.
I will magnify Thee	M. Kingston	6d.	*Who shall roll us away the stone?	G. W. Torrance	2d.
I will magnify Thee	*J. B. Calkin and W. H. Bell, ea.	6d.	*Why rage fiercely the heathen?	Mendelssohn	8d.
I will magnify Thee	E. M. Lee	4d.	Why seek ye the living?	A. Hollins and A. Alexander, ea.	4d.
I will mention	B. Luard-Selby	4d.	Why seek ye the living? (Two-part)	M. B. Foster	2d.
I will sing of Thy power	A. Sullivan	8d.	Why seek ye the living?	E. J. Hopkins	2d.
I will sing of Thy power	M. Greene	6d.	Worthy the Lamb—Hallelujah!	F. Peel	6d.
*Jesus Christ is risen to-day Alfred R. Gaul and Oliver King, ea.	A. Sullivan	2d.	*Worthy is the Lamb	Crotch	4d.
Jesus Christ is risen to-day	C. V. Stanford	4d.	*Worthy is the Lamb	J. F. Barnett	2d.
*Jesus lives... ..	Myles B. Foster	4d.	Worthy is the Lamb	Handel	3d.
				E. H. Thorne	4d.

Anthems marked thus * to be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1st, 2^d, and 3^d. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NONSENSE SONGS

MUSIC BY

STANLEY MARCHANT.

WORDS AND ILLUSTRATIONS BY

HUGH CHESTERMAN.

Price Five Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SONGS OF LOVE

(LIEBESLIEDER)

WALTZES

FOR PIANOFORTE DUET

(with Voices ad lib.)

THE ENGLISH WORDS BY

W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY

JOHANNES BRAHMS.

(Op. 52.)

Vocal Part, 2s.

Edition for Pianoforte Duet, 8s. Orchestral Parts (MS.) on hire.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HOMAGE TO HANDEL

54 STUDIES IN VARIATION FORM

FOR ORGAN

ON A GROUND BASS OF

HANDEL

BY

SIGFRID KARG-ELERT

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s. d.
72. LAMENT	J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
73. ELEGIAC PRELUDE	G. J. Bennett	2 3
74. CRADLE SONG	R. G. Hailing	1 6
75. CHORALE FANTASIA ON "HEINLEIN" ...	J. E. Wallace	3 0
76. TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer")	C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
77. ANDANTE RELIGIOSO	Alec Rowley	1 6
78. SCHERZO	G. J. Bennett	2 3
79. THREE PRELUDES	G. J. Bennett	2 3
80. DÉSESPOIR	Ch. Quef	1 6
81. CAPRICE IN D FLAT	J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
82. THREE PSALM-PRELUDES, No. 1	H. Howells	1 6
83. " " " No. 2	H. Howells	1 6
84. " " " No. 3	H. Howells	1 6
85. THEMA OSTINATA... ..	C. C. Palmer	1 6
86. COVENANTERS' MARCH	R. G. Hailing	1 6
87. CHORAL MELODY... ..	C. F. Waters	1 6
88. CONCERT OVERTURE IN F MINOR ...	Alfred Hollins	3 0
89. HOMAGE TO HANDEL	S. Karg-Elert	3 6
90. THREE SHORT AND EASY POSTLUDES (2nd Set)	F. W. Wadely	2 3

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

CATHEDRAL ORGANISTS

PAST AND PRESENT.

A RECORD OF THE SUCCESSION OF ORGANISTS

OF THE

Cathedrals, Chapels Royal, and Principal Collegiate
Churches of the United Kingdom, from about the period of the Reformation until the present day.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES, EXTRACTS FROM THE CHAPTER BOOKS, ANECDOTES, Etc.

By JOHN E. WEST.

Price ... Nine Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH. CLOTH, TEN SHILLINGS EACH.

No.	No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 4.	No. 5.	No. 6.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).	No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1.	Interlude	Th. Dubois	1.	Nocturne	Thomas F. Dunhill	1.	Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26)	Beethoven
2.	Chanson de Matin	Edward Elgar	2.	Melody	William Faulkes	2.	Blest are they that mourn (Requiem)	Brahms
3.	Fantasia on the old melody "Urbs Beata"	W. Faulkes	3.	Serenade	H. M. Higgs	3.	Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35)	Chopin
4.	There is a green hill far away	Ch. Gounod	4.	Bridal March	Alfred Hollins	4.	Funeral March	William Faulkes
5.	Marche Triomphale	Alexandre Guilmant	5.	Berceuse	Edwin H. Lemare	5.	Funeral March ("Saul")	Handel
6.	Ave Maria	A. Henselt	6.	Melodie in E	S. Rachmaninoff	6.	I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah")	Handel
7.	Grand Cœur No. 2	Alfred Hollins	7.	Aubade	A. Strelezki	7.	Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte")	Mendelssohn
8.	Andantino in D flat	Edwin H. Lemare	8.	Nocturne in C sharp minor	P. Tschalkowsky	8.	O rest in the Lord ("Elijah")	Mendelssohn
9.	Chanson Triste	P. Tschalkowsky	9.	Procession to the Minster ("Lohengrin")	R. Wagner	9.	Marche Solennelle	Schubert
10.	Prelude to "Lohengrin," Act I.	R. Wagner	10.	Fantasia upon the Plain-song Melody "Ad cenam Agni"	Healey Willan	10.	Marche Funèbre	Tschalkowsky
11.	Romanza	W. Wolstenholme	11.	Allegretto in A flat	W. Wolstenholme	11.	Finale from "Symphonie Pathétique"	Tschalkowsky
12.	Allegretto in E flat	W. Wolstenholme	12.			12.	Lament	John E. West
1.	Chanson de Nuit	Edward Elgar	1.	Arietta	S. Coleridge-Taylor	1.	Chorale Prelude, "In dulci júbilo"	J. S. Bach
2.	Alla Marcia	Myles B. Foster	2.	Souvenir de Printemps	Joseph Holbrooke	2.	Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio")	J. S. Bach
3.	Minuetto	Alexandre Guilmant	3.	Andante in D	Alfred Hollins	3.	Quem Vidistis, Pastores	W. T. Best
4.	Lied	H. Hofmann	4.	Pavane in A	Bernard Johnson	4.	Venite in Bethlehem	W. T. Best
5.	Barcarolle	H. Hofmann	5.	Harmonies du Soir	Sigfrid Karg-Elert	5.	December—Christmas Morn	Frederic H. Cowen
6.	Spring Song	Alfred Hollins	6.	An Eton Memorial March	C. H. Lloyd	6.	Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols	William Faulkes
7.	The Curfew	Edward J. Horsman	7.	Allegro alla Marcia	A. L. Peace	7.	For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah")	Handel
8.	Pastorale in E	Edwin H. Lemare	8.	Visione	J. Rheinberger	8.	Pastorale	Theodore Kullak
9.	Ave Maria d'Arcadelt	Franz Liszt	9.	Chant sans Paroles	P. Tschalkowsky	9.	Chorus of Shepherds	J. Lemmens
10.	Cantique d'Amour	Theo. Wendt	10.	Prelude to Act III. ("Die Meistersinger")	R. Wagner	10.	Christmas Pastoral	Gustav Merkel
11.	The Seraph's Strain	W. Wolstenholme	11.	Allegro Pomposo	John E. West	11.	A Christmas Pastoral	B. Luard-Selby
12.	Le Carillon	W. Wolstenholme	12.	Canzona	W. Wolstenholme	12.	Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.")	John E. West

SHORT PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

These Short Preludes are intended for use chiefly as Introductory Voluntaries to Divine Service, more especially in those churches where the time allowed for such is, of necessity, somewhat limited.

No.	Book I.		No.	Book IV.
1.	Andante Grazioso	Thomas Adams	1.	"Elevation"—Andante e Legato	Thomas Adams
2.	Andante	W. G. Alcock	2.	Andante Religioso	Myles B. Foster
3.	Largamente	George J. Bennett	3.	"Simplicity"—Andante	Barry M. Gilholy
4.	Andante Religioso	Myles B. Foster	4.	Largamente	R. G. Hailing
5.	Andantino	Alfred Hollins	5.	"Dialogue"—Andante Grazioso	Charles H. Lloyd
6.	Adagio Cantabile	Alfred Hollins	6.	Andantino	Arthur W. Marchant
7.	Larghetto	Charles J. May	7.	Con Moto Moderato	William Sewell
8.	Andante con Moto	John E. West	8.	Andante Amabile	William Sewell
9.	Andantino quasi Allegretto	John E. West	9.	Andante	Clement M. Spurling
10.	Andante	W. Wolstenholme	10.	Andante Sostenuto	F. Cunningham Woods
Book II.			Book V.
1.	Andante con Moto	Thomas Adams	1.	"Invocation"—Andante Grazioso	Thomas Adams
2.	Con Moto	W. G. Alcock	2.	Andante con Moto	Percy E. Fletcher
3.	Moderato	H. A. Chambers	3.	Poco Adagio	Myles B. Foster
4.	Marziale, poco Lento	Myles B. Foster	4.	Andante Espressivo	Ignace Gibsons
5.	Moderato	Alfred Hollins	5.	Adagio	Alfred Hollins
6.	Andantino	Alfred Hollins	6.	Poco Lento	Charles H. Lloyd
7.	Adagio	Charles J. May	7.	Andante Dolente	Arthur W. Marchant
8.	"Hymnus"—Andante e Sostenuto	John E. West	8.	Andantino con Tenerezza	William Sewell
9.	Andante Serioso	John E. West	9.	Andante con Moto	Clement M. Spurling
10.	Adagio	W. Wolstenholme	10.	Adagio Molto	F. Cunningham Woods
Book III.			Book VI.
1.	Moderato e Legato	Thomas Adams	1.	Dolente	Edmund T. Chipp
2.	Moderato	W. G. Alcock	2.	Andante Sostenuto	Myles B. Foster
3.	Andante con Moto	George J. Bennett	3.	Andantino	R. G. Hailing
4.	Andante	H. A. Chambers	4.	Con Moto	Alfred Hollins
5.	Grazioso molto Espressivo	Myles B. Foster	5.	"Communion"—Cantabile	J. Lemmens
6.	"Song without Words"—Con Moto	Alfred Hollins	6.	Andante Religioso	Arthur W. Marchant
7.	Andante	Alfred Hollins	7.	Lento	Charles J. May
8.	Andante Dolente	John E. West	8.	Larghetto	Albert Robins
9.	Andante Pastorale	John E. West	9.	Adagio e Mesto	William Sewell
10.	Adagio	W. Wolstenholme	10.	Andante Affettuoso	William Sewell

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

Edited by ERNEST NEWMAN.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY
HARVEY GRACE

Cloth, gilt, xviii. + 319 pages.

WITH OVER TWO HUNDRED MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price Twelve Shillings net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

THE TIMES LITERARY SUPPLEMENT

The first impression with regard to this book is a sense of surprise that it should have waited for Mr. Grace to write it: the second, one of satisfaction that the task came into his hands. . . . The book is for organists who wish to know Bach better; it is therefore rightly technical and frankly critical. Because of the latter quality it is also worth reading by those who are not organists. . . . The whole leaves the effect of a competent mind working direct on the material and not through others.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

It is the most comprehensive and open-minded treatment of the subject in existence. . . . There is hardly a man in this country better equipped than Mr. Grace for writing on this one branch of Bach's many activities; he speaks not only with the authority of a theoretical analyst, but with the even greater authority of a man who has played the works on many divers organs.

DAILY NEWS

A STIMULATING BOOK

All who have read . . . cannot fail to have been impressed by the wide knowledge shown by Mr. Grace, and the thoroughly human way in which he expresses his language.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE

It is the great merit of Mr. Grace's book that he never fails to discriminate and distinguish—even if one need not necessarily accept all of his judgments as final. Add that historically and technically it is admirably accurate and complete, and that it is written further in a delightfully light-handed, even humorous, style, and nothing more need be said to commend the volume to the musical reader.

THE NATION AND THE ATHENÆUM

In principle this is a technical book of instruction; it is written to remind organists of what "old Bach" wrote for their instrument; and it gives a great deal of practical help towards execution and interpretation. But it is not only useful for the man who makes a noise up in the organ-loft and doesn't have to be perpetually kneeling down or standing up all through the service; it will be interesting to the listener in his pew down below. It is, indeed, a valuable listener's guide to all sorts of Bach; and will end by leaving the reader, whether an organist or not, in a position to enjoy Bach more than he did before.

NEW WITNESS

Apart from its contribution to scholarship and its creative accuracy of fact, this book is unusually vivid, illuminating, and practical. . . . There seems to me to be that fusion of academic clarity of thought with imaginative understanding which is as often desired in a book like this as it is missing. . . . We come to the end of the book knowing Bach the organist as he must veritably have been, and not as we would like to think him. . . . The book is admirably done, and no less pleasant than it is able.

YORKSHIRE POST

Mr. Grace writes with the discrimination of a judicious critic and the practical knowledge of an expert organist, and the result is a handbook from which all organists, even the cleverest, may gain some useful suggestions. To the inexperienced player it will be an indispensable vade mecum.

YORKSHIRE OBSERVER

The first book in English to deal adequately and comprehensively with the organ works. . . . The fearlessness and candour of his remarks . . . and the evident scholarship of the author, should commend his work to all serious students of Bach organists as well as non-organists.

MUSICAL OPINION

Mr. Harvey Grace's book is not merely an excellent text-book for organists, but also an important contribution to Bach literature. . . . It contains a great deal of information—historical, critical, and practical—that is new and valuable. This information, moreover, is clearly and attractively imparted. . . . The book has a very important practical side. The question of registration is fully and ably dealt with. Both the particular suggestions and the generalisations are excellent.

BIRMINGHAM POST

The chorale preludes . . . engage Mr. Grace's attention, and are surveyed with fine critical insight. But he does an even greater service in taking the fugues in his stride and by insisting on the elemental poetic quality in the greater among these. . . . The notion of the fugue as half a work of art and half a student's exercise is by now well exploded; and Mr. Grace's book will play a part in its final dissipation. To the budding organist it will come as a saviour from many misconceptions unwittingly fostered by the pedantry that still lingers among those entrusted with his training.

LIVERPOOL DAILY POST AND MERCURY

Will be welcomed by musicians. Mr. Grace preserves a sense of proportion in dealing with a subject over which writers are apt to lose their heads.

THE REFEREE

May be read with profit not only by every organist but by every admirer of the great composer.

THE SCOTSMAN

Written by an organist, addressed primarily to organists, and necessarily entering at some length into the technique of performance, the book is nevertheless one for all music-lovers, for it is an admirable guide to an understanding of the processes of Bach's artistic development.

SUNDAY TIMES

The student of the organ works could have no better guide than Mr. Grace.

CHURCH TIMES

Mr. Grace's excellent book. . . . For other than organists and would-be organists the present work offers much interest and instruction.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER

Altogether a delightful and well-written volume.

THE CHRISTIAN WORLD

This masterly survey of Bach's organ works. . . . The book will be a great delight to a sympathetic organist, and even those who are not organists but who take pleasure in Bach will find it delightful. . . . Those organists who read this book can hardly fail to be stirred up to give various audiences a much fuller range of Bach music. . . . Enlightened critical comment. . . . Illuminating analyses.

MUSICAL NEWS AND HERALD

Here is a book on Bach—"Old Bach," . . . which will surely help on this ever-young composer. . . . three hundred pages of delightful criticism, guidance, and appreciation. He brings humour to bear, and imagination, in addition to the well-considered results of life-long study and experience. . . . The whole book is delightful.

THE MUSIC TEACHER

A new book on Bach is something rare and greatly to be desired. Here comes Mr. Harvey Grace, with a study of The Organ Works of Bach that will delight the heart of every lover of this mighty music. . . . It contains the fruit of a lot of original investigation and fresh thinking. . . . We like particularly his treatment of the wonderful chorale preludes.

THE CHOIR

Mr. Grace has done his work right worthily. He recognises the faults in Bach's works, and does not fail to point them out, but in his praises he never lapses into extravagance. His eulogies are discriminating, and we feel we are safe in accepting his dicta. Finally, he possesses an attractive literary style, and the freshness of his humour makes well-nigh every page attractive.

ORGANISTS' QUARTERLY JOURNAL

Every organ student in the land should at once become acquainted with Mr. Harvey Grace's book The Organ Works of Bach. Rarely have we been more thoroughly interested in, or derived greater pleasure through the perusal of any book relating to matters musical. It is written in a most delightful vein. . . . To the organ student it is absolutely invaluable.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TO CHOIRMASTERS AND CONDUCTORS.

On receipt of Postal Order for 1s. we will send complete set of the following interesting Series:

ENGLISH HYMNS ADAPTED TO BACH'S CHORALES

No. 1.	HOSANNA TO THE LIVING LORD	- - -	O EWIGKEIT, DU DONNERWORT.
	HALLELUJAH!	- - -	WIR CHRISTENLEUT'?
2.	BESIDE THE FLOOD OF BABYLON	- - -	AN WASSERFLÜSSEN BABYLON.
	TO THEE, O LORD, OUR HEARTS WE RAISE	-	ERMUNTRE DICH.
3.	FOR THE BEAUTY OF THE EARTH	- - -	HILF, HERR JESU, LASS GELINGEN.
	BRIGHTEST AND BEST	- - -	LIEBSTER IMMANUEL.
4.	THROUGH THE DAY THY LOVE HAS SPARED US		WELT, ADE! ICH BIN DEIN MÜDE.
	(Vesper Hymn)
	O SACRED HEAD	- - -	PASSION CHORALE.
5.	JESUS LIVES!	- - -	MEINEN JESUM LASS ICH NICHT.
	HOLY, HOLY!	- - -	SANCTUS!
6.	COME, THOU HOLY PARACLETE:	- - -	JESU, MEINE FREUDE.
	JESUS, MASTER, WHOSE I AM	- - -	NICHT SO TRAURIG.

In both Notations.

Price 3d. each Number.

PATERSON, SONS & CO., Ltd., 152, Buchanan Street, Glasgow.

SPECIAL NOTE.—All our Publications can be obtained from THE ANGLO-FRENCH MUSIC CO., Ltd., 95, Wimpole Street, London, W.1.

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy.

DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF TEACHERS AND STUDENTS OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION

By H. H. HULBERT

CAPT. R.A.M.C., M.A. OXFORD, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., ETC.

176 Pages, Octavo Size, Cloth, Gilt Lettered - - - - PRICE NINE SHILLINGS NET.

SHORT SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS.

I.—DEFINITION OF EURHYTHM. II.—THE ENGLISH PHYSIQUE AND ARTISTIC MOVEMENT Science and games of skill—Movements of novice and master-man—Co-ordination in movement—Discipline of games. III.—THE POISE OF THE BODY AND TONICITY. Common deformities—Correct poise—Correct figure—Lumbar curve the centre of balance—Degrees of tonicity—Position of attention—Special exercises. IV.—THE SCIENCE OF APPRECIATION AND THE CONCEPTION OF THE BEAUTIFUL. Power of imagery—Knowledge of self—Kinds of appreciation—The five senses and experience—Sense of touch in music and games. V.—THE ART OF EXPRESSION AND CONTROL. Three nervous levels—Will and movement—The guiding sensation of movement—feeling—Self-control of the actor and public speaker—Euphonetics. VI.—THE CENTRAL APPARATUS OF SPEECH. VII.—THE SOUNDS OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. VIII.—BREATHING FOR VOICE. Diagrammatic sketch of apparatus—Different kinds of breathing—Effects of types of breathing on voice hygiene and figure. IX.—THE ARTICULATORY APPARATUS. X.—THE LARYNX. XI.—HYGIENE FOR VOICE-USERS AND ORDINARY HEALTH EXERCISES. Voice-user's throat—Physiological congestion of throat—Voice-training prevents voice-user's throat—Loss of health through civilization—Physical exercises for health—Positions: movements of arms, head, body, and legs; balance exercises, jumping, and marching. XII.—EURHYTHMICS.—THE PRACTICE OF EURHYTHMICS.

"It was very much wanted, and now that it has arrived it proves to be the best book on the subject we have ever seen. . . . One would like to dwell lovingly on every stage of this monumental work did space permit, but it will only allow of a general commendation of every word from the beginning . . . to the end, which consists of music to accompany the rhythmic physical exercises."—The Morning Post, February 17, 1922.

"No teacher of singing should be without this wonderful book."—Musical Opinion.

"This is a thoughtful and thought-compelling book which touches life at most points. Eurhythm the author defines as perfect harmony, and discusses with a fine enthusiasm the practical means of bringing about in the individual this desirable condition. The book should be of great value to teachers of singing and physical education, while the intelligent student can also derive great benefit from a careful reading."—Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

The 'APOLLO' Pedal Reed ORGAN

STANDS PRE-EMINENT FOR

Durability of Construction. / /

Artistic, Pipe-like Quality of Tone.

Low Maintenance Costs and all-round excellence / / /

Built in one Standard Model to R.C.O. Scale, and voiced for the requirements of / - /

·CHURCH OR HOME USE.

Illustrated Booklet and Specification from

RUSHWORTH & DREAPER, Ltd.

(Designers and Builders),

11-17, ISLINGTON, - - - LIVERPOOL.

London Showrooms: The Chappell Piano Co., Ltd., 50, New Bond Street, W.1.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S LATEST CONCERT AND TEACHING SONGS.

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

"When all the World is young"

MONTAGUE F. PHILLIPS.

"O Ship of my Delight"

"Dolorosa" "Butterfly Wings"

"Nightfall at Sea"

ROGER QUILTER.

"There be none of Beauty's Daughters"

"Morning Song" "Fairy Lullaby"

GERRARD WILLIAMS.

"Lombardy Poplars" "Rondel"

MALCOLM SARGENT.

"My Heart has a quiet sadness"

GORDON BRYAN.

"Flower Children" "Acceptation"

R. CONINGSBY CLARKE.

"Silver Waters" "On the Way to Kew".

HERMANN LÖHR.

"Whatever is, is Best"

"Beauty" "Roadways"

"Star of the East"

GUY D'HARDELLOT.

"Just a Dream" "You came to Me"

"Sometimes in my Dreams"

TERESA DEL RIEGO.

"Deeper my Love" "All's Well"

MOLLY CAREW.

"Love's a Merchant"

"Tiptoe" "The Piper of Love"

E. WYBURD FURRELL.

"Destiny" "Caprice"

GERALD CARNE.

"Here in the Quiet Hills"

ERIC COATES.

"I Pitch my Lonely Caravan"

"Blue Sky and White Road"

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

May be had of all Music Sellers.

NEW YORK AND SYDNEY.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS ^{FOR} THE PIANOFORTE

ROY E. AGNEW.

DANCE OF THE WILD MEN	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	s.	d.
								2	0 net.

I. CERVANTES.

TWO CUBAN DANCES	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	2	0 „
------------------	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	-----

THREE DANCES. La Celosa—El Velorio—La Carcajada	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	2	0 „
---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	-----

C. DEBUSSY.

D'UN CAHIER D'ESQUISSES	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	2	0 „
-------------------------	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	-----

NOCTURNE	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	2	6 „
----------	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	-----

A. MACBETH.

SERENATA. "Love in Idleness"	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	2	0 „
------------------------------	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	-----

SELIM PALMGREN.

FINNISH RHYTHMS. Five Sketches	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	3	0 „
--------------------------------	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	-----

SEPARATELY:

KARELIAN DANCE	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	1	6 „
----------------	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	-----

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W. 1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 961.—Vol. 64
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

MARCH 1 1923

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-SECOND SEASON, 1922-23.

SATURDAY, MARCH 3, AT 2.30 P.M.

HIAWATHA - - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

MISS DORIS VANE.

MR. WILLIAM BOLAND.

MR. FREDERICK TAYLOR.

Conductor MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

GOOD FRIDAY, MARCH 30, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS RUTH VINCENT.

MISS EDNA THORNTON.

MR. WALTER HYDE.

MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

Conductor ... MR. EUGÈNE GOOSSENS.

THIS IS NOT A SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT.

At the Organ - Mr. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;

Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, K.C.V.O., Mus.Doc., F.R.C.M.

A SPECIAL COURSE FOR THE TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS will commence next term. Full particulars can be obtained on application.

MIDSUMMER TERM will begin on Thursday, May 3.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about April 30.

CHAMBER CONCERT, Wednesday, March 7, at 3.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, March 10 and 24, at 3.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Queen's Hall, Tuesday, March 27, at 3.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.
J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: Sir HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus.Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

The College offers a complete Course of Musical Instruction to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of 70 Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

There is a JUNIOR DEPARTMENT for pupils under sixteen.

Examinations for the Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) in all subjects held twice a year in April and September.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir S. Ernest Palmer, Bart., F.R.C.M., for the encouragement of All British Composers and Executive Artists).

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 8, p. 127; Augener, p. 254; Peters, Vol. 2, No. 4.)

Pastorale in E, César Franck. (Novello.)

Theme and Variations in D, from Serenade, Op. 8, Beethoven. Best's Arrangements, No. 75, p. 985. (Novello). This Arrangement only.

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the July, 1923, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for January, 1923.

Regulations may be had on application.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

N.B.—The College will be closed at 4 o'clock on March 26, and will be re-opened at 10 on April 9.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

(CORPORATION OF LONDON.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL ... SIR LONDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.G.S.M.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical subjects and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Opera, and Film work.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools Examinations (open to general public), free.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.

Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1922-1923.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, K.C.V.O., Mus. Doc., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.A.M., F.R.C.M.

METROPOLITAN EXAMINATION,

CHRISTMAS, 1922.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL:

HARMONY, COUNTERPOINT, AND COMPOSITION.—As TEACHER: Bernard Edgerley Taylor.

EXAMINERS: F. Corder, A. J. Greenish, Mus. D., Cantab., Stewart
Macpherson, Sir A. C. Mackenzie, K.C.V.O., Mus. D., LL.D., D.C.L.

SINGING.—As TEACHERS: Glennie Angus, Eliza Bryden Barbour,
Edgar Atherton Cox, Elsie Lucy Cox, Marian Feben, May Grant,
Harold Ernest Harper, Florence Gertrude Houchin, George Douglas
Kermode, Petrus Johannes Lemmer, Margaret Livingstone Murdoch,
Hilda Pettifer, Elizabeth J. Rees, Henry Thomas Forster Richardson, William Thomas Roberts, George Mortimer Thornton, Kathleen Mabel Weatherley.

As PERFORMERS: Doris B. M. Ashman, Muriel Alice Baker,
Eleanor Kathleen Casswell, Reba Cohen, Violet Coleman, Cordelia
Mary Grace Cooper, Olive Gladys Denney, Annie Ewe Evans, John
Robert Farrage, Gladys M. Fisher, Nanse Fuller-Mills, Lilian Victoria
Gordon, Garda Hall, Reginald G. Vernon Harris, Haydn Valentine
Hemery, Mary Olivia Rose Holmes, Harold George Jacklin, Mary
Jarred, Violet Marguerite Johnson, Harold Jolley, Gwenno Jones,
Jenkin John Ceredig Jones, Hilda Lawrence, Gwendoline Elizabeth
Lea-Dennis, Doris Mary Leadbeater, Christina G. Macdonald, Irene
Moreton, Thomas Herbert Mosley, Ida Dorothy Parsons, Constance
E. K. Phillips, Margaret Harriet Pring, Alice Emma Randell, Hilda
Roberts, Elsie M. Savigar, Hilda Lavinia Shorter, Lilian Skirving, Elizabeth A. Sleigh, Florence Alberta Smith, Phyllis Marjorie Webb, Marie Leonore Weepie, Margaret Wilkinson, William Henry Willmott.

EXAMINERS: Henry Beauchamp, John Booth, F. Percival Driver,
Edward Iles, J. Frederick Keel, Frederic King, Agnes Larkcom, Thomas Meux, Arthur Thompson, Mary Wilson.

PIANOFORTE.—As PERFORMERS AND TEACHERS: Marjorie Insall, Phyllis Sowerby-Coo.

As TEACHERS: Clarice Mary Abson, Beatrice Mary Victoria Adams, Edith Doris Ainley, Winifred Aitken, Thomas Alderson, Dorothy
Beatrice Allen, Edith Eveline Armstrong, Marion Johnston Armstrong, William Harvey Ashton, Gertrude Emily Axford, Nora Baird, Nora
Barnes, Ethel Barnett, Cécile Joan Dewing Barrow, Elinor M. Barry, Margaret Barton, Joyce Bashforth, Constance Margery Bastard,
John Frederick Bayliss, Mary S. B. Beddie, Joyce Bickell, Kathleen
F. Bickell, Beatrice Helena Binns, Kathleen Risque Bostock, Winifred Annie Box, Gladys Molly Brassington, Dora Mildred
Bristow, Mary Mackenzie Brown, Matilda Lees Buckley, Edith Edna
Millie Bunker, Ethel Annie Burroughs, Enid Mary Victoria
Culverhouse Butler, Mamie Carter, Edith Summers Christian,
Lucile Elsa Clarkson, Nora Claye, Esther Clayton, Florence Emily
Clinch, Margaret Mary Clixby, Leslie Tudor Cochran, Elsie Marjorie Cole, Cordelia Mary Gray Cooper, S. Eunice Coulbeck, Helen Doris Coward, Adah Doreen Cowl, Gladys Irene Cowley, Edward Crabtree, Violet Cree, Sylvia Mary Crisp, Marion Strathearn Cunningham,
Alfred Brinley Dally, Elise Margaret David, Dillys Mary Davies,
Margaret Davies, Marjorie Massey Pryce Davies, Ada Mary Dawson,
Lizzie Alice Dawson, Doreen Dean, Margaret Cecile Harford Dewar, Josephine Mary Drake, Winifred Maude Dickinson, Janie Dixon,
Phyllis Ruth Durbidge, I. Gertrude Easton, Dorothy Margaret Evans, Gladys Dorcas Everitt, John Arthur Fairweather, Mairland Adam
Ernest Farmer, Dorothy Farncombe, A. Vernon Fern, Winifred A.
Fletcher, Eustace Cecil Floyd, Dorothy Beger Folkard, Barbara
Forbes-Harker, Ethel Mary Francis, Dorothy Gertrude Franklin,
Phyllis Marguerite Frost, Edith Winifred Fry, Annie Marguerite
Galvin, Beryl George, Phyllis Germaney, Patience Flora Gobey, Rosita Eunice Ellaline Gooch, Percival Linscott Goode, Lilian May Goodhead, Emily Gordon, Winifred Adams Gow, Helen Margaret
Gray, Winifred Barry Gregar, Hilda Mary Hackett, Eileen G.
Haddesley, Liebe Eileen Hadley, Edith Jane Halls, Gladys E. P.
Hammond, Kathleen Walton Harding, Hilda Harrison, Emily Harvey, Evelyn Edith Pearl Haward, Mary Gwendoline Hayward, Hilda E.
Heather, Evelyn May Hedgcock, Lilian Frances Herbert-Jackson,
Dora Maud Hetherington, Doris Ada Hibbert, Edwin Charles High,
Doris Winifred Hill, Lily Hill, Evangeline O. Hillier, Madeline Clara
Hills, Jennie Moriland Hilton, Lilian M. Hilliard, Elsie Marion
Hinchliff, Jessica Mary Horner, Doris Mabel Adey Horton, Gladys
Mary Hosgood, Dorothy M. Howorth, Jennie Hughes, Winifred
Idle, Vera Mary Ireland, Rebecca Marjorie Isaacs, James Izett, Barbara Mary James, Kathleen Florence Jones, Doris Lillian Jaques, Doris Jephson, Violet Irene Johnson, Mary Spreull Johnston,
Sibell Duncan Johnstone, Kathleen Searle Just, Elsie Aeneas
Kennedy, Margaret Hannah Kennet-Dawson, Maude Kerr, Ethel
Lillian Killick, Joan Cecilia Mary Kingsley, Dina Marée Kühn, Elizabeth Lamb, Frank William Lewis, Margaret Lewis, Louie Iris
Loft, Dorothy Lunn, Violet Lythgoe, Phyllis Estelle Macdonald,
Nivena Graham Macduff, Duncan Morrison Mackay, Annie Aileen
Robertson Mackinnon, Ray Mackinnon, Honoria Lois Marsden, Emily
Doris Marshall, William Reginald Masters, Hanako Matsukata Edna Mawditt, Sybil May McClelland, Margaret Howat McGavin, Frances
McGill, Inez Louie Creed McKay, Chrissie Mearns, B. Fiona M.
McMillan, Allan Edward Medd-Hall, Jane G. T. Meyer, Rosamund C.
Ronald Mitchell, Dorothy Morris, Nancy Newman Moutat, Beatrice E.
Mountford, Helen Mowll, Frances Anne Nash, Violet Neall, Edith Maud Neill, Dorothy Winifrede Neville, Elsie Louisa Newton, Maud Grace Ollis, Richard Stanley Oke, Dorothy Owen, William

Paul Paff, Dorothy Helen Peace, Martin Alfred Peacock, Greta Osbaldestone Pearce, Harry Pemberton, Helen Augusta Perry, Agnes Mary Peters, Grace Winifred Pimm, Frances Mary Powell, Albert E.
Price, Marie Violet Price, Albert Edward Pybus, Elizabeth Radmalt, Marian Maude Rayden, Agnes Day Reid, Frederick Stanley
Richardson, Edith Rider, Louie Robinson, William Webster Rogers,
Marjorie Helen Roper, Beatrice Mary Rollins, Joyce Macaulay
Russell, Muriel Louisa Ryall, Winifred Marjorie Sanders, Frederick
Albert Schonhut, Elizabeth Doris Scrivener, Doris Serjeant, Isabella
S. Semple, Kathleen Clara Shanks, Doris Sharps, Evangeline
Shearer, Beryl Freda Shortridge, Elsie Millicent Simpson, Winifred
Sissons, Holly Slaney, Cissy E. Smith, Dora Constance Smith, Mary
Haviland Smith, Wilma Watson Smyth, Margaret Louise Speirs,
Cecil Boufflower Spinney, Miriam Staincliffe, Eleanor Marion
Stanley, Mabel Stephenson, Charles Ernest Stewart, Margaret Jean
Barclay Stewart, Cyril Hubert Stone, Ethel Stone, Eileen Hart
Sullivan, Dorothy Roper Sunnison, Kathleen Minnie Surry, Sarah
Constance Tall, Edgar Charles Taylor, Catherine Sibyl Thomas,
Blanche Gertrude Thompson, James Leonard Thompson, Mary Lucy
Thomson, William Henry Thorpe, Joan M. Tipper, Kathleen Forsyth
Tonks, Iris Mary Tregoning-Evans, Loucinda Trenchard, Eileen Marjorie Tunbridge, Grace Marguerite Turner, Lilian Tyler, Tilly
de Villiers, Wilfred Wade, Muriel Warner, Beryl Christie Watkins, Ida Kathleen Watts, Osborne Edward Wear, Hilary Mary Wharton
Wharton, Dorothy Mary Whitaker, Phyllis Whiting, Arthur George
Whitton, Ruth Dorothy Wigner, Harold David Widgeon, Phyllis
May Williams, Marjorie Williamson, Madeleine Wynne Windsor,
Elsie Augusta Wood, Lucy P. Wood, Muriel Josephine Woodger, Millicent Deborah Woolverton.

As PERFORMERS: Elwyn Brown, Florence May Chipperfield, Rhoda
Sinclair Coghill, Winifred Eleanor Cole, Marjorie Corker, Douglas
Dawn, Rosamunde M. Drury, Trevor Evans, Ada Lilian Evetts, Dorothy Violet Fardo, Hélène Germain, Elaine Goble, Marie Louise
Holloway, Karl Pearce-Roberts Hosken, Phyllis Irene Huxham, Frances Keyte, Muriel Irene Kingdon, Hilda Ada Leaman, John Basil
Hugh Longmire, Violet Ludwig, Marian Mitchell, Amy Monteith, John Pickles Grace Rapkin, Arthur H. Scott, Gladys Lilian Short,
Sarah Alice Sims, Marjorie Irene Wilks, Lilian Gladys Wright.

EXAMINERS: Carlo Albanesi, Victor Booth, Ambrose Coviello,
Harold Craxton, Vivian Langrish, Welton Hickin, W. J. Kipps,
T. B. Knott, Herbert Lake, Dora Matthey, Tobias Matthey, Hedwig
McEwen, Frederick Moore, Claude Pollard, Chas. F. Reddie, Felix
Swinstead, Lawrence Taylor, Percy Waller, Septimus Webbe, Cuthbert Whitmore.

ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS: VIOLIN.—As TEACHERS:
Margaret Cecile Harford Dewar, Mary Elizabeth Fettes, Ailwyne
Gwynn, Sylvia Hill, Gwendolyn Jewsbury, Morgan Lloyd, Kathleen Murray, Iris A. Percy-Smith, Norah Stevenson, Phyllis Tate, Walter Frederick Henry Whitaker, Lilian Elsie Woodbridge.

As PERFORMERS: Eleanor Lucie Andrews, Alice Dill, Aileen
Virginia McLaren, Constance Edith Parker, Harold Foster Petts, Thurza E. M. Searle, Blodwen Doris Thomas.

VIOLONCELLO.—As PERFORMER AND TEACHER: Lionel Henry Crosse.

As TEACHERS: Joyce Feldtmann, Noela Olive Mary Jessop, Walter Nunn.

FRENCH HORN.—A PERFORMER: John Cawdor Hitch.

EXAMINERS: F. Corder, Montague Butler, Spencer Dyke,
H. Wessely, Rowsby Woof, James T. Lockyer, Herbert Walenn
W. E. Whitehouse, A. Borsdorf, J. Solomon.

MILITARY BANDMASTERSHIP.—Arthur C. Green, Louis
James Pay, Denis Plater.

EXAMINERS: F. Corder, P. F. Battishill, Lieut. Andrew Harris
Lieut.-Col. J. Mackenzie Rogan, C.V.O., Mus. Doc.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.—Gladys Edith Whitfield.

EXAMINERS: F. Corder, Victor Booth, Harold Craxton, Welton
Hickin, Cuthbert Whitmore.

AURAL TRAINING AND SIGHT-SINGING.—Edith Mary
Bristow, Gladys Dorcas Everitt, Imogene Hawkins, Charles William
John Hooper, Freda Constance Monk, Norah Constance Morley, Graham Charles Lionel Neville, Kathleen Marion Willoughby Wood,
Alice Mary Worthington.

EXAMINERS: Stewart Macpherson, Ernest Read, Frederick G.
Shinn, Mus. D., Dunelm.

VOICE CULTURE AND CLASS SINGING.—Margaret Sybil
Chesterfield, Harrison Cooper, Mary Elizabeth Hogan, George
William Nicholls, Allan Wheelodon, Ethel Margaret Williams, Alice Mary Worthington.

EXAMINERS: A. J. Greenish, Mus. D., Cantab., Stewart Macpherson,
H. W. Richards, Mus. D., Dunelm.

ELOCUTION.—As TEACHERS: Marjorie Barrett, Edith Elizabeth
Clements, Elsie Annie Elizabeth Fleming, Winifred Florence Louie
Gowen, Sidney Holson Harris, Annie Winifred Maynard, Silvia
Newton, Gwendolyn Florence Russell, Phyllis Jane Smale.

As PERFORMERS: Grace Lea, Bessie Mapley.

EXAMINERS: A. Acton Bond, Wilton Cole, F. Corder, Jessie Matthey, Katie Thomas.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church
Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 17th, 1923.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the June-July Examinations close Wednesday, May 9th (Irish Entries, May 2nd), 1923.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed Centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

Examination in Pianoforte Accompaniment is now offered.

Examination Music and Scales for Pianoforte and for Violin, and Past Written Papers are published officially by the Board, and can be obtained from the Central Office, or through any Music Seller.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

for instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS

(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council).

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Thirty-first Year.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE

Western Correspondence College.

Principal: DR. GERTRUDE BEST,

Mus.Doc., Durham, L.R.A.M.

Expert Preparation for Matric., Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc., and all recognized Diplomas in Music.

SPECIAL COURSE FOR L.R.A.M. PAPER WORK.

MANY RECENT SUCCESSES.

Address, THE STUDIO, GLOUCESTER.

MR. CHARLES TREE

on the ART OF THE "BEL CANTO."

Manchester, Jan. 30, 23: "The lecture on the art of singing proved so attractive that it drew the largest audience seen for many months at the mid-day concerts. Nasal resonance, firmness of breath control, and a general freedom of method were some of his main points."—Guardian.

Shaw (Lancs.), Jan. 16, 23: "A great success, both interesting and instructive. We had the biggest audience for many years."—Secretary.

Falkirk, Jan. 11, 23: "A most delightful lecture. His ripe experience enabled him to impart much valuable advice to the very big audience. He treated his subject in a most fascinating way, and by his humour transformed a semi-technical into a most enjoyable and instructive evening."—Herald.

Mr. Charles Lindop, Belfast, Feb. 12, 23: "I still find your 'Bel Canto' Exercises absolutely the best for demonstrating and teaching. I now give them to all my pupils with the most happy results."

How to ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE PRODUCTION, 5/2.

EXERCISES ON THE "BEL CANTO" (New, 1922), 3/7.

Special prices to teachers for quantities.
(If difficult to obtain, write author.)

Address: 14, COURTFIELD GARDENS, KENSINGTON, S.W.5.

SOUTH LONDON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Hon. Conductor: WILLIAM H. KERRIDGE.

"PARSIFAL"

GOLDSMITHS' COLLEGE, NEW CROSS.

SATURDAY, 24th MARCH, 1923, at 7.30 p.m.

POPULAR PRICES.

5/9 & 3/6 Numbered and Resvd. 2/4 Reserved, unnumbered. 1/7 Unrequd.

(All including Tax).

BOOK EARLY. Tickets from—

MESSRS. KEITH PROWSE & Co., all local Agents, or

Hon. Org. Sec.: JOHN W. WATERER, 19, Adelaide Road, S.E.4.

Hon. Bus. Sec.: H. LAURIE GILDER, 12, Muirkirk Road, S.E.6.

CROYDON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

PUBLIC COMPETITIONS

IN

MUSIC AND ELOCUTION.

APRIL 21st to MAY 4th.

DAILY TELEGRAPH CHORAL CHAMPIONSHIP.

FIVE GOLD MEDALS.

FIFTY-SEVEN CLASSES.

Syllabus and Entry Forms:

THOMAS COOK, 7, Katharine Street, Croydon.

Church Gresley P. M. Musical Festival.

SATURDAY, JUNE 30th, 1923.

Adjudicator: Mr. RICHARD WASSALL.

MIXED CHOIRS.

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS.

MALE QUARTET.

CHILDREN'S CHOIRS.

SOPRANO, CONTRALTO, TENOR, BASS SOLOS.

SYLLABUS (on receipt of postage) from—

GEO. FAIRBROTHER,

Waterloo House, Church Gresley, Burton-on-Trent.

PORTSMOUTH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

MAY 18 and 19, 1923.

SYLLABUS OF COMPETITIONS

is now ready, and may be obtained (post free, 2½d.), from

W. BOYANTON, Hon. Secretary,

Festival Office, 7, Palmerston Road, Southsea.

PERFECT TOUCH AND TECHNIQUE WITHOUT LABORIOUS PRACTICE . . .

THE fundamental principles of my System—the original postal system—have stood the test of time. Proof of this lies in the enormous number of pupils who have passed through my hands to Piano-mastery—who have found in the System the Royal Road to the whole of the practical side of Pianoforte Playing, without any keyboard drudgery. The results are frequently described by pupils in such terms as "miraculous" or "magical." Pianists of every grade of proficiency can benefit from this simple, inexpensive and unique Postal Course, used and recommended by SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE and other eminent musicians.

15,000 SUCCESSFUL PUPILS.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

Send to-day for my Illustrated Booklet "Light on Pianoforte Playing."

My booklet, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," explains fully how I teach the System by Postal Lessons, and gives particulars of the very reasonable fee. No apparatus or special music is necessary—just an easily acquired method with much quicker and better results, based on an important physiological discovery of my own. Apply for the book to-day, but do not omit to state whether you are an average or an advanced player, or, if a beginner, whether you can or cannot play at sight a simple hymn-tune. The book will be sent free of charge and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.1.

An Entirely New Departure

HARMONY FOR PIANISTS

BY

DR. PERCY RIDEOUT,

D.Mus. Lond., A.R.C.M.

*Being Harmony in Pianoforte Idiom—
without written exercises.*

A COURSE OF INSTRUCTION
BY CORRESPONDENCE in CHORDS
and ORNAMENTAL DEVICES, together with their TEMPERAMENTAL VALUE as bearing on MUSICAL APPRECIATION and
INTERPRETATION, the whole being based on and ILLUSTRATED by music written for the Pianoforte.

AN ESSENTIAL PART OF A PIANISTS'
EQUIPMENT, affording a CLEAR INSIGHT into the MATERIAL FORMING THE
STRUCTURE OF MUSIC, and ITS MEANING.

The foundation of the Art of Style and Interpretation.

For further particulars, apply—

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

Pianoforte School,

(Studio M.T.), 11, South Molton St., London, W.1.

To all Pianists, Violinists, and 'Cellists THE TECHNIQUER.

ERNEST FOWLES, Esq., F.R.A.M.
and "THE TECHNIQUER."

"I have been experimenting with the 'Techniquer,' and now write to tell you that I believe it may be of the greatest service in the case of bad instances of 'webbing.' To correct such is to bring about a far greater degree of muscular independence in the fingers, and I believe that your apparatus may be of the highest possible value in that direction. Naturally, the instinct of a modern pianist is against the use of an aid of this kind, but I am continually meeting cases in which it is desirable.

"Very kindly yours, ERNEST FOWLES."

"Hand Development," with 15 photos, 1s. 6d.

Full particulars of "The Techniquer" from the Secretary,
Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O.,
'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale. 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.

Correspondence Courses in this subject will be given as under:—

- (a) First General Course.
- (b) Advanced Course.
- (c) Course with an additional section for Teachers.
- (d) Advanced Course for Teachers.

Further particulars from the Secretary,
(DEPT. A) THE WARDROP CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE,
21, BEDFORD ROW, LONDON, W.C.1.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,

Mus. Doc. Lond.

SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING

See Page 159.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE.

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A.(CANTAB.), A.C.P.

MATRIC.: SUCCESSES - - 92. You can be in the first 100.

A lost opportunity.

F.R.C.O. writes: "I have just lost a fine opportunity through not having a degree."

Your opportunity.

You can be ready for it if you take our Guarantee Course and obtain your degree.

The men in the big positions.

Who are they and what are their qualifications? Look up their record, and you will find that most of them started in a small way.

Secret of their Success.

Many of the men at the Top have ordinary ability, but possess in addition "grit," and the determination to win through.

Your Position.

You may be in a rut, you may draw the same salary, and you may receive the same fees for tuition that you received years ago.

Is there a way out?

Yes, decidedly. "This is all very well," you say, "but there are difficulties."

Difficulties.

No. 1. MATRIC.—F.R.C.O. writes: "When I think that after a lapse of twenty years I was enabled, by your excellent coaching, to pass my Matric. with about four months' study, I am more than gratified."

No. 2. TIME INVOLVED.—Yes, this is a serious point for a busy man, and it will take you a long time if you work without guidance. By the help of our notes, which can be studied at odd moments, we guarantee to prepare in from four to six months.

No. 3. THE EXPENSE.—Formerly this was a serious obstacle, but since the M.C.C. Guarantee Course was originated this difficulty has vanished. For a fee of £20, which can be paid by easy instalments, we guarantee to coach you until you gain the Degree.

ARE YOU AN F.R.C.O.? If so, we grant you special concessions.

F.R.C.O. writes, January 14, 1923: "Whilst thanking you for your congratulations, I wish to express my appreciation of the thoroughness of your Course. From beginning to end I never felt that I was merely one of a crowd, for the criticism and advice always responded to my particular troubles. I went into the examination-room feeling confident that 'nothing could me dismay,' and I am ready to prepare for L.R.A.M. and Mus. Bac."

F.R.C.O. writes, January 14, 1923: "It is my first attempt at the Fellowship Examination, and I attribute much of my success to the fact that your systematic methods of dealing with my work have enabled me to see exactly where I stood with regard to the standard of work required. One of the many excellent features of your Course is that in addition to pointing out the faults in the various exercises, you give most detailed instructions as to how these can be avoided, and also model workings of the papers. I have found your remarks on Orchestration very valuable, and the whole Course can be well recommended as a rapid and certain way to success."

A.R.C.O. writes, January 29, 1923: "I am glad to say I have passed A.R.C.O. at the recent Examination, and am now ready to work up for Fellowship, July next. I feel certain that I shall pass in the Paper Work, because the first time I attempted the A.R.C.O. under your excellent tuition I passed, although I had failed before. I have recommended the M.C.C. to several friends lately."

F.R.C.O., taking L.R.A.M. (Singing).—"I may add that the knowledge I have gained from the questions I have answered for you has proved exceedingly useful to me. I am able to talk to my pupils with confidence."

L.R.A.M. (Pianoforte) writes: "The lessons which I received in Phrasing, Fingering, Touch, Pedalling, Teaching, 'Notes on Method in Study,' and corrections to Papers, were excellent and thorough in every detail."

A. Mus. T.C.L. writes: "I gained the following marks: Art of Teaching, 85; Rudiments, 89; Harmony, 80; Counterpoint, 94; History, 78."

FREE - Guide to Matric., Mus. Bac., &c.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

THE
CHARLES A. GILLETT
SCHOOL OF
MODERN PIANOFORTE PLAYING.

WEIGHT TOUCH.

SPECIALISED INDIVIDUAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS designed particularly for the BUSY TEACHER, KEEN STUDENT, and ENTHUSIASTIC AMATEUR—who realises the importance of SPECIALISED INDIVIDUAL TEACHING, A SOUND KNOWLEDGE OF WEIGHT TOUCH and its ACTUAL APPLICATION.

Do you realise that the want of knowledge of the MODERN METHOD OF WEIGHT TOUCH is probably the only barrier between you and the music you desire to express?

Teachers still following the OLD UNSCIENTIFIC KNUCKLE TOUCH with all its drudgery and disappointments will find the CHARLES A. GILLETT method refreshing and progressive, and will be able to meet the exceptional technical demands made by the modern composer.

The "Gillett" teaching is being adopted by large numbers of professional Musicians and Soloists; many holding the highest degrees—Mus. Doc., Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.O., A.T.C.L., F.T.C.L., A.G.S.M., A.L.A.M., &c., who endorse, by their letters of testimony, the great benefits to be derived from this course.

Coaching for all recognised examinations.

Write to-day in confidence, stating your individual difficulties and the names of one or two pieces you play. If you prefer to call and discuss the lessons by all means do so.

Private Lessons and Consultations Day and Evening.

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,
(Studio M.T.), 11, South Molton Street, London, W.1.

TO CONCERT PROMOTERS.

THE IMPERIAL CONCERT AGENCY, whose offices have now been removed from Holborn to EMPIRE HOUSE, 175, PICCADILLY, W.1, make a special Study of their clients' requirements regarding Soloists for ORATORIOS, CONCERT VERSIONS OF OPERA, and MISCELLANEOUS CONCERTS. The selection of Artists is invariably made with regard to their special qualifications for the work in question and fee offered.

You are cordially invited to write to the Secretary for particulars and a copy of our new Handbook of Artists, which will be sent gratis on mentioning the Musical Times.

CALISTHENICS

FOR THE MUSCLES USED IN SINGING

As taught and perfected for 20 years.

Astonishing increase of POWER, QUALITY, RANGE, and EASE of SINGING assured by five minutes' practice twice (better three times) daily.

No more sore or relaxed throat, or strained voice.

BY CORRESPONDENCE, £3 3s.

THOS. CHURCH SAXBY, L.Mus.T.C.L.,
UNDERCLIFFE, LEWES

YOU MUST MEMORISE.

LILIAS MACKINNON.

undertakes to develop
PERFECT MEMORY FOR PIANISTS
in Six Correspondence Lessons for £3 3s.
EVERY PUPIL SUCCESSFUL.

Write for Booklet, with Testimonials,
1, PAULTONS SQUARE, CHELSEA, S.W.3.

L.R.A.M. AND L.T.C.L. POSTAL COURSES.

MR. GILBERT M. THOMAS,

M.A. (Cantab.), L.R.A.M., A.Mus. T.C.L.

Private Pupil of
STEWART MACPHERSON,
BACKHAUS,
OSCAR BERINGER.

These Courses are the outcome of many years devoted almost entirely to this individualised correspondence coaching, and embody the teachings of the leading Masters of the day, ensuring the gaining of the Diploma in the shortest possible time.

100% SUCCESSES—L.R.A.M., Christmas, 1922.

7 Correspondence Pupils entered: 7 passed.

Terms, Testimonials, Appreciations, on application:
BROADWOOD HALL STUDIOS, CONDUIT STREET, W.1.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Pupils prepared for A.R.C.M. and A.R.A.M. Exams.

Notice of last Pupils' Concert:

"A number of Mr. Albert Garcia's pupils sang excellently at the concert which they gave on Wednesday evening. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8,
Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

JOHN B. WOOD, MUS. BAC.

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M.

THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

EXPERT TUTORS.

THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY,
COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
INTERPRETATION,
FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
FOR MUSICIANS.

Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institutions have been enrolled as pupils.

Write,
6, BOLTON ROAD, FARNWORTH, BOLTON.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

President for 1923, SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

Particulars of Membership, and of Appointments-register for Vacant Posts (no fees) from—

Hon. Secretary:
DE CRESPIGNY HOUSE, DENMARK HILL, S.E.5.

STUDY AT HOME FOR YOUR DIPLOMA

Complete and Individual Preparation for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc., and all Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

These Postal Courses enable you to study at home, in your own time, and at your own convenience.
Their thoroughness is made manifest by the great number of successes achieved by Dr. Sprankling's pupils at all the leading examinations for diplomas and degrees.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

1. "First" and "Final" Mus. Bac. and
Mus. Doc., London and Durham,
1923.

Numerous Successes, including 15 in Final Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc.

2. A.R.C.M. (April, 1923).

Short Revision Course, which can be completed in two weeks.

3. A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. (September).

Special "Full Preparation" Course, including all Paper Work, with Hints on Touch, Fingering, and Aural Tests.

Also notes on the rendering of Test Pieces.

Numerous Successes at A.R.C.M.
and L.R.A.M.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

Full preparation may now be commenced for T.C.L. and R.C.O. Diplomas (July), and First and Final Mus. Bac. Durham, next September.

PRACTICAL WORK—PERSONAL LESSONS IN LONDON AND BRISTOL. NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
48, LINDEN ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone Bristol 3033.

To all interested in Voice Training.

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., has prepared a Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (named the "Simplex" Course), which covers the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, very concise, and easy to follow.

Dame Clara Butt writes: "I advise all would-be Singers and all interested in the Teaching of Singing to take the 'Simplex' Course. They will find it most helpful."

Mr. Ben Davies writes: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

For Full Particulars address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 Book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Eastern Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury."

"Is an acknowledged authority. . . ."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.

TEACHING SINGING AND ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS

Numerous Successes both in Singing and Elocution Exams. at
L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation.

Also Special Short Instructional Courses in Voice-Production and
The Art of Teaching Singing, to meet particular requirements of the General Practitioner in Music.

MR. W. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

INGLESIDE, GOLDSWONG TERRACE, NOTTINGHAM.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet,
eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance,
astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments made.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION.

RECITALS AND CONCERTS ARRANGED.

317, REGENT STREET, W. Phone: Langham 2714.

First-Class Operatic and Oratorio Vocalists, Instrumentalists, Concert Parties, &c., on my books.

Please state your requirements to above address.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Stainer's "Crucifixion," Passion Music,
Concerts, Oratorios, Receptions, &c.

"Judas Maccabæus," "Messiah," "Elijah," &c.

For vacant dates, address:

67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham, Surrey; or, The London School of Singing,

20a, Henrietta Street, Cavendish Square, W.1.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6.

Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

FRANK CARLETON

(TENOR).

ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, ETC.

"Mr. Carleton is the possessor of a powerful tenor voice of rare range and capacity, and his rendering of the song, 'How lovely are Thy dwellings' (Liddle), was a fine performance."

Northwich Guardian, July 14, 1922.

Address: 58, Hazel Street, Audenshaw, near Manchester.

HAROLD KNOWLTON (B.Sc.)

TENOR.

St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.

39, Granville Road, Stroud Green, N.4.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT

TENOR

St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.

108, Stapleton Hall Road, Stroud Green, N.4.

MILLARD THOMPSON

(L.T.C.L.), TENOR.

17, Forest View Road, Higham's Park, E.17.

ROLAND SWINNERTON

BARITONE.

Oratorios, Concerts, &c.

"A carrying voice of good and expressive quality and compass, also considerable dramatic ability."—"Vide eminent Professor,
"Steephill," The Mount, Guildford. Telephone No. 284.

MR. ALBERT FRISBY.

BASS.

Oratorio, Lenten Cantata, Concerts, &c.

70, St. George's Road, Forest Gate, E.7. East 3337.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.).

BASSO-CANTANTE

OF QUEEN'S HALL, KINGSWAY HALL, ETC.

Now booking for Ballad and Choral Concerts, Oratorio.

Available for Passion Music in London or Provinces.

33, HOUNSLOW AVENUE, HOUNSLOW, MIDD.X.

Phone: Hounslow 41. (New No. Shortly.)

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.

8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5.

London Wall 4033.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

SOLO PIANIST.

For terms, vacant dates, &c., apply to

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

SYLVIA WHYTE

WRITER OF LYRICS.

Words written to any Music.

Lyrics of every description to order.

Collaboration or Revision of Plays and Librettos.

19, Clifton Gardens, W.9.

and Actors' Club, 98, Charing Cross Road, W.C.2.

MUSICAL REVISOR TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-EIGHT YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

* * * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Sir HENRY WALFORD DAVIES, Mus.Doc.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN

VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT,
MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.

Nearly 700 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A, Performer
and Teacher.

Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation
to L.C.C.

"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.

Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED
AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICA-TION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION
WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,

Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

STUDY AT HOME
FOR YOUR DIPLOMA.

See Page 159.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who
OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. D. and MUS. B. at Oxford,
Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of
F.L.C.M., L. Mus. L.C.M. (1922 List), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and
L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes,
"Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-nine. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations.
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition
by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus.B., Dunelm.,

F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations,
Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory) at 14, Hanover Square, W.1.
Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney. S.W.17.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge,"
"Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, Essay Models, Sight-
Reading, and Practical tests in 6 Lessons.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-23 ... 219 Correspondence Pupils successful.

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-23 ... 50 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

ARCHIBALD CURTIS, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

Professor of Singing, Trinity College of Music, VOCAL TEACHER. Special coaching for L.R.A.M., &c. Postal Course for Teachers. Many Successes. The Studios, 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice

Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for
L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-

INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End
Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form,
Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For
Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 403 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and
A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS.
FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,

Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen
Victoria Street, London, E.C., makes a speciality of PREPARING Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone. Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.

Latest Successes: DURHAM—Final Mus. Bac. : 2 out of 3 passes, both at first attempt. Mus. Bac. "Exercise" (3), after preliminary course in Composition. Also First Mus. Bac. (2). All in 1922.

Over 130 Successes at Durham. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.

Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920)

specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working.
Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing,

R. A. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for

L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony,
"Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

MR. HERBERT C. MORRIS, M.A. Cantab.,

F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., F.T.C.L. Postal Tuition for R.C.O., R.A.M., R.C.M., and T.C.L. Diplomas. Past Successes over 60. A.R.C.O. (25); F.R.C.O. (26).

99, Tottenhall Road, Wolverhampton.

DR. TAYLOR teaches through the post any musical subject. Accompaniments written or revised. Successful preparation for all exams. Portland Place, Lancaster.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.,

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
- (2.) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
- (3.) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
- (4.) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent Mus B. successes at Durham, including September, 1922.

2 L.R.A.M. successes, January, 1923.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

(Pianoforte) A.T.C.L. (Vocal and Pianoforte). Registered Teacher, T.R.C. Postal Tuition for Theoretical, above Diplomas: also General Musical Knowledge and Advice. Bawburgh, Norwich.

L.R.A.M. COACHING by SPECIALISTS (all

Musical Subjects and Elocution) for the practical examinations —125 Successes—also in the Harmony, Form, and Art of Teaching papers—either singly or together. Special Class for Aural
Tests. Apply, "Registrar," Metropolitan Academy of Music, Ltd., 72-74, High Street, Marylebone, W.1.

EASTBOURNE.

DOWNSMEADE BOARDING SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Modern education with special musical training if desired. Prospectus on application to the Headmaster, F. E. Wilson, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

CHAMPION HILL SCHOOL.—Choir School, Denmark Hill, S.E.5. Train 12 minutes Victoria. L.C.C. cars pass door. Solo and Chorus boys for Services, Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Telephone: Brixton 2124. Apply Secretary.

THERE will be a VACANCY after the Easter holidays in a Choir School for a boy with very good voice and some knowledge of music. Education, board, and lodging free. Evelyn Countess of Craven, Ashdown Park, Shrivensham.

SOLO and CHORUS BOYS supplied for Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Apply to Organist, St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.3.

CHRIST CHURCH, Crouch End, N. Additional ALTO SINGER REQUIRED. Excellent experience in the interpretation of modern music. £15. Apply, Dr. Walker Robson, Hulme, Tregaron Avenue, Crouch Hill, N.8.

LINCOLN CATHEDRAL.—LAY-VICAR (Tenor) REQUIRED. £115. Particulars and Application Forms (returnable March 8) from Canon Scott, Succentor.

ST. BARNABAS, KENSINGTON.—Chorus Alto and Bass, £12 to £16. Write, Ewart Dartrey, 8, Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn, N.W.6.

BARITONE (Church Soloist) for Oratorios, &c., "Olivet," "Penitence," Stainer's "Crucifixion" a specialité. Excellent Press notices. Address, "Hazeldene," Sudbury Avenue, Wembley.

THE CLIFTON COOKE SCHOOL OF SINGING. Established 1888. "Pre-eminent for Professional Training." Principal: Mr. Clifton Cooke (Author of "Practical Singing," Kegan, Paul & Co.), offers exceptional advantages to serious professional students. Periodical competitions for valuable Free and Assisted Scholarships. For interview address Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

WANTED, an ORGANIST and CHOIR-MASTER (Church of Ireland or England) for St. Columba's Church, Omagh (Northern Ireland), at a salary of £100 per annum. Applications, stating age, with copies of certificates, testimonials, references, and experience, to be received not later than March 7. For full particulars, apply to James Cadden, Hon. Secretary to Select Vestry, Omagh, Co. Tyrone.

PARISH CHURCH, Highgate.—Assistant-ORGANIST REQUIRED, able to sing ALTO regularly in Choir, latter essential. Suit professional pupil. In return, coaching and free practice on fine organ, electrically blown. Write, Mr. Geo. Pinches, F.R.C.O., 4, Hornsey Lane Gardens, N.6.

ORGANIST WANTED for New Ferry Church. Definite Evangelical tendencies. The Vicar, New Ferry, Birkenhead.

EXETER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

The College will elect next June to the HUBERT PARRY ORGAN SCHOLARSHIP, of the value of £95 per annum. Candidates must be unmarried, and not over twenty-two years of age on July 1, 1923. They should apply for further information to The Rector, Exeter College.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE. An EXAMINATION for the POST OF ORGANIST (who must be an Undergraduate Member of the College) will be held on Friday, April 20. Stipend £105. For further particulars apply to The Dean.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for the Congregational Church, Herne Bay. Nearly new Two-Manual Organ by Jones & Son. For particulars apply to Hon. Sec., Crofton Villa, Beacon Road.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Sutton Wesleyan Church. Good choir-trainer essential. Three-Manual, 33 speaking stops. Address, with full particulars of experience, salary required, &c., Secretary, Epworth Lodge, Hill Road, Sutton.

GUILDFORD GRAMMAR SCHOOL,
PERTH, WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

An ORGANIST AND MUSIC MASTER is REQUIRED for the above School. Salary £250 p.a., with board and residence during terms. Passage from England paid by Commonwealth Government line (2nd class) or P. & O. branch line. A three years' engagement is expected by the School Council, who will prefer a young, single man, able to take up duties at the earliest possible date.

The duties include playing at chapel services, training chapel choir, teaching pianoforte, giving at least one organ recital each term on the small modern Norman & Beard organ, and generally promoting an interest in music throughout the School.

Early application, with copies of testimonials, should be made to A. J. Leckie, Mus. Bac., c/o Agent-General for W. A., Savoy House, Strand, London.

STUDENT-ORGANIST is willing to deputise in return for Organ Practice, in City, West or South London, or Croydon Districts. Write, "C. D.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160 Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST - CHOIRMASTER REQUIRES APPOINTMENT in Midlands; Town preferred. Anglican music. Recommended by the Vicar of St. Thomas', Stafford. Apply, "Organist," 71, Doxey, Stafford.

BACH'S PASSION (St. John) at St. Anne's, Soho, during Lent. With Full Orchestra and Organ, Saturday, March 3 at 3.30 p.m., then on Fridays, March 9, 16, 23, and Wednesday, in Holy Week at 8 p.m. Also Good Friday at 4 p.m. For tickets send stamped addressed envelope to Rector, 28, Soho Square, W.1. North and South Galleries are free and unappropriated.

MUSICAL SCHOLARSHIP.

An ELECTION to a HOLROYD MUSICAL SCHOLARSHIP, £65 per annum, for excellence in some subject connected with vocal or instrumental music will be held at KEBLE COLLEGE, OXFORD, on WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6, 1923.

The Scholarship is open to men who are not members of the University, or who being members are in their first year of residence. It is primarily intended for those born or resident in Yorkshire.

Candidates must be members of the Church of England. Particulars regarding tenure, &c., may be obtained from The Bursar.

ACCOMPANIST (ex-service man) desires engagements. Has accompanied well-known artists. Terms moderate. "Accompanist," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for Sale.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—Pipe ORGAN, mellow tone. Suitable for small Church or Mission Hall. Two Manuals, eight Stops, and one coupler (Great to Swell). At present in St. James's Church, Littlehampton. Price £80. Apply to Captain Henley, 10, St. Catherine's Road, Littlehampton.

ORGAN (Pipe) FOR SALE.—8 Stops and Transposer. Hand or foot blower. No Pedals, but effect of pedalled bass by special mechanism. Suitable for side Chapel, Mission, or Public Hall. Full description and price on application to L. C. Venables, 1a, Templar Street, S.E.5.

ORGANS FOR SALE.—Two Manuals and Pedals, from 10 to 18 Stops. First-class Instruments. Low prices. Henry Speechly & Sons, Organ Works, Saint Mark's Road, Dalston, E.8.

TO ORGAN-BUILDERS. Tenders requested for the Removal and Purchase of Two FEEDERS and Two Hydraulic ENGINES from the blowing chamber of Holy Trinity Church, Trinity Rise, Tulse Hill, S.W. Apply to Mr. Tull, 35, Palace Road, Streatham Hill, S.W.2.

NORMAN & BEARD'S Pneumatic Pedal Attachment (radiating, concave) complete with stool. Practically new. £20. Offers. 19, Kirk Street, Derby.

SCHUMANN UPRIGHT, equal new, 40 guineas. Brilliant tone. Genuine bargain. 90, North Road, Highgate, N.6.

FOR SALE.—Broadwood Concert Grand Piano. Splendid condition and tone. Sixty guineas. Inspection by appointment. Apply, "H. M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd. 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SEMI-GRAND PIANO, by Broadwood, good condition. Stored in London. Price £45, or offer. Write. Mrs. Roscoe, 89, Tidewell Road, Eastbourne.

OBOE and COR ANGLAIS.—Experienced Oboist accepts engagements for Orchestral Concerts, Oratorios, &c. (High and low pitch). Vacancies for keen pupils (amateur or professional). Write, "Oboist," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—Clavier, in excellent condition. £9. Pook, 24, Lewisham Road, Highgate, N.W.5.

FRANCIS J. HILL, A.R.A.M., at liberty March 26 to April 30, as PRINCIPAL 'CELLO for CHORAL and ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS. &c. Recent engagements include: Gloucester Choral; Teddington Philharmonic; Kingston and District Musical; Malvern Orchestral; Worcester Festival Choral Societies; Kingston String Quartet, &c., &c. Address: Music School, Marlborough College, Wilts.

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL.

WEEKLY
ORGAN RECITALS

EVERY THURSDAY EVENING AT 6.30 P.M.

The Recitalists for the remainder of the present Series are as follows:

MAR. 1st.	MR. REGINALD GOSS-CUSTARD, F.R.C.O.,	of St. Michael's Church, Chester Square.
„ 8th.	MR. EDGAR T. COOK, MUS.BAC., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.,	of Southwark Cathedral.
„ 15th.	DR. ALAN GRAY, F.R.C.O.,	of Trinity College, Cambridge.
„ 22nd.	DR. E. C. BAIRSTOW, F.R.C.O.,	of York Minster.

One of the chief objects of these recitals is to give those interested an opportunity for hearing the finest Organ music played by Organists of the front rank on a modern instrument and under ideal conditions acoustically.

THE “DISCUS”

REGD.

ORGAN BLOWER

THE QUIET EFFICIENCY OF THE “DISCUS”—

Blower is largely responsible for its widespread adoption in Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. Nearly a thousand are now in use. Apart from its quietness of working the “Discus” is a very attractive financial proposition. It saves the wages of a blower, and gives the organist the opportunity for rehearsal at all times. Any organ, large or small, can be fitted with the “Discus,” and the motive power may be either electric motor, gas, or oil engine. Constructed of metal throughout, well designed and of the best workmanship. Its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOKLET.

MADE BY

B. WATKINS AND WATSON

ORGAN BLOWING SPECIALISTS FOR THE PAST THIRTY YEARS

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ blowing.

WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

Telegrams: “HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON.”

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

March 7th, at 3 p.m.—Lecture Recital: "The use of the Organ in Old English Chamber Music," by Dr. C. W. PEARCE, M.A., assisted by Mr. LOUIS PECSKAI and Mr. L. LEBELL.

March 10th.—Last day of entry for the next open competition for Scholarships.

March 12th.—Last day of entry for the April Diploma and Higher Certificates Examinations.

March 14th, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.

March 20th, at 3 p.m.—Orchestral Concert at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W. (Sole lesses of Hall: Messrs. Chappell & Co.)

March 22nd, at 3 p.m.—Concert at Steinway Hall.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

A Special Course of Training for Music Teachers has been instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, and has been approved by the Council.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

MESSRS. ELKIN & CO., LTD., have pleasure in announcing two new Songs by

ROGER QUILTER

(Poems by ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON).

IN THE HIGHLANDS.

Two Keys: E♭ (B♭ to E♭) and G♭.

OVER THE LAND IS APRIL.

Three Keys: B♭, C (D to E) and D.

Price each 2s. net.

Thematic Booklet of ROGER QUILTER'S Songs (including these two), free on application.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

And of all Music Sellers.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

THE SEVCIK

VIOLIN METHOD, OPP. I, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9.

There is nothing in the world to excel these Opera. They were the works of a Master in his years of super-creative power.

Age 30 to 50; 1885-1905.

From 1900 to 1910 they produced KUBELIK, KOCIAN, and a dozen other brilliant stars.

No other works or weary elaborations can reduce the brilliance or concentrated pedagogic effect in these works.

Op. 1. School of Violin Technics. I., 5/6; II., 6/6; IV., 4/6; V., 5/6.

Op. 2. School of Bowing Technics. I., II., V., each 2/6; III., IV., VI., each 2/-.

Op. 3. Forty Variations. 2/6.

Op. 6. Violin Method for Beginners. 7 Parts, 1/6 each.

Op. 7. Studies Preparatory to the Shaker. I. & II., 4/- each.

Op. 8. Changes of Position and Preparatory Scale Studies. 3/6.

Op. 9. Preparatory Studies in Double Stopping. 3/6.

"AIDS TO THE STUDY OF THE SEVCIK METHOD."

Gratis and post free.

It is put simply and clearly by one of the most experienced London Professors, and will prove that it is the best of all Methods in the long run.

"THE LITTLE SEVCIK."

A Practical Concentration and Simplification of Op. 6, and is THE METHOD OF ALL METHODS FOR BEGINNERS.

Price 3/6 net.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR,' 'GRAHAM P. MOORE'S 'FIRST PRINCIPLES.'

Publishers of 'SEVCIK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES,' 'MACFARREN'S 'THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSON,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

Copyright Owners of the Steingraber Edition for Great Britain and the Colonies.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SIX TRADITIONAL MELODIES

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE DUET

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

No.

1. FELTON'S GAVOTTE.

2. ENGLISH FOLK-SONG—"How delightful to see."

3. IRISH MELODY—"Silent, O Moyle."

4. SCOTCH MELODY—"Wi' a hundred pipers."

5. WELSH MELODY—"Loudly proclaim"

("Ymadawiad y Brenin").

6. ENGLISH FOLK-SONG—"The Keys of Canterbury."

N.B.—These duets are so arranged that in Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 6 the Primo part, and in Nos. 4 and 5 the Secondo part, may easily be played by a boy or girl not very advanced in technique.

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

MARCH 1 1923

CONTENTS.

	Page
Moussorgsky as a Song Writer.—II. By Ernest Newman	165
Robert Jones and his Prefaces. By Philip Heseltine (concluded)	168
Some Czechoslovak Choral Works.—I. Vítězlav Novák's Storm , Op. 42. By Rosa Newmarch ...	171
Franck's Organ Music.—II. By Harvey Grace ...	174
An Amateur on Critics. By Robert Lorenz ...	178
The Musician's Bookshelf	180
New Music	183
Occasional Notes	185
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	192
Church and Organ Music	193
Competition Festival Record	195
The Amateurs' Exchange	196
Letters to the Editor	196
Sixty Years Ago... ..	198
Sharps and Flats	198
Royal Academy of Music	198
Royal College of Music... ..	199
Trinity College of Music	199
Byrd and Weelkes	199
London Concerts	200
Recollections of Life at Cairo. By Frederick Kitchener	203
Music in the Provinces	204
Music in Ireland... ..	207
Musical Notes from Abroad	207
Obituary	211
Miscellaneous	211

MUSIC.

'Now if Christ be preached that He rose from the dead.' Easter Anthem. By W. WOLSTENHOLME	187
---	-----

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this Number:
'The Reproaches.' By the Rev. Horace Spence.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than TUESDAY, MARCH 20 (FIRST POST).

MOUSSORGSKY AS A SONG WRITER

BY ERNEST NEWMAN

II.

Not twenty per cent. of Moussorgsky's songs will, I am afraid, survive a critical examination. Some of them show a technical incompetence so complete and an invention so commonplace that it is hard to believe they are the work of the composer of Death's Serenade and Gathering Mushrooms. In the output of no other distinguished song-writer, no matter how often he may fall below his best, shall we find anything so poor as King Saul, Night, The Wanderer, Sphinx, The Minstrel's Song, or A Vision. Almost all his typical defects can be studied in this last song—his general technical helplessness, his shapelessness, his attempt, in the last bar of the vocal melody, to appear original by an effect of unfinish, and then, in the final foolish little pianoforte arpeggio, the unmistakable signature of the amateur who does not know how to end.

There was a strong strain of sentimentality in him—a curious strain to be running alongside that of what he imagined to be relentless realism. How on earth, we ask ourselves, came the composer of The Wanderer into the Petersburg of the 'seventies? His place is among the English or American writers of shop-ballads of the present day: there only can he sit among his peers. But any student who has burrowed much below the surface of the Russian song as represented by the half-dozen great writers, knows that the rank and file wallow in a sentimentality that can be equalled in no other European song but the English. Moussorgsky, apparently, could not escape the general infection in his weaker moments. There is no broader brotherhood in the world than that of the musical sentimentalists. Wherever the breed is met with, it is true to type. Everywhere it speaks the same musical language—an exasperating language, oily, facile, fundamentally insincere; the expression not of something the man has really felt, but of something he feels he ought to have felt. Even some of Moussorgsky's better songs seem to us, now that they have lost their first novelty, tarred with the sentimental—for Russian music, like German, has what Romain Rolland would call its national lie. If German sentimentality has its well-known traditional pretexts for tearfulness, Russian sentimentality has its peasant and its orphan. Of both we become, in time, as tired as of the German young man and maiden with their longings and their ribbons and their flowers. Moussorgsky, the professed realist, is as guilty as any of the German sentimentalists of procuring sympathy under false pretences—of playing, that is, upon our humanitarianism by means of a stock figure of pathos. He resorted to the device a little too often. Standardised pathos of this sort is as well within the scope of the second- or third-rate as of the first-rate men: Cui, in his Hunger Song, can paint as tragic a figure of a starving peasant as Moussorgsky; and Kopyloff, in his Labourer's Song, can stir equally effectively the latent sociologist or welfare-worker that there is in each of us. But in all these cases we have a slightly uncomfortable feeling that we are being worked upon, in part at any rate, by other means than those of art; the music, not particularly good in itself, gets the support of our own strong social feeling, just as in the oratorios so beloved of the English public a good deal of poor music is not recognised as poor because it is reinforced by the hearer's religious emotion. Now and then, however, the greater Moussorgsky rises above this mere conventional Russian sentiment about peasants and orphans, and then we get a cry that is universal and enduring in its appeal.

We can mostly write off too, I think, those of Moussorgsky's songs in which he merely underlines the words or turns them into musical graphic. This kind of thing is so easy to do in music that I am astonished at the praise Moussorgsky has had in some quarters for doing it. Finding a sort of musical equivalent for an external image is almost the lowest form of the musical faculty's functioning. Every composer, of course, indulges himself in it at times; but with the big composers it is always a secondary thing, taken, as it were, in the stride of a work. Moreover, the graphic or pictorial is only tolerable when at the same time that it describes the external it makes good music. Most of Moussorgsky's pictorialism fails to comply with this condition. He shows himself a dilettante by his almost childish delight in making pictures in music, and by his childish belief that having made a picture-phrase or two he has made a work. There could hardly be found more instructive specimens of the weaknesses of the pictorial song than The Goat or Master Haughty. The satire of The Musicians' Peep-Show and The Classicist seems to me mostly the poorest of poor stuff; any amateur could do this kind of thing, and no composer of gifts who was not half an amateur would think this kind of thing worth wasting his time upon. Nor can I share the admiration of some of my colleagues for what I have ventured to call the patter-songs. This way of writing music—the imitation of the accents of the speaking-voice—is also one of the easiest. An amateur can bring off many quite good effects in it. It is true that Moussorgsky, in such songs as The Seminarist and pages here and there of the Children's Songs, does the thing better than most amateurs; but it is hardly worth doing at all, and no song composer who has been an out-and-out composer has ever wasted his time on it. He has had in him too much music clamouring for utterance for that. The genre is pre-eminently the amateur's own.

For these and other novelties Moussorgsky got a good deal of credit in the Western world—until the novelty wore off, and the new thing was seen to be of no particular importance for the future of music. He has been over-praised, I think, as a rhythmist, the truth being simply that some of his rhythms were new to Western musicians. And they were what they were merely because the Russian language is what it is. Our English sense of song-rhythm has been moulded, naturally, by the typical rhythms of our own language and by the very similar rhythms of that German song-literature that has been almost as native to us as our own. The rhythms of Russian are often very different from these; and a Russian composer has only to follow faithfully the metre of a line to produce what seems to our Western ears a strikingly new musical rhythm. Moussorgsky's frequent changes of time-signature were not, as is popularly supposed, the result of a rhythmical sense so subtle that it could not be contained within the ordinary duple or triple metres, but the result merely of a rigidly syllabic treatment of the poetic line. Look, for example, at the opening lines of the song The Feast, in which I have given a rough transliteration of the beginning of the Russian text:

Ex. 1.

Mas-sive fold-ing gates now wide-ly o-pen stand
Vo-ro-ta te-so-vwee ras-tvo-rya-lee-sya,
Filled with many a guest great sled-ges drive be-tween.
Kind-ly host and host-ess go to greet there friends.*

* I.e., to greet friends there (!).

It will be seen that every syllable has its note; and this procedure is maintained through the whole of the thirty-five bars of the song. How purely Russian is the rhythm thus obtained is shown by the difficulties of the English translator. It is impossible, indeed, to translate certain Russian poetic rhythms into English, for they are alien to our tongue. We can imitate them for a line or two, but we cannot keep it up, except at the expense of elasticity and naturalness. Of all translators for music, the translator from the Russian is most to be pitied: his task is often a hopeless one. In the above example, for instance, it will be seen how as early as the third bar the rhythm ceases to be Russian and becomes English: we instinctively feel the musical phrase to end on the 'guest,' and the 'great' to be the up-take of bar 4, whereas in the Russian bar 3 is a genuine 3-2, with three emphatic accents | —U'—U'—U' | not | —U'—U'— | U

The point can perhaps be made clearer by a couple of quotations from Gathering Mushrooms. Here Moussorgsky's rhythmic plan is a series of two-bar phrases in common time, involving a number of those double or treble rhymes that are so scarce or difficult in English, but are plentiful in so highly inflected a language as Russian. The translator is virtually compelled to abandon the Russian scheme of making the ends of the lines coincide with the ends of the bars, and to resort to the custom of treating the last syllable of a bar as merely the up-take to the following bar:

Ex. 2 ba - tyu-shkee

Both those lov-ing pa-rents Of him I own for ma - too-shkee skryazh - ni - tchat hus-band May cease to be so stin-gy And po - brazh - ni - tchat.

soon pre-pare a ban-quet.

and again:

Ex. 3. ne - me - lo - moo da

But for him I mar-ried, That pit-eous wretch-ed khe - lo - moo o - ko - shech - ko crea-ture, Just by the o-pen win-dow, I'll loo ko - shech - ko place be-times a bas-ket. Filled up

To sing the song in English is thus to miss the essence of Moussorgsky's rhythm, and so to miss something of the psychology of the character which expresses itself in this rhythm—to say nothing of the occasional effects of disjointed accent.

If we glance at the song 'Interior' (from the Sunless cycle) we see again how spontaneously Moussorgsky's song-rhythms flow from the rhythm of the poetry, and how impossible it is to bend the English language to quite the same curves: note especially the frequency of the double and triple rhymes, and the effect (not to be reproduced in English) of the tapering away of the phrases into vowel sounds:

Ex. 4.

Kom-nat-ka tes-na-ya te-kha-ya, me-la-ya

Ten ne-pro-glya dna-ya, ten bez ot-vet-na-ya

Du-ma glu-bo-ka-ya, ne-snya u-ne-la-ya

We see, then, that although some of Moussorgsky's rhythms are unusual, from the Western point of view, we can hardly put them down to the subtlety of his rhythmic sense: he comes upon them as a matter of course in merely following the poem syllable by syllable. The test of a musician's rhythmic sense, however, is not the number or variety of his time-signatures, but the delightful unexpectedness—and at the same time naturalness—of his accents within an apparently set metrical scheme; it is herein that lies the secret of those princes of rhythm, the Elizabethan madrigalists. As I have pointed out elsewhere, an irregular metrical formula may be woefully monotonous, because the accents recur always at the same places, while a regular metrical formula, by varying the places of accentual impact, may be made full of variety. The most monotonous movement, rhythmically speaking, of the Pathetic Symphony is the one in 5-4 time; just as monotonous is the 11-4 chorus in Rimsky-Korsakov's Sadko. The composers here, in trying to escape from the fetters of 2-4 or 3-4 time, have merely imposed heavier fetters on themselves.

Some day, perhaps, these irregular metres will be handled with the same abundant elasticity as the regular metres.* But the practice of the Russians shows that they present a good deal of difficulty even to composers to whose language they are native. Moussorgsky is rarely so monotonous in rhythm as when he is doggedly following out his plan of altering the time-signature in bar after bar in conformity with the poetic metre; the total effect is as truly mechanical as that of any song written throughout in a four-square metre with the one unvarying distribution of pulses could be. The Spirit in Heaven may be cited as an example. Sometimes, as in Misfortune or The Ragamuffin, we get all the charm of the irregular metre and little or no sense of rhythmic monotony, partly because the fall of the accents is varied within the lines, partly because Moussorgsky has had the sense to distribute a few rests over the song. On the other hand, the very persistence of one of those irregular rhythms may have a wonderful potency, as in the great song Savishna, where the breathless, unpausing 5-4 rhythm conveys as nothing else could the fever of the poor villager's soul.

We are finally left with about a dozen songs that nobody else could have written. In the Songs and Dances of Death, the Russian sentimentalist of some of the other songs becomes the universal humanist—speaking Russian indeed, but a Russian that is intelligible to us all. The songs are sometimes shapeless, but the primitive power of them makes their shapelessness seem less a fault than a virtue. In the Peasant's Lullaby (No. 7 of the Bessel volume) the introduction of quite a new strain for the final section, after the long insistence on the main theme of the song,

* It is curious, by the way, how exotic they remain in the hands of an Englishman with a really good sense of rhythm. He seems no sooner to have plunged into a 5-4 rhythm than he hastens to assure us, by some variant of accent or of grouping that suggests a more regular rhythm, that he really did not mean it after all. A very instructive example is to be seen in the excellent Fantasy by R. O. Morris that was recently published by the Carnegie Trust.

would be a piece of bad design that would damn any song by any other composer; but somehow it does not greatly matter here. Moussorgsky is at his greatest, in his songs as in his operas, when he seems to concentrate the character and the history of his race into a page or two; and when he is doing this his roughness and his shapelessness no more matter than do the roughness and shapelessness of Dostoevsky. But he remains an insoluble problem—a baffling mixture of genius, talent, and dilettantism, of the raw primitive and the polished classicist. There is nothing in all song-literature more admirably shaped or more perfectly finished than Gathering Mushrooms; while in the Sunless cycle he is seen trying all sorts of experiments—some of them successfully—and giving all sorts of hints to future composers. Both Debussy and Stravinsky have made good use, for example, of a striking harmonic sequence that appears in No more those happy, careless days. Had he only been able to master a genuine technique, what might he not have done? But he was apparently of the type that rather prides itself on its dilettantism. All in all, Tchaikovsky summed him up shrewdly and fairly in a letter of 1879:

With regard to Moussorgsky, as you very justly remark, he is 'used up.' His gifts are perhaps the most remarkable of all, but his nature is narrow and he has no aspiration towards self-perfection. He has been too easily led away by the absurd theories of his set and the belief in his own genius. Besides which his nature is not of the finest quality, and he likes what is coarse, unpolished, and ugly. . . . He plays with his lack of polish, and even seems proud of his want of skill, writing just as it comes to him, believing blindly in the infallibility of his genius. As a matter of fact, his very original talent flashes forth now and again.

ROBERT JONES AND HIS PREFACES

By PHILIP HESELTINE

(Concluded from February number page 100.)

In common with all Jones's, and most of his contemporaries', song-books this volume contains twenty-one songs. The precise significance of this figure is not clear, though the product of two such traditionally fortunate numbers as 3 and 7 may have been considered singularly propitious.

As a good example of the style of the work, the opening strain of No. 12, Farewell, dear love, since thou wilt needs be gone, may be quoted:

EX. 1.

Fare - well, dear love, since thou wilt needs be gone

Mine eyes do show my life is al - most done.

This is one of the snatches of song bawled out by Sir Toby Belch in Twelfth Night (II., 3), when Maria and Malvolio come in to protest against the shindy he and Sir Andrew are kicking-up in the middle of the night. The words are almost identical, and it seems likely that the tune Shakespeare knew was this one of Jones's, seeing that Twelfth Night was produced in the year following the publication of Jones's book. The popularity of the song is attested by the appearance in the composer's fourth book, nine years later, of a song identical in metre and very similar in melody, Farewell, fond youth, if thou hadst not been blind.

The Second Booke of Songs and Ayres, Set out to the Lute, the base Violl the playne way, or the Base by tableture after the leero fashion, appeared in 1601. It is dedicated To the right virtuous and worthy Knight Sir Henry Lennard:

Worthy Sir and my honourable friend, I give you this Child, I pray you bring it up, because I am a poor man and cannot maintain it. It may suffer much adversity in my name: your Fortune may alter his stars and make him happy. Though his Father be alive, I may call him an Orphan, for poor men's Children are Orphans born, and more to be pitied than they that have changed their fathers for their lands. Such may raise themselves in due time: we have no way to heighten our being but by another power. As gentlewomen peeces themselves with tires and coronets, to appear more personable and tall, so must we add unto our littleness (if we will not be scorned for dwarfs) the crown of gentle persons more eminent and high. Our statures are not set above danger; we lie low, fit for every foot to tread upon, our place is the ground, there is nothing beneath us, and yet detraction will pull us lower if we have not good aspects. They will find means to dig and let us down into the earth and bury us before our time. This is the cause of patronage, and this is the persecution of them that would engross all glory into their own hands. But see the rage of these men, they bite the fruits themselves should feed upon. Virtue would bring forth many children but they hold them in the womb that they dare not come out. As the covetous man besiegeth all the land about him with statutes, fines and bands and other such like civil war, so doth the ambitious entrap the little portion of any commendations that may fall besides him. And like the merciless soldiers, the castles they cannot take, they blow up. They are as sparing of every small remnant of credit as if it were laid up in common-bank and the more were given away, the less would come to their shares. They are miserable men: I will only brand them with this mark and let them go. They were eagles, if they did not catch flies; as they are, they are great things, much less than nothing. For my part, I will not contend with them; I desire no applause or commendations. Let them have the fame of echoes and sounds, and let me be a bird in your cage, to sing to myself and you. This is my content, and this my ambition. If I have this, I fail not in my expectation; if more for your sake, that is my advantage and I will owe you duty for it. In the meantime I rest

At your Worship's service,

ROBERT JONES.

The reader is addressed thus:

Reader, I have once more adventured to ask thy counsel, whether I have done well or no in taking thus much pains to please thee. All that I will say for myself is: My intent towards thee was good, yet because perhaps I know thee not and I as yet am not grown so confident to warrant my endeavours against all men, I hold it no shame to crave uprightness in thy censure, as I mean not to accuse myself of negligence by begging thy favour: wherein I choose rather to deserve thy commendations than by my own praises to set my labours out to sale. The truth is, although I was not so idle when I composed these Ayres that I dare not stand to the hazard of their examination, yet I would be glad (if it might be) that thy friendly approbation might give me encouragement to sound my thankfulness more sweetly in thine ears hereafter. If the ditties dislike thee, 'tis my fault that was so bold to publish the private contentments of divers gentlemen without their consents, though (I hope) not against their wills: wherein if thou find anything to meet with thy desire, thank me, for they were never meant thee. I know not how the vulgar esteem of travel [sc. travail=work], but methinks there should be no gentleman (when he may buy so much pains for so little money) that will not conclude he can at least be no loser by the bargain. If any musician will out of the pride of his cunning disdain me and these my beginnings as things not worth his envy, these are to desire him (if he be not grown past all charity) that he would accept the subscription of my name as a sufficient testimony that I am not ashamed of instruction, wherein soever I may appear to have outrun my justification. As for the rest that would fain inform men they know something by their general dislike of everything, I will not so much as desire them to be silent, lest I should hereby teach them at least how they might seem wise. For the book I will say only thus much: there hath not yet been any extant of this fashion which, if thou shalt pronounce to be but worth thy hearing, I rest satisfied, if not thy debtor. Farewell.

If 'this fashion' designate a book of songs for one voice with instrumental accompaniment, the last statement is incorrect, for the preceding year had seen the publication of Morley's book of solo songs (of which the sole surviving copy is now, alas! in America, and inaccessible), and of the twenty-eight numbers in Cavendish's book (published in 1598) fourteen are for a single voice with the lute. Where Jones's second book is unique is in the provision of an alternative accompaniment for the bass viol tuned lyra- (or leero-) wise tableture and bass viol part in ordinary notation for playing with the lute.

[i.e., ], in addition to the usual lute

This book contains some of Jones's choicest and most original work. Particularly charming are the songs *Now what is love? with its fantastic harmonies (which are too clearly indicated in both tablatures to be misprints) and the delightful little four-note figure that haunts the last two lines of each verse:

Ex. 2.

It is per-haps that sance-ing bell

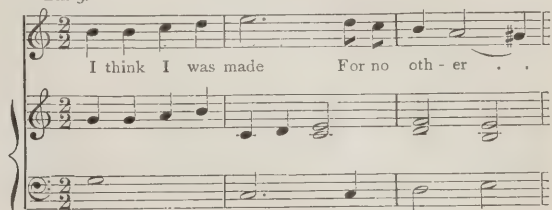

* This setting of Raleigh's words was doubtless the one used in Thomas Heywood's play The Rape of Lucrece (Act 2., Scene 1).

that tolls us in - to heaven or hell.

and Did ever man thus love as I? with the delicious sequence in the fourth line:

Ex. 3.

I think I was made For no oth-er

trade, My mind

The dedication of the madrigal set (to Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury), published in 1607, is a not particularly brilliant example of what Alfonso Ferrabosco the younger, a man 'not made of much speech,' stigmatized as 'that solemn industry of many in Epistles [to] enforce all that hath been said in praise of the Faculty and make that commend the work.' But in offering his Ultimum Vale or the Third Booke of Ayres to Henry Prince of Wales a year later his literary ability reasserted itself in this admirable passage:

Almost all our knowledge is drawn through the senses: they are the soul's intelligencers whereby she passeth into the world and the world into her, and amongst all of them, there is none so learned as the ear, none hath obtained so excellent an art, so delicate, so abstruse, so spiritual, that it catcheth up wild sounds in the air and brings them under a government not to be expressed but done, and done by no skill but its own. There is music in all things, but every man cannot find it out, because of his own jarring; he must have a harmony in himself that should go about it, and then he is in a good way, as he that hath a good ear is in a good forwardness to our faculty. Conceit is but a well-tun'd fancy, done in time and place: an excellent sentence is but a well-tun'd reason well knit together: polity, or the subject thereof, a commonwealth, is but a well-tun'd song where all parts do agree and meet together, with full consent and harmony one serving other and every one themselves in the same labour. But now I intrude into your art, in which all pray (and see hopes) that God will give you a godly and prosperous knowledge, and then all other arts shall prosper under it.

But the popular little sportsman prince came to an untimely end four years afterwards, and when his younger brother Charles was on the throne the 'commonwealth' (fateful and prophetic word!) was anything but a well-tun'd song.

Ultimum Vale contains six solo songs, followed by some duets and four-part ayres, including Think'st thou, Kate, to put me down, which, though too frank a piece of humour for the modern concert-platform, has one of the best tunes Jones ever wrote—and all within the compass of a fifth!

Ex. 4.

Think'st thou, Kate, to put me down With a no or with a frown? Since love holds my heart in bands I must do, I must do, I must do as love com-mands.

Having taken his 'last farewell' of the musical public the composer must have caused a certain amount of amusement when he came out with yet another book of songs within a twelve-month. One is reminded of certain 'farewell' concerts of modern times; and of Mr. Max Beerbohm who followed up his Works with More, Yet again, And even now. The excuse which Jones puts forward in the dedication (to Sir John Levinthorpe) of A Muscicall Dreame, Or the Fourth Booke of Ayres is sufficiently humorous:

It is not unknown unto your well-deserving self, Right Worshipful, that not long since I took my Ultimum Vale, with a resolving in myself never to publish any works of the same nature and fashion; whereupon I betook me to the ease of my pillow, where Somnus having taken possession of my eyes and Morpheus the charge of my senses, it happened me to fall into a musical dream wherein I chanced to have many opinions and extravagant humours of divers natures and conditions, some of modest mirth, some of amorous love, and some of most divine contemplation. All these, I hope, shall not give any distaste to the ears or dislike to the mind, either in their words or in their several sounds, although it is not necessary to relate or divulge all dreams or phantasies that opinion begets in sleep or happeneth to the mind's apparition.

But he had evidently come in for some hostile criticism since his last publication, for in place of the usual address to the reader we have here a page of savage invective against his detractors which even Mr. Josef Holbrooke could scarcely surpass:

TO ALL MUSICAL MURMURERS
THIS GREETING

Thou, whose ear itches with the variety of opinion, hearing thine own sound, as the echo reverberating others' substance, and unprofitable in itself, shows to the world comfortable noise, though to thy own use little pleasure by reason of uncharitable censure—I speak to thee, musical Momus, thou from whose nicety numbers as easily pass as drops fall in the shower, but with less profit. I compare thee to the highway dust that flies into men's eyes and will not thence without much trouble, for thou in thy dispersed judgment not only art offensive to seeing knowledge but most faulty false to deserving industry, picking motes out of the most pure bliss and smoothing the plainest velvet when only thine own opinion is more wrinkled and more vicious in itself than grosser soil, so that as a brush infected with filth thou rather soilest than makest perfect any way. I have stood at thine elbow and heard thee profane even music's best note and with thy untun'd relish Sol Fade most ignobly. I am assured, and I care not greatly, that thou wilt lay to my charge my whilom vow 'never again' because I promised as much; but understand me, thou unskilful descant, derive from that note of plain song charitable numbers and thou shalt find harsh voices are often a note above E la reduced by truer judgment, which I bereave thee of, knowing thy rules are as our new-come lutes, being of many strings, not easily used, unless in adventure, till practise put forward into deserving division. This my adventure is no deed but a dream, and what are dreams but airy possessions and several ayres, breathing harmonious whisperings: though to thee discord, yet to others indifferent—I will not say excellent because it is another's office, not mine. But let them be as they are, others' profits and my pains, set forth for pleasure, not for purposed poison to infect imagination, no, but as a shower falling in a needful season, so I flatter myself at least and will say so ever by any other whose labour shall uplift musical meditation, the only wing of true courage being the most pleasing voice of man whose sweetness reacheth unto heaven itself. It is hard if all this pains reap not good commendations, and it is water wrung out of a flint in thee sith thou never thinkst well of any and wert in thyself so unskilful ever as thy tutor from the first hour could never make thee sing in tune. Be as thou art, a lump of deformity without fashion, bred in the bowels of disdain, and brought forth by bewitch'd Megara the fatal midwife to all true merit.

Give me leave to depart, or if not, without it I am gone, careless of thy censuring and fully persuaded thou canst not think well and therefore art curst in thy cradle never to be but cruel, and being born with teeth in thy head bitst every one harmless in this or what else honest industry makes thy ear gossip too.

Farewell if thou wilt in kindness, or hold thyself from further carping.

This book contains seven duets, eleven four-part ayres, and three solo songs, two of which have Italian words. In one of the duets occurs a reference to a very curious superstition that seems to have been current at the time, to the effect that 'she that dies a maid must lead an ape in hell.' It is first mentioned in Lyly's Euphues (published in the middle of the reign of the Virgin Queen!), and crops up no fewer than four times in the song-books, viz., in Maynard's XII. Wonders of the World, Corkine's Second Booke of Ayres, Campian's song of the 'Fairie Queen Proserpina' in the Rosseter book, and in the Musical Dream. Its origin has yet to be explained.

Jones's last publication was another book of solo songs, The Muses' Gardin for Delights, which appeared in 1610. The dedication to the Lady Wroth, daughter of Sir Robert Sidney by his first wife, begins thus:

Most honoured Lady, my eldest and first issue having thriv'd so well under the protection of your right honourable father, blame not this my youngest and last babe if it desirously seek sanctuary with yourself, as being a most worthy branch from so noble and renowned a stock . . .

and continues in the conventionally panegyric manner. The fit of spleen against the critics seems to have passed off, for this time the preface is addressed To the friendly Censurers:

Dear friends, for so I call you if you please to accept my good meaning, I presented you last with a Dream, in which I doubt not but your fantasies have received some reasonable contentment; and now if you please to be awaked out of that Dream, I shall for your recreation and refreshing guide you to the MUSES' GARDEN where you shall find such variety of delights that questionless you will willingly spend some time in the view thereof. In your first entrance into which Garden you shall meet with Love, Love and nought but Love, set forth at large in his colours by way of deciphering him in his nature. In the midst of it you shall find Love rejected upon inconstancy and hard measure of ingratitude; touching them that are lovers, I leave them to their own censure in Love's description. And now for the end, it is variable in another manner for the delight of the ear to satisfy opinion. I am not so arrogant to commend mine own gifts, neither yet so degenerate as to beg your toleration. If these delights of flowers or variety of fruits may any way be pleasing to your senses, I shall be glad. Otherwise I will vow never to set, sow, plant or graft, and my labours henceforth shall cease to trouble you. If you will needs mislike, I care not: I will prevent your censures and defy your malice. If you despise me, I am resolute: if you use me with respect, I bid you most heartily

Farewell,

R. J.

Twelve songs from this book, representing Jones at his best and blithest are now available in print. Apart from their entrancing tunes, they are remarkable for the number of false relations and other harmonic piquancies they contain. The following quotation provides a good example, as well as illustrating—in the cadence preceding the change of time-signature—a triple rhythm within the framework of the duple metre:

Ex. 5.

That once was high and got a . . fall,

O wil-low, wil-low, wil - low!

In 1614 Jones contributed three numbers to Sir William Leighton's Tears or Lamentations of a Sorrowful Soul (he had, in 1601, also contributed a madrigal to The Triumphs of Oriana). Otherwise, he gave no music to the world after 1610. In this year we find him associated with Philip Rosseter and two others as a director of the Children of the Queen's Revels, the company of juvenile actors for whom Ben Jonson wrote

Cynthia's Revels and The Poetaster. This was doubtless the company referred to with some acrimony in Hamlet (II., 2):

. . . there is, Sir, an airy of children, little eyases, that cry out on the top of question, and are most tyrannically clapped for't: these are now the fashion, and so berattle the common stages—as they call them—that many, wearing rapiers, are afraid of goose-quills, and dare scarce come thither.

Six years later a patent was granted to the four partners to erect a theatre on the site of the house, near Puddle Wharf, Blackfriars, where Jones was then residing. The house was pulled down and the theatre was well on the way to completion when the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the city, growing alarmed at the increasing number of the theatres, raised an agitation against the project which resulted in a royal edict ordering that the theatre be forthwith dismantled. After this we hear no more of Robert Jones, nor do we know when and where this genial person (in the English and German senses of the word) died and was buried.

SOME CZECHOSLOVAK CHORAL WORKS

BY ROSA NEWMARCH

I.

VÍTĚZLAV NOVÁK'S STORM, OP. 42

Among a people so addicted to choral singing as the Czechoslovaks, an effective and well-balanced cantata is sure of appreciation. The same may be said of this country. Yet, since the appearance of Dvořák's The Spectre's Bride, in 1882—a work we have almost come to regard as one of our own classics—not one cantata of Bohemian origin has found its way into our choral repertoires. Meanwhile Dvořák's successors have not been idle in this particular sphere of art. It is my object in these articles to call attention to a few highly-developed cantatas, modern in feeling, and, as regards choral technique, keeping step with the ever-increasing desire of singers and conductors for new difficulties to grapple with and overcome.

One of the first to follow in the footsteps of Dvořák was his pupil, Vítězslav Novák, now the Director of the Prague Conservatoire, who, in 1909, dedicated to the Brno Musical Society his setting of Svatopluk Cech's poem Storm. Novák has described his work as 'a Sea Fantasy for orchestra, soli, and mixed chorus.' Although Cech writes of the sea with the inherent authority of one who has lived much by its shores, yet his poem, which consists chiefly of lyrical numbers, offers considerable dramatic and graphic variety for musical treatment. Its main psychological themes are the passion of the Sea and the passion of Love: both made manifest in their many and complex moods. Novák, in spite of his Central European origin, is a sea-worshipper, and brings to his task impressions of visits to many coasts: the changeful Adriatic, the cold, grey, shallow waters of the Skagerrack, and the Atlantic rollers breaking on the shores of Brittany. Storm is almost a sea symphony with chorus obbligato.

The work is laid out for strings, three flutes, two oboes, cor Anglais, two clarinets, bass clarinet, two bassoons, double-bassoon, six horns, three trumpets, three trombones, and tuba: a full complement of percussion, harp, pianoforte, and organ; solo soprano, tenor, baritone, bass, and chorus. The pianoforte is used as an orchestral instrument for many special and realistic effects, such as the tossing spray showers, the cracking of the whip in the slave's reminiscences, and so on.

The musical form of the work is only partly conditioned by the requirements of the text, which contains a series of well-defined episodes for musical setting, while leaving the composer free to intersperse them with an equal number of symphonic interludes. The chief poetic episodes begin with the prayer of a maiden on shore for the safe return of her lover on the sea: this is followed by the chorus of the ship's crew, telling of the familiar sprite who dwells in the ship's hold and quits the vessel only when some catastrophe is imminent. Then the look-out boy, perched aloft, sings a gay and reckless ditty of the joys of sea-life. The maiden's lover (tenor) follows on with a song of yearning remembrance to his sweetheart ashore. And here the element of Love enters the drama. The youth's love is pure and loyal: but the poem contains another aspect of passion. An important episode which comes later deals with the unbridled desire of a black slave for his beautiful mistress. The approach of the storm—which affects the psychology of each individual in a different way—loosens the bonds of restraint. The slave sings deliriously of his love, and of a past in which he sat enthroned in purple in his far-off, desert kingdom. Amid this powerful, but somewhat repulsive, episode, the storm strikes the ship. The sailors, who believe her to be doomed because the familiar spirit has abandoned her, refuse to work the pumps. Now, amid the roaring of the elements, are heard snatches from all that has preceded this climax: the despairing cry of the lady as she reads her doom in the eyes of her ruthless slave, the last piping phrase of the look-out lad before the lightning shatters the mast, the lover's prayer to the Virgin ('Star of the Sea'), and the ribald chorus of the drunken sailors.

A long orchestral interlude separates this scene of anguish and destruction from the two final numbers. When the storm has abated, two longshore robbers, searching the beach for treasure, discover the lover's body and recognise him as the sweetheart of the girl whose cottage stands on the cliff above. The ruffians are not wholly evil, and forbear to steal the betrothal ring from the lover's finger, but push the body back into the sea. At the same moment they see the girl emerge from the cottage and throw herself into the waves. The text ends with a kind of requiem hymn ('O Star of the Sea').

The cantata opens with an orchestral introduction displaying at once the two basic themes of the work. The motive of Destruction is divided between the trumpets and trombones:

The purely minor tonality of this quotation is significant of Slovak folk-melody. The second motive, which immediately follows, is the fanfare of the Sea's Onset:

In the little rending figure for oboes and clarinets we hear a realistic echo of the sea-birds' cry. From these two strands is spun most of the complicated musical web.

The first sea picture is finely touched-in. We hear its confused and hollow roaring in the tremolos for basses and 'cellos. Then, still in the bass, an undulating figure appears, and the rushing waters spread through the whole orchestra, while the horn cries anxiously above the surge. The trombones recall softly, but emphatically, the motive of Destruction, and presently Exx. 1 and 2 come into conflict, the fanfare being used as figuration by the horns, while the motive of Destruction (Ex. 1) is given out in the mixolydian mode. And now above the sea-music floats these wordless, wailing chords, sung by a hidden choir:

Like a distant cry for help they strike on the ear of the girl keeping vigil on shore, and wake her impassioned prayer: 'O Star of the Sea' (Andante rubato, con molta passione). In the first bar of her song the use of the augmented second is again reminiscent of the Slovak folk-tunes. After the first verse, Ex. 3 is heard again, and the prayer is resumed with even greater urgency than before. An instrumental interlude then leads us back to the sea and the heaving ship.

The rough humour of the Sailors' Chorus prevails, as they sing of the ship's gnome and his pranks. Novák has written this chorus in a primitive, realistic style. The seamen sing their song in unison and octaves, and only in the cadences full harmony is used. In the first interlude the curious harmony and jerky rhythm depict, no doubt, the antics of the gnome. After the last verse of the chorus, foretelling the destruction of the ship, the trombones bring back Ex. 1, with sinister effect, and a strange passage, in which the pianoforte sounds like a submerged bell, is followed by a long, rapid ascent, as though illustrating the words, 'the sea yawned and gave up the dead which were in it.' At any rate, we now have the impression of mounting from the deep to the surface—and beyond, to the dizzy height where the lad in the look-out cradle sings, fearless of approaching danger. Here the orchestral colour grows more luminous and aerial. In the first interlude the wind whistles a warning; in the second, the assaulting fanfare (Ex. 2) is heard, but in distant perspective. After the completion of the song, the tempest breaks in fury, works up to a great climax, and dies down suddenly to give place to the tenor solo sung by the young lover, standing at the foot of the mainmast, where over a lamp hangs a little picture of the Virgin. Lost in his memories of love, the raging of the elements plays no part in the young man's song. Only in the interludes hints of the outer tempest are heard. The last verse of the solo is a supplication to the Virgin, and recalls the motive from the beginning of the maiden's prayer. The orchestra carries on the melody to a climax, and then a quiet passage leads to an entirely new orchestral episode, of such length and importance that it is almost a short symphonic poem in itself. The pageantry of the sea is exchanged for an inward dramatic monologue of which Love is the subject: love, tender and beautiful, working up through phases of ardour and longing to a sultry climax typical of the Oriental slave. Passion here becomes a veritable maelstrom of the senses, tearing down and gridding to desolation all that blocks its way. Novák now introduces a new theme, a version of a Slovak folk-song, Laska, bože, laska ('Love, O God, love, whither does it lead mankind?'):

The rich contrapuntal treatment of the above melody forms the material of this erotic section. The climax is worked up with a great variety of orchestral treatment. The change of measure from duple to triple time (con fuoco ma non presto) seems to mark the transition from love to uncurbed desire; and after the trumpets in a vehement crescendo have repeated the melody of the song, and passion reaches its zenith, the sea intermingles its voice with these human ardours. The fanfare (in diminution) dominates the music for a time, and then a short, sinister motive introduces the song of the slave (baritone):

This is in three sections; the first and the third corresponding to some extent, and the middle portion treated independently. At first the slave tries to lull the fears of his lady, who is horrified by the unholy gleam in his eyes. As the song proceeds, the storm at sea increases in intensity. At the verse in which the slave recalls his past, the composer, with a sudden change of style, accompanies the text with some clever Oriental music based on a characteristic scale: C, D, E flat, F sharp, G, A, B, C:

The storm soon resumes its fury. Ex. 1 now appears with increased urgency. The slave triumphs, but only in death, for soon the sea will sweep the deck and pour into the cabin:

The culminating section of the orchestral Love Interlude is again repeated, thus linking up the idea of ruinous passion with the malignity of the elements. The continuation of the music is then built upon Ex. 1 with the help of a new semi-quaver figure. In a rushing, upward passage the ship seems to rise to the crest of a giant wave. The wind laughs with evil mockery in a whole-tone scale. Catastrophe is at hand. The cook's boy rushes on deck, crying that the ship has sprung a leak. But the fatalistic seamen choose to meet their doom in a drunken orgy. The motive of their first chorus about the ship's gnome now re-enters, and leaps about wildly in dissonant harmonies. Most of the thematic material with which we are familiar is recalled at this crisis. The lover's supplication to the Virgin is followed by a reference to Ex. 7, combined with the rough rhythm of the Sailors' Chorus. Above the crew's song the voices of the women on board are heard raising a despairing prayer to Our Lady. A stifled cry from the cabin. A bell strikes sharply the high A, accompanied by a rending, downward scale, announcing that the lightning has shattered the mainmast. Exx. 1 and 2 appear in triumphant splendour of orchestration; and again we hear the sliding whole-tone figure.

An orchestral intermezzo now depicts the gradual calming of the sea. The tempest has satiated itself. The harmless waves seem to dance in the passages for flutes and horns.

The dialogue between the two longshoremen is accompanied by references to the young lover's song. After witnessing the suicide of the unhappy maiden, their rough hearts are touched. 'Let us pray for them both,' cries the second land pirate, and shortly afterwards occurs a happy change to the serene key of B major. Soon, over the first of a series of pedals, beginning on D, the fanfare moves softly up and down against a sustained phrase for horns. Here the tonality is mixolydian (D major with C as seventh), and the same mode prevails at the beginning of the concluding chorus, of which the first verse is anticipated at this juncture by the brass over the pedal which has now dropped a semitone to C sharp. Again it drops to C natural, and this orchestral section ends beautifully with gently undulating passages over quiet chords. The sun seems to sparkle in the dancing figures for pianoforte, and from far away comes the sound of bells.

The final chorus is in three sections, and opens with a distinctly mixolydian colour. The treatment of the first verse is solid in its choral and instrumental texture. The second verse, in two-part imitation, has a slighter accompaniment in which flute and pianoforte predominate. When the words refer to the wrecked ship, the muted trombone gives out a husky and subdued reminder of Ex. 1. The chorus ends with an apostrophe to the Virgin, as Stella Maris, and, as it reaches its climax, the fundamental key of C major appears emphatically. In the brief orchestral epilogue, the cor Anglais sings the poignant melody of Laska, bože, laska over chords of the 6-4 played tremolo by the bass strings and carried down to the lowest C. A tender and tranquil version of Ex. 2, harmonized by the brass, brings the work to an end.

Storm belongs to Novák's full maturity, and is especially characteristic of certain aspects of his musical philosophy. It is the immediate predecessor of his cycle of poems for pianoforte, Pan, Op. 43, in which he strives still further to show the relationship between man and the primary forces of nature, and forms a link in the logical development of his very personal art.

In a further article I hope to give some account of two quite recent cantatas: Vycpálek's Last Things of Man and Jaroslav Křička's Temptation in the Wilderness.

FRANCK'S ORGAN MUSIC

BY HARVEY GRACE

II

PRELUDE, FUGUE, AND VARIATION

The fugue is a form that does not fit easily into a cyclic scheme. Bach tried the three-movement plan, with the fugue as finale, but the experiment was not sufficiently successful to lead him to follow it up. Rheinberger ends a good many of his Sonatas with a fugue; splendid fugues they are too, but we feel that when the whole sonata is played at a sitting the fugue comes too late for full appreciation. Music so weighty and full of meat should come at the beginning of a half-hour's work, not at the end. There is less difficulty when a composer gets away from the traditional idea of an organ fugue. The form has taken on a new lease of life in late years because composers are making more of its possibilities on the lyrical and expressive side. (See as particularly good examples the E major, B major, and D minor of Saint-Saëns, the F minor of Dupré, and the very Brahmsian D minor of Stanford.) Franck's is a successful attempt to use the fugue as a kind of slow middle movement. He gives us (a) a genuine song without words, largely in three-part harmony, (b) a short four-voiced Fugue, slower in gait than the flowing $\frac{9}{8}$ cantabile of (a) and no less expressive, though in a more thoughtful way; and (c) a repetition of the Prelude, now called a variation—not quite correctly, seeing that the process of variation is confined to the accompaniment. This analysis ignores the nine-bar Lento that links the Prelude and Fugue, but the passage is redundant. True, it anticipates the fugue-subject, but as its nine bars contain three pauses, the work as a whole gains by the omission of such a marked pull-up.

This delightful work is a valuable study—a combination of trio-playing, melodic phrasing, and fairly simple fugal work. It has the further advantage of calling for no more resources than may be found in a good average small two-manual organ. There are no registration problems. In the Prelude and Variation the only change necessary is the bringing on of an 8-ft. or 4-ft. pedal stop at the point where the extension of the leaping figure that first appears in bar 16 is used as a bass. This figure, by the way, must be so phrased as to avoid squareness. If we think of the notes as being played on a stringed instrument and bowed in couples we cannot well go wrong.

The left hand has to cover a good deal of ground in the Variation, and the passage at the top of page 54 calls for special care. Here are the two most troublesome bars, with suggested fingering—the least awkward of an awkward choice:

EX. 1.

PASTORALE

The Pastorale is becoming a general favourite. Like the work just discussed, it is both a charming piece of music and a first-rate study in neatness and phrasing. Its reflective character and the fugal treatment of the characteristic little leaping figure take it well off the beaten track of the conventional organ pastoreale. In the Allegretto the combination of the staccato chords and the twirling sextulet figure is difficult to play, and even more difficult to register tellingly and at the same time quietly. The figure is apt to become blurred. The transference of the left hand at this point to a second manual on which is a quiet 4-ft. (or even a very delicate 2-ft.) may save the situation, and clearness is helped by a slight retardation. The retarding has the further merit of making the constant succession of repeated chords less stiff in effect than they tend to become. The staccato must not be overdone, and the chords must be lightly registered, or they are likely to be aggressive. The effect should be a quiet throb. Technically the only other difficulty is in the last section, where the first subject has a new counter-theme above it. A big grasp of the keyboard is called for, and the fingering must not be left to chance. The texture is so delicate that the slightest slip wrecks it:

EX. 2. Ch.

Szu.

And great care is needed in the last page, where the left hand has some awkward two-part playing in semiquavers while the right plays a bell-like repeated octave above. These octaves, by the by, should be played with a stop of the lieblich type, and 4-ft. tone should not be used unless it is very delicate.

Most organ composers, great and small—especially small—have contributed to the long line of organ pastorales, and the road is strewn thick with platitudes. Only a really great man could write one so fresh and yet so engagingly simple as this. And Franck himself never gave us anything more delicious than the closing section, with its mellow peace and hints of bells.

PRIÈRE

Here is a work that can never have a wide vogue. It is long and very difficult, and the difficulties are of the kind that are apparent only to the player—a fatal defect from a recitalist's point of view. Moreover, much of it is almost repellant on first acquaintance. Not often is the hearer in the mood for so deliberate an exposition of spiritual struggle. Its liberal use of complex five- and six-part writing and its general sombreness, make it a modern counterpart of Bach's great Prelude on Aus tiefer noth. But whereas Bach ends with the major key well established, and with a rhythm expressive of confidence, if not of joy, Franck, after a soaring passage or two, closes in gloom, with a kind of fatigued recitative.

The opening is unusual—thirty bars of five-part writing for manual alone, generally low on the keyboard, with 8-ft stops only. There are so many awkward stretches in this passage that players with small hands will do well to put in the pedal stops, couple up the manual, and let the feet lend a hand, so to speak.

The pedals make their entry proper with a two-bar phrase delivered solus:

—a squarish and unpromising motive. But let the student of composition see what the composer does with it. Franck tries it antiphonally between treble and bass a few times, as if doubtful of its possibilities. He then hits on this variant:

which leads naturally to a delightful triplet figure. This is used sequentially for a dozen bars, with modulations from A major, through B minor, C sharp minor, to G sharp minor, thus:

EX. 5.

The long passage in octaves on page 76 is also a derivative of Ex. 3, and on pages 78 and 79 its first three notes are used as a kind of muttering ostinato, first in the left hand, then in the pedal, while a climax (of emotion, not of power) is being developed overhead. And even then Franck has not finished with it. You will find it on page 79 being worked in two of the six parts—in the treble and in the left-hand part as a triplet figure. All this portion of the work is very difficult—perhaps as difficult as anything in Franck's organ works, which is saying a good deal. And, as in the Quintet Franck strains his medium almost to breaking point, at times using an idiom suggestive of the orchestra rather than of a chamber music combination, so here he asks rather more than can be managed with comfort by an average pair of hands and feet. Bach's Prelude on Aus tiefer noth, difficult as it is, presents us with no wide stretches, and with no such problems in cross-rhythms as are met with here on several pages. For a sample, take this, from the major version of the main subject on page 77 :

Ex. 6.

and in a different style, this extract from the troubled passage that follows :

Ex. 7.

From this welter emerges a strain so ecstatic as to recall the best pages of The Beatitudes. Playing it, one seems to be walking on air. Yet, if we reduce the music to its elements, we shall say (hastily) there is nothing in it; mostly it is a mere glorification of the chord of C sharp major over a bass that moves obliquely in widening leaps—a favourite melodic shape with Franck, as will be seen again and again in this set of pieces. Here is a quotation from this soaring strain :

Ex. 8.

There are many other points in this truly fine work calling for attention, but the student who has gone thus far with me will, I hope, be keen enough to go farther on his own account. I will mention only one feature—the canonic treatment of the opening subject at its reappearance on pages 76 and 77. One comes back to the stern harshness of this again and again, whereas the slithering chromaticism of a good deal of the first and second Chorals soon becomes irritating. I make this comparison because it is typical of the superiority of this middle-period music over Franck's last work, the Chorals. This is not to belittle the latter. As we shall see when we come to discuss them, they are among the most beautiful organ works ever written. But they contain patches of mere meandering, whereas the Six Pieces, despite their length, are as a whole direct and diatonic. Even when there is a tendency to over-development (as in the Prière and the Final) it is not easy to point to matter that can be spared.

The registration of the Prière is troublesome, if we attempt to go by Franck's directions. His change of manuals is often awkward—sometimes occurring in the middle of a held note. The best plan is to work out a scheme of one's own. The bulk may well be played on the Swell, with an occasional bit of soloing on the Great, and with a Choir 8-ft. and 4-ft. held in reserve for coupling to the pedals when a melody has to be brought out in the bass. Save for a few odd bars, the phrasing is not marked, so the player will be well advised to think it out and put in a few pencil reminders. The extreme stretches may call for modification in one or two instances. For example, in Ex. 6 the right hand may play the last quaver E sharp an octave higher. In bars 9, 11, and 13, on page 72, the right hand may well take over the higher notes of the left-hand passage. The danger spot in bar 1 of page 72 may be made safe by the right hand playing the quaver A sharp before dropping on to its crotchet on the Great. There is room in this piece for a good deal of variation in time, always provided it be well graded. The frequent use of the pedal for melodic purposes calls for care both in phrasing and in choice of pedal stops—quiet, but telling.

A 'cut' is possible. By changing the chord in bar 4 of page 74 into a dominant seventh on G sharp, we may go on easily and naturally to the resumption of the main theme at bar 11 on page 76. The time saved is about two and a-half minutes. The two pages omitted are undoubtedly the least important, though their recitative character is striking. On the whole, we should try to find time to play the work as it stands. Think of the slush usually written for the organ under the title 'Prayer'—music to which neither heart nor brain have contributed—and be thankful for such an example as this, the product of both.

The student who really works up this exacting piece will find his finger technique greatly benefited, and, so far as the management of cross-rhythms is concerned, if he can tackle pages 77-79 with assurance, complications of the kind will have few terrors for him.

FINAL

The Final in B flat is sometimes objected to as being commonplace; even that ill-used and misunderstood word 'vulgar' is often shot at it. Certainly its liberal dose of such elementary devices as repeated chords, and its straightforward—even conventional—figures and rhythms, seem to justify the charge. Yet there are virtues that more than compensate. There is splendid development, unflagging vigour and animation, and genial tunefulness. The piece is dedicated to Léfèbure-Wély, and Franck seems to have set out to write in the idiom of that popular composer. But he was now at the beginning of his prime, and so he could do no more than serve up some extremely Franckian matter with a dash of the Léfèbure-Wély manner. The big, sweeping tune of the opening—perhaps the finest pedal solo ever written—the development on pages 89-92, the broad, yet simple, second subject (in which the sharp-loving Franck outdoes himself by writing in A sharp major), and the crashing Coda: all these things are well outside the Léfèbure-Wély field. (The Wélyish passages on pages and that look so thin—and sound so on the pianoforte—are of course written with an eye to the fattening effect of doubles and sub-octave couplers.)

The work is perhaps a few pages too long, the pedal solo being so extended an affair that its repetition has a weakening effect.

The bulk of the music is evolved from the opening phrase of the pedal solo, the triplet figure of the passage into which the solo leads, and a simple phrase that recalls the Eroica Symphony. Here are these three constituents:

Ex. 9.

The possibilities of the first six notes are obvious, and Franck makes the most of their martial rhythm. The triplet figure is used for several pages on end, chiefly as an accompanimental figure. The Eroica theme makes its appearance on page 86 almost unnoticed, as a mere bass to some busy work with (a) overhead:

Ex. 10.

But on page 88 it sails out as the commencement of a splendid subject that goes on for about thirty bars, accompanied by a four-note chime:

EX. 11.

Its combination with the triplet figure on page 91 is delightful. The triplets on page 92 over the pedal solo theme lead to cross-rhythm difficulty; the left-hand part, with the crotchets firmly held, makes a capital finger-stretching exercise. But very few players will be able to grasp the tenths in the left-hand part in the last line of page 90. The solution is to play the E with the pedal an octave higher than written (so as to produce an 8-ft. effect), joining up the triplets neatly, thus:

EX. 12.

An increase of pace towards the end seems to be justified. The direction at the start is Allegro maestoso. There is a good deal in the work that calls for maestoso, but the more slender material of pages 93-95 needs pace rather than weight. The best thing to do with such an expression of sheer high spirits is to get along with it. Yet even here we must find time to note and bring out some admirable touches. Take this passage for example:

EX. 13.
Allegro.

We know that the top part is a derivative of the pedal solo, but we shall not make the most of the passage if we fail to observe also that the little two-note ejaculations in the bass and left-hand parts are allusions to:

with which the piece opened. Sluggish or unrhythmical playing of these under-parts changes a delightful passage into a merely ordinary one.

This splendid (and in parts decidedly Beethovenish) work repays any amount of study. Is it 'vulgar'? Perhaps; yet there are kinds and degrees of vulgarity. We should have no use for the commonplace expression of commonplace thought, which produces either sloppy sentiment or animation of a purely external type. This Final is on another plane. It belongs to the Beethoven Scherzo tribe—the work of a great man who can relax and jest and still show his quality. He can come down from his pedestal without making us think, disappointedly, 'What a come-down!'

(To be continued.)

AN AMATEUR ON CRITICS

BY ROBERT LORENZ

Somewhere a breeze has been blowing—to judge from the February 'Sharps and Flats'—on the subject of musical critics, and I am very sorry to have missed it. From the quotations given, however, it is possible to reconstruct more or less accurately this familiar domestic quarrel. As usual, the critics are on the defensive; and, as usual, also, the prosecuting parties are not the general public (who alone have the right) but those who owe the critics most—the composers and performers. Here, on the one hand, is a composer uttering a pious hope that musical criticism will play no part in the newspaper patronised by the loyal flock of a South London theatre, and, on the other, a performer telling us to remember that critics in this country are mostly disappointed men, hardly earning enough to keep body and soul together. To myself, as an unprejudiced spectator holding a brief for neither party, the opinion just quoted seems essentially untrue, or, if not untrue, at least misleading. If hard-uppishness is a disability, it is one from which many admirable composers and performers suffer no less than critics. And seeing how large a proportion of the world's finest music has been produced by men only just able to 'keep body and soul together,' we need not regard indigence as a sign either of incapacity or insincerity in a critic.

At the dinner given on January 21 in honour of Mr. Edwin Evans by a very representative gathering of composers (evidently not of the grousing kind) the guest of the evening is reported to have said that the musical world was now a federal republic. If this be so I can only conclude that the discussion on critics echoed in 'Sharps and Flats' took place before January 21. Misunderstanding would I think be once and for all prevented if it were made amply clear that critics are employed not by the members of the musical profession but by the general public. I don't know a critic worth his salt who cares two straws for aught composers or performers say about him provided he has stated his considered opinion in an honest manner. No critic can hope to be always right in estimating the future position which a given composer will hold, and he were a traitor to his craft if he abstained from uttering a sincerely felt adverse opinion simply because he might ultimately prove to be wrong. Hanslick, the famous Viennese critic, provides a good instance of a writer clinging to his convictions to the bitter end. He went hopelessly wrong over Wagner, but in other respects he was a singularly sensitive and discerning judge. I sometimes wonder whether he was so hopelessly wrong about Wagner after all, or rather whether present-day opinion on that composer has entirely confounded his own. In spite of the Wagner vogue, which is still largely a matter of fashion, it is illuminating to see how many competent musicians and sincere music-lovers have jumped straight from the classics to Debussy, Scriabin, Holst, and Stravinsky, via any route except that of the Weimar school.

It is quite clear, then, that a critic's ultimate reputation will depend little on the attitude he took in backing or discouraging contemporary composers, while as to his relations with the executioners of music, the latter cannot possibly have any ground for complaint, for, as was shown in the Adrian Beecham opera case, they are always prepared if necessary to turn black into white. I cannot imagine an editor being at all disturbed by infuriated letters from composers and performers who thought that the critic had done them an injustice. I can, however, imagine him taking very serious note of sufficiently numerous and unanimous remonstrances from his readers. And this takes us once more to the essential point that we, the amateurs or music-lovers, or whatever else you like to call us, are the real employers of the critics, we are the people they have to satisfy. I believe it is a fact that the circulation of one of our best-known Sunday papers would be depreciated by many thousands if its present music critic were to resign or if his work failed to maintain its standard. If, then, the point is clearly established that we have it virtually in our power to appoint and sack critics, perhaps the latter will find in future that it will pay them to study our requirements to a greater degree than they have done in the past.

Unfortunately, the true function of musical criticism has never been clearly understood in this country; and it is a fact, although an astonishing one, that music-lovers are content as a whole to accept as a critic anyone whose name appears sufficiently often in the Press. In this way a number of people who can write competently on theory, harmony, and musical instruction for the bairns, usurp a rôle for which they have not the most elementary qualifications. My own personal experience warrants me making this statement, as several people who have become familiar with my name through having seen it at the end of a few letters and articles, have, on being introduced, alluded to me as a critic, a statement which I always repudiate with some warmth. Quite probably a number of folk think that a man has only to pass an examination of some kind in order to emerge subsequently as a full-fledged critic able to dispense infallible advice on any musical subject under the sun. Then there are the harmony and sight-reading bogies which have certainly done much to put the position of musical criticism in a hopelessly wrong light. While it is no doubt a highly useful accomplishment to be able to read music with facility, and to know how the harmonic wheels of a certain passage go round, it does not necessarily follow that the possessor of these facilities is automatically the possessor of the critical faculty. Look at the organists! As a whole they have less critical acumen than any other class of musician, though their knowledge of sight-reading and harmony is often pronounced. As a rule they spend the greater part of their lives in the company of second-rate Church music of a type which is bound in the end to warp such real musical taste as they may have originally possessed.

The critics themselves have not been slow to make as much capital as possible out of the harmony and sight-reading bugbears, and one of them has even gone so far as to state that the armchair and not the concert-hall is the place for his musical enjoyment. Up to a certain point this may be quite true, but my colleagues of the general public will I think do well to regard as sheer leg-pulling any attempt on the part of a critic to pretend that he can 'take in' the sound of a forty-stave orchestral score better in his chair than in his stall. A knowledge—or, rather, the gift—of score-reading is very useful for studying the details of a work either before or after a performance, but the endeavour to hoodwink the public into an attitude of reverence for the super-sight-reader would be monstrous were it not so amusing. Ask the composers of modern scores (as I have done) about the ability of Mr. M. or N. to keep a private orchestra in his head free of charge, and hear what they say! The harmony fad has gone out of fashion lately for the simple reason that in the case of most contemporary works the harmony entirely defies the usual academic text-book elucidation. What's the use of talking about 'a swift reversion to the tonic' when there is only an atonic blur to start off with?

If I have written somewhat outspokenly on these matters, it is because, having heard much music and pondered incessantly on what I have heard, and having in addition devoted a good deal of time to reading of the circumstances in which many of the greatest masterpieces have been produced, I have come to rely on my own judgment to a certain extent, and no longer consider myself necessarily wrong about a given work because an eminent critic thinks otherwise. There comes a time in the life of every more or less cultured music-lover when he feels that he has got to see the thing through himself, and that the most helpful criticism is not that which asserts categorically that such and such a work is a masterpiece, but that which is written with a love and enthusiasm which sweeps all before it. If those who really have the right to call themselves critics could confine themselves to writing about the music for which they have an almost unqualified admiration, we, their readers, would certainly be much happier. In any case it can hardly be doubted that it is this quality of enthusiasm which distinguishes the true critic from the mere journalist. A new and intelligent enthusiasm over a Bach Chorale-Prelude, a Beethoven Sonata, or a Brahms Symphony is of permanent value, which is more than can be said of a facile exploitation of new stunts (in reality old clichés) for the sake of keeping abreast of the times. The future can take care of itself; it is the past which we have constantly got to revalue from the fresh angle of recent developments. One of the reasons why most of us are now so heartily sick of the supposedly new aesthetic underlying the Stravinsky 'school' is that many of its disciples are quite unable to persuade us that they have as good a grip on their subject as it has on them. Such slogans as the 'juxtaposition of sonorities' could only flourish in a country in which the musical public had practically given up all attempt to think for itself, and had delivered itself up body and soul to any impostor who could wrap up an old formula in a new covering. As if, for instance, any series of sound vibrations from the braying of an ass to the Air on the G string could be anything else but a juxtaposition of sonorities! I am not suggesting for a moment that the better works of Stravinsky do not contain valuable evidence of a rather speculative groping towards new ideas, but I do deny most emphatically that the merit of these works can be appreciated only after you have spring-cleaned your mind of all prior associations.

Here again, then, you can distinguish between critic and journalist. The former, with the experience of musical history behind him, will carefully sift what he considers the wheat from the chaff, and pronounce a verdict based on the proportion of the one to the other. A given work might yield him the proportion of three-quarters chaff to one quarter wheat. The existence of the latter element alone would suffice to make the journalist cry 'Manna!' but the critic will know that durability cannot be achieved from such a proportion. However good the scattered elements of wheat may be, he will finally come to regard the work as largely experimental and certainly ephemeral. Later on, he will say, a bigger man will come whose best ideas will be no better than the best of this composer, but whose far greater brain power will enable him to keep going at a much higher level of intensity.

In a word, let us be sparing in our bestowal of the word 'critic' on anyone who cannot bring the same intelligence to bear on the music of the past as on that of the future. All art developments must of necessity be evolutionary, and it needs only time to show that artists who were once considered revolutionary ultimately fall quite logically into the scheme of things. They are like planets with their satellites: at first all attention is focussed on the newly discovered planet, but when it has become sufficiently familiar people begin to scan the space that intervenes between the newcomer and the existing order only to find it a dense mass of satellites. Thus, Berlioz was once considered an isolated planet with practically no connection with anything that had gone before; but a closer study of the period in which he lived (and even more of the period preceding his birth), shows us that the mass effects in which he subsequently wallowed were very much in vogue at the time, and were successfully exploited by Méhul and Lesueur, both of whom derived from Gluck. In this way we find that Berlioz was after all only a link in the chain which is still being forged, and which will continue to be forged so long as the art of music exists. Hans Sachs's 'Despise not the Masters!' might well be the motto of every intelligent writer on music. He who disregards it may fill many columns of print in so doing, but he will not be a critic.

The Musician's Bookshelf

My Life. By Emma Calvé (translated by Rosamond Gilder).

[D. Appleton & Co., New York and London. 15s.]

This book is a marked improvement on the average prima donna autobiography, in that it shows the author to be possessed of a strong sense of humour. She tells some capital stories with gusto, and some of the best are against herself. We like especially the account of a humiliating experience of her early days, when, on the occasion of her revisiting her native village, the mayor rang the tocsin, called the peasants from the fields, assembled them before the Town Hall, and told them he had summoned them to hear 'a little nightingale of these parts. It will sing to you from this very window. Listen well [he said] and I am sure you will acclaim our accomplished compatriot, Mlle. Emma.' The reader naturally expects the peasantry to be duly overcome, but as a matter of cold fact they received Mademoiselle's efforts in dead silence. Astonished and hurt, the singer went down and buttonholed an old shepherd friend:

'Blaise,' I said, 'what's the matter? Why don't you applaud me? Did I sing as badly as all that?'

The old man was hardly able to hide his emotion.

'Poor child, poor little girl,' he stammered, his voice breaking with tears. 'How you scream! How it must hurt you! You are wearing out your life! You are wearing it out! Such waste of strength! It's dreadful.'

Humiliating, too, was the episode of the padded calves at her first performance as Cherubino in Figaro at the Monnaie, Brussels. Gawky and thin, she attempted to make good some of the more obvious of her physical deficiencies, and 'enormous calves of cotton swelled the dimensions' of her silken tights.

The old gentlemen in the front rows trained their opera glasses on these superb affairs. I was conscious of their attention and proud of my success until I left the stage at the end of my first scene. In the wings the infuriated director was waiting for me.

'Ah, ça!' he shouted, pointing to my unfortunate legs. 'What are those hideous lumps, I'd like to know? I am tempted to stick pins into them . . . Do you expect anyone to believe that those fat excrescences belong to you? Take them off instantly.'

It need hardly be added that the sensation caused by the calves was eclipsed by that roused by their absence in the next scene. Poor Calvé tried to hide those spindle shanks with her cloak, but in vain. She doubts if she ever afterwards created so much excitement at the Monnaie as she did on that painful night.

Calvé is generous in her appreciations of fellow artists. She tells some good yarns about them, too. Here is one she got from her teacher, Madame Laborde, concerning Patti's mother, 'apparently a most disagreeable woman':

One evening this fiery lady was singing with a companion who had false eyebrows. At that time it was the custom to shave the natural brows and glue on false ones at a more dramatic angle. Patti's mother, jealous and furious at the success of her comrade, began to stare at her fixedly.

'What is the matter?' the other whispered under her breath.

'Your right eyebrow has fallen off!' came the answer, sotto voce.

The poor victim, horrified, tore off her left eyebrow, and remained for the rest of the act with only her right one in place!

Of Lablache, she tells us that he was once staying at the hotel in which the dwarf General Tom Thumb was quartered. One day a lady came to call on Tom Thumb and entered Lablache's room by mistake.

She found herself face to face with the enormous singer, who, besides being very tall, was corpulent as well.

'I was calling on General Tom Thumb!' the astonished visitor stammered.

'I am he,' answered the giant, gravely.

The lady, thoroughly bewildered, protested in surprise. 'But, Monsieur, I was told that Tom Thumb was the smallest man in the world!'

'Ah, yes,' Lablache answered. 'That is true in public, but when I am at home I make myself comfortable!'

The book, however, is a good deal more than a collection of stories. It is a record, loosely strung together, of a strenuous life and a powerful personality. Aspirants to an operatic career will find much that is wise and helpful, notably in the chapter describing Calvé's work with her pupils. Here, speaking of someone objecting to her singing of a Beethoven song as being too expressive and too little restrained, on the ground that Beethoven was a classic, she quotes an admirable remark of Busoni: 'The classics are killed by respect.'

Finally, the best mot of this excellent book must be quoted. The witty and sharp-tongued Princess de Metternich said of Alboni (who in her later years was decidedly bulky), 'She looked like a cow that had swallowed a nightingale!' C. W.

The Heart of Music. By Madame Anna Alice Chapin.

[Methuen, London.]

Madame Chapin attempts a very difficult task. No history, or story as the authoress calls it, of the violin enclosed within the limits of a hundred and eighty pages can hope to deal at all adequately with so vast a subject—unless perhaps it happens to be written in the terse, laconic style of the expert addressing an audience of experts. Madame Chapin's very genuine love for all that appertains, and for other things which do not appertain, to the violin has induced her moreover to give a share of her valuable space to lengthy anecdotes, to obvious fabrications and bits of hearsay, and to more or less poetic quotations which can neither add strength to her argument nor point to her story. She confesses herself unable to accept responsibility for the cock-and-bull tale of Monteverde breaking the bow across the fiddler's back, and discovering, after the fiddler had somehow mended the damage, that the patched-up article was more suitable for tremolo than the perfect one. She tells—without reservation—the story of a violin of Paganini which, when being taken apart by the repairer, 'vibrated so violently that the strings emitted a harsh chord that sounded like a moan.' If the strings were taut enough to 'emit a chord' while the belly of the instrument was being separated from the body, the moan, we may be sure, came from the repairer. Now this sort of thing if it is bad history is also good gossip, and there is something to be said for a gossip on fiddles. Possibly this is what Madame Chapin had in mind when in the 'Prelude' she startles the reader with the paradox that 'a history of the violin must be a history of everything except the violin.' If this was her aim she would have been well advised to stick to her main theme and leave to others the epochs of 'primitive man as yet half beast, striving cumbrously toward his heritage of immortality,' of the god Thot, of the goddess Astarte, and the discoveries of Fo-Hi in 2950 B.C. These all have a just claim and a place in history. But 2950 B.C.—this is really taking us a little too far back, considering what a short, uncertain thing is human life, and how brief and anecdotal is the volume in question. Good gossip must resign unmistakably all pretence to historical value. F. B.

Cathedral Organists, Past and Present. By John E. West.

[Novello & Co. 9s.]

This is a new and enlarged edition of a book that since its first appearance over twenty years ago has established itself as authoritative. It has other claims, however. A volume consisting of (to quote the title-page) 'A record of the Succession of Organists of the Cathedrals, Chapels Royal, and Principal Collegiate Churches of the United Kingdom, from about the period of the Reformation until the Present Day,' might easily prove to be a mere collection of dates and facts, correct but uninviting. But Mr. West saves the situation by carrying his scheme beyond the mere dry-as-dust. His title adds: 'With Biographical Notes, Extracts from the Chapter Books, Anecdotes, &c.' These extras make all the difference. The present writer has had Mr. West's book by him for some weeks. He has had no occasion to consult it on any matter of history, but has taken it up time after time for the mere pleasure of dipping into it and enjoying the pleasant glimpses into the past afforded by the copious anecdotes and extracts from old records. These throw vivid light on many things that the textbooks and histories leave in the dark, and often help us to see as a personality some old worthy who hitherto may have been little more than a name. Sometimes he happens to have been an old unworthy. For example, opening the book at random we come across Thomas Mudd, who was organist at Lincoln for a very short time, apparently during 1662-63. Such a name is not easily lived down, and Thomas appears to have succumbed all too readily. On March 14, 1663 the Precentor wrote to the Dean complaining that Mudd had been so 'debauched,' and had so interfered with 'Mr. Derby [an organ-builder who seems to have been engaged at the time on some repairs at the Cathedral] that he will hardly be persuaded to stay to finish his worke unlesse Mudd bee removed.' Bad as Mudd was when 'debauched,' he was worse when getting over it, for two days later the Precentor complains :

Yesterday Mr. Mudd shewed the effects of his last weeke's tipping, for when Mr. Joynes was in the midst of his sermon Mudd fell a-singing aloud, insomuch as Mr. Joynes was compelled to stopp; all the auditorie gazed and wondered what was the matter, and at length some reere him, stopping his mouth, silenced him, and then Mr. Joynes proceeded: but this continued for the space of neere halfe a quarter of an houre. So that now wee dare trust him no more with our organ, but request you (if you can) to helpe us to another; and with what speed may be.

And there was Lloyd Raynor, another Lincolnite (1756-84), who wound up his career by being 'arraigned and reprov'd for playing one Anthem while Mr. Binns was singing another,' a feat that led to his being dismissed with a pension of £10 per year, which allowance was, however, discontinued after the first year.

But there is no lack of worthy men and fine musicians to set against the Mudds and Raynors. It is impossible to read Mr. West's book without being reminded of a fact too often forgotten, namely, that church music is the one branch of the art in which we have achieved continuity, and that the history of English church musicians is in a remarkable degree the history of English music. What a roll it is! From Tye and Tallis, via Gibbons, Byrd, Weekes, and the rest to the Wesleys, and so down to the many admirable men of to-day who worthily fill their places. Despite a few weak periods, English Church music can boast a noble line that in length and general level has no peer. Mr. West is to be congratulated on an arduous task carried out with care and enthusiasm.

H. G.

Prose Musicali. By Ario Tribel.

[C. U. Trani, Trieste. 6 lire.]

The chapters of this work bear the obvious impress of their origin—the daily newspaper. Signor Tribel is the musical critic of the Piccolo of Trieste, a journal devoting a good deal of intelligent attention to artistic matters. The Piccolo has yet another claim on our consideration, for almost as soon as Italy had declared for the western powers the Austrian rabble sacked and burnt the offices of the popular and courageous opponent of Austro-Germanic policy. And perhaps the political point of view should not be ignored by the reader of these articles—not because there is lack of sympathy for or generous appreciation of German music, but because the writer felt—unconsciously, perhaps—drawn towards those who first revolted against the hegemony of Germany in the music of the 19th century. The article on Debussy gives to the great Frenchman no more than his due, but the account Signor Tribel gives of Charpentier errs decidedly on the side of overpraise. The composer of Louise is for him the 'poet-musician' par excellence, 'the profound observer of the soul and the passion of the people, the robust champion of its aspirations and hopes.' We shall not deny that Charpentier is a poet-musician—far too much of a poet to be a simple musician, and far too much of a musician to be a good poet. Had he been more of an artist and less of a demagogue Louise would have had a worthier successor than Julien. The merit of certain original and effective strokes in Louise, considerable as it is, does not entitle Charpentier to a place in the first rank amongst modern composers.

Much more stimulating and individual are the papers in which the author studies the psychology of a public which breaks all continuity of dramatic action by untimely applause, the studies on Verdi, on Cimarosa, and the eloquent essay on 'Music in d'Annunzio's Notturmo.' F. B.

Church Music. By the Rev. Maurice F. Bell.

[Mowbray & Co. 3s. 6d.]

Mr. Bell's little book first appeared in 1909, and this is a revised and enlarged edition. It has the advantage of being the work of one who is a parish priest as well as a practical musician. As a result the most valuable chapters are those in which the liturgical aspect is discussed. A careful reading of Mr. Bell's findings would persuade incumbents and organists to reconsider a good many musical details, in themselves small, but in their cumulative effect fatal to the dignity and consistency that ought to distinguish a service. There are wise words, too, on the position of the organ and choir. In regard to the former the suggestions issued in 1904 by the Church Music Committee appointed by the Worcester Diocesan Conference are reprinted. A chapter on music for use at the Catechism lays stress on the importance of choosing only good hymns and tunes for children's services. This being so, we are sorry to see included as an appendix 'An Act of Faith, Hope, and Love,' set to music which is not only trivial in melody and rhythm but is not even well harmonized. One other inconsistency may be touched on. Mr. Bell gives good models of plain-song harmonization, and is careful to point out the importance of avoiding the use of too many chords. But in speaking of the Amen he harmonizes it as at (a) :

The effect of the strong subdominant chord on the weak note is bad, and it tends to long-draw-out performance. And why three chords, when two will serve better? Surely the first G is best regarded as a mere anticipation of the final and treated as at (b).

Exception may be taken also to the use of the dominant sevenths in the harmonization of the Pater Noster on page 93. These are probably details that were in the 1909 edition and have escaped notice in the revision. The author carries a lot of weight in Church music circles, and we draw attention to these unsatisfactory details because of that fact, and also because we do not believe they really represent his present views.

H. G.

Violin-Making and Repairing. By Robert Alton.

[Cassell & Co., Ltd. 1s. 6d.]

The ambition to make a fiddle is somewhat rare. Certainly we cannot well imagine fiddle-making as a serious rival to golf or photography. Yet the art is really most interesting, and any who have once visited a luthier's workshop must have felt the fascination exerted by violins in process of making. The well-grained blocks of wood, the wonderful curves, the mystic f signs, and the white unvarnished instruments have each their special attraction for the layman. The house of Cassell, therefore, has done well to add to its admirable 'Work' Handbooks a little volume by Mr. Robert Alton explaining how a fiddle can be made. Mr. Alton is a maker of wide experience, and it is encouraging to have his assurance that with ordinary acquaintance of edge-tools and a little practice we can all become skilled fiddle-makers. Personally, being exceptionally clumsy with edge-tools of any kind, I have no ambition to rival Stradivari—much as I love violins and all that belongs to them. But there exist many persons who, I am told, are at a loss to know how to kill time. What better hobby could be found for them than violin-making, with its alluring possibilities of renown and profit, and its certain interest and reward? I feel sure that whoever faces the first obstacle and succeeds in making one fiddle, will not rest until he has made another and yet another. Here then is a new opportunity for handymen of all ages who find time, if it is only their spare time, hanging heavily on their hands. The chief requirements are three: care, patience, and, of course, Mr. Alton's handbook, which tells in a lucid and readable way what to do and how to do it. F. B.

New Music

SONGS

Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson are to be thanked for their volume of Twenty-one English Ayres (1598-1612), transcribed and edited from the original editions (Enoch). The composers represented are Robert Jones (about whom Mr. Philip Heseltine has much of interest to say in another part of this journal), Thomas Campion, Thomas Greaves, John Dowland, Michael Cavendish, Philip Rosseter, John Danyel, William Corkine, and everybody's prolific and unequal old friend, Anon. The editors have resisted the temptation to add to the original accompaniments, so we have merely the composer's lute and bass viol parts transferred to the pianoforte, with no alteration save in one or two cases where there was an obvious discrepancy between the basses of the two instruments. In some cases the note-values have been halved—a good plan, seeing that the use of the minim as unit is apt to be as fatal here as it has been in so much old choral music. On first acquaintance these accompaniments seem thin and meagre, but the hearer is soon converted. The fact is, our ears have been coarsened by the modern tendency to make the gruel thick and slab, and to leave nothing to the imagination. We have but to play these simple old accompaniments a few times to be convinced of their rightness. As a rule, too, their slenderness is due to the fact that they are in three-part harmony, the fourth part being supplied by the voice. But they do not lack melodic and other interest, especially in the slower songs. In the numbers that are obviously quick and light the composers had already advanced sufficiently far along the song-writer's track to realise that an attempt to do much more than provide a harmonic background to a rapidly-moving voice-part is likely to end in fussiness—a principle that is too often forgotten by song composers of to-day. I am glad the editors have refrained from bowdlerising the harmonies. Not so many years ago an editor who left the false relations and other dissonances untouched would have felt called on to justify himself by saying (as was actually said by Prout in a similar connection) that we have to take our great composers as we take our wives—for better, for worse. Or he might have quoted Cromwell's 'Paint me as I am—warts and all!' There is a difference here, however. Warts are always warts—though they matter little on a great man. But these dissonances, that a half-century ago would have been regarded as blemishes and smoothed away, are now not merely tolerated; they are in many cases enjoyed. The warts, in fact, have become beauty spots. I mention one example only from this book. In Rosseter's When Laura smiles, the voice part of bar 4 runs down the lower half of the scale of D minor, the F natural following hard on the heels of F sharp in the accompaniment. (The pace is quick.) In an edition of this song published about twenty years ago the false relation was removed. Yet only a few hearings are necessary to make one feel that this close capping of the major by the minor is as engaging a pungency as many an elaborate harmonic adventure of to-day. It would be easy to quote other examples of this successful daring, but space forbids. I must, however, draw attention to the version of The willow song (the simple accompaniment of which is a delight), and two very fine songs of Dowland, I saw my lady weep and In darkness let me dwell. In both, especially the second, there is a poignant intensity that makes us agree with the opinion expressed in some quarters that Dowland is among the world's great song composers. A word of praise is due to the excellent preface and biographical notes. The title-page calls this book 'Vol. 1.' We hope that this implication of more to follow will be realised—and soon.

The writers of first-rate nonsense verses are rare. There are Stevenson, Belloc, Norman Gale, and a few others. To these few must now be added Hugh Chesterman, whose album of five Nonsense Songs, with illustrations by the author and music by Stanley Marchant, has just been published by Novello. Mr. Chesterman has the knack of it, without a doubt—a whimsical idea, as appealing to grown-ups as to kiddies, a neat turn of rhyme, and a genuinely funny rhythm, as, for example, in the clattering verses about 'Sir Nickety Nox.' And in 'Yesterday' there is even a touch of poetry. The illustrations are delightfully quaint. Dr. Marchant has set these rhymes to appropriately straightforward music, for medium voice, with just enough descriptive touches to back up the words without underlining them.

Messrs. Chester have just issued a series of Russian songs of more than ordinary interest—Moussorgsky's Song of the Flea, for baritone, with Russian, French, and English words; Malashkin's O could I but express in song, in high and low keys, with English words; The Song of the Volga Boatmen (the version being that of which Chaliapin has lately made so fine a gramophone record), with Russian and English text; 'Parassia's Day-Dream,' from Moussorgsky's The Fair of Sorochintsi, for high voice, with Russian, French, and English words; and two extracts from Boris Godounov—the Monologue of Boris and the Coronation Scene. The former has Russian, French, and English text, the latter English only. The Coronation Scene, of course, lends itself to effective performance by a large choir and orchestra, with bass solo. A note from the publishers mentions, as an interesting point in connection with these songs, that they appear to be the first examples of English music-engraving in which the original Russian text has been included. The innovation is worth noting at a time when we hear so much about music-engraving orders being placed abroad. As a matter of fact, English engravers have for some time past been producing full scores and smaller works, such as these beautifully printed songs, in which the craftsmanship is at least the equal of anything that has come from the Continent during recent years. H. G.

OPERAS AND CHORAL WORKS

The success of an opera depends so largely on production and acting that new works of the kind cannot be reviewed in the ordinary sense of the word. All that can be done is to inform those interested that the score is obtainable, and to give a rough idea of the style.

Little need be said about She Stoops to Conquer, a comedy-opera in three Acts and four scenes. Alfred Kalisch has based the libretto on the familiar comedy of Goldsmith, the music is by Percy Colson, and, judging from the vocal score, the setting has the right lightness and simplicity (Bosworth).

Nicholas Gatty's Prince Ferelon, or The Princess's Suitors, is on more modest lines, being in one Act, and described as a musical extravaganza. It has already been performed at the 'Old Vic' (in 1921), and other performances are announced at the same theatre (March 1 and 3), so readers have an early opportunity for making acquaintance with it. It appears the very thing for amateur companies who wish to get off the usual track (Carnegie Collection: Stainer & Bell).

Malipiero's Orfeo, a one-Act 'rappresentazione musicale,' is a short satirical affair, characteristically spicy as to the music, and with very evident possibilities. It is a kind of play within a play, or rather within two or three, showing the effect of a highly artificial puppet-show on three audiences of different type—a court assembly, a gathering of pedants, and a group of children. It need hardly be said that the children score, and the courtiers and pedants are scored off. The vocal score contains Italian and French texts (Chester).

Much has lately been written about Polly, so it will suffice to say that the vocal score has been issued by Boosey, and that, whether one goes to a performance or not, a copy will be a source of constant pleasure to all who still have a palate for good tunes well served up. Frederic Austin's work in this way is a model.

Messrs. Curwen have issued a setting for women's voices and orchestra of choruses from the Choephori of Æschylus, by W. G. Whittaker. The music was written for performances of the first two parts of Æschylus's trilogy The House of Atreus at Aberdeen University in 1920. But it may well be used for concert purposes, provided the text be printed in the programme and certain link-passages recited. The score is for full orchestra, but a separate version may be had for strings and drums. The music has a kind of lean vigour that is attractive in itself, as well as fitting for its dramatic purpose. It is decidedly Holstean in some respects. Girls' schools and training colleges where there is a good choir (not afraid of discords and consecutive fifths) could make much of this work. H. G.

HYMN BOOKS

J. S. Bach's Original Hymn-Tunes for Congregational Use, edited with notes by Charles Sanford Terry (Milford), is a collection that will hardly serve the purpose indicated in the title. The music is as a whole too ornate for congregational use, and a good many of the melodies cover too wide a range. These fine tunes have such unusual metres that Dr. Terry had some difficulty in providing them with English texts. In some cases he has adopted the questionable expedient of interpolating words or omitting a line. The result is not happy; for example, the last line of each verse of a well-known hymn of Henry Collins reads, 'O make me love thee ever more and more,' instead of 'O make me love thee more and more.' And a couple of syllables are thrust into the second line in 'There is a blessed home Beyond this land of sin and woe.' The conservatism of congregations in such matters is well known, and the organist who attempts to use an unfamiliar tune of Bach to such hymns, and at the same time asks the faithful to add or subtract words, will meet trouble. The collection is best suited to the library, though it may well be used as a supplemental tunebook by choirs for special purposes. In any case the study of this fine music will do them good.

Dr. Terry has also brought together Six Plain-song Melodies harmonized by Bach, and edited for use in churches (Curwen). In a prefatory note he says that the collection contains all melodies of the type treated by Bach in which 'the plainsong character is apparent.' But where is the 'Veni, Creator,' on which Bach wrote a couple of chorale preludes? Dr. Terry includes 'Komm Heiliger Geist, Herre Gott,' but seems to have overlooked 'Komm, Gott, Schöpfer, Heiliger Geist,' a tune which is far more familiar to English people—one of the few plainsong tunes, in fact, which the bulk of English church-goers really know. Bach made no bones about turning these old melodies into chorales; he made fine music of them, but he kept very little of the plainsong flavour.

The Winchester Hymn Supplement is a small collection put forth by a body working under the authority of the Bishop of Winchester as a Diocesan Church Music Committee. It is divided into three parts: (1) for adults; (2) for older children; and (3) for young children. The committee has drawn liberally on the English Hymnal. Words and tunes are issued in separate booklets, the tunes being indicated in most cases at the head of each hymn. References are also made to suitable tunes in standard hymnals. It is a pity that neither words nor tunes are provided with indications as to the metre. Half the trouble in hunting out tunes for words, or words for tunes, disappears when we know whether we have to spot an L.M. or a 6.6.5 D., or what not. The Preface tells us that the book is issued in response to a demand from churches, which, unable to make a change of hymnal, yet desire access to the many fine hymns that have been revived or written in recent years. Published, as it is, at a cheap rate, this Winchester venture should find many friends outside its diocese. Almost all the tunes are first-rate, the few weak ones being some of the folk-tunes from the E. H., e.g., 'Capel' and 'Herongate' (Warren & Son, Winchester).

Yet another Bach collection: The Bach Chorale Book, selected and edited by the Rev. J. Herbert Barlow, of Andover, Hants (H. W. Gray Co.;

Novello). This is avowedly intended for congregational use; but what congregation is likely to be able to manage tunes, the treble of which rises frequently to G above the staff and in one case even to A? Another factor against the congregational singing of a good many of the settings is the liberal use of passing-notes, sometimes as many as four to a syllable. This necessitates a pace so slow as to throw a severe strain on a body of untrained voices. Even when the leisurely pace can be managed it is out of keeping with our English ideas of hymn singing. This excellent collection, like those mentioned above, is better adapted for purely choir purposes or as a book of reference than for use by a crowd.

Hymn-books for use at mission services have long been a byword for bad quality both in regard to words and music. Now that hymnody in general is being overhauled and strengthened, the time is ripe for an improvement in collections designed for use at meetings and services outside the liturgical scheme. Here is a good effort in the right direction—The Mission Hymn Book, with Tunes (S.P.C.K.), a set of a hundred and fifty-three, well classified and indexed. It retains a few hymns and tunes that ought to be shed, but a reform of this type must necessarily be by stages. The surest way of improving public taste here, as in other departments of music, is to bring forward good material and trust to its ultimate triumph over the bad. The omission of all popular examples of poor quality is likely to defeat the aim of such a book, inasmuch as the people who most need to have good tunes brought to their notice will refuse to look at a collection in which none of their favourites appear. This hymnal may be warmly commended to the notice, not only of missionaries, but of choirmasters who need a supplementary book containing a large number of good alternative tunes. As was said above, there are many churches where a change of hymnal is desired but inexpedient. Here is the next best thing—a supplementary book for the choir-stalls.

A Missionary Hymn-Book, with Tunes (S.P.C.K.) ought to have been a triumphant success. It contains an unusually large number of really fine examples by such composers as Percy Buck, Basil Harwood, Kenneth Finlay, the Shaw brothers, Mabel Sumarez-Smith, and others, many of them specially written. There are also a lot of capital but neglected tunes by Wesley and other of our older hymn-tune composers. The selection is generous in scope—the book contains about two hundred and fifty hymns. I understand that it is the result of several years' work by an influential committee. Yet all this effort is largely spoilt by the unsatisfactory production of the book. Many of the tunes are reproduced by some photographic process, while others are printed from ordinary music-type, with bad results so far as the appearance of the pages is concerned. This would matter little from a practical point of view, but a really serious defect is the number of mistakes in the music of the new tunes. Some, of course, are so obvious that they almost right themselves, but there are others. Again, there is no consistency in regard to the form in which the old psalm tunes appear. Some have the long notes at the beginnings of lines, some have not. The Mechlin form of 'Veni, Creator' is given with the dotted notes that belong to a period when English editors knew little or nothing about the rhythm of plain-song. There is a sound proverb about the folly of losing the sheep for a ha'p'orth of tar. It is to be hoped that the S.P.C.K. will soon bring out an edition of this capital collection in a form more worthy of its admirable material.

Finally, here is The School Hymnary (The Grant Educational Company, London and Glasgow). The music is for two-part singing—treble and alto. Unfortunately, the arrangement has been made by the all-too simple expedient of taking ordinary hymn tunes, removing the tenor and bass, and giving the remainder to the trebles and altos. The result may be imagined—successions of fourths and other Hucbaldian effects. In one or two cases the tune actually ends with a bare fourth, which is going beyond most of our primitives! Some teachers may vote unison singing as dull, but can anything be worse than such two-part harmony as this from No. 105:

Imagine the exhilaration of the altos set to sing this for eight verses!

H. G.

Occasional Notes

No politician has really 'arrived' until he has been caricatured in Punch. Similarly, a writer must produce something of note (even if only a 'best seller') in order to be honoured by a parody in the same quarter. It is a pleasant sign of the growth of public interest in music that one of our critics should have been singled out for this distinction in Punch of January 31. Unfortunately, our satisfaction stops right there. The skit was headed (rather too obviously) 'Arnold Brax, by Evan Edwards.' When we saw this caption, we said to ourselves, said we, 'A bad choice for a parodist: a style so natural and straightforward as E. E.'s doesn't lend itself to parody.' And the farther we read, the more depressed we became. Is there a hint of Evans in this?:

. . . at the opening of 1923 he [Brax] is generally acclaimed as combining rhythmic dynamism, endogamic Narcissism, Gongrism, and instinctual metabolism to a greater extent than any other living composer, not even excepting Botulinsky or Pimpolmi.

The humour that lies in the use of long words is a cheapish brand, and is only barely tolerable even when used in parody. A good deal more is needed to produce a really funny result. The words must not only be long: they must be the kind of long words affected by the parodied writer. But such heavy-handed spoof as the following leaves E. E.'s withers unwrung:

The greater part of Brax's music undoubtedly expresses the exuberant energy of an abnormally resilient personality intoxicated—or, perhaps I should say confuscated—with the exuberance of its own poluphloisboisterosity. The greatest of polyphonic Pragmatists, uniting free resort to a voluptuous vernacularism with the austere pungency of an astigmatic amblyopia.

True, there is a musical critic given to polysyllabic and sesquipedalian gambols not unlike the above, but his name is not Evans. Mr. Punch has sent his shafts to the wrong address.

Mr. Temple Thurston's comedy A Roof and Four Walls, at the Apollo, is a well-written and well-acted affair, but it is unconvincing on the musical side of its story. For example, we are given to understand that Stenning, a young composer, is a failure because he writes from the head rather than from the heart; he is a mere mathematician who starts a work as if it were a proposition in Euclid, and ends it with the tonal equivalent of 'Q. E. D.' Yet when we see him composing he has his manuscript on the pianoforte, experiments with squishy chords, and then writes them down. Mathematical composers don't work out their problems that way, Mr. Thurston. And when we are given specimens of his music in the shape of three songs (the illusion being helped out by a prominent announcement on the programme to the effect that the three songs have been specially composed by Mr. Norman O'Neill!) we find them smacking a good deal of the heart and very little of the head. They are, in fact, merely a superior kind of ballad.

Miss Phyllis Neilson-Terry sings them, and in doing so reminds us of the difficulties that beset the dramatist when his plot turns on the superb singing of one of his characters. A novelist has only to give a glowing account of the star, with the world at her feet. We know such things have been, still are, and will be yet awhile (so much the worse for music!), and we therefore have no difficulty in going along with the author. But the playwright is in a fix. He must either play for safety, and ask us to take his heroine's singing for granted, or, greatly daring, must give us a sample. Unfortunately Mr. Thurston takes the latter risky course, and when we have heard Mrs. Stenning perform we find ourselves wondering why people should offer her two hundred guineas for singing a few songs at an 'At home'—for, frankly, Miss Neilson-Terry's singing is such a long way behind her acting as to be out of sight. Her speaking voice is full of appealing charm, but precious little of it gets into her singing. She has a few pretty notes in the small register, and they were duly exploited, but her tone otherwise is apt to become shrill in loud passages, and she is not always plumb in the middle of the note. In fact, she is the reverse of most of our operatic performers. She can act, and not sing; they can sing (some of them) and not act. We go out of our way to say these hard things about a delightful actress, because there is no department of music in which the public shows so little discrimination as that of singing. So long as it applauds good, bad, and indifferent, the art must suffer. We have a striking example in this play. In the first Act the heroine has to sing as a vocalist in the rough, and Miss Terry accordingly sings badly—very badly, in fact. But the audience applauds with as much fervour as it shows later on, when (two years having elapsed) she sings again—this time as the all-conquering star! (It was obvious that the demonstrations were for the singing, not the acting.) We recommend readers to go to the Apollo. They will find the entertainment delightful, save at such moments as the husband is composing and the wife singing—which, after all, is true to life in a good many homes known to all of us.

The finest (because most fitting) celebration of the Franck Centenary seems to have been that held at New York in the Wanamaker Auditorium on December 27 and 29, and January 3. It consisted of performances of all Franck's organ music, the players being Marcel Dupré and Charles Courboin. The great hall was packed on each occasion. Both recitalists, by the way, played from memory. Dupré, with a modesty that does him credit, had announced that he would not improvise on this occasion, and for a long while resisted the emphatic demands of the crowd. When, finally, he was prevailed on to alter his mind, he happily made his improvisation into a tribute to Franck by taking as his theme a phrase from the Prelude, Aria, and Finale. One point about these recitals deserves mention: they have undoubtedly enhanced the prestige of the organ and its repertory. Henry T. Finck, the well-known critic of the New York Evening Post, said that they constituted the most significant Franck celebration in America, and he added that the audiences were on a par with those attracted by the Flonzaley Quartet or the Philharmonic Orchestra. Bearing in mind the neglect of the organ as a concert instrument in this country (except in a few municipal halls), we are bound to admit that America is scoring heavily in this respect. The Diapason announced a list of concert engagements of Dupré during February: there were twenty-one. Can we imagine a concert organist, native or foreign (especially native), being booked up for practically every week-day in a month? For the coming season Dupré has nearly a hundred recitals booked, and no more dates are available. And it has to be remembered that there are other players in America almost as busy as Dupré. Courboin, for example, had nearly thirty engagements during the first two months of this year—quite as many as could be crowded in, seeing the amount of travel involved in some cases. Finally, in order to realise the significance of these Wanamaker recitals, you have only to imagine a famous London store (say Selfridge's or Harrod's) including in its premises a fine concert-hall, with one of the best organs in the country, and handing over the management thereof to a first-rate professional musician. Then picture to yourself two of our best players being engaged to play all Franck's organ works on three days. This is so great a strain on the imagination that you may be unable to go farther. But have a try! See in your mind's eye Londoners flocking in their thousands and filling this hall, and on each occasion not only sitting things out, but actually asking for extras. If you can imagine all this you can imagine anything.

In the issue of the Diapason from which we have obtained news of the Franck celebration, appears a tribute to our own Harold Darke, written by Hamilton C. MacDougall, a well-known American organ enthusiast who has recently spent some months in England. Here, slightly condensed, is what he says:

I've heard some very interesting Bach recitals in the Church of St. Michael, Cornhill, London. The organist was Dr. Harold Darke, a most accomplished musician and clever player. Our general idea of a Bach recital is a series of preludes and fugues, the fugues all registered by beginning with Great diapasons coupled to full Swell without 16-ft., and then poco a poco crescendo to the bitter end. Darke's success in interesting and holding a crowded church, full, largely of men (and a large proportion of the men young), is due to (1) the inclusive character of his programmes, drawn, as they were, from all sources of organ works; (2) the close study of each work to find out its emotional character; (3) the adaptation of registration, tempo,

(Continued on page 191.)

Now if Christ be preached that He rose from the dead

EASTER ANTHEM

1 Cor. xv. 12—14; 20—22; 57.

Music by W. WOLSTENHOLME, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

TENORS AND BASSES. Quasi Recit.Grave.

Now if Christ be preached that He rose from the dead, how say

ORGAN.

Gt. Diaps. 16 & 8 ft.Ped. 16 & 8 ft.

some a-mong you that there is no re-sur-rec-tion of the dead? But if there be no re-sur-rec-tion of the dead, then is Christ not ris-en: And if Christ be not ris-en, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is al-so vain.

NOW IF CHRIST BE PREACHED THAT HE ROSE FROM THE DEAD.

Allegretto. ♩ = 80.

mr. Gr. 16. 8 & 4 ft. coupd. to Full Sw. cres cen do.
Ped. 16 & 8 ft.

SOPRANO.
 But now is Christ ris - en from the dead, but now is Christ ris - en from the

ALTO.
 But now is Christ ris - en from the dead, but now is Christ ris - en from the

TENOR.
 But now is Christ ris - en from the dead, but now is Christ ris - en from the

BASS.
 But now is Christ ris - en from the dead, but now is Christ ris - en from the

But now is Christ ris - en from the dead, but now is Christ ris - en from the

ff

dead, and be - come the first - fruits of them that sleep.

dead, and be - come the first - fruits of them that sleep.

dead, and be - come the first - fruits of them that sleep. For since by man came dead, and be - come the first - fruits of them that sleep.

p sw. p

NOW IF CHRIST BE PREACHED THAT HE ROSE FROM THE DEAD.

For since by man came death, by man came al - so the re - sur-rec-tion by man came al - so the re - sur-rec-tion death, by man came death, by man came al - so the re - sur-rec-tion
by man came al - so the re - sur-rec-tion

of . . the dead. rit. a tempo. > of . . the dead. For as in A-dam all die, all die, e - ven so in of . . the dead. rit. a tempo. > of . . the dead. For as in A-dam all die, e - ven so in Christ shall all be made a - live. But now is Christ ris - en from the dead,

Christ shall all be made a - live. But now is Christ ris - en from the dead,
Christ shall all be made . . a - live. But now is Christ ris - en from the dead,
Christ shall all be made a - live. But now is Christ ris - en from the dead,

NOW IF CHRIST BE PREACHED THAT HE ROSE FROM THE DEAD.

but now is Christ ris - en from the dead, and be - come the first-fruits of

but now is Christ ris - en from the dead, and be - come the first-fruits of but now is Christ ris - en from the dead, and be - come the first-fruits of but now is Christ ris - en from the dead, and be - come the first-fruits of them that sleep. Thanks be un - to God, thanks be un - to God, Who hath them that sleep. Thanks be un - to God, thanks be un - to God, Who hath them that sleep. Thanks be un - to God, thanks be un - to God, Who hath them that sleep. Thanks be un - to God, thanks be un - to God, Who hath giv - en us the vic - to - ry, through our Lord Je - sus Christ.

giv - en us the vic - to - ry, through our Lord Je - sus Christ.

giv - en us the vic - to - ry, through our Lord Je - sus Christ.

giv - en us the vic - to - ry, through our Lord Je - sus Christ.

(Continued from page 186.)

and nuance to the character as determined; (4) the fluidity of registration following the emotional give-and-take as the piece progressed; (5) the boldness of registration, often flouting the traditional or conventional notions as to Bach's music; (6) the pains taken to shape the programmes so that successive pieces were contrasted in some effective way; (7) the skill in effecting the registration without the slightest loss of time; (8) the masterly way in which the crescendi and diminuendi were managed, and without a crescendo pedal; and (9) the impeccable technique, comparable only to that of a Lynnwood Farnam.

There may be a few readers asking 'Who is Lynnwood Farnam?' He is generally reckoned to have no superior among American players. Those of us who had the good luck to hear him play during his visit to England on military service will agree that there could be no higher compliment to Darke's technique than this comparison.

Yet one more piece of news from this same Diapason—and bad news, too. Organists in this country have recently heard rumours as to the destitute condition of Louis Vierne. They were naturally disposed to regard the rumours as false, or at least exaggerated, because they could not imagine the organist of Notre Dame (especially when he happens to be a musician of Vierne's eminence) being allowed to fall on evil days through illness. But the Diapason sets the matter beyond a doubt, as it includes a list of donations to a relief fund started by Edward Shippen Barnes (a former pupil of Vierne) and Lynnwood Farnam. About £25 went off in the middle of January, and it was hoped to send another instalment soon after. The matter is urgent, Vierne having been forced to give up his studio and sell his books. It is hoped that a small chamber-organ may be obtained for him, so that he may be able to resume his teaching.

The Musical Times cannot be accused of any lack of cordiality towards French musicians, so we shall not be misunderstood when we say that the affair is a disgrace to musical France. Vierne is not only a magnificent organist and composer of organ music; he has done good work in other fields of composition as well, so that his claim extends beyond the walls of Notre Dame. We English are often charged with failing to appreciate our musicians, but we cannot conceive an English parallel to this Vierne case. If the organist of St. Paul's or Westminster Abbey had a prolonged illness, accompanied (as is Vierne's) with almost total loss of sight, we believe the case would be met without taking round the hat. And if we did take round the hat we should take it round among ourselves, having still a little pride left.

This case of Vierne is not the only sign of France's reluctance to put her hand in her pocket. A fund is even now being raised in this country to pay for the installation of electric blowing at Notre Dame as a token of our appreciation of Dupré. But where is the French appreciation of Dupré? Both he and Bonnet spend almost all their time touring in America. Surely Paris, which (we are told) flocks to hear both men play when they run home for a day or two, might at least pay for a blowing appliance. And seeing that Vierne is perhaps a greater man than either of the two brilliant young organists, it might do its duty by him as well as by the organ on which he has rendered such splendid service. However, it is ill work arguing while a man is starving, so we hope Vierne's numerous admirers in this country will lend a hand. If they wish to contribute to the New York fund they should send to Shippen Barnes or Farnam, at 222, East Seventeenth Street, New York. But we think that, the case being urgent, they are justified in adopting the unconventional course of sending direct to Vierne himself (c/o his publishers, Messrs. Durand & Co.) a little note of sympathy and appreciation, expressing some of the sympathy in a form that may be cashed.

The Elizabethan Festival at Kingsway Hall on March 2 and 3 promises to be very successful. In view of the fact that the Festival breaks fresh ground, and comes near to clashing with other competitive events, the entry is surprisingly good. The Festival will wind up with a concert of Elizabethan music on the Saturday night (March 3). The choral side of the programme will be provided by the Oriana Madrigal Society (Mr. Charles Kennedy Scott) and the Westminster Cathedral Choir (Sir Richard Terry), and the soloists will be Miss Margaret Champneys, Mr. Steuart Wilson, Mr. John Goss, and Mr. Harold Craxton. Sir Hugh Allen will say a few words.

'FAMOUS PRIMA DONNA TO VISIT ENGLAND.
FOUR-FIGURE FEE FOR EACH CONCERT'

The above heading appeared in a London daily paper a week or two ago, followed by a fat paragraph in which not a word was said about music, but a great deal about the lady's fee. This same paper's usual allowance of space for an important concert is about six lines. And so the good work goes on.

The British Music Society now issues its Bulletin in a new and greatly improved form. The February issue contains an article on Dame Ethel Smyth, by Rutland Boughton; a report of the First General Conference of the International Society, by César Saerchinger; reviews of new music; and a lot of news served up in an interesting way.

The Handel Festival has been killed over and over again (on paper) by critics able to give all sorts of reasons why there should never be another one. But it refuses to be knocked out, and arrangements are well in hand for the next, which takes place at the Crystal Palace on June 16, 19, 21, and 23. There is a fine list of soloists, the London Symphony Orchestra will provide the backbone of the accompanying force, Mr. Walter Hedgcock will once more be musical director and organist, and Sir Frederic Cowen will conduct.

Arne, like most of our old worthies, is being revived and enjoyed a good deal of late. In our January number we reported a successful production by the Arne Society, at Eton, of his Masque of Comus, and we are glad to hear that the work is to be given in London by the same company. There will be two performances, March 9 (at 8.30), and 10 (3.0), at the Inner Temple Hall. The cast will include Elizabeth Mitchell-Innes and Hubert Langley, and Susan Lushington will conduct. The performances are under the management of the Imperial Concert Agency. We make a point of mentioning this agency because it is one that ought to be of great use to such of our readers as give concerts at which soloists are required—sometimes at short notice. They should write to the I.P.A. (Empire House, 175, Piccadilly) for a copy of its sixty-page prospectus, wherein they will find the names (and in many cases the portraits) of practically everybody who is anybody in the English concert world, from prima donnas down (or up) to entertainers at the piano.

The League of Arts is giving a series of free concerts in the Lecture Theatre of the Victoria and Albert Museum on Saturdays, at 3.0. The cost is defrayed (or should be) by the sale of programmes at 6d. each. The arrangements for March are: 3rd, London Male-Voice Octet; 10th, League of Arts Choir, in sea-songs and chanties; 17th, Mr. Harold Samuel, in old and new English music; 24th, the Novello Choir; and 31st, Mr. Harold Samuel, with a Bach programme. So attractive a scheme should be sure of a warm welcome.

Even in 'howlers' there seems to be nothing new. Recently the Morning Post quoted the following—a really brilliant achievement—which appeared in Krelistcha, a Moscow journal:

On November 2 in London the thousandth performance was given of an opera written by an 18th-century beggar called Hammersmith. It was revived two years ago. Another 18th-century opera, Polly, by an equally famous composer, Kingsway, will be revived shortly.

Whereupon a correspondent to the Observer pointed out that in an account of the execution of Charles I., published at Paris in 1649, it was stated that the King was tried by 'an inferior judge named Kingsbinch' (un juge subalterne qui s'appelle Kingsbinch).

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

The outstanding record this month is that of Beethoven's fifth Symphony, played by the Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Landon Ronald. It is given without cuts, and fills four 12-in. d.-s. H.M.V. It is a capital reproduction, with inevitable losses and some gains. Among the losses is that of the famous drum figure at the end of the Scherzo. It is there, of course, but only those of us who know it's there and listen intently can catch it. The drum is not a good recorder, so nobody's to blame. An eyebrow may have been raised at the mention of 'gains.' Some people think that the most the gramophone can do is to give something nearly as good as the original, but my experience is that it occasionally goes one better and makes an improvement. Here is an example. In the record of the Allegretto, the passage for wood-wind alone in four-part harmony is far more effective than it usually is at first-hand. In the concert-hall it is almost invariably too loud, and sometimes too coarse as to make one wonder why the wood-wind was ever poetically called the flower garden of the orchestra, instead of being nicknamed the cabbage patch. On the gramophone—or at all events on mine—the delicacy of this passage is delightful. The whole record is an achievement of which H.M.V. may well be proud.

Excellent, too, is an Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.-s. of the band of the 1st Life Guards playing three movements of the Peer Gynt Suite—'Solweig's Song,' 'Anitra's Dance,' and 'In the Hall of the Mountain King.' The first two are the most satisfactory. In the last we miss the crash of an orchestra close at hand.

After all, there are some works in which sheer power is the most important factor. If you have always regarded the cornet as a vulgar beanfeasting instrument, hear the artist who plays the air in this 'Solweig's Song' performance.

Odd how players follow-my-leader! Once or twice in these columns I have expressed surprise—even some annoyance—at violinists wasting their time playing an arrangement of so poor a thing as Brahms's Waltz in A flat, and here it is cropping up again, this time played by Albert Sammons. I prefer him in his own Canzonetta, which is on the other side of this 10-in. d.-s. Æ.-Voc.

An amazing bit of virtuosity is John Amadio's playing of a couple of solos on what a three-year-old gramophone enthusiast at my elbow calls the flupe. Like so many childish slips it is a happy one. Change the spelling and the word exactly describes the music of these solos. They are mere floop: a poor song with brilliant superficial variations by Boehm and a Polonaise by Busé. Yet I must admit enjoyment, though it was confined to the dexterity of Mr. Amadio. What a pity an instrument so well adapted to pure melody, and with so much beauty in its lower register as the flute, should be so badly treated by soloists! How often do we hear really first-rate music played by flute virtuosos? They must always be exceeding the speed limit with pieces about bees, or will-o'-the-wisps, or with twiddle-bits written round some air for which no other use can be found. A pity! (Æ.-Voc. 10-in. d.-s.)

There are some good vocal records this month. Frank Titterton on a 10-in. d.-s. Æ.-Voc., is in capital form with a couple of Balfe battle horses—Then you'll remember me and Yes, let me like a soldier fall. Both are with orchestral accompaniment, and the latter is very stirring, with a peppery little bit of side-drum at the start.

There is brilliance and great vivacity in Lucrezia Bori's singing of 'In uomini, in soldati,' from Costi fan tutte, but it seems to be achieved at some cost on the purely vocal side (H.M.V. 10-in.). For beauty of voice and phrasing I have heard nothing better for a long time than Kathleen Destournel in 'Deh! vieni,' from Figaro (12-in. d.-s. Æ.-Voc., with explanatory notes on the reverse side). The delicate accompaniment, too, is a joy—just a few simple wisps of sound by strings and wood-wind.

On the other hand, for sheer noise I give the palm to a H.M.V. 12-in. record of the sextet in Lucia. The singers are an array of stars such as we rarely get in our drawing-rooms—Tetrazzini, Caruso, Amato, Journet, Jacoby, and Bada. Curiously, one doesn't get the effect of six people, but rather of two tenors each trying to drown the other, while a soprano makes faint appeals from the bank. Of course, Tetrazzini is singing a note at the top of the last terrific chord, but the actual sound of her voice is limited to a tiny bit that overlaps the other voices. I don't know which of the two tenors wins, but I am sure that all the other singers lose.

Robert Radford is well suited on a H.M.V. 12-in. d.-s. with the Recit. and Air from Susanna, 'Tyrannic love' and 'Ye verdant hills'—a beautiful tune—and the Recit. and Air, 'My Country' and 'O fair Palermo,' from The Sicilian Vespers.

Beniamino Gigli's singing of Toselli's Serenade is good, but a trifle too strenuous. After all, a little affair of this kind is entirely between serenader and serenadee, isn't it? 'Tis no business of the rest of the suburb (H.M.V. 10-in.).

I wish Malcolm McEachern would not waste that splendid voice of his on such poverty-stricken affairs as Pinsuti's The king's minstrel (Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.-s.). On the other side Frank Titterton joins him, and they both waste together on Sargeant's duet, Watchman! what of the night?

A H.M.V. 10-in. d.-s. gives good reproductions of the Gresham Singers in Bridge's The Goslings and a poorish arrangement of Robin Adair. They sing so well that it is a pity they fall into the regular male-voice-quartet vice of cutting their songs up into sections and playing tricks with the time. Their enunciation is excellent, and would put many a famous soloist to shame. But I hope to hear them recorded in better music than this. It is merely another variety of floop.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

We are asked to correct a small error in the College Regulations. The Cantabile of Franck is wrongly described as being in B minor, whereas it is in B major.

'WIND IN THE REEDS'

We hear that at Holbeach some members of the congregation have volunteered to help the Parish Church funds by taking their turn at blowing the organ. 'C. J. A.'s' light-hearted column in the Daily News comments on the fact in the following neatly-turned jingle, which we 'convey' with compliments:

Was e'er financial fabric
More stoutly under-pinned
Than here, where loyal laymen
Combine to raise the wind?
I've heard of some occasions
On which an organist
Himself has got the wind up
Which in the reeds he missed.
But here, with such assistance,
The organist will know
That the reeds will have the wind up
And spare him any blow.

CHRIST CHURCH, ST. LEONARDS-ON-SEA

At Christ Church, St. Leonards, the organ recitals are a feature of musical life on the south coast, and attract people from all the neighbouring towns. Mr. Allan Biggs was one of the first provincial organists to introduce the pianoforte into his programmes, and when he gave a joint recital with Pouishnov on February 9, fifteen hundred people squeezed themselves into the beautiful building, while outside a similar number listened through open doors. The unanimity and colour effect of pianoforte and organ in Beethoven's C minor Concerto and Franck's Symphonic Variations more than compensated for the absence of an orchestra. The astonishing Russian pianist also played his own Quand il pleut, Allan Biggs's Etude in F sharp minor, and Chopin's Berceuse, to a crowd of admirers who listened in rapt silence. H. S.

NEWCASTLE BACH CHOIR

A recital of Bach Cantatas was given by this body of enthusiasts at Newcastle Cathedral on February 3. The works chosen were Meine Seufzer, meine Thränen, Wir danken dir, Gott, Dem Gerechten muss das Licht, and Gloria in excelsis Deo—all being sung at Newcastle for the first time. Mr. Alfred M. Wall was leader of the orchestra, Mr. William Ellis was at the organ, and Dr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

ST. PAUL'S, PORTMAN SQUARE

A new organ built by Messrs. Willis & Lewis was dedicated on February 10, the opening recital being given by Mr. Stanley C. Curtis, the organist of the Church. The instrument is a three-manual of about forty stops. Forthcoming recitals are announced for March 3 (Mr. Curtis), March 10 (Mr. H. L. Balfour), March 17 (Dr. Charles Macpherson), and March 24 (Mr. Curtis). We understand that the organ has been built to the specification of Mr. Curtis, who is only sixteen years old. He began his work as organist at Westbourne Park Baptist Church three years ago. His recital at the dedication service included Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Saint-Saëns's Marche Héroïque, and Boëllmann's Gothic Suite.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

The annual general meeting was held on January 27 at St. John's Institute, Wilton Road, S.W., when Sir Frederick Bridge was chosen as President for the present year. To fill the places of members of the Council retiring under Rule 6, the following were elected: Messrs. B. Vine Westbrook, G. H. Gracie, Herbert Westerby, Godfrey Sceats, J. W. Coleman, and Dr. Bromley Derry. Steady progress in all respects was reported. Prior to the meeting a recital, chiefly of mediæval music, was given in St. John's Church, under the direction of Mr. Herbert Weatherly, the organist and choirmaster. The admirable singing of the choir and Mr. Weatherly's organ solos gave great pleasure.

WEST AND NORTH-WEST BRANCH

The members of this newly-formed branch of the Society met at St. James's Church, Norlands, W., on Saturday, February 17, to hear a lecture-recital by Mr. Richard Cooper on 'William Faulkes and his Music.' Mr. Cooper illustrated his paper by a fine performance of seven pieces in contrasted styles selected from Faulkes's four hundred published organ pieces. He emphasised the fact that although Faulkes was more generally known as an organ composer, he had to his credit many notable works for orchestra, as well as much chamber and choral music. Organists desiring to become members of the W. and N.W. branch of the London Society of Organists should communicate with the hon. secretary, Mr. Edward Watson, c/o National Institute for the Blind, 224, Great Portland Street, W.1.

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL, OXFORD

The reconstructed and enlarged organ was recently opened, recitals being given by Dr. W. G. Alcock, Dr. W. H. Harris, Mr. Douglas Fox, and Dr. Henry Ley. The work has been carried out by Messrs. Harrison & Harrison. The instrument is now one of four manuals, with forty-eight speaking stops and sixteen couplers. A few stops are still only prepared for. The Choir organ is enclosed. We wish space allowed us to print the excellent specification. A further series of recitals will be given at 8.30 on the first four Sundays of next term, commencing April 29. On March 8, at 8.30, the Cathedral choir will sing selections from the St. Matthew Passion.

NO NEED TO BE ANXIOUS

A recent number of the Musical News and Herald contained an inquiry from 'Anxious.' 'Where [he asked] can I obtain Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas? I have tried Novello's and several dealers.' 'Anxious' must have tried just when there were difficulties in the way of importing German music. Let him try again at Novello's, and he will find Rheinberger's Sonatas galore.

ORGAN COMPETITION IN THE CITY

The organ playing competition in connection with the London Musical Festival will be held at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, on March 10, beginning at 1.0. The church will be open to the public. There are twenty competitors, and the test-piece is the first movement of Rheinberger's Sonata in A flat.

Mr. Harold A. Jeboult has just entered on his twenty-fifth year of office at St. Mary Magdalene's, Taunton, and the occasion was marked by the presentation of a cheque, an illuminated address, and a paid-up subscription for the ten volumes of Tudor Church Music. (This last is a happy idea, which we commend to all about to make or receive presentations.) Mr. Jeboult comes of an organist stock, his grandfather, Samuel Summerhayes, having been an occupant of the post at St. Mary Magdalene; and among the list of subscribers to the 1788 edition of Boyce's Cathedral Music was 'Mr. Jeboult, Organist, Taunton.'

Mr. F. J. Livesey has lately been presented with a testimonial and a cheque for £100, as a token of appreciation of his thirty-five years' work as organist and choirmaster at St. Bees Priory Church. His recitals on the fine Willis organ have long been a popular feature, but even more praiseworthy is his endeavour to maintain a high standard in regard to the services. At St. Bees the Old English composers, such as Gibbons, Purcell, Croft, &c., are represented in the service lists to an extent rare in country churches.

Excellent musical work is being done at the Richmond Road Congregational Church, Cardiff. At the Choir Anniversary Services on February 11 Bach's Jesu, Priceless Treasure was sung, in addition to anthems by Walford Davies, Mendelssohn, and Bach; and on February 12 a Bach evening was given, when the Motet was repeated, and solos from the Cantatas were sung by Madame Eustace Davies and Miss C. A. Farrar. Mr. W. J. J. Robins, the organist and choirmaster, played solos. We congratulate him on these admirable programmes.

We hear from the National Institute for the Blind that among recent additions to the growing list of works published in Braille are the following R. C. O. examination pieces: Franck's Pastoral, Beethoven's Theme and Variations, Howells's Psalm-Prelude No. 1, and Bach's Fugue in C minor and Sonata No. 5. Other organ works just issued in Braille are Coleridge-Taylor's Three Impromptus and Lemare's Study in Accents.

At Newcastle Cathedral on January 22 Mr. H. Matthias Turton, of St. Aidan's, Leeds, gave a lecture-recital on the Symphonies of Louis Vienne, playing the whole of No. 3, the first movement and Scherzo of No. 2, and the Finale of No. 4. According to the Yorkshire Post, Mr. Turton played these extremely difficult works in a masterly manner, and as a result Vienne's fine music came as a revelation to most of his hearers.

The Bristol branch of the Church-Music Society held a congregational practice and Evensong at Christ Church, Broad Street, Bristol, a few days ago. A large congregation attended, and Mr. Arthur Warrell conducted, the result being stirring and impressive. Mr. Ralph Morgan, of St. Mary Redcliff, and Mr. W. E. Kirby, of All Saints', Clifton, shared duty at the organ.

Exeter and District Organists' Association listened on January 27 to a lecture from the late hon. treasurer, Mr. Harris, on the history of St. Petrock's Church (where the meeting took place) and organ. Music by early English composers (Blow, Purcell, Arne, Stanley, Dupuis, and S. Wesley) was subsequently played by the hon. secretary, Mr. H. T. Gilberthorpe.

A Bach programme given by Mr. H. S. Middleton at Truro Cathedral on February 12 was well designed for variety and contrast. The organ solos were the Toccata in F, the Dorian Toccata and Fugue, the Adagio from the Sonata No. 4, and the Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, these big items being separated by Chorales sung by members of the choir.

Gounod's Redemption was announced to be sung at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey on February 28, with a good list of soloists, and with Mr. Herbert Hodge at the organ.

Now that an increasing number of churches sing The Reproaches on Good Friday, there is a call for a simple setting for use where the old plainsong and polyphonic versions are impracticable. The need is met by a setting by the Rev. Horace Spence, just published by Novello (Parish Choir Book, No. 1074). The music has the right simplicity and solemnity, and is so planned that it may be sung in unison with organ, or in harmony, unaccompanied.

At Jesmond Parish Church, Newcastle, Mr. William Ellis gave a lecture-recital on 'Tudor Church Music,' illustrations being sung by the Jesmond and All Saints', Gosforth, choirs. Among the works heard were Weelkes's 'Hosanna to the Son of David' (six voices), Gibbons's 'O God, the King of Glory,' Phillips's 'The Lord ascendeth,' and Motets by Taverner, Tallis, and Byrd.

The Hornsey Choral and Orchestral Society, about a hundred and twenty strong, gave an excellent performance of The Creation (Parts 1 and 2) on January 27 at the Middle Lane Wesleyan Church. The soloists were Miss Bessie Lang, Mr. Spencer Thomas, and Mr. Samuel Dyson. Mr. George Brockless conducted.

Dr. Albert Ham's many friends in England will be glad to hear that his twenty years of work at St. James's Cathedral, Toronto, met with recognition recently, when after a special thanksgiving service he was presented with a cabinet of silver and a cheque for a thousand dollars.

St. Paul was sung at the City Temple on February 10, by the City Temple Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Allan Brown. The soloists were Miss Annie Bartle, Miss Dorothea Gadd, Mr. Sidney Pointer, and Mr. Edward Dykes. Mr. G. D. Cunningham was at the organ.

The St. Matthew Passion will be sung with orchestral accompaniment (L.S.O.) at Southwark Cathedral on March 17 at 3. No tickets are required.

Allegri's Miserere will be sung at St. John's, Wilton Road, S.W., at 7.40 p.m. on all Fridays in Lent.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Canzona, Bach; Sonata No. 1, Harwood; Symphony No. 1, Vierne.

Mr. Cyril Pearce, St. Mary's Baptist Church, Norwich—Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Fantasia and Fugue, 'Ad nos ad salutarem undam,' Liszt; Meditation, Grace; March and Finale, 'The Birds,' Parry.

Miss Christina Chalmers, St. Clement Danes—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Concerto, Handel; March and Finale, 'The Birds,' Parry.

Mr. Edward Bliss, Walsall Wood Church—Sonata in A minor, Rheinberger; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach.

Mr. John Pullein, Carlisle Cathedral—Fantasia on Campion's 'Babylon's Wave,' Harris; Pastoral, Franck; Aria, Blow; Chorale Preludes by Pullein, Grace, and Parry.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey—Allegro in F, Gade; March in B flat, F. de la Tombelle; Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant.

Mr. James Tomlinson, Public Hall, Preston—Overture, 'The Naiades'; Fantaisie, Franck; Variations on 'Gala Water,' Stuart Archer.

Mr. Philip Miles, St. Alban the Martyr, Westcliff—Fantasia and Toccata, Stanford; Slow movement from String Quartet, Debussy; Chorale Preludes by Charles Wood and Vaughan Williams; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart.

Mr. J. A. Sowerbutts, Winchester Cathedral—Fantasia on Campion's 'Babylon's Wave,' Harris; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Pastoral, de Maleingreau; Légende and Pæan, Sowerbutts; Hymn Tune Preludes by Wood, Harwood, and Grace.

- Mr. A. M. Hawkins, St. Andrew's, Westminster—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Adagio and Allegro Fugato, Stanley; Chorale Preludes by Bach, Brahms, and Karg-Elert.
- Mr. R. J. Pitcher, St. James's, Muswell Hill—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Prelude to 'Parsifal'; Pastorale and Finale (Symphony No. 2), Widor.
- Dr. A. P. Embling, St. Mary's, Bloxham—'St. Anne' Fugue, Bach; Sonata in A minor, Rheinberger; Scherzo, Gaumnant.
- Miss Lilian Coombes, St. Mary-le-Bow—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach.
- Dr. F. W. Wadely, Carlisle Cathedral—Concerto in G minor, Handel; Air and Courante, Bach; Fantasia and Toccata, Stanford; Kieff Processional, Moussorgsky.
- Mr. Eric Brough, St. Vedast Foster—A Bach programme: Dorian Toccata and Fugue; First movement of Trio Sonata No. 1; Fantasia and Fugue in C minor; Fugue in E flat; and four Chorale Preludes.
- Mr. James M. Preston, St. George's, Newcastle-on-Tyne—Symphony No. 3, Vierne; Offrande Musicale, de Maleingreau; Chorale No. 3, Frank; Catalonian Rhapsody, Gigout; Prelude in C minor, Bach.
- Mr. William Ellis, Carlisle Cathedral—'St. Anne' Fugue and two Chorale Preludes, Bach; Fugue, Reubke; Fantasia in G, Parry.
- Mr. Norman W. Newell, St. Mark's, Leeds—Sonata No. 1, Harwood; Dorian Toccata and Fugue, Bach; Pastorale, Frank; Adagio and Toccata, Widor.
- Dr. H. C. L. Stocks, Wigan Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Scherzo from the 'New World' Symphony; Andante in G, Wesley; Variations on 'Land of my Fathers,' Stocks.
- Mr. Paul Rochard, Kendal Parish Church—Fantasia on Christmas Tunes, Selby; Pastorale, Recitativo, and Corale, Karg-Elert; Dithyramb, Harwood; Sonata, Reubke; Symphony No. 5, Widor.

APPOINTMENT

Mr. Frank E. Newman, organist and choirmaster, St. Peter Mancroft, Norwich.

Competition Festival Record

CHORAL CONTESTS, PRELIMINARY AND FINAL :

A POINT FOR COMMITTEES

A correspondent asks us to bring up for discussion the regulation at Blackpool and one or two other big festivals concerning the final contests in important choral classes. He sends his name for publication, but we withhold it because we feel that matters of this kind are best discussed in as detached a manner as possible. We will merely say that he is a well-known and successful choral conductor with ample experience of competition festivals of the best kind.

As most of our readers know, the custom at some large festivals is for three test-pieces, a, b, and c, to be given to the principal choral classes. One of these tests is sung in the afternoon and three (or four) choirs are chosen to sing the other two at the final contest in the evening. There is of course a practical reason for this. With a large entry, the greater part of a day would be needed for one class if all the choirs sang all three pieces. Yet the plan may easily work out unsatisfactorily, as our correspondent shows. He points out that in the A class at Blackpool last year, the marks of the four choirs selected for the final were 84, 83, 82, 82 respectively, the first two of the non-selected being 81. Now with so small a margin separating choirs of such high quality, and bearing in mind that the two pieces b and c were of a totally different character from a (on which the decision was based), we agree with the writer that had all the choirs been heard in b and c the final result would probably have been different.

Our correspondent gives an actual case in support of this view. A few years ago he had the pleasure of conducting the winning choir in Class B. At the preliminary contest in the afternoon his choir obtained the lowest marks of the choirs chosen for the final, but in the evening it won the final by the handsome margin of eleven marks, with the second highest total gained by any choir that year. Now, had these singers lost but one more mark in the afternoon they would have had no chance of showing themselves to be what they were—easily the best choir in their class.

There seems to be a real need for a different method of weeding-out. As it is clearly out of the question for all three songs to be heard in the afternoon the solution seems to be in the adoption of the plan used at most examinations. Why should not the choirs sing a portion of each of the three tests? This method would give the most versatile choirs the chance that at present they are likely to miss, and it need take very little longer than the performance of one piece in full.

If the present system is to remain, we suggest that the decision as to which of the three songs is to be used in the afternoon be made at the time, instead of being announced beforehand. Apropos of this point, our correspondent says :

Fortunately, all the choirs seem to be out for music first and foremost, otherwise there might arise a danger of choirs putting undue work into the first piece, at the expense of the two greater pieces, to try and ensure being in the final.

He goes on :

Another point the choirs make is this. They practise all the summer for Blackpool, at a cost, in the case of my own choir, of about £100. (Critics who look on these competitions as mere 'pot-hunting' affairs might make a note of this!) Surely the singers should be given an opportunity for singing all the music on which they have spent so much time and money. These people love their singing, and they feel that they have not had fair play when at the end they have a criticism of only a small part of their work.

Well, there is the point for committees to settle. The case cited shows that the present method is unsatisfactory.

WAKE UP ! MUSIC DEALERS

We have lately had many complaints as to the lack of enterprise on the part of local music dealers. Festival secretaries and competitors tell us that they frequently find it impossible to obtain test-pieces through their local music shop. All sorts of reasons are given : this song is out of print ; that violin solo cannot be traced ; and so on. The limit seems to have been reached in a case brought to our notice a few days ago. The choral test at an East Anglian competition is Stanford's Heracitus, published (as all the choral world knows) by Stainer & Bell. We have had a despairing letter from the secretary of the Festival asking what is to be done : The Festival has been arranged in a hurry, and only a short time remains for preparation ; of this short time a good slice has been lost because the local music dealer tells would-be purchasers of Heracitus that Stainer & Bell no longer exist !

Here is a matter that should be taken up by the Federation of British Music Industries. The local music trader must be brought to see that his interest is not confined to shop ballads and fox-trots.

The enterprising dealer who lays himself out to help local competitors by a prompt supply of test-pieces will not only be lending a hand to the most important musical movement of to-day; he will be bringing a steady stream of fresh customers to his door, and when he is serving them with test-pieces he is a poor salesman if he doesn't see that a good many of them buy something else as well.

Still, the festival officials are not always as helpful as they might be. We have lately seen several syllabuses in which the names of the publishers of the test-pieces do not appear. In one or two instances not even the composer is mentioned—just the name of the song! Not only should the publishers' names be given in connection with each item; the syllabus should contain also a list of publishers' full business titles and addresses. Intending competitors would then be able to order the music direct, and local musicsellers would have no excuse for saying that well-known firms had put the shutters up.

LOUTH EISTEDDFOD

This event, now in its third year, was held with great success on February 7 and 8. Entries showed an increase of about sixty above last year. Excellent choral singing was forthcoming in the classes for village choirs (won by Tetley Choral Society) and ladies' choirs (Miss Lewendon's Choir, Grimsby, 1; The Venturers, Louth, 2). The chief choral class produced a good entry and contest. (Winners not given in the report sent to us.) Wilbye's Love me not for comely grace proved a hard nut, but some capital attempts were made. Dr. W. G. Whittaker and Mr. Harvey Grace judged.

LEEDS COMPETITIVE FESTIVAL

More than four thousand entries have been received for the first Leeds Competitive Festival, which opens on March 21. Forty school choirs are to compete. Entries in various classes come from Manchester, Rochdale, Padiham, York, Morley, Batley Carr, Cleckheaton, St. Helen's, Sheffield, Sale, Todmorden, Normanton, Harrogate, Burnley, Horbury, and many districts of the West Riding. The first entry was from London, and competitors are coming from as far afield as Cornwall and the Isle of Man. Vocal soloists number two hundred and seventy-seven; instrumentalists over two hundred. Morning and afternoon sessions will be held at the Albert Hall and the Albion Hall; and in the evenings, massed concerts will be given in the Town Hall. The Festival will extend from March 21 to 24 inclusive.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Lady pianist wishes to meet violinist for mutual practice. Highbury district.—S. S., c/o Musical Times.

Young tenor (22) would like to meet pianist about same age. Gentleman preferred. South Birmingham district. For mutual practice.—N. R., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist and pianist will be glad of a 'cellist for mutual practice. Need not be experienced.—Apply by letter to 30, Moresby Road, Upper Clapton, E.5.

The Mayfair Dramatic Club, the only club in existence producing 18th-century operas, has a few vacancies for ladies and gentlemen. Next production in May.—Applications for membership should be addressed to the SECRETARY, 97, Belgrave Road, S.W.1.

Viola player wanted to complete quintet for mutual practice. Local resident preferred.—Apply to Mr. R. BENSON, 49, Sedlescombe Road, Fulham, S.W.

A tenor, retired, would like to hear of an efficient accompanist in the North Finchley district, for mutual practice, once a week: also to hear of a mezzo or contralto singer, to join for practice in a round of operatic duets.—J. D. S., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur wood-wind and brass instrumentalists would be heartily welcomed in London, W.C.1., district on March 15, at 6.45 p.m., to give simple illustrations to a University Extension Lecture on 'The Orchestra and its component parts.'—Please write, C. SASSÉ, 131, De Beauvoir Road, N.1.

Amateur violinist and pianist (gentlemen) wish to meet violinist (or violist) and 'cellist (gentlemen) with view to forming quartet. Must be good, experienced players.—H. MILSOM, 37, Palace Square, S.E.19.

Lady pianist desires to meet instrumentalists for mutual practice.—N., 6, Wellington Terrace, Bayswater, W.2.

A violinist and 'cellist wanted to form trio for practices and musical convivals.—4, Fairland Road, Stratford, E.15.

West Ham Parish Orchestra.—Amateur instrumentalists required (strings and wood-wind). Practices every Friday evening at 8.0, at Meeson Hall, Portway, near West Ham Church, E.15.

'Cellist, male or female, about twenty-one, to complete pianoforte quartet, one evening per week.—Apply by letter, F. R. G. CLARE, 10, Binfield Road, Clapham, S.W.4.

Letters to the Editor

THE TERCENTENARY OF WILLIAM BYRD AND THOMAS WHEELKES

SIR,—At the recent meeting of the Musical Association, when Mr. Gustav Holst read a paper on this subject, so much time was occupied by the illustrations, admirably performed by the Morley College choir, that almost none was left for discussion; and having regard to the fact that 'investigation and discussion' are officially stated to be the objects of the Association, one may perhaps be permitted to record a few ideas which suggested themselves as the meeting proceeded.

It was certainly refreshing to find such a modernist as Mr. Holst interesting himself in a thoroughly old-world topic, and telling us how recent discoveries of Byrd's compositions thrilled him, and left him breathless and gasping. But, alas! we are not all so young as Mr. Holst, and although of course many of Byrd's works were known to us only by name, sufficient were accessible to enable us to realise something of his genius. Nearly forty years ago Bow Thine ear was sung in a church in the far west of Ireland, and I myself possess a MS. copy of a six-part carol from Songs of Sundrie Natures, transcribed from Murray's Magazine of November, 1888. I also remember playing the variations on The Carman's Whistle at a lecture on the 'History of English Music' a year or so earlier.

The lecturer commenced by discussing the advisability or otherwise of centenary celebrations, and instanced our utter forgetfulness of John Dunstable. But surely the wholesale destruction of ecclesiastical manuscripts at the time of the (so-called) Reformation is the probable explanation of this misfortune. And, by the way, are not centenary celebrations more appropriately associated with the birth, rather than the death, of great men? The hour that gives birth to a genius is the hour of supreme significance: that of his death is to us a matter of comparatively small import. And the tercentenary of William Byrd, who, according to Mr. Barclay Squire, was born in 1542 or 1543, was not inaptly—though perhaps unconsciously—heralded by the publication in 1841 of the Mass for five voices, and in 1842 of Book I of the Cantiones Sacre by the Musical Antiquarian Society. It is much to be regretted that the editors of the collection of Tudor Church music now in course of publication have not seen fit to follow the example of this Society, which did such good service in its day, by retaining the alto and tenor clefs, the absence of which cannot but detract from the scholarly appearance of their valuable work.

The lecturer said that Byrd had been styled 'the English Palestrina': he thought that when his works became more widely known, Palestrina might possibly receive the title of 'the Italian Byrd.' I confess that the application of this title to Byrd was new to me. Ouseley says that Gibbons was termed 'the English Palestrina'; Husk says the same. I have been familiar with the title as applied to Gibbons from childhood. I find, however, that Fétis writes of Byrd as 'the Palestrina or Di Lasso of the English.' I venture to think the title is more appropriately bestowed on Gibbons.

One very important and most interesting point was emphasised by Mr. Holst, namely, the intermittent output of English music. He said that while the production of Continental music might be compared to a steady glow, that of English music resembled a fitful flame—now rising, now falling. This is true, and I ascribe it to the blighting influence of Puritanism. During the reign of terror under the Commonwealth—when the theatres were closed, musical instruments destroyed, and the Reformation destruction well-nigh completed—a habit of mind was gradually formed, influencing large masses of the population, which was inimical to every form of music with the exception of psalm tunes, absurdly miscalled. This trait is still a national characteristic, although it has probably lost much ground since the war.

Arising out of this branch of his subject, the lecturer pointed to the curious fact that Purcell was quite uninfluenced by the Elizabethan composers. Doubtless Purcell has shown great command of counterpoint, notably in such works as O Lord God of Hosts and Jehovah quam multi sunt hostes, but it is the moderna musica, totally different from that of the 16th century. It is the first example of inspiration derived from foreign sources, so many times repeated in the history of English music. Dr. Fellowes, indeed, mentioned the interesting fact that in the library of St. Michael's College, Tenbury, he had recently discovered a composition by Byrd in the handwriting of Purcell, showing that the later musician was not unfamiliar with the work of his English predecessors. But familiarity and assimilation are not the same. Wordsworth was no doubt familiar with the poetry of Pope: he did not assimilate much of his style.

Two things I should like to know. Firstly, has anyone discovered the Italian sixth in the works of any English musician earlier than Byrd? Besides the well-known example in Bow Thine ear (deleted by Boyce, greatly to the approval of Horsley!), it is to be found in another of the Cantiones Sacre—namely, Tristitia et anxietas. Secondly, in what composition of Dr. John Bull has Mr. Holst detected the presence of the whole-tone scale?—Yours, &c.,

A. T. FROGGATT.

5, Richmond Mansions,
Denton Road, Twickenham.

January 10, 1923.

GOOD WORDS FOR MENDELSSOHN

SIR,—An unknown correspondent has been bold enough to write to a certain Sunday journal, saying that 'for anyone to insinuate that Wagner was an inferior composer to Mendelssohn is too ridiculous for words'; and further, that 'Mendelssohn—a rich German banker's son—was, in the flesh, a moneyed, pampered, and blasé individual, so no wonder he never wrote a single composition that could strike a single chord of deep feeling into an average mind's being'! Now, no one will deny that some of Wagner's music is supremely great, but for all that he was a one-sided composer, as he chiefly excelled in the field of opera, which is certainly not the highest form of musical art, whereas Mendelssohn was one of the universal geniuses in music, standing supreme not only in oratorio but also in purely abstract music. I need only mention his wonderful overtures and his magnificent chamber works (octet, quartets, and trios), which are all of the most perfect workmanship and of undying beauty. Wagner never even tried his hand at this latter branch of composition (the most difficult of all), and if he had he would have failed miserably. This same unknown correspondent's very disparaging remarks about Mendelssohn's personality are, of course, totally unjust and untrue, as history records that he was one of the most delightful men imaginable, and deeply beloved and revered by all who knew him. On the other hand, I will just quote what another writer (who is not unknown) only recently stated about Wagner:

'He presents an irreconcilable blend of good and bad, with a large preponderance of the latter. Stripped of his music, we find him a lay figure of almost repulsive ugliness. Ungrateful to his benefactors, vain in his person, unscrupulous in money matters, ridiculously fond of luxurious and gaudy surroundings, garrulous in high-sounding sentences which convey but a grain of thought, selfish and self-seeking, unstable in his loves, immodest in the parts he allots to his stage heroes and heroines, unreasonable in his detraction of all music composed by Jews, and yet a great, an original, and at times a lovely composer, he stands as the embodiment of incongruous extremes—an olla podrida of unsavoury morsels and delicious tit-bits. That his vanity should have induced him to write books, and to pose as a poet and philosopher, will ever be matter for regret to those thousands who delight in his music. He would have delighted thousands more had the cobbler stuck to his last.'

In conclusion, I only wish there were a man living in our midst who could even approach the greatness and illustriousness of a Mendelssohn, for the stuff and rubbish that is nowadays being 'composed,' published, and performed, is really too appalling for words.—Yours, &c.,

ALGERNON ASHTON.

22a, Carlton Vale, Maida Vale, N.W.6.

February 14, 1923.

HAYDN KEETON MEMORIAL

SIR,—Your readers will remember that some two years ago you gave us a notice in connection with the Dr. Keeton Jubilee Fund. I regret to say that the appeal resulted only in £125. In the meantime Dr. Keeton passed to his rest, and the Committee has decided to close the fund on March 31 next. In doing so it is felt that probably many more would like to add their subscription to the sum already in hand, and so make it possible to establish a yearly Prize to be awarded by the Trustees to the boys in the Cathedral choir in memory of the late organist.

Any further information may be obtained or donations sent to me at 18, Hartford Road, Huntingdon.—Yours, &c.,

OWEN W. GILLSON

(Hon. Sec. to the Committee).

NATIONAL INSTITUTE FOR THE BLIND

SIR,—The Council of the National Institute for the Blind, always recognising music as the only art in which the sightless find complete self-expression—while it frequently also provides a good means of livelihood—have continually endeavoured to provide for every need of blind musicians and students.

Thousands of standard and popular works have been published in Braille by the Institute, and sold to the blind at 75 per cent. below cost of production, and in this connection the National Institute gratefully acknowledges the generous co-operation of the publishers and owners of ink-print copyrights.

But apart from music publication, Braille music notation itself has always been a highly intricate problem, and it has taken over ninety years of experiment and practice to perfect the system. By supplying the necessary funds for the research work of a special committee of Braille music experts the National Institute feels it can claim to have done national—and even international—work in the cause of music. It has just issued a Braille type text-book in which the revised system is fully explained. By means of this system it is claimed that anything possible to be imagined in the realm of musical sound can definitely and adequately be committed to Braille, and for the first time in history both blind student and composer have now a perfect system of notation.

This work has naturally involved considerable charges upon the funds of the Institute, and it is felt that, as the task is at length successfully accomplished, the musical world should be taken into confidence, so that many who would doubtless be glad to participate in this work may do so, and so relieve the strain on the already overtaxed resources of the Institute—music being only one of its many activities.

To do this would indeed be to identify oneself with those who have laboured so incessantly, far away from the limelight, in a difficult side-track seldom explored or even thought of by sighted musicians, but who nevertheless belong to a fraternity united in a devotion to the only art which affords to the seeing and the blind a common meeting ground.

All communications on this subject and donations to the Institute should be addressed to the Secretary-General, National Institute for the Blind, 224, Great Portland Street, London, W.1.—Yours, &c.,

EDWARD WATSON
(Director of Music Publications).

224-6-8, Great Portland Street, W.1.

February 13, 1923.

VOLUNTEERS WANTED

SIR,—One of the most popular classes in Girls' Clubs is the singing class, which gives an opportunity for the girls to sing to their hearts' content after a long day in the factory or workshop. But it is becoming more and more difficult to get teachers to conduct these classes, seeing that the Clubs are unable to afford a fee, especially during the present unemployment crisis. If any reader could spare any evening of the week to help in this way, we could assure him/her of a happy evening and an appreciative class. The girls usually meet from 8.15 to 9.30, and as assistance is wanted in a large number of Clubs, it would be quite easy for teachers to work in their own district. Offers of help will be gratefully received by the Secretary, National Organization of Girls' Clubs, 16, Gordon Square, W.C.4.—Yours, &c.,

MILLIE G. LEVY.

January 30, 1923.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of March 1, 1863:

A PROFESSIONAL LADY (pupil of Signor Giulio Regondi) gives Lessons on the Concertina. For terms, &c., address, L. M., Novello & Co., 69, Dean Street, Soho.

CHORLTON.—Mr. R. Andrews's concert for the sewing classes in the district took place on February 21, in the Temperance Hall. The performance commenced with the Dead March on the harmonium, by Mr. G. S. Andrews, who also played a Fantasia on the pianoforte.

MANCHESTER (St. Peter's Church).—On Sunday, February 1, the grand organ by Messrs. Kirtland & Jardine, of Manchester, was re-opened by Mr. Best, organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool. This fine instrument has four manuals, and contains seventy-two registers, of which sixty-one are sounding stops. From Mr. Joule's account of the organ, it appears that only twenty-six organs in the world exceed it in number of sounding stops; whilst, as a church organ, it ranks, in England, third, being exceeded only by the instruments in York Minster and Doncaster Parish Church.

ORGAN APPOINTMENT

Mr. Joseph Barnby as organist and choirmaster at St. Andrew's, Wells Street.

NEW SACRED SONG, by C. W. GLOVER—'I want to be an Angel.' Post free for 13 stamps.

London: B. Williams, 11, Paternoster Row.

Sharps and Flats

It is a hypocritical chauvinism in a parade of self-intoxication that ranks MacDowell with Bach and Beethoven, and sheds tears of patriotic emotion over every American composer to the exclusion of Europe's greatest writers. It is a policy of exclusion that will get us nowhere.—O. G. Sonneck.

'Mind, Muscle, and Keyboard,' says an advertisement. It's all very well in an advertisement. But what about when it's in the next-door flat?—Daily News.

While only a few children now believe in Santa Claus, a great many grown-ups still think that grand opera is the acme of musical art.—Leonard Liebbling.

. . . Parsifal, that ghostly, organized hypocrisy of yesterday's highbrows.—George Sampson.

There is only one English composer to-day who really counts—Lord Berners.—Darius Milhaud.

The beautiful tenor solo, 'On, away! Awake, beloved!' was superbly sung.—Local Paper.

I declare that I do not know one single piece of modern music that has not got a tune. It is, however, often difficult to detect.—Eugène Goossens.

It appears from my musical papers that there is another outbreak of Blissomania.—C. à Becket Williams.

Composers are much nicer people here [in America] than they are in England . . . I'm sure I'll be accused of being pro-American, but . . .—Ursula Greville.

The trouble is that anyone can write a song—and apparently does. But there is no reason why they should all be worked off on unoffending audiences. We do not to-day sing the inferior songs of even the born song-writers of the past. Why should we sing the inferior songs of contemporary song-writers who were not born but made?—Ernest Newman.

I refuse to believe in any decay of German musical life. For me there is no other country but Germany where music is concerned: to me the least of our orchestras is a better interpreter of our great ones than the finest elsewhere—Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, my father.—Siegfried Wagner.

If I had my way I would never return to England.—Ursula Greville.

'Berlin Hears Old d'Albert Work.'—Musical America Headline.

According to all accounts, old d'Albert still works very well.—Musical Courier.

Why have any key at all?—Cyril Scott.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

A course of four lectures has been given in Duke's Hall on Wednesday afternoons during January and February by Dr. H. W. Richards. The subject of the first two was 'Chamber Music,' and of the last two 'The Development of the Pianoforte and Violin Sonata.' The lectures were illustrated by a selection of works from the great composers, played by pupils of Mr. Spencer Dyke.

The annual general meeting of the R.A.M. Club took place on Saturday evening, January 20, the president, Dr. Richards, being in the chair. After the report and balance-sheet had been received, the election of officers took place, the new president being Mr. J. B. McEwen. A cordial vote of thanks was passed to Dr. Richards for the manner in which he had carried through two years of presidency (including the centenary year) with such marked success, both musically and socially. The Club voted a donation of £50 to the Centenary Theatre Fund. The first musical evening of the Club took place on Saturday, February 17, when an interesting programme of music was provided, which included Mr. McEwen's new Violin Sonata, Ravel's Sonata, and a selection of songs.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

An item of special interest in the term's orchestral concerts was Byrd's Suite arranged from his music in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book by Mr. Gordon Jacob, one movement being a striking experiment in campanological effects, obtained without the use of bells. It may be remembered that this Suite was used for the Byrd Ballet at last year's Oxford Music Festival.

Opera is flourishing, Gluck's Orfeo, with specially arranged Ballet, being in process of rehearsal. The manifold activities of the College are well justified, as the number of pupils now in residence is greater than ever before. The increased difficulties of administration consequent on this have resulted in the appointment of Mr. E. J. Polkinghorne—for many years chief clerk—to the new post of Bursar.

M. J.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The outstanding items of interest of the College work during the past month were:

- (a) Two of a course of lectures on 'Mental efficiency—its importance to the music students,' given by Dr. Harold Chatterton, a member of the British Psychological Society, and physician to the British Hospital for Mental Disorders, and the interest in the course was amply shown by the large attendance not only of College students, but of the outside public, to whom the lectures were open without fee.
- (b) A special invitation recital by students of Mr. J. Charles Long and Madame Mary Rosenberg. The programme consisted of organ works by Bach, Mendelssohn, Widor, Rheinberger, &c., and vocal items from the works of Mozart, Saint-Saëns, Massenet, and Ambroise Thomas. All were well rendered, especially those undertaken by Mr. George E. Ansell and Mr. Victor A. Spratt (organ), and Miss Zillah Bateman (vocalist). It was the first occasion of its kind at the College, and proved most successful.

This month yet another loss to the College is regretfully recorded, through the recent death of Albert E. Drinkwater. For over forty-two years—that is to say, from the early days of the institution of the College—he worked ceaselessly in many ways on its behalf, and happily lived to see the present very high position of the College, induced by so much earnest endeavour.

Sir Frederick Bridge, on behalf of the College, attended a distribution of certificates held at Norwich, and Dr. E. F. Horner paid a similar visit to Torquay.

BYRD AND WEEBKES

This being the Tercentenary year of Byrd and Weelkes, the paper at the Musical Association's meeting on January 9 paid due honour to these two composers. The lecturer was Mr. Gustav Holst, who said that though some decried centenary celebrations, he thought that England needed at least one a week. Only in England were the claims of her great composers almost ignored. Compare British music with British literature. The latter was the supreme form of art in England, and there had been a steady stream of first-rate poetry and prose from the earliest times until now, but there had been no steady stream of music in this country. Whilst literature had been a steady flame, music had been only a fitful glare, sometimes almost an explosion of apparently pent-up musical feeling which exhausted itself and left only darkness behind. When the next awakening came, the new body of English musicians had forgotten their forefathers, or disapproved of them, and had to learn their technique from foreigners.

In 1227 an Englishman wrote one of the world's masterpieces in music. It was unique, and remained so for nearly two hundred years, but it left no effect on music in England. English writers had tried to explain Sumer is iucumen in as an accident. 'One swallow does not make a summer.' In art it did! This was two hundred years before Dunstable, whom foreigners acclaimed as the 'father of counterpoint.' So far as we could tell he left no influence on the next great English composers, and a hundred and fifty years afterwards all Morley said of him was that he did not know how to set words to music. We thus come to the Tudor period, the age of discovery and rediscovery in the whole world.

Much the same was now going on with regard to English Tudor music. One hesitated to make a definite statement to-day because to-morrow it would probably be contradicted or modified. Ten years ago we called Byrd 'the English Palestrina.' We have been told that the time will come when Palestrina will be called 'the Italian Byrd'! Ten years ago it was usually agreed that Wilbye was the finest of the madrigal writers. Then began the publication of Fellowes's edition of the madrigal writers—Morley, Weelkes, Tomkyns, Ward, &c.—which was greeted with congratulations all round. When Dr. Fellowes published the words only, literary people went into ecstasies, and rightly, but to be appreciated these words should be approached with their musical settings.

We could not form any final judgment, or any complete mental picture, but we could collect what we knew so far, and try and express a tentative impression. The general musical culture was high, even staggering. It was fairly easy to read Palestrina at sight; with Weelkes, Tomkyns, and Ward it was different; and if Elizabethans were, as Morley said, competent to perform their works at sight, it implied no mean musicianship. In instrumental music, there was Hugh Aston, Bull, with his whole-tone scale, and Byrd and Mundy with their programme music. The English songs with lute accompaniment were wonderful alike in quantity and quality. Choral music was the natural idiom of expression in music. English composers had never written badly in the technical sense for chorus, though they had often written dull music. Tudor choral music abounded in chromatic harmonies, leaps, and other difficulties, that were considered impossible to singers last century. Even to-day, with all our modern wealth of chromatic discords, editors of Tudor music felt obliged to add foot-notes to the effect that certain chords and progressions were not printers' errors. English Tudor composers could do and express anything with voices. Their range of emotion was as great as Shakespeare's, and their technique as perfect as his.

The occasion of the Tercentenary was a good time to dwell on Byrd and Weelkes, but to be of lasting use it should lead to the special study of their big contemporaries in turn. Byrd and Weelkes did not include all that was best in Tudor music. Just now Byrd was being worshipped rather blindly, and unless we were careful we should soon be talking nonsense about him. At his best he seemed—like Mozart—to reach the summit of artistic expression, but when he was not there he was sometimes a very long way below. Weelkes could do so many different things; he was almost as many-sided as Shakespeare; he was the real musical expression of the English character in his fantastic unexpectedness. We had been told at various times and by various people that really English art was always bright, solemn and severe, humorous, dull and conventional, wildly fantastic, mild and pleasant, ironic and satirical. Real English art contained all these and more, and the more variety it contained the more English it was, and the more it resembled Shakespeare, the most English of all English artists. Such was the characteristic of Tudor England, of Tudor literature, of Tudor music, and all the best English art—as, for instance, Victorian literature or 20th-century music.

We were told on all hands that the great characteristics of modern music were noise and discord. Possibly true, but in 1922 an Englishman produced the softest Symphony ever written for full orchestra and a choral work lasting twenty minutes consisting entirely of common chords. No foreigner would dare commit such outrages. As already said, English music had in the past flared up and disappeared. When the next awakening came, the new school learned its technique from abroad, as Purcell learned his chiefly from France and Italy, and as seventy years ago England learned from Germany, a very good choice of teacher by the way. Was the process to be repeated? Could we escape another twilight? There was, however, a new factor. We were learning our own classics, and therein lay the beginning of permanence.

London Concerts

VERDI'S REQUIEM AT THE PEOPLE'S PALACE

In grief our national temperament does not often permit us the relief of eloquence: the more deeply we feel, the more we are constrained to silence. It was far otherwise with Verdi, when he set about composing the Requiem. But, once shown the way, British singers can become vocal enough without misconstruing the sincerity which speaks in every phrase of this remarkable work. Inspiration of a high order waited upon the People's Palace Choral and Orchestral Societies when recently performing it. Unsuitable to liturgical use it may be, according to our lights, but when treated in so reverent a spirit its effect is profoundly devotional. So to dwell upon the dominant aspect of the interpretation is to take for granted able technical reproduction, and this was, indeed, notable throughout. The choir was responsive in the minutiae of expression and phrasing, and negotiated with apparent ease the difficulties of fugue, counterpoint, and pitch with which the choral writing bristles. The band vied with the singers in precision and judgment, and the four soloists—Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. David Ellis, and Mr. Norman Williams—being without exception capable and earnest in similar degree, the unity of the whole was presented in a fashion all too rare at musical events of this nature. Mr. Frank Idle, who, as conductor, was the fountain-head of all this discretion, is entitled to warm congratulation.

H. F.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

There were some excellent moments during the performance of The Dream of Gerontius and of the Hymn of Jesus at the Royal Choral Society's concert on February 3. The orchestral playing, under Dr. Adrian C. Boult, was indeed admirable throughout. And if the choir was not all that it might have been, the cause lies probably in the fact that these singers know Elgar's work too well and the Holst work not well enough. They were so familiar with the technical aspects of The Dream of Gerontius that they seemed to take its spiritual aspect for granted, and familiarity bred carelessness. But they were so sure of themselves and of their ability that even the different pitch of organ and orchestra caused only momentary embarrassment. On the other hand, the Hymn of Jesus is still a land of surprises where it is not yet advisable to 'let oneself go,' heedless of consequences. But there is every probability that a second performance under the same conductor would give remarkable results—especially if the soloists of the Dream differed from the last interpreters in the capacity to recreate the atmosphere of the work and inspire the chorus. Mr. John Adams is a singer of considerable merit, but he lacks just that quick and instinctive feeling for the dramatic element of Gerontius which made the greatness of Mr. John Coates's interpretation. And we imagine that choristers, being human, cannot help depending, as regards imaginative grasp of music, upon the lead of the soloists. Miss Olga Haley would have sung most admirably had the Angel's part been anything but what it is. She is so excellent an artist that by sheer instinctive savoir faire she often won through to excellence. But this is clearly not her genre. By far the most adequate and satisfactory performance was that of Mr. Harold Williams, a singer of unusual ability and intelligence.

B. V.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS

The Royal Philharmonic Society's programme at Queen's Hall, on January 25, was inferior to the average. No doubt it was a bid for popularity to give most of the evening over to Rachmaninov's Concerto in C minor and Dvorák's New World Symphony—both of them works which it is the Society's just pride to have introduced to London; but their success has been scored, their place is fixed, hardly a month passes without them, so the Philharmonic need not feel bound to keep their memory green. The Society did not even gain through banking on hackneyed music—there were unusual gaps in the house. Sapellnikov was the soloist in the Concerto, as he had been at the first performance in 1902. These works, and also the Bach C minor Fantasia and Fugue in Elgar's gorgeous version, were conducted by Sir Landon Ronald. The same Fantasia and Fugue had already opened the previous symphony concert of the week (L.S.O., under Goossens), and it makes so nobly festive a beginning to an evening of serious music that everyone hopes Sir Edward will carry on the good work and score many more of Bach's Organ Fugues, so that 'Bach-Elgar' become the accustomed prelude of a Queen's Hall concert.

Mr. Arthur Hinton conducted his new scena Semele at this concert (singer, Miss Marcia van Dresser). Something about the look of the text in the programme-book started an uncomfortable suspicion that this was going to be frigid music. The verses, by a poetess of Boston (U.S.A.), were quite a clean exercise; they might have been the answer to an examiner's request for 'not more than twenty lines on any subject from classical mythology.' Of course the music followed suit. Poor Mr. Hinton! Whatever interest was he at this time of day able to work up over Semele? What could he in his turn do but write a quite clean exercise? But it would have been more amusing if he had written his pasticcio in any manner other than late 19th century romanticism. For one thing, any other style would have allowed us to hear the singer.

The London Symphony Orchestra's evening on January 22, conducted by Eugène Goossens, was given to the Ninth Symphony, in which the Bach Choir and a quartet led by Miss Dorothy Silk sang. The music was performed with the utmost tact and respect. It has seldom sounded so natural, unforced, and limpid. The spirit, one fancied, was that of the ancient performances before Wagner began to allege peculiar magic properties in this work. It sounded, for once, not gigantically tumultuous, but reasonable enough, although long. Mr. Goossens conducted the Faust Overture of Wagner very beautifully—like a prince of surgeons, absorbed and dispassionate, demonstrating on the cadaver. To the few first-rate moments of the music full justice was done, and its general weakness was never more clearly displayed. It was a delightful concert, yet on the whole we feel that when Mr. Goossens conducts we should as a rule welcome a more Goossens-like programme.

Serge Koussevitzky conducted the next L.S.O. concert (February 5), and no one will forget in a hurry the opening item, his (and Tchaikovsky's) Francesca da Rimini. It made one think of the Middle Ages and the belief in demoniacal possession. The gifted and exceptional conductor appeared to be charged with the spirit of the music—like a Leyden jar, quite dangerously charged—so that the orchestra was thoroughly frightened into doing any mortal thing to placate him. They caught some of his vitality and his faith that the thing was worth doing in the most vivid way possible. Oh, it was prodigious! Only, if one did not care more than moderately for the music he felt a kind of shamefacedness at witnessing the orgy—as though he were an unbeliever intruding on some insensate and delirious religious rite.

Such a temperature could not be kept up even by the exalted M. Koussevitzky. The Brahms Symphony (in F; the gracious and domestic No. 3) was a half-success. The conductor could not hope to curdle our blood in that homely landscape, but was sometimes unnecessarily portentous or else over-excitable. The rest of the programme was a return to Muscovy and minor Muscovitisms. Ravel, after Sir Henry Wood, has scored Moussorgsky's Picture Show pianoforte suite, a work which (if I may be personal) bores me in any shape, because I cannot, in the absence of anything much in the music, keep my eyes off the programme, and the programme always enumerates the subjects of the pictures, and the names of the pictures conjure up so depressing a third-rate provincial show. One is 'A little gnome, hobbling on deformed legs,' another a 'Ballet of chickens in their shells,' a third a picture of some one in the catacombs. Could they have been anything but dreadfully bad pictures? Allegro vivace and Allegretto non troppo make so much better titles for music, anyhow.

Dr. Ralph Vaughan Williams conducted his London Symphony at Sir Henry Wood's concert on February 10. Still waters run deep. It is a rare, deep mind that courses through the solemn stillness of this Symphony's Lento. We cannot be grateful enough for it. We do not admire 'audacity,' 'sublimity,' 'the composer's accomplished architectonics,' or what not, in this Symphony; for there it is, a living thing, with its mildly-glowing halo of beauty. One is touched at the sight and another passes indifferent, but there undoubtedly the star is, serenely above the horizon. Wordsworth on Calais sands!

After that the concert plunged into restaurant music (Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Concerto). The soloist, Nikisch fils, went for his job hard. (Below you see him 'snapped' after the rehearsal.) As for Inghelbrecht's Autumnal Sketches, they ought to have been done before Debussy—not after. C.

Photo by]

[Sydney J. Loeb

MITJA NIKISCH

DOHNÁNYI'S JOKE

It is a tragedy for the would-be humorist if his keen shafts flash unnoted across the vision. Mr. Ernst Dohnányi, in inscribing his Variations on a Nursery Song for orchestra, with pianoforte obbligato, played for the first time in England at a recent Queen's Hall Symphony concert, 'For the joy of the friends of humour and the vexation of the others,' at least removed this possibility. But his fancy plays so truly comically around and about the well-known simple French song, Ah! vous dirai-je, Maman, that the precaution should have been unnecessary. The exaggerations of style are adroit and justly calculated to intrigue. The casual hearer could hardly hear the pompous introduction without a little suspecting its serious intention; and when the pianoforte gives out the ingenuous little tune in octaves, suspicion becomes certainty. The spirit of light-hearted comedy is maintained with singular address, yielding only—to remove the last excuse for misapprehension—in the bassoon's farcical moments, throughout the eleven (very free) variations, and the final Fugato, planned with a vast elaboration only to be compassed by a master of the symphonic medium. The intellectual appeal never flags, but is perhaps happiest when the composer is burlesquing the manners of other composers. The score should repay study from a purely academic point of view, for the structure of the movements is orthodox and quite on a classical scale. With the composer himself at the pianoforte, and Sir Henry Wood—who had evidently rehearsed his forces with accustomed meticulous care for detail—in charge, the infant had, at its baptism, sponsors of ideal irresponsibility, and the Friends of Humour, at all events, will wish it, with gratitude for all it represents of musical health and strength, a long and successful career. H. F.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Miss Dorothy Silk sang some Purcell, Bach, and Handel at her concert on February 1, and there were also madrigals and other music (including Purcell's fine and curious Saul and the Witch of Endor) by the 'English Singers.' Miss Silk's singing on that afternoon will be remembered for long by some of us. For those who know her art and the habitual fine matching of matter and manner in her performance, it will be enough to say that she was better even than usual, better than ever before. Mostly at concerts and elsewhere we get rare streaks of art, art in the rough, in the raw, like unsmelted ore, and unless we are going to be always discontented we must concentrate for enjoyment on these streaks—on the simple 'airing' of a beautiful voice, for instance, no matter what it sings. And where the will is the skill isn't, most often. But that evening it was not lop-sided singing; Miss Silk was the will and the deed, the spirit and the letter of song. I think I have found Miss Silk's prime secret when I say that she acts up to the limits of her music's injunctions and never a step beyond; she presents it for what it is, and not for what she can put into it. Take the piece of Purcell, The Expostulation of the Blessed Virgin, which she has brought back into fame. I hardly dare say how beautiful I think it, because to-morrow I may hear someone else laying on heavy strokes and the structure will crash, whereas Miss Silk's series of poignant little inflections built up a picture of simply ideal pathos. Miss Silk's singing shows how the power of dramatic expression can be compassed by a lyric soprano, and how little 'big tone' affects the issue either way.

Two young singers with gifts, Gilbert Bailey and Alfred O'Shea, were heard within one evening. Mr. O'Shea, when first he sang last year, set us all hoping. But he shows no improvement. Is he going to be content with a ballad-singer's fame? He can manage all that sort of thing perfectly—excepting that even a ballad-singer is supposed to learn his notes more carefully than Mr. O'Shea had learnt the first of his arias that evening. The next one was good, for Mr. O'Shea is undoubtedly a fine young spouting songbird. Mr. Gilbert Bailey sang a jolly list of English songs—folk-songs, lute-songs, and the moderns; and we enjoyed the music, and enjoyed the singer's jolly, frank manner. Then, after a spell of his easy, friendly utterance, the ear asked for a well-strung phrase—a phrase that, after various verbal discourse, should tell us of the beauty of the voice in full deployment. It did not come. Song must command intensity as well as ease. It is bad, of course, to sing with over-compressed tone. But how far can an uncontrolled looseness take one? The singer's art is based on the conservation and the paying-out of breath at will.

Mr. John Goss's singing (he was heard at one of Lady Dean Paul's concerts) thoroughly commands respect. His groundwork is sound, and he has quick intelligence in going to the heart of a song. A certain seriousness, and even depression, casts a cloud over much of his work; but this, one would say, is not so much a matter of technique as a mental attitude. No one sings Wolf better. Miss Olga Haley chose a beautiful little nosegay of modern French songs for one of her Tea-time concerts, given with Mr. Titterton, and again we applaud a singer of the highest ideals, though we think her technique must still be somewhat modified before she realises the possibilities of her already beautiful voice and her rich musicianship. I suggest, for one thing, that Miss Haley never opens her mouth half wide enough. And even when her words are fairly clear one seldom has the sensation of easy naturalness in their production.

Mr. Wilfrid Temple, tenor, who sang at Wigmore Hall, may be earnestly advised to go on studying. It is a voice that will well repay the trouble, for it is of a delightfully frank character. He can give us good open tones without resorting to the voce bianca; there is latent power; he has the gift of impassioned utterance, and can manage a beautiful soft tone—no small catalogue of virtues! Against this must be set some angular phrasing, the over-emphasis of meanings, much 'mouthing,' and much unnecessary accentuation of minor words. 'Total Eclipse' (Samson) is in itself music of grand pathos; it does not become a bit more poignant by the aid of those indications of stage woe which we expect in Pagliacci. Schubert's Serenade was also spoiled by the young singer's undue anxiety lest the plain sense of the piece were eluding us.

Madame Léonie Zifado, at the same hall, made a good impression in a programme that started with Purcell, Mozart, and Gluck. An excellently supple voice, which, with experience, will be put to varied artistic use without compromising its character. The voice is well trained, equal throughout its range, and always of good quality. In English she seemed a shade diffident, and some words might have had more weight. She appeared to fear a 'crested' diction, and the landscape was therefore flat. We do not want to see this promising young person adopt the habit of too easy elision—the habit of certain eminent singers who quite well might, but simply won't, sing English with distinction. She was best in Voi che sapete, and, indeed, her well-regulated flow of tone made all her Mozart-singing very fine. Mr. Anthony Bernard and his orchestra helped to raise this recital much above the average.

Mr. Ben Davies made an admirable choice of artistic songs at his recital on February 10, and sang them mightily well. If a critic may presume to fancy himself for a moment in the distinguished veteran's boots, this critic would lop off one top note, add another at the bottom and (at sixty-five!) start a fresh career as a first-rate high baritone; and (with such a programme as that of the 10th) the new generation would be as charmed as was the generation of Mr. Davies's young days. Mr. Davies has the fervour and more than the art of a young man. Only his extreme high notes show signs of wear. On the other hand, his middle and low notes actually have a new richness. His singing of 'Total Eclipse' was an object-lesson. In Brahms's Country Solitude his mezzo-voice was beautiful. Frank Bridge, Roger Quilter, and Peter Warlock were represented on the programme.

Only the first few phrases of her first piece (an air from Massenet's Le Cid) were enough to show that Miss Elsa Murray-Aynsley understood her art. The opening notes of the recitative were alive with meaning, the effect being made less by singing than by justly-pointed speech. Then in the aria a delicious voice was revealed. Even if some other things did not quite so well suit her (the Gopak of Moussorgsky and Rachmaninov's Spring Waters ask for a more powerful physique), she steadily refrained from being in the slightest degree unmusical—she never attempted to snatch a success outside the proper field of song. For some tastes she may overact on the platform, but this manner of hers does not at all mitigate her charming tone, which is produced both with easefulness and intensity. She sings, not in, but with her throat—and she knows how to open her mouth! There was never a restriction to the jet of tone. Her voice soars, and it has a moving 'yearning' quality seldom met with in sopranos. She was a singer one felt the liveliest desire to hear again.

Miss Alison King, who was heard on the same evening, had agreeably arranged her programme, and, from the part I heard, may be judged to have a not large but decidedly pretty voice, used attractively if not with the most striking distinction.

H. J. K.

JOHN COATES'S RECITALS

John Coates continues his wonderful series of song recitals at Chelsea, usually filling the Town Hall, and sometimes 'turning money away.' His programmes are remarkable. It is indeed probable that no singer in the country spends so much time and thought upon programme-compilation. Coates appears to make it his business to become acquainted with everything that is printed in the way of serious British song, and, in addition, he somehow gets a sight of a great deal that has not passed through the hands of a publisher. Out of this mass of material he chooses. Not everything he sings is of first quality, but all reaches a certain standard and (roughly speaking) all is worth the test of public performance. Whether the test is applied quite fairly is another matter, for Coates puts so much into the singing of each song on his programme that only the very few deliberately critical members of his audience seem to recognise the existence of several grades of quality, the rest of them applauding with equal vigour good things and less good, and even giving some slight preference often to the latter, especially if they happen to be of the kind that permit Coates to exhibit some stunt-virtuosity (for he is not without this) or some unexpected touch of humour.

At the recital on January 23 twenty-two songs were given. Of these no fewer than seventeen had their first performance in London, and eight were still in manuscript (it is surprising to learn that Denis Browne's To Gratiana, dancing and singing, is still amongst these—a fine flowing melody, and a simple but noble chordal accompaniment). Two recently published songs of Balfour Gardiner's, The Quiet Garden and Rybbesdale, proved to be acceptable and tuneful things, though in no wise novel; Felix White's hilarious The Laughing Cavalier is still in manuscript, but should not long remain so; Gerrard Williams's The Golden Age (published) is successful, but of no special musical importance; Dunhill's Beauty and Beauty (published) is a quite effective setting of Rupert Brooke's words; Armstrong Gibbs's Five Eyes (published) is rhythmic and melodious, no more (the audience wanted it three times, and got it twice); Phyllis Taylor's A Monument (MS.), words (and to some extent music) 'after an ancient fashion,' is not at all a bad little thing in its way; Leslie Woodgate's Primrose and Columbine is pleasant; Francis Toye's Red-skirted Ladies (published) is good, ordinary, effective writing; Cowen's Ladies of St. James' is the same. The latter is likely to have a run of popularity on account of its old-world dance swing. Herbert Hughes's He climbs his lady's tower (published) is clever and unusual.

Some other new songs given on this occasion failed in various ways. In a few cases the composers had so set the words as to slow up intolerably their impact on the listener's brain. In some other cases where, as settings, the songs were reasonably well thought out, the music was commonplace. As usual, Mr. Coates had a perfect accompanist in Mr. Berkeley Mason.

P. A. S.

GOOSSENS CHAMBER CONCERTS

Something ought certainly to be done to brighten the London post-Christmas musical season, which has so far lacked thrill, and when Mr. Goossens announced a series of chamber concerts we all felt cheered and encouraged. At the date of this journal's going to press two of the concerts have been given, and, on the whole, we are most of us feeling disappointed.

Apart from his work as a composer, we associate the name of Goossens with two things—finished performance and startling novelty of programme: either he charms us by his command of the orchestra, or he 'makes us sit up' with the latest French or Russian stimulant. Now the standard of performance at these latest concerts has been good, but not supremely so, and the programmes, though they have contained novelties, have proved nevertheless rather dull.

Of the British chamber music played, the unpretending but very effective Bax String Quartet in G has been the best. The Ireland second Pianoforte Trio, the Goossens Pianoforte Quintet, and the Gerrard Williams second Quartet have also been played; each of them possessing its own kind of merit, but not one of them really first-rate in its quality. A new set of Three Short Pieces for Wind Instruments, by John R. Heath, has proved to be very bare and commonplace, and Respighi's poem for voice and string quartet, Il Tramonto ('The Sunset,' words by Shelley), turned out to be long-winded and wandering.

The songs performed have been no better. Mr. Goossens's own Melancholy and Philomel are far-fetched and hardly worth fetching so far. Mr. Herbert Bedford's Ships that pass in the Night and Evangeline passes do not justify the composer's claims for unaccompanied song (the latter is much the more effective), nor does Mr. Felix White's Desolation; and of a varied group of songs by British, American, and French composers (Bantock, Grovlez, Whitehorn, Roussel, Carpenter) grouped together under the general descriptive title of Chinoiserie, Roussel's A un jeune gentilhomme proved much the most musically and poetically.

This last group of songs was effectively given by Anne Thursfield. The other singer who has appeared is Marcia van Dresser, whose general conception is altogether too static. The Philharmonic and Wood-Smith String Quartets, the London Wind Quartet, John Ireland, Goossens himself, and Kathleen Long have also performed.

P. A. S.

RECOLLECTIONS OF LIFE AT CAIRO

BY FREDERICK KITCHENER

I really think that Cairo, in which I carried on my musical work with more or less success for some ten years after 1909, is the most extraordinary city in the world; it is certainly the most cosmopolitan. 'Cairo,' says an old Arab writer, 'is a microcosm of the world'; and to me, twelve years ago, a young man who had been immured for years in one of the duller of small English country towns, the place was a joy and a revelation. The wonderful sunny climate, the colours of the garments, the strange cosmopolitan crowd, the happy excursions on camel or donkey to places of interest, the ancient, dreamy, perfumed Oriental life existing side by side with every comfort and refinement of modern European civilisation—all this made me rub my eyes and ask, Am I really here, or is it all a passing dream, from which I shall awaken to the miserable, sordid realities—the mud, fog, drabness, and wood-smokiness of Toadcastle-in-the-Hole?

I could fill pages of description, but my object here is to touch briefly on a few points. I was supremely happy at Cairo until my health gave way, and the reader will, I think, agree that I had everything to make me so.

The great feature of Cairene musical life is the opera. As every musician knows, the Cairo Opera House was opened in 1870, during the festivities in connection with the inauguration of the Suez Canal. Verdi himself was commissioned by the late Khedive, Ismail Pasha, father of the present Sultan Fouad, to write for the occasion an opera upon an Egyptian subject, Aida being the result. Ever since, with the exception of the period during the war, there has been an opera season each year. Cairenes are almost note-perfect in all the principal Italian and French operas, ancient and modern; and woe betide the unfortunate singer who comes not up to scratch! I myself have seen such an one hooted from the stage with derision, and have known him, to hoarse cries of 'Assassin!' hustled from the theatre, and ultimately, bag and baggage, from the land of Egypt.

My seat generally found me in it four nights a week, and I got to know the best French, Italian, and German operas—the latter chiefly Wagner. (We even did Strauss's Salome, head-scene and all, before you benighted islanders had it!) There was also an unforgettable performance of Aida at the Great Pyramid in the spring of 1912, given by the Company which was at the Opera House that season, Alvarez taking the title-rôle. This original idea came from the fertile brain of Saint-Saëns, who regularly wintered at Cairo before the war. All this was an experience almost impossible to be gained in England. A very noticeable thing was the scarcity of my compatriots at the Opera House: a half-dozen or so, generally, in a house crowded from top to bottom; and it was certainly humiliating to one's national pride that no British opera was ever performed there.

But British music in other forms is slowly making its way, even in the ultra-foreign atmosphere of Cairo. Every Sunday morning, from about October until May, an orchestral concert is given in the spacious Kursaal. Signor Bonomi, the conductor, told me just before I left that he was about to do Elgar's Enigma Variations—'A perfect work of genius!' he said enthusiastically, and went on to speak of the large extra amount of practice that the orchestra would be obliged to put in for anything like a decent reading of the work. Mention of Elgar reminds me that I once saw on a street placard the announcement in great letters that a 'Marche—Pumps and Circumstances—Elgar' would be performed on the following Sunday.

Egypt is a splendid country for a pianist; his hands never get cold; here in England, with numbed and reddened fingers, the difference is keenly realised. Strange that a country with such an unspeakable climate as that of England should be the best in the world—the betterness of England, with the sole exception of matters musical, being the chief impression that one gains after a lengthy sojourn among foreigners of any kind! So low were the opinions of the Cairo foreigners of the musical tastes of the English in general that they would express the greatest astonishment when I played the pianoforte. 'We never thought that an Englishman had it in him to play so.' They were tremendously appreciative and enthusiastic about it. I had at Cairo pianoforte pupils of twenty-two nationalities—British, Australian, American, French, Italian, Greek, Spanish, Belgian, Swiss, Russian, Danish, Austrian, Maltese, Egyptian, Turkish, Syrian, Jewish, Albanian, Circassian, one Norwegian, one Hungarian, and one pure-blooded Arab. The Egyptian and Turco-Egyptian ladies, chiefly of the families of Pashas, were especially interesting and engaging; some of them played Bach, Beethoven, and Chopin very well, spoke several languages fluently, and were well read and facile in conversation. They would often entertain me at tea-parties, and always treated me with the greatest kindness. There is a movement on foot among the better-educated Egyptians, especially the women, to cultivate and understand the best European music.

The native Arabic music is also most interesting, if not precisely charming at first to a European ear. Two or three years ago there was started at Cairo an Oriental Music Club, a pianoforte pupil of mine, Gafar Pasha Wali (late Minister of the Interior), being on the committee. He often took me with him to the monthly musical performances by the Club members, where we sat on imposing chairs of red velvet and gilt, which are a feature of all Egyptian feasts and entertainments. The programmes were rather too long for genuine enjoyment, lasting some three hours without an interval. Remarkable performances were occasionally given on the 'ood, a kind of large guitar; the gandon, an Egyptian dulcimer; and the kamanga, a small violin. Several Egyptian gentlemen of means and leisure devote most of their time to the study of one or another of these instruments, and have become genuine virtuosi. In Gafar Pasha's house I once heard a splendid performance upon the 'ood by a Bey, or notable, whose execution was really astonishing.

Music—Arabic music, of course—plays a large part in the lives of the Egyptians. But the real Arabic music in no way resembles the make-believe Oriental music which is dished up to the unsuspecting British public by certain 'ultra-modern' British composers. To get the true Oriental atmosphere one must live among and mix with Orientals and speak their language, so as to be able to exchange thoughts with them. One of the best traits of the Egyptians is their generosity to their native musicians, whom they pay handsomely for an evening's entertainment. Would that the same could be said of the members of the British colony at Cairo!

'Singing-women' are a feature of Cairo life. Sitti (or 'lady') Tawhida, the most famous and wealthy of these, keeps a hall in the centre of the city, the place being called 'Alf Leyl wa Leyla,' or 'The Thousand Nights and One Night.' She is a handsome woman, but no longer young, being, in fact, middle-aged. Her figure is massive, and her voice no longer at its best, but as she comes on to the platform resplendently dressed, with heavy gold bangles completely covering her arms and ankles, and solid gold chains round her neck, there emanates from her a wonderful personal magnetism. She draws crowded houses every time.

One night, in the house of an Egyptian general, I sat through an evening's entertainment by an equally famous but less personally impressive singer. I was the only 'ferangi,' or foreigner, present, the rest of the company, about twelve altogether, being Egyptians. To us there entered a strong-visaged female, with a face, I thought, very much resembling the portraits of Beethoven. She was enveloped in a kind of cloak of a rough, towel-like material. Her voice, as she took up her 'ood and began to chant weird Arabic melodies, was the deepest feminine voice I had ever heard. She sang for an hour and a half, after which we adjourned to a sumptuous European buffet in an adjoining room. Having eaten, we sat through another two hours of her singing before leaving. The audience became more and more excited with each successive song; her repertoire was of an amorous and more or less untranslatable nature, and at the conclusion of each number she was regaled with copious cognac by the company. When I came away she had reached a decidedly mellow condition.

But here I begin to touch on reminiscences, and the field is so wide and crowded that its harvest had better be reserved for the autobiography which I hope to write when I have become old, famous, notorious, or garrulous.

Music in the Provinces

ABERDEEN.—A choral and orchestral concert at the Music Hall on February 8 upheld Aberdeen's tradition. Hamilton Harty's Mystic Trumpeter was performed with great effect, and the programme further included Brahms's Song of Destiny, Holst's St. Paul's Suite, and Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony. Mr. Willan Swainson conducted, and the performers were the Aberdeen Oratorio Choir, the Aberdeen Bach Choir, the Scottish Orchestra, and Mr. Herbert Heyner.

ABERYSTWITH.—At the hundred and first concert in connection with the University College School of Music, on January 18, the central feature was the playing by Miss Emelie Roberts of a Concerto for harp by Pierné, and a solo, Nordische Ballade, by Poenitz. Dr. D. J. Lloyd conducted.

BIRMINGHAM.—A first performance of H. Ormond Anderton's A Song of Life, for chorus and orchestra, was given at the City Orchestra's symphony concert on February 7. Mr. Joseph Lewis conducted, the difficult choral writing being well sung by the City Choir. The reception accorded to the new work was no more than moderately cordial, its complexity and lack of superficial attractiveness operating against it. At the same concert Mr. Albert Sammons gave a sure and masterly interpretation of Brahms's Violin Concerto, Mr. Appleby Matthews conducting. Tchaikovsky loomed large in the programme of the symphony concert of a fortnight before, both the fourth Symphony and the B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto, with Mr. Egon Petri as soloist, being played. Mr. Matthews secured a somewhat sensational reading of the Symphony. Among features of the Sunday orchestral concerts have been a revival of Haydn's Surprise Symphony under Mr. Lewis, and the conducting of Parry's Suite for strings and Holst's Beni Mora by Mr. Michael Wilson. A first performance of a pleasant Caprice for orchestra by Mr. Paul Beard, the leader of the band, was included in one of Mr. Matthews's programmes. At a Sunday chamber concert, Messrs. Alexander Cohen and Anderson Tyrer gave a first local performance of Catoire's Poem Sonata. Dohnányi's D flat Quartet has been played by the Birmingham String Quartet at a Mid-day concert. Recitals have been given by Miss Dorothy d'Orsay (with Schumann's Woman's Life and Love cycle); Miss Sotham and Miss Mary Abbott in pianoforte duets; Miss Emily Broughton, who sang one of the solo cantatas Bach composed to Italian texts; Mr. Leonard Rayner and Mr. Wilfred Ridgway, both pianists. Mr. Rosenthal and Mr. Pouishnov appeared at 'celebrity' concerts, and Miss Lily Thorington specialised in modern music at her recital. Palestrina's Stabat Mater was sung at a Civic Board concert by the Walsall Madrigal Society under Mr. Joseph Yates. The Clarinet Quintets of Brahms and Mozart have been played to the Malvern Concert Club by the Hambleton String Quartet in collaboration with Mr. Charles Draper.

BLACKBURN.—The annual concert of the Blackburn Ladies' Choir, conducted by Mr. F. Duckworth, was again an affair of importance. The programme included Holst's eight-part Ave Maria, E. Douglas Tayler's How sweet the moonlight sleeps, and Challinor's My true love hath my heart.

BRADFORD.—The thirteenth season of the Free Chamber Concerts opened in the Mechanics' Institute on January 15, when Messrs. Sam Midgley and Douglas Bentley ('cello) played Sonatas by Brahms and Marcello. The Hallé Orchestra, under Mr. Hamilton Harty, played the Bach-Elgar Fantasia and Fugue, also Respighi's Fountains of Rome, at the Bradford Subscription Concert on January 19, Pouishnov was then the pianist in Rachmaninov's Concerto in C minor. During a fortnight's season at the Alhambra, beginning on January 22, the British National Opera Company presented the Ring, in addition to Hansel and Gretel (including a special matinée for children), Phäbus and Pan, and the usual popular list. Crowded houses and a high standard of performance were the rule. The City Council voted £170 towards the expenses of the children's performance of Hansel and Gretel. Mr. Eugene Goossens conducted the Bradford Permanent Orchestra on January 27, a fine reading being secured of César Franck's Symphony and of the conductor's own Scherzo, Tam o' Shanter. The Drake Trio played works by Arensky (F minor) and Hurlstone (G major) at the Mechanics' Institute on January 29. On January 30, Mr. Albert Sammons was associated with Mr. Herbert Johnson (pianoforte) in the Kreutzer Sonata and a solo programme, to which Miss Dorothy Parkinson contributed several songs. The Chamber Music Players (Albert Sammons, Lionel Tertis, Cedric Sharpe, and William Murdoch) appeared on February 2 at the third of the Subscription Chamber Concerts. A chamber concert of Beethoven, Dvořák, and Frank Bridge, plus On Wenlock Edge, was given by the Drake Quartet on February 9 under the auspices of the Bradford B.M.S.

BRIDGEND.—At its annual concert on February 14, the Glee Society sang Cowen's Spring, Balfour Gardiner's Cargoes, Elgar's Snow, and some pieces by Cyril Jenkins. Mr. J. Bedford Morgan conducted, and the Philharmonic String Quartet played.

BRISTOL.—Mr. Arnold Barter, lecturing to the West of England Musical Education Society on January 13, gave an analytical description of Elgar's Symphony which will be played at the forthcoming Philharmonic concert, and a party of instrumentalists illustrated the leading themes. Mr. Hubert W. Hunt lectured on January 23 before members of the David Thomas Literary Society in the Memorial Church, Bishopston. His subject was 'Worship Music,' and in illustration the church choir sang Arcadelt's Ave Maria (to verses from Psalm lv.), Almighty and Everlasting God (Gibbons), and Stanford's O living Will that shalt endure. Mr. Alec T. Weekes was at the organ.

Mr. Albert Sammons gave a recital at Colston Hall on January 24. At the Philharmonic Society's concert on January 27 Elgar's Symphony in A flat was performed, also Mendelssohn's Ruy Blas Overture and the Bach Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, in which the solo part was played by Mr. Harold Samuel. The choir of a hundred and twenty voices sang Byrd's carol This day Christ was born, Morley's April is in my mistress' face, and Holst's setting of the 15th-century words Bring us in good ale. Mr. Arnold Barter conducted, and Mr. Samuel played pieces by Albéniz, Ravel, and Debussy. Clifton Chamber Concert Party included in its programme on February 6 a Sonata in F sharp minor by Jean Huré, for pianoforte and 'cello, played by Mr. Herbert Parsons and Mr. Percy Lewis, Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Trio, with Madame Adolphi as violinist, and Beethoven's String Quartet in C minor, with Miss Hilda Barr as second violinist and Mr. Alfred Best playing the viola. On February 7 Mr. J. Bright Harvey conducted Fishponds Choral Society of sixty voices, in Music all-powerful (Walmisley), Hymn to Music (Dudley Buck), Revel of the Leaves (G. A. Veazie), Pearsall's When Allan-a-Dale, and pieces by Hatton and Pinsuti. The Orpheus Society held its Annual Ladies' Night in Colston Hall on February 8, under Mr. George Riseley's direction. Included in the programme were Elvey's From yonder rustling mountains, Dr. Bexfield's The Death of Hector, Alex. Patterson's setting of The Wedding of Shon Maclean, Mr. Riseley's setting of Where'er my footsteps stray, The Drowsy Woods (A. M. Storch), Hymn to Cupid (Martin), Down in the Valley (Minnie Crispin), and I know an eye (Chwatal).

CARDIFF.—Elgar's King Olaf was performed on January 20 at the forty-second annual concert of the Blue Ribbon Choir.—The Catholic Choral Society, numbering two hundred voices, sang at the Capitol on January 21, conducted by Mr. T. J. O'Leary. Mr. Lionel Falkland's Orchestra played Grieg's Slavonic Rhapsody.—At Park Hall, on January 21, Mr. Garforth Mortimer's orchestra played Liszt's Les Préludes and an Overture, Hungadi Lazlos, by Erkel. Mr. Frank Mullings was the vocalist.—On February 3 Mr. Herbert Ware's String Orchestra played Mozart's Serenade, two of Grieg's Album Lieder, and Elgar's E minor Suite. A Beethoven Pianoforte Trio and a Mozart Violin Sonata were also played. Sir Henry Walford Davies was prevented by illness from keeping his lecture engagement, and a paper written by Dr. W. H. Reed was read by a deputy.—The third concert for this season of the Chamber Music Society on February 12 was the occasion of a visit by the Bohemian String Quartet, which played the Novák Quartet in G, Ravel in F, and Beethoven in E minor.

CARLISLE.—Brahms's Requiem was performed by the Carlisle Choral Society at its second concert of the season on February 8, the solo parts being taken by Miss Noel Eadie and Mr. Arthur Cranmer.

CHATHAM.—The Band of the Royal Engineers was heard on January 16 in Dvorák's New World Symphony, a Suite, From the Samoan Isles, by Geehl, and Saint-Saëns's Le Rouet d'Omphale.—On January 17 Dr. Hoby gave the first of a series of lectures dealing with the fundamental principles of listening to music.—On January 22 the Band of the Royal Marines played Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony, the Magic Flute Overture, and Grainger's Mock Morris, Dr. Hoby conducting.—On January 23 the Band of the Royal Engineers played Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, Coleridge-Taylor's Nero Suite, and a Tarantelle, Die Fischerinnen von Procida, by Raff. Lieut. Neville Flux conducted.—The Royal Engineer Orchestra, conducted by Lieut. Neville Flux, played the Jupiter Symphony, Die Meistersinger Overture, and German's Welsh Rhapsody on February 6.

DUMFRIES.—On February 9 the Dumfries Select Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. W. J. Stark, gave what is said to be the first complete performance of J. B. McEwen's Solway Symphony. The composer disclaims all idea of programme music in this Symphony, but each movement has a poetical motive which furnishes an obvious clue to its general intention. The movements are three—'Springtide,' 'Moonlight,' and 'Sou'-west Wind. Miss Fanny Davies collaborated in Beethoven's fourth Pianoforte Concerto, and the Overtures Ruv Blas and Der Freischütz were performed. The wind section of the band was recruited from the Hallé Orchestra.

DUNDEE.—In the Caird Hall, on February 7, the Amateur Choral Society gave a performance of Berlioz's Faust. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Frank Mullings, Mr. Herbert Heyner, and Mr. Robert Watson. A feature of the performance was the singing of two hundred children in the last scene. The Scottish Orchestra accompanied, and Mr. Charles M. Cowe conducted.

EDINBURGH.—Sir Henry Wood conducted the Scottish Orchestra at the Patterson orchestral concert on January 16, when Borodin's second Symphony and Glinka's Overture to Ruslan and Ludmilla were played. A Suite of selected pieces by Purcell included the Prelude from Dioclesian, the Minuet from The Distressed Innocent, the Largo from the sixth Sonata, the 'Song of the Birds,' from Timon of Athens, and the Vivace from the first Sonata for strings. Also in the programme were 'On the Cliffs of Cornwall,' from Dame Ethel Smyth's opera The Wreckers, the Andante from Mozart's Cassation, the Tambourin from Rameau's Fête d'Hébé, and the Dance Rhapsody of Delius.—At the Nelson Hall concert, on January 19, chamber music by Brahms, Schubert, Schumann, and Mozart was played, and songs by Stanford, Parry, Dunhill, and Vaughan Williams were sung. Mr. McEwen gave brief explanations of the items.—On January 20 Prof. Tovey gave a pianoforte recital to members of the Scottish Art Club, when, along with analytical information, he also drew parallels between the methods of certain composers and certain painters.—At the Patterson orchestral concert on January 22 the Scottish Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Julius Harrison, played the Euryanthe Overture, Debussy's L'après-midi d'un faune, Brahms's third Symphony, and four excerpts from Berlioz's Faust. With M. Sapelnikov as soloist, Tchaikovsky's first Pianoforte Concerto was performed.—On January 26, in the Freemasons' Hall, a recital was given of songs by Amy Hare (who was at the pianoforte), the singer being Miss Tilly Koenen.—M. Serge Koussevitzky was the conductor at the Patterson orchestral concert on January 29, when the central feature of the programme was Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony. Other music played included a Handel Suite in D major for strings, a Concerto for small orchestra by Philipp Emanuel Bach (arranged by Maximilian Steinberg), the Introduction to Moussorgsky's opera Khovanschina, Rimsky-Korsakov's Dobnionschka, an orchestrated Vocalise by Rachmaninov, and the 'Vol du Bourdon' from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera The Legend of the Tsar Saltan. The orchestra was, of course, the Scottish.—At the last concert for the season of the Patterson Orchestral series, Sir Landon Ronald relinquished the post of regular conductor, though he announced that he hoped to reappear next season as a guest-conductor. The programme was divided between Wagner and Tchaikovsky (fourth Symphony).—A Beethoven programme was given at the Reid Orchestral concert on February 10 in Usher Hall. In the Fantasia for pianoforte, chorus, and orchestra, and in the Choral Symphony, the Reid Orchestra had the co-operation of the Edinburgh Royal Choral Union. Mr. W. Greenhouse Allt conducted. Prof. Tovey was the pianist, and the solo parts were taken by the 'English Singers.' Between the two large works Prof. Tovey played the Fantasia, Op. 77, and the Bagatelle in B minor.

ETON.—On February 2, Miss Barbara Constable gave a vocal recital with a remarkably good choice of songs. They were all British, and fell into four groups—Tudor Ayres, Hebridean songs, and modern examples.

EXETER.—At the January meeting of the Chamber Music Club, of which Dr. Ernest Bullock is musical director, Holst's Four Songs for voice and violin and Stanford's Three Intermezzi for pianoforte and clarinet were performed. Pianoforte music, madrigals by Morley and Farmer, and a Mozart String Quartet completed the programme.—The Male Choir, conducted by Mr. W. J. Cotton, sang to members of the Literary Society on January 25, the programme including Awake, sweet love (Dowland), Welcome, sweet pleasure (Weelkes), Müller's Spring's delights, Fleming's Integer Vite, and Bayley's When evening casts her shadows round.—The Oratorio Society, which has been suspended for two seasons, has been reorganized, and has commenced rehearsals of the Hiawatha trilogy, under the direction of Mr. Allan Allen.

GRIMSBY.—The Modern Trio and Miss Elsie Suddaby (vocalist) were the artists in a concert given at the Town Hall on January 23. Frank Bridge's Phantasy in C minor and English songs, old and new, occurred in the programme.

HORFIELD (Somerset).—At the first concert of the recently-formed Choral Society, Mendelssohn's Lauda Sion was performed, Mr. Geoffrey L. Mendham conducting.

HULL.—Except for the Bach-Elgar Fantasia and Fugue, the Hull Philharmonic programme on January 18 was 'all British.' Notable items were Elgar's Cello Concerto (played by Miss Beatrice Harrison), and Mr. J. W. Hudson's Suite, Contrasts, conducted by its composer.—Beethoven, Debussy, Chopin, Liszt, Scriabin, and William Baines, made up Frederick Dawson's pianoforte recital in Queen's Hall on January 18.—On January 20 the Carl Rosa Opera Company concluded a month's season which has been attended by about sixty thousand people.—Hull Corporation is making the experiment of Sunday evening concerts. The first took place on January 21, organ pieces played by Mr. H. Malkin being interspersed with violin solos by Miss Olive Sheffield.—The Hull Military Band opened a season of concerts in the Alexandra Theatre on Sunday evening, January 21, when over two thousand people listened to selections from Wagner, Grieg, and Saint-Saëns.—Pablo Luna's Spanish opera, The First Kiss, was staged at the above-mentioned theatre on January 23, prior to its presentation in London.

KIDDERMINSTER.—Elgar's The Music-Makers was performed on January 26 by the Kidderminster Choral Society under the direction of Mr. J. Irving Glover.

LEEDS.—At a series of Wednesday afternoon chamber concerts, in Belgrave Lecture Hall, the Ghent Quartet has been heard extensively. With Mr. Lupton Whitelock these players gave Kuhlau's Flute Quintet in E, Op. 51, No. 2.—The Edward Elliott Quartet played César Cui (Op. 68) at Dr. William Bradley's organ recital at Christ Church, Upper Armley, on January 21.—Bach's Double Concerto in C major and Ravel's Mother Goose Suite were played on two pianofortes, in the Church Institute, on January 24, by Mr. H. Bardgett and Mr. G. C. Gray. An extensive programme of English, classical, and modern songs was sung by Mr. Alan Clark (baritone), formerly of York Cathedral Choir.—Elgar's Lux Christi and selections from St. Paul were sung by Leeds New Choral Society in the Town Hall on January 24.—The same evening Miss Lily Crawford presented an ambitious range of songs, at Leeds University, and Mr. Frederick Mountney played the Elgar Violin Sonata.—Mr. Wilfred E. Child (lecturer on English at Leeds University) discoursed at the Theosophical Hall on 'Medieval Carols' on January 24.—The same evening E. Norman Hay's String Quartet in A major (published by the Carnegie Trust) was performed at the Bohemian Chamber Concert at the Metropole.—Glazounov's sixth Symphony received a powerful interpretation at the hands of Mr. Eugène Goossens and the Leeds Symphony Orchestra, at the Saturday orchestral concert on February 3. Mr. Anderson Tyrer was the pianist in the Emperor Concerto; and, on the same occasion, Mr. Goossens's Tam o' Shanter had its first performance at Leeds.—Messrs. Arthur Catterall and Herbert Heyner were the soloists at Leeds Choral Union concert on February 14, when Dr. Coward conducted the Bach Sanctus and part of Bantock's Atalanta in Calydon.

LIVERPOOL.—A recital of two-pianoforte works was given at Rushworth Hall on January 20, by Miss Lucy Pierce and Mr. Charles Kelly. The programme included Arnold Bax's Moy Mell.—At a song and pianoforte recital given at Rushworth Hall on January 22 by Mr. George Hill and Mr. John Tobin, the songs included Dunhill's Fiddler of Dooney, Lord Berners's Three Ironic Songs, and Moussorgsky's Musician's Peep-Show, and among the pianoforte pieces was Ireland's Chelsea Reach.—Mr. Dolmetsch's chamber concert on January 23 contained much old viol music, some pieces by Bach for clavicord, a Violin Sonata by Corelli, and some songs with lute accompaniment.—M. Rosenthal gave a recital on January 27 in the Philharmonic Hall, playing Beethoven, Chopin, Schumann, and Scriabin.—The recital list has included Miss Tilly Koenen, who sang songs by Amy Hare, with the composer at the pianoforte; Miss Vera Hall and Mr. Walter Hatton in a Beethoven Sonata for pianoforte and 'cello; Miss Edina Thraves (vocalist); Mr. Solomon (pianoforte); the Kennedy-Fraser's in Hebridean song; Mr. George Hill in a varied programme of songs; and Miss Ellen Watson, a local singer, who gave the Celtic Song Cycle of Arnold Bax.—Dr. A. W. Pollitt lectured in the Arts Theatre of the University on the emotional content of music, and drew a contrast between Moussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition and Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony.—The Bohemian String Quartet visited the Institute on February 9, and played a Pianoforte Quintet by Joseph Suk, with Miss Fanny Davies at the pianoforte.—Liverpool Welsh Choral Society sang Vaughan Williams's Toward the Unknown Region, conducted by Mr. T. Hopkin Evans.

MANCHESTER.—At a Hallé Concert on February 1, a choir of eighty voices from the Hallé Choir took part in the first performance of the Brahms Liebeshlieder as arranged for orchestra by Gerrard Williams.—The complete choir, conducted by Mr. Hamilton Harty, gave Bach's B minor Mass on February 8.—Recent orchestral novelties have included a Processional Nocturne by Rabaud and a Suite of Danzas Fantásticas by Turina.—In chamber music the most distinguished performances were given by the Bohemians and by the Harty-Isaacs combination in the Elgar Quintet.—Recitals of song-cycles or of groups of associated songs drawn from two or three composers are to be heard in increasing quantity during the lunch-hour; typical of these are programmes presented by Mr. Charles Neville, Miss Mary Ogden, Miss Lillie Wormald, and Miss Elizabeth Nicholl. Music for two pianofortes has long found exponents in Mr. Charles Kelly and Miss Lucy Pierce, who gave their most recent exhibition in this line at a C.W.S. concert. Two younger students from the Royal Manchester College, Messrs. Dennis Chapman and Alfred Hardie, bid fair to excel in the same branch. Bach's Double Concerto in C minor was presented by these two pairs of pianists twice within the first fortnight of February.

NEWCASTLE.—Felling Catholic Choral Society gave its first concert on January 14, conducted by Mr. R. Curry.—The Symphony String Orchestra was conducted by Sir Henry Wood on January 17 in a Bach Suite, Tchaikovsky's Elegy, Arensky's Variations on a Theme of Tchaikovsky, and Holst's St. Paul's Suite.—At the Chamber Music Society's meeting on January 18 the artists were Mr. Harold Samuel, Mr. John Dunn, and Miss Dorothy Silk. The programme included pianoforte music by Bach (Partita in C minor), Albeniz, Ravel, Rachmaninov (Prelude in B flat), and Dandrieu (Tourbillons); violin music by Spohr, Glinka, and Balakirev; and old and modern English songs.—At the third concert of the Philharmonic Society, on January 21, the chief items were Dvorák's Carneval Overture and Butterworth's A Shropshire Lad. With Miss Annie M. Eckford in the solo part, a Pianoforte Concerto of Mozart was played. Grainger's Mock Morris and the Tannhäuser Overture were also included. Mr. Edgar L. Bainton conducted.—Four of Bach's Church Cantatas were sung in the Cathedral Church on February 3, by the Bach Choir, supported by a small orchestra, with the Cathedral organist, Mr. William Ellis, at the organ. Dr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.—The Oppenheim Society gave its fifty-eighth concert on February 8. A manuscript String Quartet by Percy Turnbull was the chief interest, this having been awarded first prize in its class at the last Newcastle Musical Tournament. It was played by Mrs. Hetherington, Mr. R. Penman, Mr. F. W. Pantom, and Mr. F. Smith.

NEWCASTLE (Staffs).—The annual concert of the Male-Voice Glee Union, now in its twenty-second season, took place on February 1. Mr. S. E. Lovatt conducted the choir in Hegar's Walpurga and a selection of part-songs.

OXFORD.—Under the auspices of the Ladies' Musical Society a lecture was given on January 26 by Mr. B. C. Allchin on 'Musical Appreciation.'—On the same date M. Pouishnov (pianoforte), M. Bratza (violin), and Mr. Eric Marshall (vocalist) gave a 'celebrity' concert.—The Elizabethan Singers gave a programme on January 29 arranged on chronological lines, and including All creatures now (Benet), In the merry spring (Ravenscroft), With sighs, sweet rose, for male voices (Callcott), Since thou, O fondest and true (Parry), The Blue Bird (Stanford), and some carols by Holst.—Miss Irene Scharrer gave a pianoforte recital on January 31 in the Assembly Room.

PETERBOROUGH.—A very successful concert was given at the Assembly Rooms on February 8 by pupils of Miss Emily Trigger. The works chosen were chiefly modern, including Albeniz, Debussy, Arnold Bax, &c., and the performers generally bore themselves with credit. Madame Adelaide Lambe sang some groups of modern songs.

PORTSMOUTH.—On January 18 the Philharmonic Choral Society, with orchestra, performed Vaughan Williams's The Wassail Song and Holst's arrangement of A Festival Chime. With Mr. Arnold Trowell as solo 'cellist, Saint-Saëns's Concerto in A minor was played. Mr. Hugh Barry conducted.—At the Town Hall concert on February 3 the Emperor Concerto was played by Mr. Reginald Renison and the Royal Marine Artillery Orchestra, under Lieut. R. P. O'Donnell. Mr. Renison is a youthful pianist from Southampton. The orchestra also played Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony.—A new choral organization has been formed under the name of Pembroke County Male Choir, with a membership of forty Welshmen. Mr. W. J. Thomas is the conductor, and on February 9 they gave a first concert.—On February 10 the Choral Society, conducted by Mr. W. T. Sayer, a comparatively new combination, sang choruses and part-songs at a Municipal Concert.

RICHMOND (Yorks).—On February 12, Richmondshire Choral Society performed Brahms's Song of Destiny, Stanford's Phaulraig Crohoore, and Parry's Jerusalem. Mr. Arthur Fountain conducted.

ROCHESTER.—The Choral Society sang Brahms's Songs of Love on January 24, with Mr. William Higley as soloist. The other pieces were Francis Pilkington's Rest, sweet nymphs, Gibbons's The Silver Swan, and Stanford's The Blue Bird. The English Trio played string music by Brahms and Schubert.

SCARBOROUGH.—The second concert of the season given by the Musical Society took place at the Arcadia on February 12. The choir sang Sir Patrick Spens (R. L. de Pearsall), Ireland's Cradle Song, 'Death, I do not fear thee' (from Bach's Jesu, Priceless Treasure), and Parry's My delight and thy delight. The ladies sang Brahms's The death of Tennyson, and the men the 'Choral Hymn' from Holst's Rig Veda. Mr. A. C. Keeton conducted.

SHIREHAMPTON.—The Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Napier Miles, sang the choral song from Parry's The Lotus-Eaters on January 24 (with Madame le Mar as principal), and parts of Bach's Sing ye to the Lord. Miss Marie Hall played violin music, and Mr. Gilbert J. Bailey sang some new songs by Napier Miles.

SIDMOUTH.—The annual series of chamber concerts arranged by an enterprising committee closed on February 8, when the Eyre Trio (Miss Ruth Eyre, Miss Phyllis Eyre, and Miss Margery Eyre) gave a programme of vocal and pianoforte trio music. The vocal pieces included O sweet pleasure (Jean de la Boche), I've been roaming (Horn), three pieces by Weelkes, two Swedish songs (Cradle Song and How splendid is crystal), A measure to pleasure your leisure (Battista Martini), and three pieces composed by Dr. Ernest Walker and dedicated to the Eyre Trio—Hark, hark the lark, Song of Proserpine, and Say, dainty dames. The instrumental items included Eugène Goossens's Five Impressions of a Holiday, and a Sonata in G minor for pianoforte and 'cello, by Henry Eccles. Former concerts in the series have comprised a recital by Miss Jelly d'Aranyi (violin) and a recital by Mr. Ivor James ('cello) and Mrs. F. Newton Trier (singer). Unfortunately the season has closed with a serious deficit.

WOLVERTON.—On February 7 the Wolverton and District Choral Society sang The Creation at the Picture Palace, Wolverton, to a large and appreciative audience. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Greene, Mr. Frank Webster, and Mr. Howard Fry. Mr. C. Kenneth Garratt conducted.

Melbourne Philharmonic Society gave King Olaf at its autumn concert, Mr. W. F. G. Steele conducting, and the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra assisting. Miss Ella Nicol, Mr. Gregor Wood, and Mr. Henry Thomas were the soloists.

MUSIC IN IRELAND

The Catterall String Quartet gave a delightful recital under the auspices of the Royal Dublin Society at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on January 15. Although a varied programme was given, Beethoven's Quartet No. 1 seemed to please best. Special praise must be given to the player of the viola—a thankless instrument. A repeat visit was made by the same combination on February 5.

The Pianoforte and Wind Quintet, with Mr. Hamilton Harty as conductor, charmed a large audience at the Royal Dublin Society recital on January 22, the chief items being Beethoven's Quintet and Brahms's Sonata in F.

Dr. Esposito and Mr. Clyde Twelvetees gave an enjoyable sonata recital at the Royal Dublin Society on January 29, the best items being the Mendelssohn and Rachmaninov Sonatas.

The Belfast Philharmonic Society's concert at Ulster Hall, on February 9, was a great success, the chief items being Bach's God's time is the best and Charles Wood's A Dirge for Two Veterans, under the baton of Mr. Godfrey Brown, with Mr. J. H. MacBratney as accompanist. Mr. Alfred Trowell was the 'cellist.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

Dr. Muck, who again fills the place of Mengelberg, has so far abstained from introducing novelties, his first concert consisting exclusively of works by Beethoven, who in the first half of the season had been singularly neglected in the orchestral concerts. The scheme of his second concert brought works by Mozart, and Strauss's Symphonia Domestica, for which I am conscious of a growing indifference. At the subsequent concert Dr. Muck gave a splendid reading of Rimsky-Korsakov's Scheherazade, which, owing to its magnificent orchestral colouring, achieved by comparatively simple means, quite captured the audience. The enthusiasm of the public had immediately before been roused by Josef Pembaur's splendid performance in Liszt's second Pianoforte Concerto. The concert on this occasion was opened with Dr. Muck's fine reading of Weber's Euryanthe Overture. Bruckner's unfinished ninth Symphony, on the other hand, met with an extremely cool reception on February 8, when the occasion was saved by three works of Wagner.

One of the most prominent events was a performance on January 25 of Tristan and Isolde, also conducted by Dr. Muck. This was the first activity after many years of rest by the Wagner Society, which is now connected with the Concertgebouw. Although the performers of the leading parts were singers of high repute (mostly Germans), the orchestra, under the conductor's spirited leadership, carried off the palm of the evening.

In the way of oratorio—unfortunately the most neglected branch of music with us—we have had an excellent performance of Saul, which was presented by the Royal Oratorio Society under the able direction of M. Anton Tirie. The performance was in all respects conspicuous for true Handelian style, and fine work was done by the soloists (Mesdames Leonard and Lugar, and Messrs. van Tulder and Erhard), as well as by the orchestra and the admirably-trained chorus. We are looking forward to M. Tirie's cultivating the life-work of Handel on a larger scale than has been the case hitherto.

A series of concerts given by the National Ukrainian Chorus—a body comprising some twenty-four singers, of whom a number are endowed with truly magnificent voices—met with universal interest, which was indeed fully deserved.

Some of the most refined treats during the last few weeks were derived from chamber music concerts. The highest distinction attaches to the performance of the Rosé Quartet, of Vienna, which on January 20 played works by Haydn, Borodin, and Schubert. The Meredyll Pianoforte Quartet, of London, was engaged by the 'Kunstkring.' This combination appeared on three successive evenings (February 6, 7, and 8), when the players strengthened the favourable impression which they succeeded in creating last year. Our own Amsterdam String Quartet proved to be in fine form on its first evening, January 17, when the scheme comprised works by Chausson, César Franck, and Gabriel Dupont. The Hague String Quartet is making big strides to becoming a very fine body of players. This was evident when, on January 26, they presented no less than four absolutely new works, viz., a String Quartet by Jan Ingenhoven; Petite Suite Arménienne, by Diran Alexanian, a quaint but not unattractive composition; Sérénade tendre (a very characteristic work), by Joseph Jongen; and a String Quartet by Gabriel Chaumette, a pupil of Debussy's, which pupilage, however, did not prevent the work from being a failure. The climax was the appearance of the famous Capet Quartet, of Paris, which gave a Beethoven evening on February 10.

Our National Opera Company may indeed be compared with the fabled Phoenix. When, in November last, the concern collapsed in such a way that not even the greatest optimist dared to forecast anything like its resurrection, an appeal was made to M. Koopman, the former director, who in 1916 had laid the foundations of the Company and successfully steered the ship through the difficulties of the succeeding three years. When he resigned in 1919 a resolution was arrived at in an unpropitious hour to transplant the Company to The Hague. Since that date nothing but misadventure had befallen the undertaking. M. Koopman devoted a few weeks to reorganizing the scheme thoroughly. He came to the conclusion that nothing would save the wreck but the engagement of foreign artists on a large scale, seeing that the Dutch public places no confidence in its fellow-countrymen as opera singers. Artists of almost all nationalities have appeared since then, and the bills continually announce new names. It makes no difference whether these are French, Belgian, German, Russian, or Italian so long as they succeed in entrancing the audience. Prices of admission, too, have been considerably modified. The main thing striven for is to bring opera within reach of all social classes. The enterprise is now remunerative, and the performances wheresoever given are crammed night after night. To persist in calling the Company the National Opera under the prevalent circumstances is, of course, preposterous. But, after all, 'what's in a name?'

W. HARMANS.

NEW YORK

As our own orchestras, with the regular visits of the Bostonians and the Philadelphians, provide an average of about ten orchestral concerts a week, it might be thought that that would be as much as New York would be able to digest. On the contrary, however, for the Cleveland Orchestra has just given us one of the most interesting concerts of the season both as regards programme matter and its execution. Nikolai Sokoloff made his début in America as a violinist in the fall of 1914, but not much was heard of him until he founded the Cleveland Orchestra and became its conductor. Proof of his ability is afforded in the marked improvement in ensemble shown by his players from year to year. Such beauty of tone, such vitalising energy, to say nothing of the perfection of mere technique, as these Cleveland men displayed, should make some of our older organizations sit up and take notice. The Cleveland Orchestra played Loeffler's dramatic poem La Mort de Tintagiles, which introduces solos on that obsolete instrument the viole d'amour. This poem was first performed by the Boston Symphony Society twenty-five years ago, when Loeffler was himself a member of the Orchestra, sitting at the first desk of the first violins with Franz Kneisel. The Symphony was Rachmaninov's second.

The American composer cannot complain of neglect this season. A Symphony by Daniel Gregory Mason and another by Frederick H. Converse, have both been played lately by the Philharmonic Society. Sound, healthy, and conservative, these compositions, though not really boresome, yet revealed no marked inspiration. From the intellectual standpoint one found in them good ideas well developed, but there was nothing in either work to arouse emotion or to incite vigorous applause. At a more recent concert a Negro Rhapsody, by Rubin Goldmark, was played. Goldmark has long been recognised as one of the best of American composers, and it is a pleasure to record that each work that comes from his pen seems to be more interesting, better done, and to win more approbation than its predecessor. The Rhapsody is written on seven themes either of negro origin or negro character, one of which was found years ago by Goldmark in a magazine, quoted there as a melody sung by Tennessee negroes while working on the river. All the themes are clearly presented, and are richly developed in the manner of a master musician.

During the interim between Stransky's mid-winter departure as conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra and Mengelberg's arrival, Henry Hadley conducted a few Philharmonic concerts, and he also remembered the American composer, presenting among other examples some short numbers by Henry Gilbert, written for the Pilgrim Tercentenary Pageant at Plymouth, Mass., in 1921. The French and Indian Pantomime and the Indian Dance are good concert pieces without the adjunct of the pageant, though doubtless that increased their interest. Gilbert always has something to say, and says it in a clear and straightforward manner that delights the listener whose ear in these days is wearied with so much that is superfluous and intangible.

The delightful concerts of the 'Friends of Music' call for notice before their season is finished. Bodanzky has already given us afternoons devoted respectively to Bach, Brahms, and Beethoven, and the latest concert was of a more cosmopolitan character, the familiar composers represented being Verdi, Berlioz, Beethoven, and Mahler, with Sigrid Onegin and Bronislaw Huberman as soloists. The novelty was a Suite de Concert for violin and orchestra by Sergius Tanéïev, whose works are little known and seldom heard in America. It proved to be a good, sound, and interesting composition, well worth a second hearing, and was admirably played by soloists and orchestra.

Amid the commonplace repetitions that go on at the Metropolitan Opera House the reappearance of Così fan Tutte (so exquisitely produced last season) is an item of importance. Tannhäuser was the fifth Wagner opera to be revived since the War. Parsifal, Tristan, Lohengrin, and Die Walküre preceded it.

M. H. FLINT.

ROME

A new gramophone invention, the work of a humble State-employee, Signor Magnifico, was recently exhibited to the members of the Italian Press Association by its inventor. The fact of its being endorsed by this body is a guarantee of its value, for only rarely does the Association lend its name to new inventions. The Magnifico instrument claims to have solved the difficulties of length of performance and maintenance of pitch. As all gramophone users know, the ordinary record, of about thirty centimetres diameter, lasts between three-and-a-half and four-and-a-half minutes, and does not sustain a constant tone, which varies with the speed of the machine. The new machine, it is said, produces the true pitch at whatever speed it is run, which permits the observance of important time modifications. The ordinary thirty centimetre record, incised on the Magnifico plan, lasts about nine minutes, whilst the normal Magnifico record, sixty centimetres diameter, will absorb nearly thirty minutes. The teaching value of the invention is evident. The performance before the members of the Press Association proved that the claims of Signor Magnifico for his invention are fully justified by the results.

The Amici della Musica has given three very important concerts this month. The first, devoted to ancient and modern Italian music, contained in its programme a Sonata senza tempi for violoncello and pianoforte and three descriptive pieces, Musiche per pianoforte, of Aldo Cantarini, a new song, L'Offerta, with accompaniment for pianoforte and violoncello by Domenico Alaleona, and five exceptionally delicate Japanese Songs by Setaccioli. The works of Alaleona and of Setaccioli gained a well-merited success. The other two programmes of the Amici comprised Beethoven's five Sonatas for violoncello and pianoforte.

The president of the Society, Eugene Albini, was the interpreter. He is also the author of an excellent brochure, Beethoven and his five Violoncello Sonatas, which has just been published by Bocca.

The Philharmonic Academy has had a distinguished visitor in the person of the pianist, Jan Smeterling, who gave two concerts, with conventional programmes. The well-known Rosé Quartet was also to have been heard at the Philharmonic this month, but having been held up at the frontier the players were unable to fulfil their engagement, and their place was taken by two Italo-American artists, Bernice de Pasquali, a soprano who studied at New York with Dvorák, and Remo Bolognini, a violinist who studied at Buenos Ayres with the Bolognese Ercole Galvani. Each revealed attainments of an exceptionally high order.

An American lady violinist, Amy Neill, has also given a concert at the Philharmonic, in which, besides compositions of Lalo, Tartini, Mozart, and Sinigaglia, she played the new Sonata in three movements of Leo Sowerby and the Sospiro of Howard Hanson, both of whom are at present living at Rome and are well known and appreciated by the Italian musical world.

At the Sala Bach we have had several important and interesting concerts, amongst them being a performance of Mozart's Quartet No. 1, Schumann's Trio, Op. 80, and Brahms's Quintet, Op. 34, by the Roman Quartet, a combination associated with the Sala Bach. During an organ recital by M. E. Bossi, in the same hall, a plastic representation of Schubert's Ave Maria was announced, and interpreted in rhythmic movement by the Signorine Castellucci. A blind pianist, Gigi Tedesco, gave a concert with Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata, the Prelude, Choral, and Fugue of Franck, and Liszt's sixth Hungarian Rhapsody; and to close the list, the Sala Bach announces a celebrity in the person of the pianist Edwin Fischer.

Two German masters, Oskar Fried and Hermann Scherchen, have been visitors at the Augusteum this month. Fried directed Beethoven's Fifth, the Fantastique of Berlioz, Strauss's Till Eulenspiegel, and the Spanish Rhapsody of Ravel. Scherchen directed the Pastoral, and a new suite, In the Kingdom of Pan, by Gräner. At the moment of writing the Moravian Masters are visiting Rome, and have gained good success with their choral singing.

LEONARD PEYTON.

TORONTO

In the playing of the New York Symphony Orchestra a change was noticeable from last year. There is a deeper note of sincerity, with correspondingly less of the grandiose, in the results now obtained by Walter Damrosch. Glazounov's beautiful fifth Symphony in B flat, Respighi's symphonic poem, Fontane di Roma, and the Liszt first Hungarian Rhapsody, were given with quite unusual grip of detail.

The New Year week was one of opera. Butterfly, Carmen, Cavalleria Rusticana, La Bohème, and Il Trovatore, as presented by the San Carlo Company, were of undoubted interest, except in regard to the chorus work, which has always been a weak point with this organization. But it is a great pity an opportunity was not given for hearing at least one new opera, which could easily have been presented with a cast including the Japanese soprano, Tamaki Miura, Anna Fittiu, Marie Rappold, Anita Klinovi, Boscacci, Mario Valle, Stella de Mette, William Green, Sofia Charlebois, Manuel Salazar, Richard Bonelli, and Amador Famadas.

Two of the Toronto Chamber Music Society concerts were held in Hart House Theatre with a very marked increase of interest. The Toronto Academy String Quartet played the Grieg Quartet in G minor, Op. 27, Glazounov's Interludium, d'Osten-Sacken's Berceuse russe, Sokolov's Scherzo, and the Mozart Quintet in A major for clarinet and strings. The Hambourg Concert Society's programme was distinctly attractive, containing Beethoven's Quartet in C minor, Op. 18, No. 4, Vivaldi's Violoncello Sonata in F major, and the Brahms Trio in C minor, Op. 101.

The following artists have been heard in recital: Isa Kremer in Russian, rench, and Jewish ballads; Ernest Hutcheson in a Schumann programme, Dmitry Dobkin (Russian tenor), Madame Grace-Smith in a costume-study of Chopin, Colin McPhee in works by Scriabin, and Mrs. Harry Hodgetts (soprano).

Chamber music is gaining a distinct hold upon the general public here this season, Massey Hall drawing over three thousand people in one week to hear the London String Quartet and the Hambourg Concert Society. The English body came for the first time under the auspices of the Toronto Chamber Music Society. Although the absence of Mr. James Levey, who has unhappily contracted typhoid fever, disturbed the remarkable ensemble for which this Quartet is so justly renowned, yet Mr. Arthur Beckwith managed in a few days to absorb a great deal of the Quartet's power of conception, and at the same time imparted an individualism which on the whole is distinctly worthy of the unique reputation these players hold. The programme, perhaps the most intellectual ever presented to a large audience at Toronto, included the Mozart B flat Quartet, No. 15 (Peters); a very beautiful, distinctive, and thoroughly interesting work by J. B. McEwen, the Biscay Quartet in A; and the Beethoven C major, Op. 59, No. 3. Never—with, perhaps, the one exception of Mr. H. Waldo Warner's Pixie Ring, played last year—has a new work produced a more profound impression upon one of our keenest musical audiences than did the Biscay Quartet.

The Hambourg Concert Society opened its twelfth season with the colourful Glazounov Noveletten, Op. 15, and Rachmaninov's Trio Elégiaque, Op. 9, an inspired composition marked, however, with the Russian's rather indefinite method of development. Eustache Horodyski, the new Hambourg Conservatory pianist, gave a masterly reading of the Chopin B minor Sonata, Op. 58. A pupil of Petri, Busoni's successor at Berlin, Horodyski is one of the finest of the younger school to be heard in this city.

Miss Geraldine Farrar, of the Metropolitan Opera, was heard and seen last week in Massey Hall. This artist created a welcome diversity of opinion (for the box-office) both before and after her recital. Her pro-German tendencies during the War produced an outcry, which most of the critics used as a weapon to condemn her vocalism. Her programme was good, her voice of beautiful quality, and her interpretation splendid.

The series of choral concerts began on January 25 with the National Chorus under Dr. Albert Ham. A number of light but pleasing works, with Pablo Casals as assisting artist, attracted a large audience. We were grateful for the opportunity for hearing such a finished musician as Casals. The chorus sang extremely well, tone, intonation, and balance being alike praiseworthy.

H. C. F.

VIENNA

Of all European musical centres, ours is probably most urgently in need of the moral support offered by the International Society for New Music, the representatives of which have recently held their first annual meeting in London. This important organization is virtually the outcome of the Salzburg Festival of International Chamber Music inaugurated last summer by a handful of Viennese modernists, and it is therefore all the more deplorable that the Vienna group of the Society alone has so far remained inactive this season. More than ever our young composers are addicted to the proverbially Austrian habit of particularism, to cliques and petty jealousies, and to an egotism which in this case almost jeopardises the very existence of the Society's Vienna centre. Yet assuredly this must be actively maintained at any cost, even as an antidote to local reactionaries who are working more energetically than ever in their opposition to modernism. After a short period of progress last season, conservatism is once more triumphant in Austrian musical life. A lowering of the general musical taste is clearly prevalent, and it is being sponsored, rather than resisted, by our leading conductors. Aside from a limited number of musical connoisseurs, the public appreciation of modern music has hardly penetrated beyond the works of Strauss, Korngold, or Puccini, whose supremacy in our concert-halls and opera houses is unchallenged. The indifferent attitude exhibited by our leading musical organizations towards really modern and novel composers may heretofore have seemed more sluggishness; in the light of recent events it points to an organized opposition. The Philharmonic Orchestra, our foremost orchestral body, has actually attempted to announce Korngold's well-worn suite Much Ado about Nothing as a novelty, and, apart from Frederick Delius's fine Dance Rhapsody and Stravinsky's Fireworks, has so far offered, as the only real novelty of its series, the old Variations on a Theme of Reizenauer, for which the Philharmonic conductor, Felix Weingartner, had provided a new and tasteful orchestral setting. The record of the Tonkünstler Orchestra and the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde Choir, both directed by Wilhelm Furtwängler, is still more meagre, their programmes consisting solely of classic symphonies and Handel oratorios, but offering, as an 'innovation,' the rarely-heard History of the Life and Death of our Saviour, by Heinrich Schütz, the interest of which is of a purely historical order. The important musical societies of Vienna completely ignore such men as Berg, Webern, Wellesz, Pisk, Horwitz, or even Schönberg, and others of our modernists, who feel justly incensed at such overt reverence for the great classics, practised, however, to the complete exclusion of contemporary composers.

NEW WORKS

A few concerts constituted a pleasant exception from the rule. Bruno Walter, the Munich conductor—formerly of Vienna, where he is greatly revered—introduced, on the eve of his departure for the United States, one of the most important novelties in the eagerly anticipated Requiem by Walter Braunfels. In its severe simplicity this work marks an interesting effort at carrying new and modern tendencies into ecclesiastical music, and its earnestness and loftiness of purpose command respect. Conductor Leopold Reinwein (very unjustly removed from the Staatsoper some time ago) achieved a remarkable feat by conducting from memory, among other difficult works, the ravishly rich Poème de l'Extase of Scriabin, and Bernhard Tittel, who is giving a widely attended series of orchestral concerts at popular prices, added to his credit a good performance of Ottorino Respighi's Fontane di Roma, with its dazzling wealth of orchestral colour. Another new work by Respighi, the Concerto Gregoriano, gave special interest to the programme of Rudolph Polk, a fine American violinist. This Concerto, constituting a unique and happy mixture of hymn elements and strikingly modern dance rhythms, is excellently scored and, above all, is an extremely grateful vehicle for the art of the soloist. A new Violin Sonata by Dirk Schäfer, the Dutch pianist, rather unevenly played by Henriette Dubois-Ruinen, from Amsterdam, with the support of Paul Weingarten, at the pianoforte, was in fact 'new' rather than 'novel.' It is couched in a musical idiom strangely reminiscent of Schäfer's pianoforte playing, and is always artistic without ever displaying a forcible personality. We have heard a new Phantastischer Reigen, by Julius Weismann, which the Rosé Quartet included in its programme, and a Pianoforte Concerto by the same composer, who himself played the solo part. Little may be said in favour of a Violin Sonata (MS.) by Serge Bortkiewicz, which the Russian composer presented, for the first time anywhere, in conjunction with Frank Smit, a Czech violinist. The Sonata, and even more so the pianoforte compositions by Bortkiewicz, excellently played by himself, were little more than agreeable drawing-room music. A new String Quartet by Ernst Toch, a Frankfurt composer, gave occasion for a veritable riot on the part of some Pan-German youths, who objected to the work not on artistic but on purely racial grounds, thus depriving the audience from hearing music which, though somewhat eclectic in style, still gave evidence of undoubted talent. The hearts of the Pan-Germans were cheered, however, by a choral concert of the Schubertbund which afforded Vienna the first opportunity for hearing two romantic Deutsche Gesänge by Hans Pfitzner, and a Bardengesang by Richard Strauss. The last-named piece, written for a national occasion in 1917, and based on somewhat barbaric words by Klopstock, is of questionable value, its effectiveness being due chiefly to the huge choral apparatus. The same is true of Wagner's seldom-played Festival March, which is replete with self-plagiarisms, and Beethoven's symphonic tone-painting, Wellington's Victory, or The Battle of Vittoria, which must be counted among the master's weakest and justly-neglected inspirations. These pieces were heard at a big festival concert conducted, most awkwardly, by Wilhelm Kienzl, and the programme opened with what was virtually the première of a beautiful Concerto for four pianofortes and stringed orchestra, by Bach.

CONDUCTORS AND SOLOISTS

Paul von Klenau, the Danish composer-conductor, was responsible for a beautiful performance of Gluck's Orpheus. It was a supreme artistic achievement, and far superior to many performances at our luxurious Staatsoper, where Gluck's work has been absent from the repertoire for decades.

Our visiting artists have included d'Albert; the American, Rudolph Reuter; Brailovsky; Jeffrey Reynolds, an Anglo-American; Kathleen McQuitty, from London, in a somewhat innocent Pianoforte Suite entitled The Rising Moon, by Colin Taylor, and a Scherzo and Intermezzo by Marmaduke Barton; two English violinists—Miss Editha Braham and Victor Olof, a pupil of Prof. Ronay, the last named being favourably heard in Elgar's Concerto; Henri Marteau, whose recent Munich recital was frustrated by heated chauvinists; Arnold Rosé, with a sonata evening, Bruno Walter being at the pianoforte; Meta Reidel, from Amsterdam, in an evening of Mahler songs; Richard Mayr and Richard Tauber, from the Staatsoper, in song recitals.

THE VOLKSOPER

The crisis at the Volksoper has been definitely settled, and Weingartner remains the victor over his former co-director, Gruder Guntram, who has severed his connection with the house. Guntram's departure means the definite abandonment of the Volksoper's English tour. Weingartner has not changed his intention, however, of producing Josef Holbrooke's opera The Children of Don, which will shortly take place. For the moment the financial situation of the theatre is such as to point to a complete breakdown in the near future.

THE STAATSOPER

At the Staatsoper an even more critical situation has arisen, due to the announced intention of the Philharmonic Orchestra again to tour South America this spring. The authorities have so far withheld their approval, but the Orchestra refuses to relinquish its intention, in spite of all objections of the Government or the public. For diplomatic reasons the organizers have extended an invitation to the directors of the Staatsoper, Messrs. Strauss and Schalk, to accompany the Orchestra to South America, an offer which Schalk declined as incompatible with his directoral duties. Strauss, on the other hand, readily accepted the offer, which implies his tacit consent to an undertaking which is a flagrant offence against the discipline of the Staatsoper. Weingartner, the regular conductor of the Philharmonic symphony series, has protested against the participation in the tour of a 'guest' conductor, and has announced his retirement from the conductor's post. It is rumoured that Strauss will next season fill the place thus left vacant, in addition to taking charge of a Master class at the State Conservatory of Music. Thus will he combine in his hands practically all the important musical functions in the musical world of Vienna. The South American tour of Strauss and the Philharmonic Orchestra, besides leaving the Staatsoper without its director and orchestra for a goodly portion of the season, also upsets all plans of the Salzburg Festival Association (of which Strauss is the president), since the Philharmonic Orchestra had been announced as one of the chief attractions for this summer's Festival.

The far-reaching difficulties arising from the proposed tour of the Philharmonic Orchestra will, in all probability, precipitate the crisis of the Staatsoper. The deficit—it has now reached the sum of £80,000 annually—is almost double as high as in pre-war times, owing to the small receipts and the reckless management. The Government is now inquiring into the affairs of the institution, and, according to some reports, is considering the complete abandonment of a theatre whose record is little more than one of financial loss, and the acceptance of the offer of a syndicate to make the institution a private theatre. Another plan mooted is to close the house temporarily, and to send the company on tour to foreign countries, the deficit of the Vienna season to be defrayed by the anticipated profits. Already the management has received invitations from the Scandinavian countries, and a movement is on foot, sponsored by Baron Franckenstein, the Austrian Ambassador to the British Court, to inaugurate a London season of the Staatsoper in the near future.

PAUL BECHERT.

GERMANY

THE LONDON SYMPHONY

Ralph Vaughan Williams's London Symphony, already favourably known in America as well as in England, has recently had its first German performance by the Berlin Philharmonic under the baton of Ignatz Waghalter. This is the second time since the war that an important English composition has made an appearance in Germany. The impression produced by it was favourable, and should encourage other British composers to present themselves before a German public. It was not easy for the majority of the audience to appreciate the masterly style of combining impressionistic with vocal elements, and to understand the true London character of this Symphony, especially so since one of the popular tunes employed in it seemed to be identically the same as a German melody of acknowledged vulgarity.

BÉLA BARTÓK AT BERLIN

The Melos Society (founded by Hermann Scherchen, recently elected in London as a member of the jury of the International Society), one of the great promoters of modern music at Berlin, invited Béla Bartók, the Hungarian composer, and the Waldbaur Quartet to come to this city for a series of concerts comprising Bartók's complete chamber music works, which are undoubtedly the most important branch of his creative work.

Bartók himself is already too well-known in England to need any further introduction. That he is only one-sided in his art; that he lacks all sweetness of sound; in short, that he is all but a meridional musician, is evident. But none can deny the convincing austerity and ever new solidity of his work, always bearing a stamp of its own. The limits of his musical capacity are the very limits of his human nature. The absence of sunshine in his art may lead his imagination to regions where no mortal will be able to follow him. This is shown by his second Sonata for violin and pianoforte, which, even though accompanied by the pianist-composer himself, could not impress all hearers with its value. More telling is the effect produced by the popular songs and dances, which receive a strange light by reason of a tendency to atonality peculiar in his music.

ADOLF WEISSMANN.

[We regret that our Berlin correspondent's matter arrived too late for insertion in full, and in its proper place.—EDITOR.]

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths :

GIACOMO OREFICE, at Milan, on December 22, in whom Italy has lost one of her foremost musicians. Born at Vicenza, in 1865, Orefice studied at Bologna under Mancinelli, and at twenty published his first work, L'Oasi. Ten years later he won the Baruzzi prize at Bologna with Il Gladiatore, and in 1901 wrote an opera, Chopin, on themes of the Polish author. His chief work, Mosé, was written twenty years ago. Besides his works for the theatre, Orefice composed numerous symphonic and chamber compositions.

As a teacher he created a 'school' in the Verdi Conservatory at Milan, and was also well-known as the musical critic of the Secolo. Orefice was an artist with whom many had to differ as regards technique, expression, and even intrinsic values, but who none the less was a scholar, and a fearless apostle of what he believed to be good and true in music.

(It may not inappropriately be pointed out that Orefice is not to be confounded with Signor Refice, a living and foremost Italian musician, who is maestro of the Libreria basilica at Rome, and to whom rumour points as the successor of Dom. Perosi at the Sistine.)

PATRICK JOSEPH GRIFFITH, at Cahra Road, Dublin, in his sixty-third year, on January 27. Born at Kilsheelan, Co. Waterford, in 1860, he was a resident of Dublin since 1874. During forty years he was a noted violinist, excelling in chamber music, and as a professor he was in great request. During a quarter of a century he was the reliable leader of the orchestra of the old Dublin Musical Society. He was also the secretary of the Charitable Musical Society, or the Irish Musical Fund, founded in 1787, and incorporated by Act of Parliament in 1794, and which is still flourishing—after a hundred and thirty-six years.

ARTHUR HUGH MELVIN PEAT, priest-organist and choirmaster of St. Peter's, Clapham, from October, 1913, till January last. He was born on November 9, 1887, and very early took up the study of the organ. In addition to being a skilful soloist, he was one of the very best of plainsong accompanists, and a successful choir trainer.

In our obituary for February we stated that the late OSCAR STREET played the oboe. This was a slip; he was a clarinetist.

Miscellaneous

THE GRESHAM LECTURES

The lectures for this term were given by Prof. Sir Frederick Bridge on February 13-16. The Byrd Tercentenary was the subject of the first, the illustrations comprising four of the Motets recently edited by the lecturer, some Madrigals, and the beautiful Variations for clavier on O mistress mine, from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book. The Tercentenary of Weelkes was the subject of the second lecture. The most popular of the illustrations was the delightful 'Humorous Fancy of the Cries of London.' The third lecture was on Locke's opera Psyche, a work of great dramatic interest. For the fourth lecture the subject was 'The Development of the Violin Solo,' with illustrations played by Mr. Jeffrey Pulver.

The Oxford Bach Choir and the Cambridge University Musical Society, with their orchestras, join forces at the Royal Albert Hall on March 14, at 3.0, in a programme consisting of Beethoven's Mass in D, Vaughan Williams's Towards the Unknown Region, Parry's English Suite, and Cyril Rootham's Brown Earth. The conductors are Sir Hugh Allen, Dr. Cyril Rootham, and Mr. Maurice Besly.

A concert performance of Parsifal will be given at Goldsmiths' College, New Cross, on March 24, at 7.30, by the South London Philharmonic Society. By way of preparation of the listeners, Mr. William Kerridge, the conductor, is lecturing on the opera at Deptford Town Hall on March 15, and at Greenwich Central Library on March 21.

Elgar's King Olaf and Parry's Blest Pair of Sirens will be performed at the People's Palace, Mile End Road, on March 3, at 7.30, by the People's Palace Choral and Orchestral Societies, three hundred strong. The soloists are Miss Dorothy Robson, Mr. John Adams, and Mr. Howard Fry, and the conductor Mr. Frank Idle.

Dulwich Music Club, an organization under the new Federation of Music Clubs, gave its first concert on February 5, with Miss Jelly d'Aranyi and Mrs. Ethel Hobday as artists. A season of four concerts has been arranged.

The Golden Legend was performed at the Wesleyan Central Hall, Plumstead, on February 3, by a chorus and orchestra under the direction of Mr. W. Wilson.

Music at Kingston-on-Thames has recently included a three-day Beethoven Festival by the Kingston String Quartet; St. Paul, by St. Luke's Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Alexander Griffin; and Hiawatha, by the Kingston, Surbiton, and District Musical Society, which Mr. Ronald Dussek conducts.

Bromley Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Frederic Fertil, gave unaccompanied music on January 30. This included Elgar's Go, song of mine and Weary wind of the West, and examples of Ford, Morley, and Byrd.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

FLETCHER, PERCY E.—"The Passion of Christ."

A Short Sacred Cantata. 1st Violin, 2s. 3d.; 2nd Violin, 2s. 3d.; Viola, 3s.; Violoncello, 2s. 3d.; Bass, 2s. 3d.

GERMAN, EDWARD.—Fantasia on March Themes. (No. 64, Organ Arrangements edited by JOHN E. WEST.) 3s.

GRANT, LOUISA H.—"Oh! dear Heart." Song. For Medium Voice. 1s. 6d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 369, contains the following music in both notations. — "Violets." Unison Song. By GEORGE RATHBONE. 2d.

SHAW, GEOFFREY.—"He wants not friends that hath Thy love." Anthem for General Use. (No. 1102, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2406. "The many rend the skies." Chorus from "Alexander's Feast."

HANDEL 3d.

No. 2407. "What saith my dainty darling."

Ballet. THOMAS MORLEY 3d.

No. 2408. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel."

Anthem. H. SMART 2d.

No. 2409. "Like as a Father." Anthem.

G. C. MARTIN 2d.

No. 2410. "Gather ye rosebuds." Part-Song.

JOHN POINTER 3d.

TOWNSEND, J.—"Dreaming." Song. For Soprano or Tenor. 2s.

WOLSTENHOLME, W.—"Now if Christ be preached." Easter Anthem. (No. 961, The Musical Times.) 2d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

CANDLYN, T. F. H.—"Ride on! ride on! in majesty." Anthem. 15 cents (8d.).

GILBERT, HENRY F.—"The Dance in Place Congo." Symphonic Poem. Full Score, $10 (£2 2s.).

JAMES, PHILIP.—"The Nun." Cantata for Women's Voices. 50 cents (2s.).

— "A Song of the Future." For Double Chorus. 25 cents (1s.).

KENNEDY, DION W.—"A Song of Consecration." Sacred Song for High Voice. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

VIBBARD, H. L.—"How beautiful upon the mountains." Anthem. 15 cents (8d.).

ST. PETER'S, Cranley Gardens, S.W.7. TENOR and BASS WANTED. Good readers essential. For particulars, apply, stating qualifications, to the Choirmaster, 32, Halsey Street, S.W.3.

WEST ACTON PARISH CHURCH.—TENOR (paid) WANTED at once. Good sight-reader and communicant essential. Vicar, St. Martin's Vicarage, West Acton, W.3.

ORGANIST, willing to Deputise or Accompany Special Music at Short Notice. Miss Lilian Trott, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., 7, Queen's Road, Wimbledon, S.W.19. Telephone: Wimbledon, 2373.

FOR SALE.—ÆOLIAN ORCHESTRELLE (Player-Organ), Model S. New condition. Accept £150. Can be seen by appointment. Butcher, Pagoda, Blackheath, S.E.

VIOLIN FOR SALE.—Full size. Genuine instrument, by J. B. Vuillaume. Apply, "X," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

HALF-PRICE.—Bell Two-Manual Pedal Organ. 23 Stops, Scribner Tubes. Also, BROADWOOD GRAND, like new. "J," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

THE BECHSTEIN PIANO needs little recommendation to cultured tastes. Its beautiful tone and incomparable touch—qualities which have gained for it the esteem of every music-lover, and have set a standard to the world—are as exquisite and as characteristic as ever.

Write or call for Catalogue.

126, NEW BOND STREET

LONDON, W. 1.

TELEPHONE: GERRARD 2653.

STEINWAY

MUSIC LOVERS
CAN OBTAIN
PERFECT RESULTS
ONLY FROM THE PERFECT INSTRUMENT
THE STEINWAY.

15-17, LOWER SEYMOUR STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

MOLLENHAUER FLUTES AND PICCOLOS

MESSRS. J. MOLLENHAUER & SONS possess a hundred years' world-wide reputation as makers of first-class Wood-Wind Instruments. Their Flutes and Piccolos are unrivalled in purity of tone, pleasing intonation, and solidity of mechanism, and are consequently used by the leading artists in every land.

Catalogue from—

FAUPEL BROTHERS,
4 & 5, OLD CHANGE, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.4.

Telephone: City 5693.

NEW MUSIC FOR STRINGS.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE.

EDGAR BARRATT. Price net. s. d.

HEBRIDEAN LEGEND 2 6

A melodious and atmospheric tone-poem of moderate length, by the composer of the celebrated CORONACH. Encored at every performance so far given.

ERIC FOGG.

CAPRICE 2 0

Lively and dainty, in the Scherzo style. Contains some effective double-stopping, which may however be omitted if desired.

EDWARD MACDOWELL.

LONG AGO (from Four Songs, Op. 56) 2 0

One of MacDowell's most exquisite little melodies, transcribed by A. WALTER KRAMER.

CYRIL SCOTT—KREISLER.

LOTUS LAND 2 6

A famous pianoforte piece transcribed by the world's master violinist. Played by him with immense success throughout his recent tour in England.

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE.

ERIC FOGG. Price net. s. d.

POEM 3 6

There are very few really interesting and well-written pieces of moderate length for 'cello and piano. This 'Poem' therefore fills a very definite need. It is full of character, and admirably written from the soloist's point of view.

CYRIL SCOTT.

VESPERALE 2 0

The tranquil melody of this well-known piece is perfectly suited to the 'cello tone. The transcription is by the well-known 'cellist, BORIS HAMBURG.

ELKIN & CO.'S PIANO AND STRINGS SERIES.

(Piano, Two Violins, 'Cello, Double Bass optional.)

LATEST ADDITIONS.

No. 12. CORONACH Edgar Barratt

13. TWO EASTERN SONGS Agnes Mary Lang

14. MOONLIGHT ON THE LAKE Roger Quilter

Price each, 2s. net.

Complete list of the series post free on application.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

PIANOS

GRAND and
UPRIGHT

By High Grade Makers.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND FOR SALE OR HIRE PURCHASE.

CHAS. STILES & CO.

74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW,
LONDON, W.C.1.

Phone: MUSEUM 439.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address, 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy descriptive Song, "THE VOICE OF THE DEEP" (Oakley). Compass G (or low E flat) to E flat. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

TENOR VOCALISTS should buy Song, "Fairer THAN THE FAIREST FAIR," (Oakley). Compass, C to A. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

"MUSICAL TIMES," 1921 and 1922, FOR SALE. Offers to Miss Rothwell, Rockfield, Kells, Co. Meath, Ireland.

DEGREES IN MUSIC.

EXPERT AND INDIVIDUAL TUITION
BY CORRESPONDENCE

FOR

Oxford Preliminary Arts, Durham Matriculation,
A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O., Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc.

Also for B.A. and B.Sc.

The Staff includes highly qualified Graduates in Music, Arts, and Science.

For Terms address:

MR. J. CHARLESTON, B.A. (Hons. Oxon. and Lond.),
14, Elsham Road, Kensington, W.14.

MILGROM'S PIANOS.

VERTICALS AND OVERSTRUNGS.

FROM 25 GUINEAS.

TRADE SUPPLIED.

Particulars from MILGROM'S CONCERT DIRECTION,
317, Regent Street, W. 'Phone: Langham 2714.
Factory: 28-30, Mile End Road. 'Phone: East 4965.

ROLAND WEDDELL

TENOR.

Oratorios, Concerts, &c.

Vacant dates in Lent Week.

35, Cavendish Road, Hishams Park, E.4.

LEONARD SALISBURY (A.R.C.M.)

Founder and Basso of "The Gresham Singers,"

Gives Lessons in Voice-Culture and Singing.

'Phone or write, 3, Uffington Road, S.E.27.

Tele: Streatham 2525.

HENRY M. BYRON, Concert Director, Established 1890, will shortly visit Scotland. Unknown talent write for appointment to interview. Address, 75, Church Road, Leyton, London.

ACCOMPANIST.—Lady DESIRES PRACTICE with Vocalist, Violinist, or 'Cellist for mutual benefit. "Practice," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TENOR VOCALIST, Pianist, and Accompanist, good appearance and address, whose experience includes training in voice production by well-known teacher, desires position as teacher of singing. Whole or part time. "C. F.," 39, St. George's Road, Palmer's Green, N.13.

ORGANIST & CHOIRMASTER, fully qualified, wanted for St. Paul's Parish Church, North Shore, Blackpool. Important post, wide scope for capable man. Fine organ. Communicant. Commencing salary, £50. Apply, Rev. H. C. Parslew, The Vicarage.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST WANTED for well-known church, N.W. district. Experience with choir training, and use of 3-manual electric organ. Write, "Organist," 157, Archway Road, N.6.

FOR SALE.—Chappell Bijou GRAND PIANO-FORTE. New condition. £130, or near offer. 3, Belle Vue, Weymouth.

FOR SALE.—Modern Musical TEXT-BOOKS. Also GROVE'S DICTIONARY. Returnable list from 3, Belle Vue, Weymouth.

FOR SALE.—ROSEWOOD KNABE GRAND. Perfect touch. 3 Pedals. Suitable for Hall. £100. Wilmot, Dingwall Road, Croydon.

FOR SALE.—AMERICAN ORGAN. In splendid condition. 11 Stops. Walnut Case. £14. Also, GUITAR, hardly used, in Case, and Music. £3 5s. Miss Gage, 21, College Avenue, Slough.

ORGAN PEDALS for Piano. Makers, Norman & Beard. With Stool, £16. Brown, 51, John Street, Montrose, N.B.

ORGAN.—ANTIQUE ORGAN FOR SALE. Moon, Library, Leyton, E.10.

WANTED.—Mustel, Apollo, Holt, or Mason & Hamlin Organ, two or three manuals. Write details, "J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

REDUCE YOUR MUSIC EXPENDITURE.

It's an old saw "A stitch in time,"—but here stitching is quite unnecessary.

A strong, stiff, brown paper cover, into the centre of which two strips of adhesive linen are fixed on opposite sides, each having a number of tabs attached.

It doesn't matter how old your music is, just take each separated sheet, place it in the cover, and allot a few ALTERNATE tabs to it, stick them down, and these, working from the centre, provide a perfect hinge allowing each sheet to lie quite flat.

Now write the title on the label provided outside the cover, and you will have no need to renew your music.

Simple, isn't it?—but effective.

(PATENT APPLIED FOR).

Octavo, 2d. each. Quarto, 3d. each.
Full Folio Size, 4d. each.

Trade and Profession supplied.

"BINDERS,"

CAMBRIDGE WORKS, BEDFORD ROAD, EAST FINCHLEY.

TEACHERS' PROBLEMS.

If you have a backward pupil, a peculiar difficulty in technique, or are uncertain what to give a particular student, let THE MUSIC TEACHER guide you.

If you have got into a professional rut, or find drudgery in teaching, THE MUSIC TEACHER will give you a new vision and expert counsel.

Every year hundreds of teachers bring their individual problems to THE MUSIC TEACHER, and obtain the advice of the greatest authorities in the land.

PIANO TEACHING.

THE MUSIC TEACHER shows how to tackle problems in piano teaching and interpretation, and how to deal with this-or-that type of pupil.

It gives a monthly graded list of the best new piano music for teaching.

It solves the problems of piano teachers who are faced with special difficulties.

EXAMINATION PREPARATION.

THE MUSIC TEACHER gives expert advice to those who are entering their pupils for the leading examinations, or who are studying for degrees or diplomas themselves.

SINGING.

THE MUSIC TEACHER contains valuable articles on the training of the voice, and the teaching of vocal interpretation. It provides a monthly list of the best new songs, and it gives expert advice to readers who have vocal problems of every kind.

CLASS WORK.

THE MUSIC TEACHER contains articles on the training of School and Church Choirs, and on conducting appreciation classes. It gives lists of new and suitable school songs and choral works, gramophone records, &c.

FREE SPECIMEN COPY.

To The Manager, "THE MUSIC TEACHER," Montague House, Russell Square, London, W.C.1.

Please send me a free specimen copy of "THE MUSIC TEACHER," as mentioned in the "Musical Times" for March.

Name (Mr., Mrs., or Miss).....

Address.....

CANTATAS, &c., BY J. S. BACH

IN THE
WELSH LANGUAGE.

JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE
(JESU DYRCHAFEDIG)

MOTET

WELSH TRANSLATION

BY

REV. GWILYM WILLIAMS, B.A.

Price Two Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

BIDE WITH US

(AROS DI GYDA NI)

CANTATA

WELSH TRANSLATION

BY

REV. GWILYM WILLIAMS, B.A.

Price Two Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

JUST PUBLISHED.

GOD'S TIME IS THE BEST

(AMSER DUW—GOREU YW)

CANTATA

WELSH TRANSLATION

BY

REV. GWILYM WILLIAMS, B.A.

Price Two Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY.

SACRED MOTETS OR ANTHEMS

FOR FOUR AND FIVE VOICES

BY WILLIAM BYRDE,

AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES.

IN ONE VOLUME.

EDITED BY SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE,

C.V.O., M.A., MUS.D.

Price - Four Shillings.

CONTENTS.

1. BE UNTO ME, O LORD, A TOWER OF STRENGTH	William Byrde
2. IN THE DEPARTURE OF THE LORD	Dr. Bull
3. LOOKE DOWNE, O LORD	William Byrde
4. AN HEART THAT'S BROKEN AND CONTRITE ...	John Dowland
5. O LORD, TURN NOT THY FACE FROM ME ...	John Wilbye
6. O LORD, HOW DOE MY WOES ENCREASE ...	Orlando Gibbons
7. I'LE LIE ME DOWNE TO SLEEPE IN PEACE ...	G. Coperario
8. I LAID ME DOWN TO REST	William Byrde
9. NOT UNTO US	Thomas Ford
10. O GOD, THE ROCK OF MY WHOLE STRENGTH...	John Wilbye
11. HIGH, MIGHTY GOD	Francis Pilkington
12. O LORD, CONSIDER MY COMPLAINT	John Warde
13. COME, COME, HELP, O GOD	William Byrde
14. IN DEATH NO MAN REMEMBERETH THEE ...	A Ferabosco

Nos. 4, 5 and 13 may be had separately.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s. d.
72. LAMENT	J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
73. ELEGIAC PRELUDE	G. J. Bennett	2 3
74. CRADLE SONG	R. G. Hailing	1 6
75. CHORALE FANTASIA ON "HEINLEIN"	J. E. Wallace	3 0
76. TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer")	C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
77. ANDANTE RELIGIOSO	Alec Rowley	1 6
78. SCHERZO	G. J. Bennett	2 3
79. THREE PRELUDES	G. J. Bennett	2 3
80. DÉSESPOIR	Ch. Quef	1 6
81. CAPRICE IN D FLAT	J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
82. THREE PSALM-PRELUDES, No. 1	H. Howells	1 6
83. " " " No. 2	H. Howells	1 6
84. " " " No. 3	H. Howells	1 6
85. THEMA OSTINATA... ..	C. C. Palmer	1 6
86. COVENANTERS' MARCH	R. G. Hailing	1 6
87. CHORAL MELODY... ..	C. F. Waters	1 6
88. CONCERT OVERTURE IN F MINOR	Alfred Hollins	3 0
89. HOMAGE TO HANDEL	S. Karg-Elert	3 6
90. THREE SHORT AND EASY POSTLUDES (2nd Set)	F. W. Wadely	2 3

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

CATHEDRAL ORGANISTS

PAST AND PRESENT.

A RECORD OF THE SUCCESSION OF ORGANISTS

OF THE

Cathedrals, Chapels Royal, and Principal Collegiate
Churches of the United Kingdom,
from about the period of the Reformation until the present day.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES, EXTRACTS FROM THE
CHAPTER BOOKS, ANECDOTES, Etc

By JOHN E. WEST.

Price ... Nine Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR LENT.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Edited by EDWARD ELGAR and IVOR ATKINS. 5s.; paper boards, 7s.; cloth, gilt, 9s. Vocal Parts, 2s. each. Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 19s. per 100.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. 4s.; paper boards, 6s. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. Words only, 19s. per 100.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Abridged, as used at St. Paul's Cathedral, 3s.; paper boards, 5s. Book of Words, with Music to the Chorales, 8d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. John.) J. S. BACH. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST. G. F. HANDEL. 6s.; paper boards, 8s.; cloth, gilt, 10s. Abridged edition for Church use, 2s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) J. HAYDN. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) CH. GOUNOD. 2s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ("Der Tod Jesu"). C. H. GRAUN. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 8s. Choruses only, 2s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. H. SCHÜTZ. 2s.

PASSION MUSIC (from the Oratorio "St. Peter"). By SIR JULIUS BENEDICT. 3s.

OUT OF DARKNESS. (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. GEORGE HENSELUS (Op. 30). 5s.

OUT OF DARKNESS (De Profundis). (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Composed by CH. GOUNOD. English or Latin words. 2s.

ZION'S WAYS DO LANGUAGE. Soprano Solo and Chorus, from "Gallia" (Motet). CH. GOUNOD. 2s. Tonic Sol-fa, 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, &c., as sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, preceding Bach's Passion on Tuesday in Holy Week. Arranged by J. STAINER. 4d. Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The Music composed by J. BARNEY. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Set to the well-known Ancient Chant, as arranged and harmonised by VINCENT NOVELLO. Price 3d.; Ditto, Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. (Chant Setting.) The Music composed by EDGAR PETTMAN. Price 2d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by GREGORIO ALLEGRI. As used at St. Paul's Cathedral Lenten Services. Edited by GEORGE C. MARTIN. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by G. P. DA PALESTRINA. Edited by W. BARCLAY SQUIRE. Latin and English words. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F sharp minor. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words, 3d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. A simple Unison Arrangement with Organ Accompaniment, 1½d. *Orchestral Parts of the works marked * can be had.*

THE STORY OF THE CROSS

FOR VOICES AND ORGAN

With Short Interludes, giving opportunity for Meditation.

THE WORDS BY

THE REV. E. MONRO

SET TO MUSIC BY

BUTTON, H. ELLIOT	3d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	4d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	4d.
SOMERVELL, ARTHUR (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	4d.
STAINER, J. (Sol-fa, 1½d.) (also with Welsh words)	4d.

Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100.

Large Type Edition, 2s. 6d. per 100.

THE REPROACHES

SET TO MUSIC BY

DYKES, REV. J. B.	4d.
GOUNOD, CH.	3d.
HOVEY, W. S.	6d.
PALESTRINA (together with the proper plain-chant melodies)	6d.
(Edited by W. S. Vale)	6d.
SPENCE, REV. H. (for singing in Unison or Harmony)	2d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (Double Choir) (unaccompanied)	4d.

THE BENEDICTITE

SET TO MUSIC BY THE FOLLOWING COMPOSERS.

ADLAM, FRANK (in F, Chant Form)	2d.
BAIRSTOW, E. C. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter)	4d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in E flat)	2d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in G)	2d.
BENNETT, GEORGE J. (in D, Unison)	4d.
BEST, W. T. (in C) (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	4d.
BLAIR, HUGH (in G)	2d.
BRIDGE, J. F., JAMES TURLE, and HAVES	2d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT (in D)	2d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT (Shortened Form)	2d.
COBB, G. F. (in G)	3d.
COULDREY, H. R. (Chant in G)	4d.
COULDREY, H. R. (in D, Chant Form)	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	3d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)	6d.
ELLIOTT, M. B. (in G)	2d.
ELLIOTT, R. B. (in G)	2d.
EYRE, ALFRED J. (in E flat)	3d.
EYRE, ALFRED J. (No. 2, in F)	2d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (in F, Chant Form)	6d.
FROST, PERCY H. (in D)	3d.
GADSBY, HENRY (in G, Chant Form)	2d.
GALE, C. R. (in D)	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in C, Chant Form)	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in G, Unison)	2d.
GODFREY, A. E. (in C)	4d.
GODFREY, A. E. (No. 2, in G)	4d.
H. B. C. (Three Chants)	2d.
HERVEY, F. A. J. (in A flat, Chant Form)	2d.
HOVEY, W. S. (in E flat)	2d.
HOVEY, W. S. (in D)	2d.
HUGHES, W. (in E flat)	2d.
LIFFE, FREDERICK (No. 1, in E flat, Chant Form)	4d.
LEMARE, E. H. (in B flat)	2d.
LLOYD, C. HARFORD (in E flat, Chant Form)	3d.
LUCAS, P. T. (in A flat, shortened form)	2d.
MACPHERSON, CHARLES (in F, rhythmic setting)	6d.
MARTIN, G. C. (No. 1, in F; No. 2, in E flat; No. 3, in G) each	6d.
MATTHEWS, T. R. (in E flat)	2d.
MERBECKE (arranged by GEORGE C. MARTIN)	3d.
MILLER, C. E. (second setting) (in G, Chant Form)	3d.
PETTMAN, EDGAR (No. 1, in C; No. 2, set to Double Chants)	3d.
PETTMAN, EDGAR (in E flat)	2d.
PULLEIN, J. (in E flat)	1½d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (in B flat)	6d.
SLATER, W. (in F)	2d.
SMITH, BOYTON (in A flat)	2d.
SMITH, CHAS. W. (in C). S.A.T.T.B., also simplified for S.A.T.B.	3d.
STAINER, J., and B. BLAXLAND (in F, Chant Form)	2d.
STAINER, J., R. DE LACY, A. GIBBS, and F. CHAMPNEYS	2d.
STAINER, J., W. WINN, and F. WALKER	2d.
Ditto (Welsh words). (Sol-fa, 1½d.)	2d.
STAINER, J., J. TURLE, and H. S. IRONS	3d.
STAINER, J. (in D, Chant Form)	2d.
STEWART, C. HYLTON (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter)	4d.
BARNBY, J.
FOSTER, JOHN
SMITH, MONTEM (two settings)	2d.
TURLE, J. (two settings)
WICKES, C. A. (two settings)
TOZER, FERRIS (in G)	3d.
TOZER, FERRIS (in A). Short and simple	3d.
WEST, JOHN E. (in G)	6d.
WEST, JOHN E. (in C)	2d.
WESTBURY, G. H. (in C)	2d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (in D) (Shortened Form)	2d.
WOOD, W. G. (in D)	2d.
WRIGLEY, G. F. (in G, Quadruple Chant)	2d.

THE OFFICE OF "TENEBRÆ"

AND

DIRECTIONS FOR SINGING

"THE PASSION"

FOR USE IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND

EDITED BY

CYRIL W. MILLER.

Price Two Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

A SHORT SACRED CANTATA

FOR LENTEN OR EASTER SERVICES, OR FOR GENERAL USE.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

MARY BRADFORD WHITING

(AFTER METASTASIO.)

THE MUSIC COMPOSED FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS, WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER

PRICE - - - THREE SHILLINGS.

Paper Boards, 5s. ; Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. ; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

String Parts, 12s. ; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PENITENCE

PARDON AND PEACE

J. H. MAUNDER.

COMPOSITIONS BY

ALBERT HAM, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.

"The Solitudes of the Passion"

A PASSIONTIDE CANTATA

For Solo Voices (Tenor and Baritone) and Chorus
With Hymns for Choir and Congregation.

Price 2s. 6d.

Musical Times: "A useful addition to the store of Choral Works for use in Lent and Passiontide, is Dr. Albert Ham's Cantata, 'The Solitudes of the Passion.' The words are Biblical and well-selected. The music is devotional and very singable."

SECOND EDITION.

THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY HARMONY

Price Five Shillings.

Extract from Musical Times, July, 1921:

"Dr. Albert Ham, a well-known English musician, who has for some years past figured prominently in the musical life of Toronto, Canada, has issued under one cover 'The Rudiments of Music and Elementary Harmony' (Novello). The plan and arrangement of the various sections differ in some respects from many other text-books, and the author 'has striven to deal particularly with those special points which, in his many years of teaching, he has found to be the bête noir of most students.' As a result the chapters on Time and Intervals will be found especially helpful. An Addendum gives some useful hints and suggestions on adding bar-lines and time- and key-signatures to a given melody. The section on Harmony takes the student as far as the dominant seventh, and includes chapters on modulation and the harmonization of simple melodies. Some useful test-papers are also provided. Dr. Ham's admirable little work may be cordially recommended."

Part-Song for S.A.T.B. Price 3d.

"MUSIC, WHEN SOFT VOICES DIE."

Words by SHELLEY.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."

Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."

Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."

Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing."

Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.

Paper boards, 3s. ; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d. ; Words, 4s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tubb, 34, Percy Street, W. 1.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

LARGE QUANTITY OF ORGAN MUSIC FOR SALE. Cheap. For lists write, "E. G. H.," 27, Lombard Street, Newark, Notts.

EASTER ANTHEMS.

*Above all praise and all majesty	Mendelssohn	2d.	*Know ye not	Edward C. Bairstow	2d.
*Alleluia! now is Christ risen	T. Adams	4d.	Let God arise	M. Greene	8d.
*Alleluia! the Lord liveth	Cuthbert Harris	4d.	Light's glittering morn	John E. West	6d.
*All hail, dear Conqueror	T. Adams	2d.	Lord, before Thy footstool bending	Spohr	4d.
*All men, all things	Mendelssohn	3d.	Lord Christ! when Thou hast overcome	Haydn	2d.
*As Christ was raised	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	*Lord, Thy arm hath been uplifted	Spohr	3d.
*As Christ was raised	H. W. Wareing	4d.	Lo! the winter is past	*B. Farebrother and H. Gadsby, ea.	4d.
*As it began to dawn	M. B. Foster	2d.	Lo! the winter is past	B. Luard-Selby	2d.
*As Moses lifted up the serpent	C. Vincent	4d.	Magnify His Name	G. C. Martin	6d.
As we have borne	F. Gostelow	2d.	Morn's roseate hues	G. W. Chadwick	6d.
*At the Lamb's high feast	J. Barnby	2d.	*Most glorious Lord of Life	John E. West	2d.
At the Sepulchre	E. V. Hall	4d.	*My beloved is mine	R. Walker Robson	4d.
*Awake, awake, with holy rapture sing	H. W. Wareing	6d.	My beloved spake	H. Purcell	8d.
*Awake, thou that sleepest	John E. West	4d.	My heart is fixed, O God	W. A. C. Cruickshank	6d.
Awake up, my glory	J. Stainer	8d.	My heart was glad	A. Carnall	6d.
Awake up, my glory	*J. Barnby and B. Haynes, ea.	4d.	Not unto us, O Lord	H. Gadsby	8d.
Awake up, my glory	F. Eliffe	3d.	*Not unto us, O Lord	T. A. Walmisley	2d.
*Be glad, O ye righteous	M. Wise	4d.	Not unto us, O Lord	John E. West	6d.
*Be glad then, ye children	H. Smart	6d.	*Now dawning glows the day of days	David Stanley Smith	2d.
*Behold, the Angel of the Lord	Alfred Hollins	2d.	*Now Christ is risen	G. B. Allen and John E. West, ea.	2d.
*Behold the Lamb—All glory to the Lamb	B. Tours	2d.	Now is come Salvation	Percy E. Fletcher	4d.
*Blessed be the God and Father	S. S. Wesley	3d.	*Now late on the Sabbath Day	S. Coleridge-Taylor	4d.
*Blessed be Thou	Kent	6d.	*Now on the first day of the week	H. Lahee	2d.
Blessing and glory	Boyce	2d.	O clap your hands	M. Greene	6d.
Blessing, glory	B. Tours	6d.	O clap your hands	J. Stainer	8d.
*Break forth into joy	J. Barnby	2d.	O clap your hands (s.s.a.)	E. H. Thorne	8d.
*Break forth into joy	T. R. Prentice	8d.	O clap your hands	T. T. Trimmell	4d.
*Break forth into joy	B. Steane	4d.	*O come, let us sing	M. B. Foster	4d.
*Christ being raised from the dead	G. J. Elvey	2d.	*O death, where is thy sting?	A. Herbert Brewer	2d.
Christ being raised from the dead	S. Webbe	2d.	*O death, where is thy sting?	Alfred Hollins	6d.
Christ both died and rose	E. W. Naylor	4d.	*O give thanks	J. Goss	4d.
Christ is risen	J. M. Crament and G. B. J. Aitken, ea.	4d.	O give thanks	S. S. Wesley	6d.
*Christ is risen	G. J. Elvey	2d.	O give thanks to the Lord	H. J. King	4d.
Christ is risen	Warwick Jordan	6d.	*O give thanks unto the Lord	W. Wolstenholme	2d.
*Christ is risen	E. H. Thorne	2d.	O Lord, from Whom all good things do come	John E. West	3d.
*Christ is risen	J. V. Roberts and E. A. Sydenham, ea.	4d.	*O sing unto the Lord	J. Varley Roberts	4d.
*Christ our Passover	J. Goss and O. King, ea.	2d.	*O Sons and Daughters, let us sing	H. A. Chambers	2d.
*Christ our Passover	E. V. Hall	4d.	*O voice of the Beloved	Henry John King	4d.
*Christ our Passover	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	*On the first day of the week	E. M. Lott	2d.
*Christ our Passover	B. Tours	2d.	*Open me the gates of righteousness	Myles B. Foster	2d.
*Christ the Lord is risen again	E. V. Hall	6d.	*Praise His awful Name	F. Adlam	6d.
*Christ the Lord is risen to-day	E. V. Hall	4d.	Praise Jehovah	Spohr	3d.
*Christ was delivered for our offences	C. H. Lloyd	2d.	Praise the Lord, ye servants	Mendelssohn	4d.
*Come, let us join our cheerful songs	E. V. Hall	4d.	Rejoice in the Lord	*J. B. Calkin and G. J. Elvey, ea.	2d.
*Come with high and holy gladness	Hugh Blair	4d.	Rejoice in the Lord	G. C. Martin	8d.
*Come, ye faithful, raise the anthem	E. V. Hall	4d.	*Sing praises unto the Lord	W. A. C. Cruickshank	2d.
*Come, ye faithful, raise the strain	E. V. Hall	4d.	*Sing praises unto the Lord	Ch. Gounod	8d.
*Come, ye Saints (S.A.T.B.)	H. Elliot Button	2d.	Sing to the Lord	Mendelssohn	10d.
*Come, ye Saints (Unison)	H. Elliot Button	4d.	*Sing ye to the Lord	E. C. Bairstow and C. Harford Lloyd, ea.	4d.
Death is swallowed up in victory	Alfred Hollins	4d.	*Ten thousand times ten thousand	E. Vine Hall	4d.
*Far be sorrow, tears, and sighing	E. V. Hall	4d.	Ten thousand times ten thousand	Ferris Tozer	6d.
For it became Him	Oliver King	2d.	Thanks be to God	J. W. Gritton and Oliver King, ea.	4d.
For us the Christ	Ch. Gounod	3d.	*The Day of Resurrection	E. Vine Hall	4d.
*From Thy love as a Father	Ch. Gounod	6d.	*The end of the Sabbath	A. Carnall	2d.
Give thanks unto God	Spohr	6d.	*The first day of the week	B. Steane	4d.
*God hath appointed a day	B. Tours	2d.	*The Lord hath brought us	E. H. Thorne	2d.
*God, Who is rich in mercy	G. M. Garrett	2d.	*The Lord hath done great things	H. Smart	6d.
*Great is the Lord	Hayes	6d.	*The Lord is King	J. Pittman	2d.
*Hallelujah!	Handel	3d.	*The Lord is King	T. T. Trimmell	6d.
*Hallelujah! Christ is risen	B. Steane	4d.	*The Lord is my strength	S. Coleridge-Taylor	4d.
Hearken unto Me	M. B. Foster	2d.	*The Lord is my strength	W. H. Monk and V. Novello, ea.	2d.
*He is risen	H. Gadsby	2d.	*The Lord is my strength	H. Smart	2d.
*He shall swallow up death in Victory	F. R. Greenish	4d.	*The Lord is risen	G. M. Garrett	6d.
He that spared not His own Son	F. E. Gladstone	2d.	*The Lord is risen again	B. Luard-Selby	4d.
He that spared not His Son	W. G. Alcock	4d.	*The Lord liveth	A. W. Marchant	4d.
He will swallow up death in Victory	Wesley	2d.	*The Lord omnipotent reigneth	Thomas Adams	4d.
I am He that liveth	T. Adams	6d.	The promise which was made	Ed. C. Bairstow	6d.
*I am the Resurrection	Roland Rogers	6d.	The strain upraise	A. Sullivan	2d.
I declare to you the Gospel	W. A. C. Cruickshank	6d.	*The strife is o'er, the battle done	B. Luard-Selby	2d.
If Christ be not raised	Charles Macpherson	6d.	The strife is o'er, the battle done	G. Rathbone	4d.
*If we believe that Jesus died	B. Luard-Selby and J. Goss, ea.	2d.	*The strife is o'er	B. Steane	4d.
If we believe that Jesus died	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	*They have taken away my Lord	J. Stainer	2d.
*If we believe that Jesus died	M. Vinden	6d.	*This is the day S. C. Cooke, Basil Harwood, & J. H. Maunders, ea.	4d.
*If ye then be risen with Christ	Ivor Atkins	6d.	*This is the day	E. H. Lemare and E. V. Hall, ea.	6d.
*If ye then be risen with Christ (Two-part)	M. B. Foster	2d.	*This is the day	G. A. Macfarren and *J. Sewell, ea.	3d.
*If ye then be risen with Christ	H. M. Higgs	2d.	*This is the day	A. W. Marchant	4d.
*If ye then be risen with Christ	J. Naylor	4d.	*This is the day	*J. H. Maunders and J. Turler, ea.	4d.
*If ye then be risen (Two-part)	F. W. Wadely	2d.	*'Tis the spring of souls to-day (Cantata)	E. H. Lemare is.	6d.
*I heard a great voice	G. F. Cobb	2d.	Upon the Paschal Victim bring	John E. West	2d.
*I will always give thanks	J. B. Calkin	2d.	*Upon the first day of the week	Myles B. Foster	2d.
*I will always give thanks	J. Clarke-Whitfield	4d.	When Christ, who is our life, shall appear	J. V. Roberts	3d.
I will extol Thee	C. M. Hudson	6d.	When my soul fainted within me	J. F. Bridge	2d.
*I will go unto the Altar of God	C. Harris	4d.	*When the Sabbath was past	M. B. Foster	2d.
I will greatly rejoice	W. A. C. Cruickshank	6d.	*Who is like unto Thee?	A. Sullivan	8d.
I will love Thee, O Lord	M. Kingstom	6d.	*Who shall roll us away the stone?	G. W. Torrance	2d.
I will magnify Thee	*J. B. Calkin and W. H. Bell, ea.	4d.	*Why rage fiercely the heathen?	Mendelssohn	8d.
I will magnify Thee	E. M. Lee	6d.	*Why seek ye the living?	*A. Hollins and A. Alexander, ea.	4d.
I will magnify Thee	B. Luard-Selby	2d.	*Why seek ye the living? (Two-part)	M. B. Foster	4d.
*I will mention	A. Sullivan	8d.	*Why seek ye the living?	E. J. Hopkins	2d.
I will sing of Thy power	M. Greene	6d.	Worthy the Lamb—Hallelujah!	F. Peel	6d.
*I will sing of Thy power	A. Sullivan	2d.	*Worthy is the Lamb	Crotch	4d.
*Jesus Christ is risen to-day	Alfred R. Gaul and Oliver King, ea.	6d.	*Worthy is the Lamb	J. F. Barnett	2d.
Jesus Christ is risen to-day	C. V. Stanford	4d.	Worthy is the Lamb	Handel	3d.
*Jesus lives	Myles B. Foster	4d.		E. H. Thorne	4d.

Anthems marked thus * to be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1st d., 2^d., and 3^d. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

EASTER MUSIC

For S.A.T.B., UNLESS OTHERWISE MARKED.

ANTHEMS, ETC. LENT.

Great Day of the Lord (S. Solo)	J. Stuart Archer	85244	3d.
O Saviour of the World (A.T.B.)	G. E. Ryley	85109	4d.
*Cross of Calvary (Passion)	A. Redhead	85177	2d.
*Passion of Jesus, The	Dr. Vincent	85030	4d.
*Teachings of the Cross	Dr. Vincent	85160	3d.

ANTHEMS, ETC. EASTER.

Alleluia! Alleluia!	Dr. Vincent	85016	3d.
Christ both died and rose	F. C. Woods	85161	4d.
Christ is Risen	B. Johnson	85190	2d.
Christ is Risen	Dr. Vincent	85104	4d.
I know that my Redeemer Lives	Dr. Vincent	85031	4d.
Now dawning glows the day	J. Stuart Archer	85245	3d.
*Resurrection Morn, The (S. Solo)	Dr. Vincent	85045	4d.
They have taken away my Lord	W. C. Filby	85113	4d.
To Thee and to Thy Christ (Short)	H. E. Watts	85194	3d.
Very Early in the Morning	Dr. Vincent	85017	4d.

* Words only also published.

Of all Music Dealers, or, if offer No. 17 is mentioned, post free from:

PAXTON'S LONDON: 22, HIGH STREET,
NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.2.

Send for complete Catalogue, (C 201), post free.

Any of the above may be seen through our "On Approval" Dept.

EARLY MORN AT THE SEPULCHRE.

EASTER ANTHEM

FOR BARITONE AND SOPRANO SOLI AND CHORUS.

BY
R. WALKER ROBSON.

Price Fourpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW PUBLICATIONS
IN THE YORK SERIES.

809. COMMUNION SERVICE, B minor ...	Arthur Henry Brown	6d.
813. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, B minor	Arthur Henry Brown	4d.
815. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, B flat	C. W. Parnell	6d.
816. LIGHT (S.A.T.B.) ...	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
817. TO MY LOVE (T.B.B.) ...	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
818. WHEN I AM DEAD (S.A.T.B.) ...	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
819. SAVE US, LORD, OR WE PERISH (S.A.T.B.)	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
820. Ditto (T.B.B.)	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
821. BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD (S.A.T.B.)	T. Tertius Noble	5d.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

FOR PASSION WEEK.

CHORALE.

REX SÆCULORUM

O WONDROUS LOVE.

(Crüger.)

FOR CHOIR.

Arranged, with independent Organ Accompaniment, by THEODOR L. CLEMENS.

Price Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOR CHOIR FESTIVALS.

THREE SELECTED TUNES

(TO WELL-KNOWN CHURCH HYMNS),

BY J. J. JONES,

Writer of "March of the Sea-King" (Curwen's Orchestral Series), &c.

Price 3d. For terms for Festival Service Books, apply, Composer,
c/o Publishers,

NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, London, W.I.

JOHN BLACKBURN, LTD.,

(ESTABLISHED 1885).

PUBLISHERS OF CHURCH MUSIC,

Invite Composers to submit MSS. of

SACRED CANTATAS, ANTHEMS, or GLEES.

Prompt payments for those accepted.

Stamps must be enclosed to cover return postage in case of MSS.
being unsuitable.

JOHN BLACKBURN, LTD.,

The Great Yorkshire Music Publishers,

188, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

ORGAN MUSIC

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

No.		s.	d.
1.	DITHYRAMB ...	2	6
2.	COMMUNION ...	1	0
3.	INTERLUDE ...	1	6
4.	PÆAN ...	3	6
5.	SHORT POSTLUDE ...	1	0
6.	REQUIEM ÆTERNAM ...	2	3
7.	ANDANTE TRANQUILLO ...	1	6
8.	CAPRICCIO ...	2	6
9.	TWO SKETCHES ...	1	6
10.	CONCERTO IN D MAJOR ...	3	0
11.	THREE CATHEDRAL PRELUDES ...	3	0
12.	SONATA No. 2, IN F SHARP MINOR ...	3	0
13.	FANTASIA "CHRISTMASTIDE" ...	3	6
14.	RHAPSODY ...	3	0

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

AN ORGAN METHOD

TWENTY-FOUR ORGAN LESSONS,

BY DR. HERBERT BOTTING.

THIS Book contains all that is essential for a student to learn Organ Technique in the briefest form possible, consistent with thoroughness. Each "Lesson" contains sufficient work for a week's practice, for a pupil of average industry and ability. This arrangement will facilitate the teacher's work.

PRICE

4/-

NET.

The majority of the 24 Lessons are divided into three sections:—(a) Manual alone, (b) Pedals alone, (c) Manuals and Pedals together; every pedal exercise being immediately followed by a study for hands and feet together, with further practice in the same kind of pedalling. This will give variety and interest to the student's work.

The "Definitions," the description of an ordinary Three-Manual Organ, "Abbreviations Explained," and "Hints upon Registering," will be useful for instruction and reference, and it is hoped that the "Twelve Common-Sense Suggestions to Young Deputy-Organists" will prove of assistance.

Of all Music Dealers, or, if offer No. 17 is mentioned, post free from:

PAXTON'S LONDON: 22, HIGH STREET,
NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.2.

Send for complete Organ Catalogue, (501), post free.

Ask to see a copy through our "On Approval" Department.

THE COMPLETE ORGANIST

A Series of Three-stave Organ Albums, containing popular pieces—grave and gay, and generally of a light nature. These albums are intended to appeal to the Cinema and Recital Organist requiring Solos of a popular nature. Church Organists will also find many useful pieces.

EDITED AND ARRANGED BY

J. STUART ARCHER.

General Grading—Easy to Moderately Difficult.

VOL. I. (No. 22,165).—CONTENTS:

Comrades All (March), R. Harcourt; Intermezzo, J. Stuart Archer; Lode Star, H. J. Stafford; Melodie d'Amour, Engelmann; Prelude, Pachulski.

VOL. II. (No. 22,166).—CONTENTS:

Poet and Peasant (Overture), Suppé; The Roses Speak of You, (Song), L. J. Fontaine; Valsette, L. Anthony; Granny's Story, Tchaikowsky; Serenade, J. Stuart Archer.

Price, each volume, 2s. 6d. net.

Other Volumes in the Press.

Of all Music Dealers, or, if offer No. 17 is mentioned, post free from

PAXTON'S LONDON: 22, HIGH STREET,
NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.2.

Send for complete Organ Catalogue, (C 501), post free.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH. CLOTH, TEN SHILLINGS EACH.

No.	No. 1.	No.	No. 5.
1. Interlude	Th. Dubois	1. Jour de Noces	J. Stuart Archer
2. Chanson de Matin	Edward Elgar	2. Festival Prelude on "Ein feste Burg"	W. Faulkes
3. Fantasia on the old melody "Urbs Beata"	W. Faulkes	3. Legend	Harvey Grace
4. There is a green hill far away	Ch. Gounod	4. Allegretto Pastorale	H. M. Higgs
5. Marche Triomphale	Alexandre Guilmant	5. Benediction Nuptiale	Alfred Hollins
6. Ave Maria	A. Henselt	6. Sursum Corda	John N. Ireland
7. Grand Chœur No. 2	Alfred Hollins	7. Alla Marcia	John N. Ireland
8. Andantino in D flat	Edwin H. Lemare	8. Adagio Cantabile	Edwin H. Lemare
9. Chanson Triste	P. Tschaikowsky	9. Fanfare	J. Lemmens
10. Prelude to "Lohengrin," Act I.	R. Wagner	10. Intermezzo	B. Luard-Selby
11. Romanza	W. Wolstenholme	11. Easter Morn	John E. West
12. Allegretto in E flat	W. Wolstenholme	12. Finale in B flat	W. Wolstenholme
No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 6.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).
1. Chanson de Nuit	Edward Elgar	1. Nocturne	Thomas F. Dunhill
2. Alla Marcia	Myles B. Foster	2. Postludium	William Faulkes
3. Minuetto	Alexandre Guilmant	3. Andante Tranquillo	H. M. Higgs
4. Lied	H. Hofmann	4. In Springtime	Alfred Hollins
5. Barcarolle	H. Hofmann	5. Madrigal	Edwin H. Lemare
6. Spring Song	Alfred Hollins	6. Triumphal March	J. Lemmens
7. The Curfew	Edward J. Horsman	7. Allegro in B flat	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
8. Pastorale in E	Edwin H. Lemare	8. Choral Prelude on "Rockingham"	C. Hubert H. Parry
9. Ave Maria d'Arcadelt	Franz Liszt	9. Præludium Pastorale	J. Stainer
10. Cantique d'Amour	Theo. Wendt	10. Romance in F minor	Tschaikowsky
11. The Seraph's Strain	W. Wolstenholme	11. Romance in A flat	H. Sandiford Turner
12. Le Carillon	W. Wolstenholme	12. Festal Commemoration	John E. West
No. 4.	No. 8 (Christmas Music).	No. 9 (Christmas Music).	No. 10 (Christmas Music).
1. Arietta	S. Coleridge-Taylor	1. Chorale Prelude, "In dulci jubilo"	J. S. Bach
2. Souvenir de Printemps	Joseph Holbrooke	2. Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio")	J. S. Bach
3. Andante in D	Alfred Hollins	3. Quem Vidistis, Pastores	W. T. Best
4. Pavane in A	Bernard Johnson	4. Venite in Bethlehem	W. T. Best
5. Harmonies du Soir	Sigfrid Karg-Elert	5. December—Christmas Morn	Frederic H. Cowen
6. An Eton Memorial March	C. H. Lloyd	6. Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols	William Faulkes
7. Allegro alla Marcia	A. L. Peace	7. For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah")	Handel
8. Visione	J. Rheinberger	8. Pastorale	Theodore Kullak
9. Chant sans Paroles	P. Tschaikowsky	9. Chorus of Shepherds	J. Lemmens
10. Prelude to Act III. ("Die Meistersinger")	R. Wagner	10. Christmas Pastorale	Gustav Merkel
11. Allegro Pomposo	John E. West	11. A Christmas Pastoral	B. Luard-Selby
12. Canzona	W. Wolstenholme	12. Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.")	John E. West

SHORT PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

These Short Preludes are intended for use chiefly as Introductory Voluntaries to Divine Service more especially in those churches where the time allowed for such is, of necessity, somewhat limited.

No.	Book I.	No.	Book IV.
1. Andante Grazioso	Thomas Adams	1. "Elevation"—Andante e Legato	Thomas Adams
2. Andante	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Religioso	Myles B. Foster
3. Largamente	George J. Bennett	3. "Simplicity"—Andante	Barry M. Giboly
4. Andante Religioso	Myles B. Foster	4. Largamente	R. G. Hailing
5. Andantino	Alfred Hollins	5. "Dialogue"—Andante Grazioso	Charles H. Lloyd
6. Adagio Cantabile	Alfred Hollins	6. Andantino	Arthur W. Marchant
7. Larghetto	Charles J. May	7. Con Moto Moderato	William Sewell
8. Andante con Moto	John E. West	8. Andante Amabile	William Sewell
9. Andantino quasi Allegretto	John E. West	9. Andante	Clement M. Spurling
10. Andante	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Sostenuto	F. Cunningham Woods
Book II.	Book III.	Book V.	Book VI.
1. Andante con Moto	Thomas Adams	1. "Invocation"—Andante Grazioso	Thomas Adams
2. Con Moto	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante con Moto	Percy E. Fletcher
3. Moderato	H. A. Chambers	3. Poco Adagio	Myles B. Foster
4. Marziale, poco Lento	Myles B. Foster	4. Andante Espressivo	Ignace Gibsons
5. Moderato	Alfred Hollins	5. Adagio	Alfred Hollins
6. Andantino	Alfred Hollins	6. Poco Lento	Charles H. Lloyd
7. Adagio	Charles J. May	7. Andante Dolente	Arthur W. Marchant
8. "Hymnus"—Andante e Sostenuto	John E. West	8. Andantino con Tenerezza	William Sewell
9. Andante Serioso	John E. West	9. Andante con Moto	Clement M. Spurling
10. Adagio	W. Wolstenholme	10. Adagio Molto	F. Cunningham Woods
1. Moderato e Legato	Thomas Adams	1. Dolente	Edmund T. Chipp
2. Moderato	W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Sostenuto	Myles B. Foster
3. Andante con Moto	George J. Bennett	3. Andantino	R. G. Hailing
4. Andante	H. A. Chambers	4. Con Moto	Alfred Hollins
5. Grazioso molto Espressivo	Myles B. Foster	5. "Communion"—Cantabile	J. Lemmens
6. "Song without Words"—Con Moto	Alfred Hollins	6. Andante Religioso	Arthur W. Marchant
7. Andante	Alfred Hollins	7. Lento	Charles J. May
8. Andante Dolente	John E. West	8. Larghetto	Albert Robins
9. Andante Pastorale	John E. West	9. Adagio e Mesto	William Sewell
10. Adagio	W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Affettuoso	William Sewell

HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

Edited by ERNEST NEWMAN.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY

HARVEY GRACE

Cloth, gilt, xviii. + 319 pages.

WITH OVER TWO HUNDRED MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price Twelve Shillings net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

THE TIMES LITERARY SUPPLEMENT

The first impression with regard to this book is a sense of surprise that it should have waited for Mr. Grace to write it: the second, one of satisfaction that the task came into his hands. . . . The book is for organists who wish to know Bach better: it is therefore rightly technical and frankly critical. Because of the latter quality it is also worth reading by those who are not organists. . . . The whole leaves the effect of a competent mind working direct on the material and not through others.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

It is the most comprehensive and open-minded treatment of the subject in existence. . . . There is hardly a man in this country better equipped than Mr. Grace for writing on this one branch of Bach's many activities: he speaks not only with the authority of a theoretical analyst, but with the even greater authority of a man who has played the works on many divers organs.

DAILY NEWS

A STIMULATING BOOK

All who have read . . . cannot fail to have been impressed by the wide knowledge shown by Mr. Grace, and the thoroughly human way in which he expresses his learning.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE

It is the great merit of Mr. Grace's book that he never fails to discriminate and distinguish—even if one need not necessarily accept all of his judgments as final. Add that historically and technically it is admirably accurate and complete, and that it is written further in a delightfully light-handed, even humorous, style, and nothing more need be said to commend the volume to the musical reader.

THE NATION AND THE ATHENÆUM

In principle this is a technical book of instruction; it is written to remind organists of what "old Bach" wrote for their instrument; and it gives a great deal of practical help towards execution and interpretation. But it is not only useful for the man who makes a noise up in the organ-loft and doesn't have to be perpetually kneeling down or standing up all through the service: it will be interesting to the listener in his pew down below. It is, indeed, a valuable listener's guide to all sorts of Bach; and will end by leaving the reader, whether an organist or not, in a position to enjoy Bach more than he did before.

NEW WITNESS

Apart from its contribution to scholarship and its creative accuracy of fact, this book is unusually vivid, illuminating, and practical. There seems to me to be that fusion of academic clarity of thought with imaginative understanding which is as often desired in a book like this as it is missing. . . . We come to the end of the book knowing Bach the organist as he must veritably have been, and not as we would like to think him. . . . The book is admirably done, and no less pleasant than it is able.

YORKSHIRE POST

Mr. Grace writes with the discrimination of a judicious critic and the practical knowledge of an expert organist, and the result is a handbook from which all organists, even the cleverest, may gain some useful suggestions. To the inexperienced player it will be an indispensable vade mecum.

YORKSHIRE OBSERVER

The first book in English to deal adequately and comprehensively with the organ works. . . . The fearlessness and candour of his remarks . . . and the evident scholarship of the author, should commend his work to all serious students of Bach organists as well as non-organists.

MUSICAL OPINION

Mr. Harvey Grace's book is not merely an excellent text-book for organists, but also an important contribution to Bach literature. . . . It contains a great deal of information—historical, critical, and practical—that is new and valuable. This information, moreover, is clearly and attractively imparted. . . . The book has a very important practical side. The question of registration is fully and ably dealt with. Both the particular suggestions and the generalisations are excellent.

BIRMINGHAM POST

The chorale preludes . . . engage Mr. Grace's attention, and are surveyed with fine critical insight. But he does an even greater service in taking the fugues in his stride and by insisting on the elemental poetic quality in the greater among these. . . . The notion of the fugue as half a work of art and half a student's exercise is by now well exploded: and Mr. Grace's book will play a part in its final dissipation. To the budding organist it will come as a saviour from many misconceptions unwittingly fostered by the pedantry that still lingers among those entrusted with his training.

LIVERPOOL DAILY POST AND MERCURY

Will be welcomed by musicians. Mr. Grace preserves a sense of proportion in dealing with a subject over which writers are apt to lose their heads.

THE REFEREE

May be read with profit not only by every organist but by every admirer of the great composer.

THE SCOTSMAN

Written by an organist, addressed primarily to organists, and necessarily entering at some length into the technique of performance, the book is nevertheless one for all music-lovers, for it is an admirable guide to an understanding of the processes of Bach's artistic development.

SUNDAY TIMES

The student of the organ works could have no better guide than Mr. Grace.

CHURCH TIMES

Mr. Grace's excellent book. . . . For other than organists and would-be organists the present work offers much interest and instruction.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER

Altogether a delightful and well-written volume.

THE CHRISTIAN WORLD

This masterly survey of Bach's organ works. . . . The book will be a great delight to a sympathetic organist, and even those who are not organists but who take pleasure in Bach will find it delightful. . . . Those organists who read this book can hardly fail to be stirred up to give various audiences a much fuller range of Bach music. . . . Enlightened critical comment. . . . Illuminating analyses.

MUSICAL NEWS AND HERALD

Here is a book on Bach—"Old Bach." . . . which will surely help on this ever-young composer. . . . three hundred pages of delightful criticism, guidance, and appreciation. He brings humour to bear, and imagination, in addition to the well-considered results of life-long study and experience. . . . The whole book is delightful.

THE MUSIC TEACHER

A new book on Bach is something rare and greatly to be desired. Here comes Mr. Harvey Grace, with a study of The Organ Works of Bach that will delight the heart of every lover of this mighty music. . . . It contains the fruit of a lot of original investigation and fresh thinking. . . . We like particularly his treatment of the wonderful chorale preludes.

THE CHOIR

Mr. Grace has done his work right worthily. He recognises the faults in Bach's works, and does not fail to point them out, but in his praises he never lapses into extravagance. His eulogies are discriminating, and we feel we are safe in accepting his dicta. Finally, he possesses an attractive literary style, and the freshness of his humour makes well-nigh every page attractive.

ORGANISTS' QUARTERLY JOURNAL

Every organ student in the land should at once become acquainted with Mr. Harvey Grace's book The Organ Works of Bach. Rarely have we been more thoroughly interested in, or derived greater pleasure through the perusal of any book relating to matters musical. It is written in a most delightful vein. . . . To the organ student it is absolutely invaluable.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NONSENSE SONGS

MUSIC BY

STANLEY MARCHANT.

WORDS AND ILLUSTRATIONS BY

HUGH CHESTERMAN.

Price Five Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SONGS OF LOVE

(LIEBESLIEDER)

WALTZES

FOR PIANOFORTE DUET

(with Voices ad lib.)

THE ENGLISH WORDS BY

W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY

JOHANNES BRAHMS.

(Op. 52.)

Vocal Part, 2s.

Edition for Pianoforte Duet, 8s.

Accompaniments arranged for Orchestra by
Gerrard Williams.
Parts (MS.) on hire.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HOMAGE TO HANDEL

STUDIES IN VARIATION FORM

FOR ORGAN

ON A GROUND BASS OF

HANDEL

BY

SIGFRID KARG-ELERT

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S

Sunday School Anniversary Music ANTHEMS.

*Sun of my Soul	J. H. ADAMS
†Thine for ever	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
†I love to hear the story	MYLES B. FOSTER
†Lord, Thy children guide and keep	J. H. MAUNDER
†Hosanna we sing	JOHN E. WEST

Price Fourpence each.

† Tonic Sol-fa, 2d. each.

* Tonic Sol-fa, price 3d.

HYMNS AND TUNES.

No.	SET I.
1.	Come, children, on and forward	GEORGE C. MARTIN
2.	For the freshness of the morning	LADY EUAN-SMITH
3.	I love to hear the story	FREDERIC CLAY
4.	Come, O come! in pious lays	J. STAINER
5.	Thine for ever! God of Love	W. C. HARVEY
6.	Jesu, Whom Thy children love	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
7.	Sweetly o'er the meadows fair	F. A. CHALLINOR
8.	Would you gain the best in life	C. J. MAY
9.	On our way rejoicing	WALTER B. GILBERT
10.	Now the daylight goes away	J. ADCOCK

SET II.

1.	Again the morn of gladness	J. STAINER
2.	The Angels' Song	ALBERTO RANDEGGER
3.	Forward, Christian children	ALFRED MOFFAT
4.	The Golden Shore	J. STAINER
5.	Saviour, blessed Saviour	JOHN E. WEST
6.	Enter with thanksgiving	F. H. COWEN
7.	Man shall not live by bread	J. VARLEY ROBERTS
8.	Stars, that on your wondrous way	J. STAINER
9.	The day is past and over	JOSEPH BARNEY
10.	God will take care of you	FRANCES R. HAVERGAL

SET III.

1.	We march, we march, to victory	JOSEPH BARNEY
2.	Hark! hark! the organ loudly peals	GEORGE J. BENNETT
3.	O what can little hands do	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
4.	While the sun is shining	T. ADAMS
5.	I love to hear the story	H. J. GAUNTLETT
6.	The roseate hues of early dawn	A. SULLIVAN
7.	Lord, Thy children guide and keep	A. S. COOPER
8.	In our work and in our play	F. WESTLAKE
9.	The Beautiful Land	J. STAINER
10.	Gentle Jesus, meek and mild	J. STAINER

SET IV.

1.	The boys and girls of England	J. STAINER
2.	The crown is waiting	J. STAINER
3.	The City of Light	E. J. TROUP
4.	He dwells among the lilies	LADY EUAN-SMITH
5.	God is in Heaven! Can He hear	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
6.	The Good Shepherd	J. STAINER
7.	A little kingdom I possess	R. S. NEWMAN
8.	Raise your standard, brothers	E. J. TROUP
9.	Flowers	ALBERTO RANDEGGER
10.	Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me	HORATIO PARKER

Both Notations, price Sixpence per Set.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

National Institute Edition of the Works of BRITISH BLIND COMPOSERS.

This Edition, published under the auspices of the National Institute for the Blind, is exclusively devoted to the works of high artistic value by Blind Composers.
2s. each, except where stated.

PIANOFORTE.

1. Five Lyric Pieces. 3s. ... Alfred J. Thompson
2. Noël ... William Wolstenholme
3. Ten Poetic Fancies (Books I. & II.).
3s. each Book ... Horace F. Watling
4. Venetian Boat Song ... Sinclair Logan
5. Rondo Scherzando, in B flat ... Frederick W. Priest
6. Sketch (suggested by the flight of an Aero-plane). 2s. 6d. ... Hubert G. Oke
7. Rondo Alla Tarantella, in A flat ... Alfred Wrigley
8. Three Sketches for a Young Player:
(1) "Little Soldiers"; (2) "Fairy Tale";
(3) "Bedtime." 2s. 6d. ... Hubert G. Oke
9. "Moods of a Mind":
Vol. I.: "Repose"; "Merriment."
Vol. II.: "Sadness"; "Gladness."
2s. each Vol. ... H. V. Spanner
10. Rustic Dance, in D minor ... Horace F. Watling
11. Caprice, in C ... Sinclair Logan
12. Spanish Serenade ... William Wolstenholme
13. Zingaresca ... Llewellyn Williams

14. Two Sketches for Pianoforte:

"Autumn"; "Winter" ... Chas. G. Broan

ORGAN.

15. Minuet Antique, in D flat ... Horace F. Watling
16. Toccata in D minor. 2s. 6d. ... T. G. Osborn
17. Bohemesque in G. 2s. 6d. ... William Wolstenholme
(Specially composed for the opening of the Grand Organ, Johannesburg.)
18. Fantasia in E. 2s. 6d. ... T. G. Osborn
19. Rondino in D flat ... William Wolstenholme
20. Marche Héroïque, in E flat. 2s. 6d. Horace F. Watling
(Specially composed for the opening of the Grand Organ, Johannesburg.)

VOCAL.

21. Song: "Echo" ("Come to me in the Silence of the Night") ... William Wolstenholme
22. Song: "Early one Morning" (Old English
Words) ... Sinclair Logan
23. Serenade: "Sleep, dear Heart" ... Sinclair Logan
24. Two Songs:
(1) "Dolcino to Margaret" (Kingsley)
(2) "As the barque floateth on" (Bulwer Lytton)
Hubert G. Oke

The Edition may be inspected, gratis, at the National Institute's Showroom, 224, Great Portland Street, W.1.

RYALLS & JONES, LTD., MUSIC PUBLISHERS,
224, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, LONDON, W.1 AND 109, GRANGE ROAD, BIRKENHEAD.

BOOSEY & CO.'S
LATEST ORCHESTRAL MUSIC

OVERTURES.

- Fierrabras ... Schubert
Overture in B flat ... Schubert
Shamus O'Brien ... Stanford
Undank ... Storch

SUITES.

- Harvest Time ... Haydn Wood
Faust ... Coleridge-Taylor
As you like it ... Roger Quilter
Wayside Sketches ... Scott-Minchin
Gipsy Pictures ... Hugh Mallory
Princess Gioia ... Colin Campbell
Myrtles of Damascus

MARCHES.

- Spirit of Pageantry ... Fletcher
Here Goes ... Baynes
Imperial Britain ... Chandler
Old Glory ... Lestrangle

SELECTIONS.

- The Beggar's Opera ... Austin
W. H. Squire's Popular Songs
W. Sanderson's Popular Songs

- On Jhelum River ... Woodforde-Finden
Woodforde-Finden

ENTR'ACTES.

- Melody ... Darwes
Slumber Time ... Robinson
Mam'zelle Coquette ... Gilmer

ALL WITH FREE PERFORMING RIGHTS.

BOOSEY'S BAND CLUBS

afford the finest medium for keeping in touch with new Orchestrations at low subscription rates.

Write for particulars.

BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET
LONDON, W.1.

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy.

DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF TEACHERS AND STUDENTS OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION

By H. H. HULBERT

CAPT. R.A.M.C., M.A. OXFORD, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., ETC.

176 Pages, Octavo Size, Cloth, Gilt Lettered - - - - PRICE NINE SHILLINGS NET.

SHORT SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS.

I.—DEFINITION OF EURHYTHM. II.—THE ENGLISH PHYSIQUE AND ARTISTIC MOVEMENT. Science and games of skill—Movements of novice and master-man—Co-ordination in movement—Discipline of games. III.—THE POISE OF THE BODY AND TONICITY. Common deformities—Correct poise—Correct figure—Lumbar curve the centre of balance—Degrees of tonicity—Position of attention—Special exercises. IV.—THE SCIENCE OF APPRECIATION AND THE CONCEPTION OF THE BEAUTIFUL. Power of imagery—Knowledge of self—Kinds of appreciation—The five senses and experience—Sense of touch in music and games. V.—THE ART OF EXPRESSION AND CONTROL. Three nervous levels—Will and movement—The guiding sensation of movement—feeling—Self-control of the actor and public speaker—Euphonics. VI.—THE CENTRAL APPARATUS OF SPEECH. VII.—THE SOUNDS OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. VIII.—BREATHING FOR VOICE. Diagrammatic sketch of apparatus—Different kinds of breathing—Effects of types of breathing on voice hygiene and figure. IX.—THE ARTICULATORY APPARATUS. X.—THE LARYNX. XI.—HYGIENE FOR VOICE-USERS AND ORDINARY HEALTH EXERCISES. Voice-user's throat—Physiological congestion of throat—Voice-training prevents voice-user's throat—Loss of health through civilization—Physical exercises for health—Positions: movements of arms, head, body, and legs; balance exercises, jumping, and marching. XII.—EURHYTHMICS.—THE PRACTICE OF EURHYTHMICS.

"It was very much wanted, and now that it has arrived it proves to be the best book on the subject we have ever seen. . . . One would like to dwell lovingly on every stage of this monumental work did space permit, but it will only allow of a general commendation of every word from the beginning . . . to the end, which consists of music to accompany the rhythmic physical exercises."—The Morning Post, February 17, 1922.

"No teacher of singing should be without this wonderful book."—Musical Opinion.

"This is a thoughtful and thought-compelling book which touches life at most points. Eurhythm the author defines as perfect harmony, and discusses with a fine enthusiasm the practical means of bringing about in the individual this desirable condition. The book should be of great value to teachers of singing and physical education, while the intelligent student can also derive great benefit from a careful reading."—Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC FOR EASTER

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

EASTER HYMN

	s.	d.
For Medium Voice and Pianoforte	2	0 net.
Also arranged for S.A.T.B., with Organ Accompaniment	0	4 net.
Or Unaccompanied	0	2 net.

D. E. INGHELBRECHT.

THE CANTICLE OF CREATION (St. François d'Assise).

For S.A.T.B. and Orchestra. Vocal Score	3	0 net.
--	---	--------

A. ARENSKY.

EASTER DAY (from Six Children's Songs). Unison	0	2 net.
OUR LORD IS RISEN (Anthem). S.S.A.	0	3 net.

C. H. CRONK.

BLOW UP THE TRUMPET (Festival Anthem). Tenor Solo and S.A.T.B.	0	4 net.
---	---	--------

A. LOWE.

THE LORD IS MY STRENGTH (Anthem). S.A.T.B.	0	3 net.
---	---	--------

P. TCHAIKOVSKY.

LEGEND, "CHRIST IN HIS GARDEN"

For Medium Voice and Pianoforte	2	0 net.
Also arranged for S.A.T.B., Unaccompanied	0	2 net.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W. 1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 962.—Vol. 64
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

APRIL 1 1923

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-SECOND SEASON, 1922-23.

SATURDAY, APRIL 28, AT 2.30 P.M.

THE MASTERSINGERS (Selection) WAGNER
BE NOT AFRAID (Motet) - - - BACH
BROWN EARTH - - - - ROTHAM
BLEST PAIR OF SIRENS - - - PARRY
SONGS OF THE SEA - - - STANFORD

MISS DOROTHY SILK.
MR. ARTHUR JORDAN.
MR. CHARLES KNOWLES.

CONDUCTORS:

SIR HUGH ALLEN. MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.
At the Organ - MR. R. A. GREIR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARLYBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.
Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, K.C.V.O., Mus.Doc., F.R.C.M.

A SPECIAL COURSE FOR THE TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS will commence next term. Full particulars can be obtained on application.

MIDSUMMER TERM will begin on Thursday, May 3

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about April 30.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

Three Scholarships for Baritone, and one for Female Vocalists, will be competed for in May. Last day for entry April 16.
J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus.Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

The College offers a complete Course of Musical Instruction to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of 70 Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

There is a JUNIOR DEPARTMENT for pupils under sixteen.

Examinations for the Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) in all subjects held twice a year in April and September.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND
(Founded by Sir S. Ernest Palmer, Bart., F.R.C.M., for the encouragement of All British Composers and Executive Artists).

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church
Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAM-INATION are:

Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 8, p. 127; Augener, p. 254; Peters, Vol. 2, No. 4.)

Pastorale in E, César Franck. (Novello.)

Theme and Variations in D, from Serenade, Op. 8, Beethoven.
Best's Arrangements, No. 75, p. 985. (Novello). This Arrangement only.

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the July, 1923, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for
January, 1923.

Regulations may be had on application.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

N.B.—The College will be re-opened at 10.0 on April 9.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.
Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

(CORPORATION OF LONDON.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL ... SIR LONDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.G.S.M.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical subjects and STAGE
TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, and Opera.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s.
Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

SUMMER TERM begins April 23rd.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools
Examinations (open to general public), free.

Telephone: Cent. 4459. H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

ROYAL

MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.

Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1922-1923.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra,
Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 17th, 1923.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the June-July Examinations close Wednesday, May 9th (Irish Entries, May 2nd), 1923.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed Centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

Examination in Pianoforte Accompaniment is now offered.

Examination Music and Scales for Pianoforte and for Violin, and Past Written Papers are published officially by the Board, and can be obtained from the Central Office, or through any Music Seller.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.
Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS

(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council).

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School,

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

A HOLIDAY COURSE of LECTURE LESSONS and DEMONSTRATIONS in MODERN METHODS of MUSIC-TEACHING will be held under the direction of Mr. ERNEST READ, F.R.A.M., during the Easter Vacation from April 9th to 12th inclusive.

Lecturers: Mr. ERNEST KEEL, Mr. BENJAMIN DALE, Mr. ERNEST HUNT, Mr. FREDERICK KEEL, Mr. CUTHBERT WHITMORE, Miss DESIRÉE MACÉWAN, Miss GWYNNE KIMPTON.

Mr. TOBIAS MATTHAY will also give one Lecture, and Mrs. TOBIAS MATTHAY will Lecture on the "Speaking of Verse." Solo Pianoforte Lessons will also be obtainable. Further particulars from, (MRS.) MARION COLE, Secretary.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Thirty-first Year.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

MR. HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. will give an ORGAN RECITAL at Kingsway Hall, W.C., on Wednesday, April 11, at 1 p.m.

JOHN B. WOOD, MUS. BAC.
C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M.

THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

EXPERT TUTORS.

THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY,
COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
INTERPRETATION,
FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
FOR MUSICIANS.

Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institutions have been enrolled as pupils.

Write,
6, BOLTON ROAD, FARNWORTH, BOLTON.

APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.

Correspondence Courses in this subject will be given as under:—

- (a) First General Course.
- (b) Advanced Course.
- (c) Course with an additional section for Teachers.
- (d) Advanced Course for Teachers.

Further particulars from the Secretary,
(DEPT. A) THE WARDROP CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE,
21, BEDFORD ROW, LONDON, W.C.1.

Midland Correspondence College.

Successful COURSES in PAPER WORK for L.R.A.M.,
A.R.C.M., and A.Mus.T.C.L. Also INTERESTING and VALUABLE COURSE for PIANISTS in "INTERPRETATION OF THE MASTERPIECES."

Write for Prospectus,
59, Spring Gardens, Buxton.

CALISTHENICS

FOR THE MUSCLES USED IN SINGING

As taught and perfected for 20 years.

Astonishing increase of POWER, QUALITY, RANGE,
and EASE of SINGING assured by five minutes' practice
twice (better three times) daily.

No more sore or relaxed throat, or strained voice.

BY CORRESPONDENCE, £3 3s.

THOS. CHURCH SAXBY, L.Mus.T.C.L.,
UNDERCLIFFE, LEWES

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

President for 1923, SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

Particulars of Membership, and of Appointments-register for Vacant Posts (no fees) from—

Hon. Secretary:
DE CRESPIGNY HOUSE, DENMARK HILL, S.E.5.

BISHOPSGATE INSTITUTE
BISHOPSGATE, E.C.
(Two minutes from Liverpool Street Station)

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

will give a

CONCERT

WITH ORCHESTRA
ON TUESDAY, APRIL 17TH, 1923, AT 8 P.M.

PURCELL ("King Arthur"); WILBYE (Madrigals);
BRAHMS ("Songs of Love");
HOLST (St. Paul's Suite for Strings).

SOPRANO - - - NORAH SCOTT TURNER
TENOR - - - HENRY WENDON
BASS - - - JOSEPH FARRINGTON
PRINCIPAL VIOLIN - - W. H. REED, F.R.A.M.

PIANOFORTE:
MAUD L. ALLWRIGHT and WINIFRED ALLWRIGHT.

Conductor - - HAROLD BROOKE

Tickets (including Tax): Reserved 5s. 9d., 3s. 6d., and 2s. 4d.
To be obtained from Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1: The Reference Library, Bishopsgate Institute, and of
H. A. GRIFFITH (Secretary, Novello Choir),
Novello Works, Hollen Street W.1.

THE NEWSPAPER PRESS FUND.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: THE VISCOUNT BURNHAM, C.H.

QUEEN'S HALL, LANGHAM PLACE.
Sole Lessees: Messrs. CHAPPELL & Co., Ltd.

THE
WESTMINSTER CHORAL SOCIETY
(By kind permission of Messrs. BOOSEY & Co.)

TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 10, 1923.
Doors open at 7.15 p.m. Commence at 8 p.m.

"KING ARTHUR" PURCELL.
"A TALE OF ALSATIA" VINCENT THOMAS.
(By special request.)

Artists:
MISS ANNIE REES. MISS FÉDORA TURNBULL.
MISS MILLICENT RUSSELL.
MR. WEBSTER MILLAR. MR. HERBERT HEYNER.
At the Piano ... MR. BERKELEY MASON.
Leader of Orchestra ... MR. W. H. REED.
Conductor ... MR. VINCENT THOMAS.
CHOIR AND ORCHESTRA OF 300.

Proceeds in aid of the Special Fund in connection with H.R.H. The Prince of Wales's Chairmanship of the Diamond Jubilee Dinner of the Newspaper Press Fund, May 10, 1923.

POPULAR PRICES (including Government Tax): Grand Circle
(Numbd. and Resvd.), First Two Rows, 10s. 6d.; Other Rows, 5s. 9d.
Sofa Stalls (Numbd. and Resvd.), 5s. 9d. and 3s. 6d. Balcony (Numbd. and Resvd.), First Two Rows, 3s. 6d.; Other Rows (Unresvd.) 2s. 4d.
Area (Unresvd.), 2s. 4d.

Tickets may be obtained from Messrs. BOOSEY & Co., 295, Regent Street, W.1 (Phone: Mayfair 826); QUEEN'S HALL, Langham Place, W.1.

W. A. BAYLEY, Hon. Organizer, 1, Central Buildings, S.W.1.

PORTSMOUTH MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL

MAY 18th and 19th, 1923.

Entries close April 20th.

Entry Forms and SYLLABUS may be obtained from
W. BOYANTON, Hon. Secretary,
FESTIVAL OFFICE, 7, PALMERSTON ROAD, SOUTHSEA.

MR. CHARLES TREE

on the ART OF THE "BEL CANTO."

Bridgwater Choral Society, Feb. 28, 23: "The famous baritone gave his lecture to a large and thoroughly appreciative audience. The event was one of an unique character, and the Society is to be congratulated. The event caused much interest. Mr. Tree is not only one of our greatest singers, but is also a witty raconteur, and his fund of quaint anecdotes and humorous reminiscences delighted his hearers. His songs were rendered in brilliant style, and displayed to the full his versatility, rich voice, and wonderful reserve of power.
Throughout there was an entire absence of straining, thus illustrating one of his chief points that to be perfectly at ease and natural while singing is one of the chief secrets of success."—Mercury.

Brighton, Feb. 7, 23: "The gifted singer was rapturously received, his truly magnificent voice and artistic renderings being keenly appreciated. His wonderfully sardonic Flea Song, and the natural appeal of The Dawg were works of art."—Daily News.

How to ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE PRODUCTION, 5/2.
EXERCISES ON THE "BEL CANTO" (New, 1922), 3/7.
Special prices to teachers for quantities.
(If difficult to obtain, write author.)

Address: 14, COURTFIELD GARDENS, KENSINGTON, S.W.5.

ST. NICHOLAS COLE ABBEY,
QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.

MENDELSSOHN'S ORATORIO "ELIJAH"

WILL BE PERFORMED ON
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25, AT 6.15 P.M.

SOLOISTS:
MISS ETHEL DYER.
MISS FANNY EMERSON.
MR. JOHN COLLETT.
MR. DAVID EVANS.

Organist - - MR. HERBERT HODGE.

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE, Mile End Road, E.

SATURDAY, MAY 12, at 7.30 p.m.

GOUNOD'S "FAUST"

WILL BE PERFORMED BY
THE PEOPLE'S PALACE CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES
(300 performers).

Conductor - - MR. FRANK IDLE, F.R.A.M.

MISS MARYAN ELMAR.
MISS HAYWARD WEBB.
MR. RICHARD RIPLEY.
MR. DAVID EVANS.
MR. JOSEPH FARRINGTON.

Organist - - MR. HERBERT HODGE.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 Book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot,"
in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—*Eastern
Morning News*.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority. . . ."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

PREJUDICE

CAN you name one progressive movement the world has known which has not emerged from a pall of prejudice?—even the man who first conceived the idea had first to combat an inborn prejudice against the very change he sought.

So with my idea of teaching Modern Pianoforte Playing by Specialised Individual Correspondence Lessons.

As a recognised teacher of the orthodox school, imagine the prejudice I personally overcame before I announced my course—Imagine the prejudice of friendly contemporaries against such a revolutionary method.

Nothing but sheer solid proof convinced me that it was not essential to teach my system of WEIGHT TOUCH at the piano—therefore I do not expect others to accept less. This proof is forthcoming and at the disposal of both professional and amateur players.

No one doubts that my system is right—a system which eliminates drudgery and places the means of adequate expression within the reach of all who have mastered the rudiments of piano playing. No one need doubt—in face of the actual testimonials I have received—that my method of teaching by correspondence is as practical, professional, and proficient as, a short while ago, it was regarded as revolutionary.

Write to-day in confidence, stating your individual difficulties and the names of one or two pieces you play. If you prefer to call and discuss the lessons by all means do so.

PRIVATE LESSONS AND CONSULTATIONS
DAY AND EVENING.

CHARLES A. GILLETT,
Pianoforte School

(Studio M.T.) II, SOUTH MOLTON ST., LONDON, W. I.

How to play difficult music with ease. . . .

PIANISTS who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery of wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 15,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. I.

L.R.A.M. AND L.T.C.L. POSTAL COURSES.

MR. GILBERT M. THOMAS,

M.A. (Cantab.), L.R.A.M., A.Mus. T.C.L.

Private Pupil of

STEWART MACPHERSON,
BACKHAUS,
OSCAR BERINGER.

These Courses are the outcome of many years devoted almost entirely to this individualised correspondence coaching, and embody the teachings of the leading Masters of the day, ensuring the gaining of the Diploma in the shortest possible time.

100% SUCCESSES—L.R.A.M., Christmas, 1922.

7 Correspondence Pupils entered: 7 passed.

Terms, Testimonials, Appreciations, on application:
BROADWOOD HALL STUDIOS, CONDUIT STREET, W. I.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Pupils prepared for A.R.C.M. and A.R.A.M. Exams.

Notice of last Pupils' Concert:

"A number of Mr. Albert Garcia's pupils sang excellently at the concert which they gave on Wednesday evening. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8,
Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.

TEACHING SINGING AND ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS

Numerous Successes both in Singing and Elocution Exams. at
L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation.

Also Special Short Instructional Courses in Voice-Production and The Art of Teaching Singing, to meet particular requirements of the General Practitioner in Music.

MR. W. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

INGLESIDE, GOLDSWONG TERRACE, NOTTINGHAM.

To all Pianists, Violinists, and 'Cellists THE TECHNIQUER.

ERNEST FOWLES, Esq., F.R.A.M.
and "THE TECHNIQUER."

"I have been experimenting with the 'Techniquer,' and now write to tell you that I believe it may be of the greatest service in the case of bad instances of 'webbing.' To correct such is to bring about a far greater degree of muscular independence in the fingers, and I believe that your apparatus may be of the highest possible value in that direction. Naturally, the instinct of a modern pianist is against the use of an aid of this kind, but I am continually meeting cases in which it is desirable.

"Very kindly yours, ERNEST FOWLES."

"Hand Development," with 15 photos, 1s. 6d.

Full particulars of "The Techniquer" from the Secretary,

Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O.,
'Phone: 1715 Maids Vale, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

SOUTH WESTERN COLLEGE OF MUSIC

296-298, BALHAM HIGH ROAD, LONDON, S.W.17.

Principal:
ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L.Mus.T.C.L.

THE "ELLEN BROWN" SCHOLARSHIPS.

(Open to Professionals or Amateurs of either sex.)

THREE FOR PIANOFORTE. TWO FOR SINGING.

ONE FOR VIOLIN. ONE FOR ORGAN.

ONE FOR ELOCUTION.

Last day of entry, Saturday, May 5, 1923.

Adjudicators:

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus.D. Dub., F.R.C.O.,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

MR. DAN RICHARDS, A.R.A.M. MRS. J. J. HAKMAN.

MR. HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

and Mr. G. BOWER CODLING.

For particulars, address the Secretary, enclosing a stamped addressed envelope.

25 POINTS

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Think them over.Principal :

ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

1. SUCCESSES AT MATRIC ... 92.

21 entered in 1922, and 20 were successful.

2. F.R.C.O.—Three students passed F.R.C.O., January, 1923.

3. A.R.C.O.—A student who passed A.R.C.O., writes as follows: "I am glad to say I have passed A.R.C.O. at the recent examination, and am now ready to work up for Fellowship, July next. I feel certain that I shall pass in the Paper Work because the first time I attempted the A.R.C.O. under your excellent tuition I passed, although I had failed before. I have recommended the M.C.C. to several friends lately."

4. MUS. BAC.—A student working through the Mus. Bac. Guarantee Course, writes: "Kindly allow me to express my gratitude to you for your very valuable lessons, and also in allowing the very easy instalment system of payment."

5. MATRIC.—A Matric. student writes: "I may say that already I feel that I shall be successful aided by your wonderful Course. Anyone can see by reading the lessons that it is very thorough."

6. SINGING.—A student for Singing writes: "Your tuition is indeed excellent. I find that your answers are much more concise and helpful than what one gets from Text-books on the subject. In fact, one cannot fail to grasp the subject with your tuition."

7. A. MUS. T.C.L.—At a recent Exam. A. Mus. T.C.L., a student gained 94% for Counterpoint.

8. F.R.C.O.—A successful student at F.R.C.O., January, 1923, writes: "I never felt that I was merely one of a crowd."

9. TUTORS.—All our Tutors are graduates of Durham University.

10. PRIVACY.—All communications are confidential, a Student being known to a Tutor by an Enrolment Number only.

11. TIME LIMIT.—No time limit is imposed for the working of the lessons, and students who take up a Guarantee Course receive tuition until successful.

12. INTERRUPTION.—If through business pressure, the Course is interrupted, it can be taken up again without further fee.

13. MODEL WORKINGS.—Model solutions are sent to all Past Papers, showing exactly the style required.

14. ALL SUBJECTS.—Tuition is given in every branch of the L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and A.T.C.L. Syllabuses, including Aural Training, Voice Culture, and Musical Appreciation.

15. SUPERVISION.—The Principal devotes the whole of his time to the supervision of the work of the students.

16. £20.—The fee for the Guarantee Course Mus. Bac. is £20. Exactly the same tuition, taken privately, would cost from £80 to a £100.

17. GUARANTEE COURSE.—It is obvious that in offering a Guarantee Course, we do our utmost to pass the student as soon as possible.

18. INTERVIEWS.—Personal interviews can be arranged at any time, and we welcome the strictest investigation of our methods.

19. SINGLE SUBJECTS.—Tuition can be taken in Single Subjects.

20. EXPERIMENTS.—M.C.C. Courses have gone beyond the experimental stage. This is important to you.

21. ART OF TEACHING.—If you are an A.R.C.O. you can gain the A. Mus. T.C.L. by passing in the Art of Teaching only.

22. CONCESSIONS.—If you are an A.R.C.O. or F.R.C.O., we grant you special concessions both for the Mus. Bac., the L.R.A.M., and the A.R.C.M.

23. TEACHERS.—Special Courses are arranged for Teachers who do not wish to enter for any Examination.

24. PAPERS.—All our papers are type-written.

25. INDIVIDUAL TUITION.—A student is not one of a class, but a class in himself, so that tuition can be commenced at any time.

VACATION CLASSES.—Vacation Classes will be held at Nottingham from August 1st to September 14th.

Separate Classes will be held for 1st M.Bac., Exercise, Final Mus. Bac., A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and A.T.C.L.

Daily Lectures will be given, and students will work papers under Exam. conditions.

The Tutor for Mus. Bac. is a Mus. Doc. of Durham and an F.R.C.O. The Tutor for Singing and Elocution is an A.R.C.M. pupil of Mr. Plunket Greene.

Students who wish to avail themselves of these Classes are requested to communicate with the Principal at once, stating Examination, and most convenient dates. Special concessions will be granted to students of the M.C.C.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

EXPERTO CREDE

(BELIEVE ONE WHO HAS HAD EXPERIENCE).

The Maxalding Finger-Speeding Instrument

IS THE GREATEST AID TO

FINGER-SPEED AND CONTROL.

All serious performers upon musical instruments, which demand finger-speed, independence, flexibility, and control for their successful manipulation, should read the following letter received recently from Mr. ANDERSON TYRER, the brilliant British Pianist :

" 105, FINCHLEY ROAD,

" HAMPSTEAD, N.W.3.

" January 9, 1923.

" DEAR MR. SALDO,

" I have now had your 'Finger-Speeding Instrument' for six months, and have, during this time, given it a thorough trial, and feel bound to write informing you what a great benefit I have derived from its daily use. I have given trial to many other mechanical devices, but none has proved so beneficial. All instrumentalists should use this instrument, which is a great help to a sound and fluent technique. I willingly consent to your using this letter as an appreciation of your valuable instrument.

" Yours truly,

" (Signed) ANDERSON TYRER."

THE MAXALDING FINGER-SPEEDING INSTRUMENT

is the only invention that will enable the user to secure a speed considerably in excess of the requirements of any composition yet written.

So many fine musicians fail to achieve their ambition in chamber and concert playing through their fingers lacking the necessary speed and facility. As a result the tempo cannot be maintained except at the risk of cramped hands, which is of course fatal.

A few minutes' daily use of the instrument before and after playing, produces and maintains a most extraordinary speed facility, and equality of touch.

All readers of the Musical Times are cordially invited to send for an explanatory brochure, which describes the instrument in detail. It will be despatched by return,

GRATIS AND POST FREE.

A. M. SALDO,

1, CRANBOURNE CHAMBERS, LEICESTER SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.

MUS. BAC. AND MUS. DOC.

FULL POSTAL PREPARATION.

(LONDON, DURHAM, AND DUBLIN.)

SUCSESSES : - - During the past three years, 18 pupils of Dr. Sprankling have been successful in Examinations for Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.

FULL POSTAL PREPARATION.

SUCSESSES : - - During the past three years, 62 pupils of Dr. Sprankling have been successful in Paper Work Examinations for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond,)

48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

TELEPHONE :
BRISTOL 3033.

An Entirely New Departure

HARMONY FOR PIANISTS

BY

DR. PERCY RIDEOUT,

D.MUS. LOND., A.R.C.M.

*Being Harmony in Pianoforte Idiom—
without written exercises.*

A COURSE OF INSTRUCTION
BY CORRESPONDENCE in CHORDS
and ORNAMENTAL DEVICES, together with their TEMPERAMENTAL VALUE as bearing on MUSICAL APPRECIATION and
INTERPRETATION, the whole being based on and ILLUSTRATED by music written for the Pianoforte.

AN ESSENTIAL PART OF PIANISTS'
EQUIPMENT, affording a CLEAR INSIGHT into the MATERIAL FORMING THE
STRUCTURE OF MUSIC, and ITS MEANING.

The foundation of the Art of Style and Interpretation.

For further particulars, apply—

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

Pianoforte School,

(Studio M.T.), 11, South Molton St., London, W.1.

To all interested in Voice Training.

Mr. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., has prepared a Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (named the "Simplex" Course), which covers the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, very concise, and easy to follow.

Dame Clara Butt writes: "I advise all would-be Singers and all interested in the Teaching of Singing to take the 'Simplex' Course. They will find it most helpful."

Mr. Ben Davies writes: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

For Full Particulars address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments made.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

MUSIC COPIED.—12-stave sheet, 9d. (Transposition extra.) Apply, M. J. Morris, 114, Alexandra Road, Hampstead, N.W.8.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

FRANK CARLETON

(TENOR).

ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, Etc.

"Mr. Carleton is the possessor of a powerful tenor voice of rare range and capacity, and his rendering of the song, 'How lovely are Thy dwellings' (Liddle), was a fine performance."

Northwich Guardian, July 14, 1922.

Address: 58, Hazel Street, Audenshaw, near Manchester.

HAROLD KNOWLTON (B.Sc.)

TENOR.

St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.
39, Granville Road, Stroud Green, N.4.

MR. SAM PAYNE

TENOR.

(late of St. Paul's and Exeter Cathedrals).
For Oratorio, Concerts, &c.

Communications to 35, Lurline Gardens, Battersea Park, S.W.11.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT

TENOR

St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.
108, Stapleton Hall Road, Stroud Green, N.4.

MILLARD THOMPSON

(L.T.C.L.), TENOR.

17, Forest View Road, Higham's Park, E.17.

FRANK POULTON (L.R.A.M.).

BASSO-CANTANTE

OF QUEEN'S HALL, KINGSWAY HALL, ETC.

Now booking for Ballad and Choral Concerts, Oratorio.
Available in London or Provinces.

33, HOUNSLOW AVENUE, HOUNSLOW, MIDD.X.
Phone: Hounslow 41 (New No. Shortly.)

LEONARD SALISBURY (A.R.C.M.).

Founder and Basso of "The Gresham Singers,"
Gives Lessons in Voice-Culture and Singing.Phone or write, 3, Uffington Road, S.E.27.
Tele: Streatham 2525.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.

8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

JAMES BROWN (Mus.B., L.R.A.M.)

Lessons and Advice to String Teachers.

Correspondence Courses.

Dunstable House, Richmond, Surrey.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND

A.R.M.C.M.

ASSOCIATE OF THE MADRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

Pupil of Backhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. W. Carroll, &c.

Prepares for the L.R.A.M. and other examinations.

Lessons in advanced Pianoforte Technique and Interpretation.

Special Correspondence Courses in Theory, Harmony, &c., at

Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1.,

Tuesdays and Thursdays.

"Lusitania," Curzon Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

SOLO PIANIST.

For terms, vacant dates, &c., apply to
ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN

VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.

FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT,

MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.

Nearly 700 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A., Performer and Teacher.Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.

"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.

Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED
AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICA-TION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION
WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-EIGHT YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

* * * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Sir HENRY WALFORD DAVIES, Mus.Doc.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who

OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. D. and MUS. B. at Oxford,
Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of
F.L.C.M., L. Mus. L.C.M. (1922 List), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and
L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes,
"Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-nine. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations.
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition
by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus.B., Dunelm.,

F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations,
Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1.
Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge,"
"Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, Essay Models, Sight-
Reading, and Practical tests in 6 Lessons.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-23 ... 219 Correspondence Pupils successful.

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-23 ... 50 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

MR. EZRA EDSON, Mus. Bac. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,

Coaches by Correspondence to individual requirements.
76, Harboro' Hill Road, Barnsley, Yorks.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., Etc. Voice

Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for
L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus.Doc., Dunelm.,

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 403 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and
A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES AND PREPARES MSS.

FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-

INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End
Studio) in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form,
Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For
Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C., makes a speciality of PREPARING Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Latest Successes: DURHAM—Final Mus. Bac. : 2 out of 3 passes, both at first attempt. Mus. Bac. "Exercise" (3), after preliminary course in Composition. Also First Mus. Bac. (2). All in 1922.
Over 130 Successes at Durham. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920)
specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working.
Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing,
R. A. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

MR. HERBERT C. MORRIS, M.A. Cantab.,
F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., F.T.C.L. Postal Tuition for R.C.O., R.A.M., R.C.M., and T.C.L. Diplomas. Past Successes over 60. A.R.C.O. (25); F.R.C.O. (26).
99, Tettenhall Road, Wolverhampton.

DR. TAYLOR teaches through the post any musical subject. Accompaniments written or revised. Successful preparation for all exams. Portland Place, Lancaster.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham, including September, 1922.
2 L.R.A.M. successes, January, 1923.

RECENT SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

L.R.A.M. COACHING by SPECIALISTS (all Musical Subjects and Elocution) for the practical examinations —125 Successes—also in the Harmony, Form, and Art of Teaching papers—either singly or together. Special Class for Aural Tests. Apply, "Registrar," Metropolitan Academy of Music, Ltd., 72-74, High Street, Marylebone, W.1.

THE CLIFTON COOKE SCHOOL OF
SINGING. Established 1888. "Pre-eminent for Professional Training." Principal: Mr. Clifton Cooke (Author of "Practical Singing," Kegan, Paul & Co.), offers exceptional advantages to serious professional students. Periodical competitions for valuable Free and Assisted Scholarships. For interview address Secretary, 26m, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

CATHEDRAL CHOIR SCHOOL, WORCESTER.

There are VACANCIES for PROBATIONERS for next term.

Boarders return April 30.

Early application should be made to

Rev. The Precentor, who is Warden of the School.

CHAMPION HILL SCHOOL.—Choir School,
Denmark Hill, S.E.5. Train 12 minutes Victoria. L.C.C. cars pass door. Solo and Chorus boys for Services, Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Telephone Brixton 2124. Apply Secretary.

EASTBOURNE.

DOWNSMEADE BOARDING SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Modern education with special musical training if desired. Prospectus on application to the Headmaster, F. E. Wilson, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

SOLO and CHORUS BOYS supplied for Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Apply to Organist, St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.3.

CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.

There is a VACANCY for an ALTO LAY-CLERK. Salary £90. Applications, stating age, and accompanied by copy testimonials as to musical ability and character, to be forwarded by April 16, to The Chapter Clerk, Carlisle, from whom further particulars can be obtained.

ELY CATHEDRAL.—There is a VACANCY for a TENOR LAY-CLERK. Stipend £110. For particulars and forms of application apply to, The Dean, The Deanery, Ely.

HOLY TRINITY, Grays Inn, Holborn.—Wanted, SOPRANOS and ALTOS (Ladies), and TENORS and BASSES (voluntary). Address, Organist.

TENOR REQUIRED, Kentish Town Parish
Church, N.W. £10. Write, Choirmaster, 73, Dresden Rd., N.12.

ST. BARNABAS, Kensington.—REQUIRED, TENOR, £25; ALTO, £20; BASS, £20. Write, Ewart Dartrey, 8, Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn, N.W.6.

BASS WANTED at once for Parish Church,
Bandsworth. Good reader essential. £15. Apply, Organist, W. C. Barnes, 25, Fernwood Avenue, S.W.16.

ST. NICHOLAS COLE ABBEY, E.C.—SOLO
BASS, good reader, REQUIRED. Sundays only. Also voluntary Chorus Singers, ladies and gentlemen, for Oratorio services. Herbert Hodge, 5, Streatham Place, S.W.2.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED,
St. George's Presbyterian Church, Blackburn. Salary up to £60. Good opportunity for teaching. Applications sent to A. S. Watson, 19, Irene Place, Blackburn.

YOUNG MAN desires POST as ORGANIST or Assistant. 5 years' experience. Excellent refs. Anglican with knowledge of plainsong. Communicant. "Robsalt," Bounds Green Road, New Southgate, N.11.

ORGANIST, willing to Deputise or Accompany
Special Music at Short Notice. Miss Lilian Trott, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., 7, Queen's Road, Wimbledon, S.W.19. Telephone: Wimbledon, 2373.

ARTICLED PUPIL.—The Organist of Ripon
Cathedral has a VACANCY for a well-educated youth. Address, C. H. Moody, Esq., C.B.E., Woodbridge, Ripon.

ACCOMPANIST.—Lady DESIRES PRACTICE with Vocalist, Violinist, or 'Cellist for mutual benefit. "Practice," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ADVERTISERS wish to meet VIOLA PLAYER
(either sex) who would join them in occasional chamber music. They would be willing to pay a small fee. Write, "Stokoe," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for Sale.—
Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two
Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

BARGAIN.—APOLLO ORGAN, Two Manuals and Pedals. Seen London. Require Mustel Organ. "K.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CHURCH ORGAN for SALE (in oak case), by Speechley. Great, 7 Stops; Swell, 4 Stops; Pedal Bourdon, 16-ft.; 2 Couplers; 3 Composite Pedals. Applications to view to be made in writing, to Box 774, c/o White's, 33, Fleet Street, E.C.4.

FOR SALE.—AMERICAN ORGAN. In splendid condition. 11 Stops. Walnut Case. £14. Also, GUITAR, hardly used, in Case, and Music. £3 5s. Miss Gage, 21, College Avenue, Slough.

FOR SALE.—Two-Manual Rogers PIANO (with R.C.O. pedal attachment). Mahogany case and bench. In perfect condition. Suit organ student. £80. Apply, "H. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BOUDOIR GRAND PIANO, by Rud. Ibach. Exquisite tone and touch. Fine condition. 175 guineas. Apply, E. R. Wood, Bidborough Grange, near Tunbridge Wells.

FOR SALE.—Norman & Beard Organ Pedal Attachment for Pianoforte. R.C.O. pattern. With Stool. £12 12s. Pembry, 24, St. Stephen's Road, Canterbury.

FOR SALE.—PIANO PEDALS, Norman & Beard. R.C.O. pattern; in perfect condition; with Stool. £15. Oldroyd, 17, Outram Road, Croydon.

WANTED, a double-row MUSTEL ORGAN, 22 Stops. No dealers apply. Arthur Wilmot, 24, Dingwall Road, Croydon.

FOR SALE.—Beautiful, fine-toned "BETTS" VIOLONCELLO, in lined oak case. J. M. Walker, Kilburne, near Derby.

SHAKESPEARE SAID:

"How sour sweet music is when time is lost and no proportion kept." Your child may be in time, but cannot be in proportion unless he has the ADJUSTABLE PEDAL and FOOT STOOL. Teachers who are using it for smaller pianists are recommending it strongly. For further particulars write, T. McSorley, 72, King Street, Leigh, Lancashire.

MARTIN'S "COPYRIGHT" SCALE CHART.
FOR ALL PIANOFORTE PUPILS AND TEACHERS.
Order through your Music Seller, or direct from inventor, 39, Talton Road, Liverpool.
Price 1s. Post free, 1s. 1½d.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O., on "The Development of Chamber Music." Six complete Model Essays, with hints. Important. Send 4s. 6d. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BACH'S ORGAN WORKS (Peters Edition). Nine Volumes bound in four, limp leather, £3 10s.; also Widor's Organ Symphonies, limp leather, 25s. W. A. Richards, Warwick Road, New Barnet.

BASSES and BARITONES should buy "SONGS OF THE NIGHT" (Oakley). Two sets: Nos. 1/4 and 5/7. Price 2s. each set. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

MUSIC COMPOSED TO WORDS. Compositions Revised (Songs, Hymns, Waltzes). Publication arranged. Transpositions, &c. Send your Lyrics or Music for Quotation. Mr. L. Charles McKellow, 8, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.1.

TWO PRESENTATION COPIES of Novello's Folio Orchestral Editions. Red binding; as new. "The Messiah" and "Creation." Offers. J. T. Chambers, Rosemount, Thornbury, Gloucestershire.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN, Ltd., have Vacancies in their Leeds Establishment for First-class PIANOFORTE TUNERS and REPAIRERS. A knowledge of Players essential. Apply, stating experience and salary required, Archibald Ramsden, Ltd., 12, Park Row, Leeds.

£100 SINGING; £50 PIANOFORTE FREE
Scholarships, Souvenir Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes, Mr. Clifton Cooke's Open Competition, May 5 and 12. Entries close May 1, Singing; May 8, Piano. Adjudicators: Miss Muriel Overton (the distinguished composer), Mr. J. Stuart Crook, Manager Cramer's Concert Agency, and Mr. Clifton Cooke. Prospectus from Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

ST. JOHN'S, Notting Hill.—SOLO TENOR and BASS REQUIRED. Salary £20. Write, J. S. Robson, 33, Colville Terrace, W.11.

TWO-MANUAL LEWIS ORGAN, Pneumatic throughout. 7 Great, 5 Swell, 3 Pedal. Octave-Couplers and Tremulant. In perfect condition. £350, or near offer. Apply, "F. H.," Clifton Gardens, Golder's Green, N.W.11.

LYRICS, suitable to Setting to Music, from 10s. 6d. each. Edith Smallwood, Sidmouth House, Malvern.

THE "DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWER

Is installed and giving complete satisfaction in over a thousand Cathedrals, Churches, Theatres, and Cinemas in Great Britain alone. This fact is eloquent, as well as convincing testimony, to its efficiency and durability. It is the most satisfactory method of mechanical organ blowing, and as the motive power may be oil, gas, or electric motor, the "Discus" is suitable for churches in any locality. The application of a "Discus" equipment to an organ ensures a steady supply of wind being instantly available, and enables the organist to obtain the best possible effects from the instrument. The "Discus" blower is the most scientifically designed machine for organ blowing purposes on the market. It is made of metal throughout, of the best quality combined with high grade workmanship. Being entirely free of complicated mechanism, a minimum of attention is required, and very many years of satisfactory services ensured. Efficiency and reliability are fully guaranteed with each "Discus" equipment we instal.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOKLET.

Sole Makers, Watkins & Watson, Organ Blowing Specialists for the past thirty years. Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ Blowing.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

B. WATKINS AND WATSON
WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THE TRADE, BANDMASTERS, &C.

MESSRS. KEITH PROWSE & Co., LTD have the pleasure to announce their appointment as Sole Agents for

MESSRS. COUESNON enjoy international fame, being makers by appointment to the Paris National Conservatoire of Music, to the French Army, Navy, and Fine Arts Departments, to the most famous bands in the world, and are

SOLE SUPPLIERS TO THE CELEBRATED BAND OF THE

"GARDE RÉPUBLICAINE."

With MESSRS. COUESNON are incorporated the famous Firms who make GAUTROT BRASS INSTRUMENTS, TRIEBERT WOOD-WIND INSTRUMENTS, LEON BERNARDEL VIOLINS, 'CELLOS, BOWS, RESIN, &c., Small Goods, and Accessories.

"MONOPOLE" INSTRUMENTS.

We confidently recommend these Instruments, the quality being of a very high standard at exceedingly competitive prices.

We would specially draw attention to the complete range of the celebrated

COUESNON SAXOPHONES

— USED THE WORLD OVER. —

The various COUESNON Factories at Paris, Château-Thierry, Garennes, &c., employ over 1,500 people, and are among the finest equipped in the world.

CATALOGUE READY SHORTLY.

KEITH PROWSE & Co., LTD.,
159, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

April 23rd.—SUMMER TERM BEGINS.

April 25th, at 3 p.m.—SIR WILFRED COLLET, K.C.M.G., delivers the Inaugural Address. Subject: "The reminiscences and reflections of a wanderer returned."

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

"LAST POEMS" by A. E. HOUSMAN.

MESSRS. ELKIN & Co., LTD., have pleasure in announcing the publication of FOUR SONGS by

D. M. STEWART,

the lyrics of which are from

PROFESSOR HOUSMAN'S "LAST POEMS."

1. We'll to the woods no more.
2. In the morning, in the morning.
3. The sigh that heaves the grasses.
4. The first of May.

LOW OR HIGH VOICE.

Price complete, 3s. 6d. net.

This Album is confidently recommended to all singers, professional or amateur, who are interested in good musical settings of good poetry.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

THE SEVCIK

VIOLIN METHOD, OP. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9.

There is nothing in the world to excel these Opera. They were the works of a Master in his years of super-creative power.

Age 30 to 50; 1885-1905.

From 1900 to 1910 they produced KUBELIK, KOCIAN, and a dozen other brilliant stars.

No other works or weary elaborations can reduce the brilliance or concentrated pedagogic effect in these works.

Op. 1. School of Violin Technics. I., 5/6; II., 6/6; III., 4/6; IV., 5/6.

Op. 2. School of Bowing Technics. I., II., V., each 2/6; III., IV., VI., each 2/-.

Op. 3. Forty Variations. 2/6.

Op. 6. Violin Method for Beginners. 7 Parts, 1/6 each.

Op. 7. Studies Preparatory to the Shake. I. & II., 4/- each.

Op. 8. Changes of Position and Preparatory Scale Studies. 3/6.

Op. 9. Preparatory Studies in Double Stopping. 3/6.

"AIDS TO THE STUDY OF THE SEVCIK METHOD."

Gratis and post free.

It is put simply and clearly by one of the most experienced London Professors, and will prove that it is the best of all Methods in the long run.

"THE LITTLE SEVCIK."

A Practical Concentration and Simplification of Op. 6, and is THE METHOD OF ALL METHODS FOR BEGINNERS.

Price 3/6 net.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR,' 'GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.'

Publishers of 'SEVCIK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES,' 'MACFARREN'S THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSON,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

Copyright Owners of the Steingraber Edition for Great Britain and the Colonies.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR INTERMEZZI

FOR THE

ORGAN

BY

C. V. STANFORD.

(Op. 189.)

1. PASTORALE.
2. MARCIA EROICA.
3. HUSH SONG.
4. INTERMEZZO. Founded upon an Irish Air.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

APRIL 1 1923

CONTENTS.

	Page
New Light on some Masterpieces. By Moritz Rosenthal	237
British Players and Singers.—IX. Norman Allin. By H. Julian Kimbell	241
Franck's Organ Music.—III. By Harvey Grace	244
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	249
A Violin Contest; Old versus New	250
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	252
Occasional Notes	252
The Musician's Bookshelf	254
Church and Organ Music	258
The Royal College of Organists and Choir Training	258
Old Village Church Music. By Donald MacArthur	264
Competition Festival Record	268
The Elizabethan Festival	268
The Amateurs' Exchange	268
Letters to the Editor	269
Sixty Years Ago... ..	271
Sharps and Flats	271
Royal Academy of Music	272
Royal College of Music... ..	272
Trinity College of Music... ..	272
Elgar's Music to Binyon's Arthur	272
The Boatswain's Mate and Prince Fereol	272
The Arne Society's Revival of Comus	273
'How to Sing Mozart'	273
'The Orchestral Problem of the Future'	273
London Concerts	274
Music in the Provinces	278
Music in Ireland... ..	281
Musical Notes from Abroad	281
Obituary	283
Miscellaneous	283

MUSIC.

Thus saith my Cloris. Madrigal. By JOHN WILBYE 259
TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS given with this Number:

1. Portrait of Norman Allin.
2. 'After many a dusty mile.' Part-Song. By Edward Elgar.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.
A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than

THURSDAY, APRIL 19 (FIRST POST).

NEW LIGHT ON SOME MASTERPIECES

By MORITZ ROSENTHAL

Who is musical? Public opinion, the importance of which Meilhac, Halévy, and Offenbach in their Orphée aux enfers so humorously and yet convincingly demonstrated, knows little beyond two categories of 'musical musicians' (if the expression be permitted): (1) All composers, particularly those who have worked in erudite and elaborate forms, and if possible with the great pomp of chorus and orchestra; (2) Those performers, professional and amateur, who are able to render a cantilena with feeling. (If this feeling is further aided by means of physical expression, such as gestures and fascinating pantomime, all the better.)

It is superfluous to dilate on the first category. But as concerns the second, expressive delivery of a cantilène is the chief, yet not the only demand made on the musicality of the performer. The melody is the heart of the work, but it is not the work itself. And we are justified in demanding that performers shall understand form, construction of periods, rise and fall in modulation, the delicacy and complexity of the musical texture, the seductive charms of harmony, and, finally, the most secret relations between motifs and themes, and the phrasing proceeding therefrom.

The increasing complexity of musical master-works has called into the field a host of commentators, especially since Beethoven's day. The poetic literary interpretations of Beethoven's music by such men as Robert Schumann, E. T. A. Hoffmann, and (si parva licet componere magnis) Wilhelm v. Lenz, Marx, and some others, are well-known, while Bülow, Klindworth, and Riemann have gained the gratitude of the musical world by their excellent editions of Beethoven's and Chopin's compositions. And yet even these distinguished musicians have overlooked thematic relations and musical subtleties, the recognition of which must increase admiration for the composer and understanding of the work. I give below a number of such passages (which I could increase at will) drawn from the most familiar works of our great masters, and I begin by assigning the place of honour to Beethoven, with his Pianoforte Concerto in E flat major, the so-called Emperor Concerto.

(1) After the E flat triad of the orchestra the pianoforte enters with a cadenza-like introduction of about one and a half pages, which is apparently brilliant rather than thematically important. But if we contemplate it more closely we see a blossoming island emerge from the flood of trills, arpeggios, and scales; it is the passage which Beethoven himself marked espressivo:

We can easily recognise therein the conclusion of the main theme in the form in which we encounter it in later course of the work:

But where in the cadenza is to be found the beginning of the first bar of Ex. 2? Can we imagine that Beethoven contented himself with the final bar, which represents only a fragment, a mere torso, a statue without a head? (We know that pianists are satisfied with this, because the Emperor is the one Concerto they all play.) And yet the beginning of this theme can also be found, if we but know where to look for it. It is hidden in the concluding notes of the trill in connection with the following first notes of the passage:

If the rhythm is taken more freely (such license was frequent with the classics in the cadenza-like passages) the latent theme comes to light. Therefore:

But this passage also:

proceeded from the same supplementary part of the theme (by change of the eighths into sixteenths), a point that must be made clear to the hearer by a slower beginning, the tempo increasing later.

(2) Let us turn to a second example, the glorious Leonore No. 3. First, we must note specially that the exalted theme which begins in E major modulates to F major, then to G minor while still developing, and finally returns to E major by way of the subdominant and dominant (A minor and B major). In classical music this is probably the first instance of such a far-reaching, daring modulation within the compass of the theme:

(3) In the same Overture the beginning of the Presto is usually whirled off as Prestissimo and unaccented, with a view only to dynamic and elementary effect, an effect assured by Beethoven himself by the successive introduction of more and more stringed instruments. But it is now put in quite a new and different light by the preceding thirty-two bars (particularly the first twenty-four). A reminiscence of the motif of the great E major theme (above mentioned) is here developed with genuine Beethoven pertinacity (this time already in the chief fundamental key of C major). Compare:

After a further eight bars the Presto begins as follows :

Ex. 8.
Presto.

Now it is obvious enough that the first three eighths :

Ex. 9.

afterwards changed to :

Ex. 10.

are a sequence-like development of the thematic motif :

Ex. 11.

and that logically, and corresponding to the sforzato of the original motif, the phrasing should be :

Ex. 12.

But in the Presto this is hardly possible. I would therefore suggest beginning this passage somewhat more slowly, and emphasising the second note of Ex. 9. And, with consciousness of its thematic importance, we should repeat this phrasing at the motif of Ex. 10.

In the further accelerando course of the passage we should merely lightly accentuate the highest note every time.

I would further support my opinion by a thematic connection of this Presto with the first four bars of the Overture, a connection which is frequently overlooked :

Ex. 13.

If we turn to the bass we find that, save for the first note, which is dominant instead of tonic, the Presto is a diminution of these first bars. Without such thematic connection this opening phase would disappear altogether out of the piece—a very un-Beethovenish procedure! This relation is a further proof of the need for a more significant delivery of the beginning of the Presto than is generally heard.

(4) One of the most exalted and poetic of the master's compositions is the Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 109, in E major, particularly its final movement, the Andante with Variations. So far as is known to me, the full connection between the third Variation and the theme has heretofore not been pointed out by any of the numerous commentators. The original theme in the upper voice :

Ex. 14.

lies, in the third Variation, in the figuration of the bass, the notes being marked with a * :

Ex. 15.

whereas the brightly humorous staccato eighths in the treble of the Variation are derived from the bass of Ex. 14 by discarding a quarter-note in every bar, so that only two quarter-notes remain.

(5) Variation 4 is more difficult to solve. In order to find the explanation, we must realise that it is formed from Variation 3. Here again the upper voice of the theme is contained in the bass of the Variation ; and the upper voice of the Variation is formed from the bass of the theme, rhythmically diminished to sixteenths and raised a fifth.

(6) I now proceed to some examples of Chopin's genius, a composer whose delicacy, daring, and originality of invention, as regards both melody and harmony, border on the miraculous, while his work is so refined, and at the same time so unobtrusive, that its skill is easily overlooked just because of its apparent ease. Let us, for instance, look at one of his most popular works, the Scherzo in B flat minor, Op. 31. In the polyphonic texture of its middle movement in A major the most important is the following middle voice:

A subordinate, likewise polyphonic, phrase in C sharp minor follows, in which something very noteworthy occurs. The middle voice is the same as in the A major passage, save that it is diminished to a half of the rhythmic value and is raised a fifth:

Chopin employs this diminished theme with an insistence that leaves no doubt as to the importance he attaches to it. Nevertheless there exists a recent edition of Chopin's works, where the passage appears in small print in the polyphonic texture, probably in order to show that it has no significance or, at least, only an ornamental one.

(7) In the crescendo before the Coda of the C sharp minor Scherzo, Op. 39, the great D flat major theme (here written in C sharp major) and its rhythmic diminution with inversion (eighths instead of three-quarter notes) appear together—the former in the treble, the latter in the bass:

(8) Perhaps the most popular Mazurka of the master is that in B flat major, Op. 7, which is regarded by some musicians merely as a piece of dance music. Chopin's sister even writes to him that at a ball at Warsaw they had danced to the sounds of this Mazurka. Let us regard it a little more closely:

Leaping from the dominant, it begins like a dancer stamping his foot in exuberant spirits, and proceeds with such grace, naturalness, and ease that we overlook the fact that in its first three bars it merely dances up a simple scale of one and a half octaves and a fifth down. But more of genuine musical effervescence and humour is to come. At bar 4 the leap is still consonant, demure; in the next two bars we have a dissonant skip-off (a seventh), and a few bars later the leap becomes a very daring ninth; but so great is the art of the composer that these musical pranks do not offend even the most susceptible ear. Hard on these exciting diversions there follows a short movement of calm, playful gracefulness. We are reminded of a butterfly that hovers above a flower, kisses it, and rises again into the blue of the sky, until the former high spirits again hold their own. The harmonious, remarkable, subordinate movement, with the bass in G flat major:

during seven bars, while the treble moves in B flat minor (the G flat of the bass is preparatory for the F appearing in the eighth bar) aroused Mendelssohn's admiration.

(9) In another wonderful Mazurka, Op. 24, B flat minor, we find at the close an organ-point of twenty-seven bars on the tonic. But in the twenty-eighth bar (six bars before the end) something remarkable happens. The composer ceases to emphasise the key by the organ-point, as shown in the following bars:

But does he really give it up? The tones are those which constitute the original triad of the key concerned (B flat major):

And thus Chopin, by giving up the organ-point, secures a still stronger emphasis of the key than if he had steadily retained it.

(10) It may appear daring here to mention Liszt's Don Juan Phantasy, which has always been deemed a mere virtuoso piece, yet it abounds in musical finesse. I shall not speak of the magnificent construction of the Finale, but draw attention rather to the esprit that distinguishes the combination of the joyous Champagne Song with the death-threatening Comthur theme which thunders in the bass. And when, shortly before the close, a tempestuous whirlwind rises, we recognise in spite of the lightning speed of the scales the rhythmical diminution of this same Comthur theme. Still greater esprit is displayed when Liszt in the second Variation of La ci darem la mano menaces Don Juan with the same theme (transposed from A major to B flat minor, D minor, and F sharp minor) with which the gay bon vivant had seduced Zerline. A musically illustrated twinge of conscience! Shall I describe how Schubert from the first two bars of the chief theme of The Wanderer forms the entire material of his Phantasy, Op. 15? Shall I speak of the wonderfully intimate musical feeling of Schumann, who, in the first movement of his C major Phantasy, Op. 17, pictures the key indirectly, performing the remarkable feat of avoiding the triad of C major until shortly before the end, and by such delaying gives to the triad an undreamed of effectiveness? But enough. Jam satis superque. The wonder-world of music is infinite, and there are more things between treble and bass than are dreamt of in our philosophy.

BRITISH PLAYERS AND SINGERS

By H. JULIAN KIMBELL

NO. IX.—NORMAN ALLIN

No one returning to musical London after the war could, in taking stock of the changed scene, its losses and its acquisitions, fail to notice well-planted in the foreground the new form of Norman Allin. In stature and bulk that form is certainly not inconspicuous. It is the sort of form that inspires us with confidence in a singer before a note is sung—a regular giant's form. Seeing a singer of that build, we ought to know we have a right to expect something uncommonly good. Yet how often is it not forgotten to what extent singing is a matter of 'brute force'—at any rate sonorous singing, singing of the sensuously satisfying sort, rich and large! Not of course that the possession of lusty bellows is everything; such a possessor may be a mere barnstormer; but the large, full stream of tone and easy sonorousness that has been admired by listeners so long as singers have had listeners, is only commanded by a mighty fine physical instrument.

But by the 'form' of Norman Allin that would have struck the returned observer of my supposition I do not mean, of course, just the imposing looks of the man; I include also the various gifts of sense and musicianship that this towering young bass of the Beecham Opera Company—its Boris, Gurnemanz, Osmin (of Il Seraglio), and indeed most of the bass characters of that Company's wondrous repertory—proved himself to have. Here (we are justified in exclaiming) is a singer of the great breed, one of the sort whose arrival on the scene is a huge piece of providential luck, for he has the exceptional bodily might and natural vocal predisposition that no amount of taking thought can furnish, be the aspirant never so intelligent, laborious, and ambitious. Norman Allin in short is a born singer. But a large amount of taking thought, too, has gone to the making of the singer that he now is. To be a singer of his sort one's task is by no means all over by being born exceptional! Singers who are merely burly do not get from the 'Gentlemen of the Press' (who, I suggest, are as a rule rather impervious to the sensuous appeal of song) such compliments as these:

How great he is! Has there been anything like him in English music before? (Samuel Langford, 1922).

The Gurnemanz of Mr. Norman Allin was the finest I have ever seen (Ernest Newman, 1920).

... a great singer. He possesses some of the qualities that go to the making of a Chaliapin. The voice is not merely rich and sonorous; it vibrates to a great range of emotions (Richard Capell, 1919).

THE STRENUOUS LIFE

Mr. Allin amiably sat to me for a sketch to be added to this journal's gallery of British executant musicians, and from our talk there emerged above all the vision of Hard Work both in the training of a singer, no matter how providentially gifted, and also in his triumphant career—so easy a primrose path as it may look to the outsider. I was impressed with a career of almost monastic devotion. The singer must be single-hearted towards that stern mistress, his art. His life is an incessant watchfulness and self-control. It is also one of wearing movement and changefulness of scene. (Mr. Allin in an average week spends more hours in trains than the average man spends at work.) Here is a stray page from Norman Allin's diary:

Tuesday: Recording gramophone discs in London; Rheingold, with B.N.O.C., at Bristol. Wednesday: Concert, Shrewsbury. Thursday: Concert, Llandudno. Friday: Concert, Bournemouth. Saturday: Gurnemanz in Parsifal, Bristol. Sunday: Concert, Scarborough. Monday: Queen's Hall, London. Tuesday: Opera, Bristol.

It was this inquirer's fortune not only to catch Mr. Allin in one of the odd hours that he spends at his Wandsworth Common home, but also to hear him rehearsing with his accompanist, Mr. Berkeley Mason. The songs were: the humorous Seminarist of Moussorgsky, an Aria of Mozart, Wolf's Michael Angelo Songs, Loewe's Edward, and Purcell's Arise, ye subterranean winds. To hear him thus in a small room where the least of technical flaws would have been glaringly obvious was an interesting test. I thought more than ever of him on the strength of it.

There was no trace of rawness or stumbling. There was full evidence of a powerful will to succeed and also of a remarkably lively temperament. The better the song, the better he sang. After little more than six years of his public career Mr. Allin now as surely commands his expressive colours and planes of emotion as an organist shifts from manual to manual. It is fascinating to observe at close quarters a singer like this shutting off, coupling up, reinforcing his resonances, bringing his tremendous 'swell' to play in a long-drawn vocal line, or (this bass fellow!) pointing his mezza voce with the fineness and assurance of a lyric-baritone of the Maurel or Battistini type. I felt the more satisfaction in this experience since nothing tests a singer's command more than 'rehearsal singing': for the voice 'at half-cock' is often more difficult to control than at full, the tension being greater.

Occasionally he shifted from full-throated tones to centralising on the hard palate, and one then realised how he obtains the admirable dynamic tone of his Fafner and Hunding. In Edward he employed the sospirando attack as well as did Chaliapin in Boris. Mighty bellows are of course not all this singer's physical equipment: he possesses everything—the lax jaw, the mobile lips, the widely opening throat. It is a many-coloured voice. In its utmost loudness there is a rich, caressing quality. A thought less, either way, of poise, and the voice might be either harsh or booming. But ugly tones are not admitted into Norman Allin's art. It was interesting to notice his readiness to consider his accompanist's criticisms.

A LANCASHIRE LAD

'I was born [Mr. Allin tells me] at Ashton-under-Lyne in 1885. I can't remember the time when music was not an interest. My parents were musical. Two of my sisters sing. I sang in a little Methodist choir from the age of nine, and at singing-classes at school the master used to look to me to lead. My voice broke at the early age of thirteen, and I recall showing off basso profondo effects to my school-fellows. I was then pretty well as tall as I am now—but rather less bulky.' (Mr. Allin, who is 6-ft. 1-in. tall, now weighs 16 stone 11 lbs.)

'My ambitions at about seventeen turned towards architecture, but singing, after all, held the field, and I started lessons with a Manchester baritone, Fowler Burton, and at the same time worked at French, German, harmony, and counterpoint. Composition allured me for a time, as architecture had done; but when I was twenty I won the Lancashire County Council's scholarship for singing (£60 a year for three years), and then threw myself whole-heartedly into vocal work. And, ever since, that has been the line I have plodded along steadily! The scholarship (which was eventually extended to four years) took me to the Manchester Royal College of Music; for the first part of the time I was under John Acton, and afterwards under Francis Harford. But don't think that those four years were the sum of my training! I have never done, and never intend to be done, with training. Always, as I have jogged along, I have been experimenting, always learning, always taking hints from what I consider to be good in others. At the College I was under Dr. Walter Carroll for harmony and counterpoint, and I remember writing then a little String Trio, which was probably pretty appalling stuff!

Sir Henry Wood, Sir Thomas Beecham, and Mrs. Norman Allin (in whom he is proud to boast his most searching and most helpful critic) are the persons to whom he has, he says, owed most gratitude.

'A turning-point in my career came when, in 1913, I sang to Sir Henry Wood. At the moment he was very reserved, and I went away feeling disappointed. But later on I had a letter from him, a letter which I keep and value, telling me that he had succeeded in interesting the Norwich Festival Committee in my behalf. Isn't that characteristic of him—to say so little and to do so much? It did not have a direct result, as the war came and the Festival was cancelled, but the letter fired my ambitions and resolved me to try my wings, so to speak, at the highest flights. It was an inspiration, and under it I worked a thousand times harder than before. I was married now, and living at Manchester, and about this time occurred my début into the important world, when I sang at a Brand Lane concert at Manchester.'

WITH THE BEECHAM OPERA

Norman Allin is by three people in four thought of so much as a purely operatic singer that it may seem queer that opera hasn't yet been mentioned. But he was brought up strictly, not to say puritanically, with the theatre 'out of bounds,' and, indeed, at the time he joined the Beecham Company (1916) he had rarely been inside a theatre. He thought so little of an operatic career that he missed three opportunities of being heard by Sir Thomas Beecham. The fourth occurred in 1916. He was engaged on the spot, and within a fortnight was singing as the Aged Hebrew in Samson and Delilah. Since then Mr. Allin has sung nearly every bass part in the operas produced by Sir Thomas Beecham and the British National Opera Company.

'My favourite part? It is Gurnemanz [declares Mr. Allin], a part which, by the way, I learnt in three weeks. Both the music of it and the character appeal to me enormously. I confess to a partiality for the Ragman in Louise. Hunding is a glorious part, and I have a sneaking regard for Mephistopheles. As a singer I suppose I may be allowed a fair range of sympathies! I dearly love a comic part, like Osmin, or the perfectly ludicrous King Dodon in Rimsky's Golden Cock. I may be a bass, but don't therefore always want to express heavy solemnity!'

I express amazement at his facility for quick study, and he tells me he learnt Hagen in a fortnight—'Ask Percy Pitt!' he adds, with a twinkle.

'I do this memorising work in railway trains. I recall one of those journeys (and so does Frank Mullings!) when time was short and the first performance of Parsifal looming near. That time I was thoroughly frightened. I can't say what, if I had had Faust's opportunity, I wouldn't have bartered for a few more days to grapple privately with that score. Between ourselves, I shouldn't be surprised if Mullings wasn't nearly as anxious as I. Anyhow, we exchanged hardly a word all the way, but glued our eyes to the score and kept drinking it in—only 'drinking' is too easy a process to describe it! Well, the memorising of it stuck. But I haven't often felt such relief as in seeing the curtain rung down on that first Parsifal performance.

'The only way of singing a long part is to keep straight on. It sounds a paradox, but I should say that to sing any opera rôle you don't want to think of what comes next—you want to carry on as though the part possessed you.'

ON SINGING IN ENGLISH

Allin is a firm believer in English singers singing to English audiences in—English! An Italian singing teacher lately pleaded in a London journal for the use of Italian in all operatic performances.

'Italian, of course, is easier [Mr. Allin commented], but I believe in the musical qualities of English, and particularly in its variety. And then English is a far more adequate equivalent of Wagner's German than Italian or French. Personally I know no greater pleasure than in the vocal modulations of Gurnemanz (who has such a lot of talking to do). What is Gurnemanz without a certain ruggedness and massiveness, and without sharply outlined, weighty words to utter? And to my ears Hans Sachs's monologue in French or Italian would sound absurdly wrong, whereas in English it sounds every bit as natural and right as in German. There is a dramatic element, after all, in opera, and words do play a considerable part; the opera singer is not justified in choosing the merely easiest words any more than the merely easiest music. As for English being "unsingable"—that is a sheer confession of incompetence. Because our language is not one stream of open vowels some foreign-trained singers talk as though there were none at all to sing. In properly "pointed" English diction the open vowels show up particularly importantly by contrast with the so many other varied elements. I assume of course that English be properly sung and not just mouthed.

'Another matter is the sort of English that is offered as translations of foreign opera. It is amazing—and a scandal—how some of these get into print. Often we singers of the B.N.O.C. gather together and hatch out English versions of our own, when it is only too obvious that the authorised version was written by one who knew nothing of music or of singing, and less still of the art of writing sense in English.'

If opera was not Mr. Allin's first love, it has now captivated him to the point when he feels that a singer can be at his very best only in opera.

'The liberty of gesture and movement helps one's singing infinitely, and that is one reason why English opera is necessary if the state of singing in England is to be good. Coming to the concert-platform after the stage one feels the whole position and attitude to be cramped. And then on the stage you haven't time to be nervous.'

'Nervous! But you of all folks aren't ever nervous?'

'I am the most nervous man that ever lived. I am more nervous now than I ever was. Sometimes I say I will give it all up—that the life is not worth living.'

LEARNING AND FORGETTING

Questions of technique cropped up.

'When you hear the theory that one should sing by the light of instinct and that technique can be over-rated, you are wasting your time listening to nonsense! A singer should at first think of his physical technique as much as a prize-fighter—and more. And then he should forget it.

'The ideal is that it should be automatic—second nature. But you cannot take a short cut by not grappling with it at the first. On the other hand, if you don't forget technical problems your delivery is hampered; you are too taut and too studied. The advice is sometimes given, "Think, when you sing, of your diaphragm," or "Think of an open throat," or other things. But the ideal is to be in the state when you are thinking about nothing but the composer's work and the emotions it stirs up in you. I am much aware how far I am from my ideal. But I know that if when I sing I were to be thinking of a particular "stance" or a particular method, I should be much worse.

'I hold strongly that a singer owes it to his friends and the community to be reasonably practical and trustworthy. The "artistic temperament" is no excuse for breaking appointments and muddling engagements. And it is part of his job to look after his body and keep it fit, as carefully as a violinist looks after his Stradivari. The singer's body is his Stradivari. What is reasonable relaxation in another man (in the way of smoking and so on) is a prohibited debauch for a singer. Anyone who can do such a part as Mozart's Osmin must have taken every care to keep fit. You remember that the notes range from low D to high F, and he sings his big aria in the Ladder Scene of the last Act immediately after fighting a duel. If your voice here slips a cog, you betray Mozart!'

Mr. Allin bears this grudge against the modern composers, that they hardly ever write specifically for the bass voice. Unlike Purcell, Handel, and Bach—whom Mr. Allin confesses to be the chief composers of his predilection—they appear to care little for its characteristic effects.

'What [he complains] have Vaughan Williams, Holst, Goossens, or Bax written that I can sing? There really is not an unlimited range of interesting solo music for a bass. Even Schubert does not yield a great deal, unless you are going to risk changing a song's character by a big transposition. I am now working at Schumann's Poet's Love, but several of the songs have to be transposed. My compass? From D below to F sharp above—but I do not want a dozen F sharps in a bunch!'

The British National Opera Company is the cause to which, above all, Mr. Norman Allin is devoted. When the history of the revival of English opera is written his name will rank high among the admirable and disinterested artists who, under great difficulties, at great expenditure of energy and at no small material sacrifice, have in recent years passionately laboured to keep operatic performances in English alive and, in as great a measure as possible, worthy of the generally quickened spirit of music in England to-day.

FRANCK'S ORGAN MUSIC*

BY HARVEY GRACE

III

After the Six Pieces Franck produced no more organ music for sixteen years. He then wrote a set of three pieces—Fantaisie, Cantabile, and Pièce Héroïque. Of these only the Pièce Héroïque has so far had a wide vogue in this country. Now that the Cantabile is among the test-pieces for the ensuing Associates' Examination at the Royal College of Organists, it, too, will make many friends.

PIÈCE HÉROÏQUE

The use of manual 16-ft. and 8-ft. registers combined for soloing purposes is as a rule confined to the upper half of the keyboard, for obvious reasons. And, such solos being mostly on the quiet side, reed or string tone is customary—soft flue work would tend to hollowness. The Pièce Héroïque derives much of its impressiveness from a highly expressive subject delivered low on the Great with 16-ft. and 8-ft. diapason tone, against an accompaniment of repeated chords on the Choir (with Swell coupled). The effect is that of an exceptionally elastic pedal solo:

Ex. 1. Allegro maestoso.
Ch.

* Mr. J. R. Rosser writes from Abergeveany, pointing out a slip in my article of last month. Speaking of Franck's Pastoral, I said that in the final section the first subject has a new counter-theme above it. I am still wondering how I managed to forget that the upper part is merely the crotchet theme which appears in the first page, now combined with the opening subject. If there be any excuse for the blunder, it may be found in the fact that the article had to be written in haste, and mostly away from my music.—H. G.

This troubled, questioning mood is carried on by a strain in which the rhythm of bar 3 of the subject is made much of, with some striking modulations—F sharp minor, F minor, and E minor being passed through in a few bars. There is fine harmony in the passage where the hands come together on the Great:

Ex. 2.

From the climax thus worked up emerges a semiquaver arpeggio on the Choir, against which the Great delivers a figure derived from bar 3, before working its way back chromatically over a series of six-fours and a pedal point to a resumption of the main theme. The beginning of this passage gives us an unusual and ingenious use of two manuals:

—tricky work that must be memorised if it is to come off with neatness and dispatch.

Composers may be presumed to know best how to provide necessary contrast, but too often we find them miscalculating. After so much treatment of a subject broken in character we should have expected Franck to devise something broad and continuous for a second subject. Instead, however, he chooses a square-cut theme—two four-bar phrases followed by several of two bars, each separated by a bar's rest, while the pedals deliver a drum-like figure. Fortunately, he soon draws the texture closer by means of some delightful figuration in the left hand. The drum figure is finely used on page 6 beneath some two-manual treatment of the opening phrase of the second subject, and a very Beethovenish climax leads the way back to the main theme, given first to the left hand and then to the pedals. A splendid version of its continuation (ff très largement) leads to a half-close on the dominant, and the piece ends with a full organ statement of the second subject. As this is the less striking of the two principal themes, the end of the work lets us down somewhat. The last page hangs fire slightly, instead of developing the final bit of fresh energy that the piece demands. At all events, that is how it strikes me.

An excellent point in this fine work is its continuity. There are none of the irritating holds-up that spoil so much of Franck's music, and the registration is on the whole easily managed. It is important to note that there is no change of tempo at the middle section. The drop from quaver to crotchet movement is all the slowing-up that is called for. And the più lento of the last page must not be overdone, for the same reason.

CANTABILE

This beautiful piece shows Franck at his very best. It is moderate in length, the harmony is rich without being cloying or over-chromatic, and the stream of tune, beginning quietly, grows in intensity and subsides at the end without a suspicion of drying up. It covers a wide range, sometimes appearing as a treble solo, sometimes as a tenor, and it comes in for a delightful bit of canonic treatment, too. And all the while there is a warmly-beautiful harmonic background, distinctly Wagnerian in places. Here is a passage, for example, that would be quite at home in Tristan:

This genuine song without words gives scope for a tasteful use of rubato—though one hesitates to suggest a device that too often leads to mere bad time. The registration is simple. A good reed on the Swell is called for. (It has already been pointed out that the Trompette indicated by Franck was a quiet stop on the St. Clotilde organ—an oboe rather than a trumpet.) When the melody appears in the tenor on page 2 it may be advisable to add a diapason. The tenor solo on the Great on page 3 calls for discretion. The accompaniment on the Choir (Swell coupled) is marked pp, in view of the crescendo to f a few bars later, so our Great solo stop must be a quietish one. We may add a stop to it at the beginning of the phrase two bars later, and still another at the forte, reducing in the bar before the canon. A telling 8-ft. pedal stop is effective in this canonic passage. The ff on page 4 must not mislead us into shooting out a bagful of stops at that point. The climax is largely in the music itself—the widespread chord in the right hand and the accented dominant ninth in the left—so the case will be met by adding a stop or two at the beginning of the phrase (with the Swell-box closed, of course), and making a sforzando at the climax.

FANTAISIE

It must be confessed that the Fantaisie is on the whole disappointing. It abounds in beautiful harmonic and rhythmic effects, there is a touching second subject, and a fine climax in which two themes are combined in double counterpoint. But there are far too many pauses—no less than sixteen, besides a good many rests and silent bars. There is an overdose of repeated chords, too—a form of accompaniment not well suited to the organ, because the player cannot tone them down as he can on the pianoforte. The piece makes a fine left-hand study, containing as it does a lot of this kind of thing:

It is only fair to add that many good judges esteem the Fantaisie highly, so perhaps there is more in it than I have been able to discover.

THREE CHORALS

These works are sometimes announced on recital programmes as Chorale Preludes—very misleadingly. The term suggests a type with which Franck's Chorals have little in common. In only one of them—No. 3—is the main theme of a markedly hymnlike character, and even in this case the work stands well away from the chorale prelude family by reason of its important adagio section, which owes nothing of its origin to the main theme. The Chorals are merely fine examples of the large variation form of Beethoven's last period. Franck's music has a good deal of the lofty and remote feeling of Bach, but in regard to form and methods of development he looked rather to Bonn than to Leipsic. The Three Chorals are so interesting from a structural point of view—especially No. 1—that I propose to analyse them in some detail. More than any other organ works of Franck they must be understood to be thoroughly enjoyed. That is why they perhaps appeal more to player than to hearer.

Choral No. 1 presents us at the outset with a departure from chorale prelude tradition, the choral making its appearance as a kind of Coda to a longish section consisting of several themes, none of which have more than a slight flavour of hymn-tune. The choral continues in this modest rôle of tag until the third variation (page 10). From this point it becomes more and more insistent, until it appears on the full organ and ends the work. No amount of familiarity seems able to destroy the fine effect of this gradual emergence and final triumph of a theme that had been kept in the background for the greater part of the work. Describing the piece to his pupils, Franck said: 'You will see the real choral. It is not the choral; it is something that grows out of the work.' This remark merely fogs us until we carefully examine the music. Let us take the subjects as set out by Franck, and see how he manages this 'growing-out.'

What may be called the Exposition lasts until the third line on page 3. It may be divided into seven sections: a, bars 1-8; b, 8-15; c, 16-23; d, 23-30; e, 30-36; f, 36-46. The theme which Franck called 'the real choral' then follows—we will call it g. Here are the beginnings of these seven motives, in their order of entry:

The first six are more or less connected: c is a repetition of a, exact as to the part quoted, but changed in its continuation; b and d are alike in rhythm; f is a variant of e. An impatient reader asks, Why not look on the whole of these forty-six bars as one section? The answer is that Franck clearly regarded the constituents as separate themes, for in the first variation he treats only a, c, and e, and in the second only a and d.

Although, as we see, the choral (g) makes its appearance as a kind of pendant to the exposition, the close of the first variation finds it growing slightly in importance. It is laid out rather more fully, and embellished with interludes derived from a. It is, however, still little more than a mere Coda.

The maestoso passage on page 6 brings on the scene the figure:

evidently derived from bar 7 of page 4:

From it is developed a highly expressive cantabile of a page and a half against a background slightly suggestive of the harmonic basis of a, now in the tonic minor.

We then have some fine treatment of d. The sudden plunge into the key of a major third below, with which it opens, is a favourite device of Franck. Here it is combined with another characteristic effect—a pedal point on the mediant:

Ex. 9.

CHOIR.

or two awkward places, and we may well help ourselves by applying his suggestions elsewhere. For example, at the top of page 11 we need not hesitate to avoid the tenth at the third beat of the first bar by playing the C an octave lower, just as Franck has suggested we should treat the D flat in the next bar. And the same plan may be followed in the left-hand part in bars 1 and 2 of the next page.

The second Choral has for its main theme a bold melody of sixteen bars, ending in the dominant. It is announced by the pedals without introduction of any kind, and has a pronounced flavour of the passacaglia. It is repeated three times, with a fine growth of interest in harmony, the third repetition beginning in the subdominant and ending of course in the tonic. Unfortunately this splendid and arresting opening is followed by a scrappy section in which no fewer than four new subjects are announced, all of them much less striking than the first. The wished-for return to the main theme is still further held-off by a page of largamente con fantasia which contributes nothing of moment; it merely provides a leisurely and roundabout way from B major to G minor.

The only striking feature of this part is a descending passage based on diminished thirds, and therefore smacking of the tonal scale:

Ex. 10.

It ceases to be odd when we remember that it is merely an implication of:

Ex. 11.

&c.

The third variation starts on line 2 of page 10, and at once begins to bring g, the choral, into prominence. It appears three times (as tenor, treble, and bass), with the cantabile derived from Ex. 7 as a counter-subject—a good example of the expressive use of double counterpoint. After a working-up page in which a plays a prominent part, the choral bursts forth triumphantly in E major in big chords, with canonic imitation by the pedals, the whole being rounded off by a semiquaver flourish—a diminution of a drawn from the opening of the first variation.

There is an element of the dramatic in this struggling forth of a subject from the position of pendant to that of principal. Perhaps Franck got the idea from Beethoven's Prometheus music, or from the Finale of the Eroica, where what appears to be a theme for variation turns out after all to be merely the bass of the real subject.

It must be confessed that the first two pages of this work are over-chromatic and restless, but there can be no two opinions about the beauty of the remainder.

The registration is not difficult, most of the effects being obtained from three quiet, well-contrasted manuals. The manual work in the third variation is trying, especially for players with small hands. Franck gives an alternative in one

Having at long length got to G minor Franck treats the principal theme fugally—a delightful section, this. The theme is then played twice on the pedals, with the second subject used above it. Ought the pedal to be of 8-ft. or 16-ft. pitch here? Opinions differ. Some players hold that the real bass of the harmony is in the left-hand part and that the pedal should be of 8-ft. (or 8-ft. and 4-ft.) pitch, thus giving the theme as a tenor solo—an effect much used by French composers old and new. This seems reasonable so far as the E flat minor section is concerned, but in the next presentment of the theme the pedal part lies so low that even with an 8-ft. stop it would sometimes sound below the left-hand part. Franck gives no indication of any kind. This means little, however, seeing that he was engaged in settling the registration of the Chorals at the time of his death, and so a few points may have been overlooked. On the whole the most satisfactory result is got by adding to the 16-ft. pedal-stop already out a telling 8-ft. (or even an 8-ft. and 4-ft.) stop at the pedal entry on page 24. The theme should certainly be brought out, otherwise it is killed by the far less striking second subject in the treble. A fine working-up section (in which the counter-subject of the fugal section plays a prominent part) leads to an imposing final statement of the chief theme:

Ex. 12. Gt. and Ped. Reeds.

It is a pity Franck did not end with this, instead of following it with one of the secondary subjects. A weakish and over-chromatic theme, played on the Swell, pp, with tremulant (Franck's direction), it sounds futile after the bold splendour of the choral tune.

This work is far less subtle than No. 1, and less brilliant and satisfying than No. 3, but it contains a lot of fine music, and is always first-rate when dealing with the opening subject. These passages are, I think, finer than anything in the two other Chorales. It is a pity we cannot extract them and play the work as a passacaglia. It would rank with the two outstanding Organ Passacaglias—Bach's, and the E minor of Rheinberger.

In Choral No. 3 the principal subject is led into by two pages of preludial matter consisting of broken arpeggios alternated with slowly-built-up chords—fairly conventional material, of which a good deal is made later. The Choral theme is modal in flavour, despite some chromatic moments. It is given out twice, with some development of the introductory matter. We then have a section marked adagio—one of the tenderest and most beautiful passages in organ music:

Ex. 13. Swell Foundation stops, Sft. Oboe, Trump.

After two pages of this lovely stream of melody, the choral returns, now richly harmonized, and with the opening phrase of the adagio used as interludes. Some very characteristic development of this adagio theme leads to a statement in the treble of the first phrase of the choral, capped by an emphatic delivery of the same by double pedal, the last note settling down as a pedal point (Franck's favourite mediant), over which a big climax is built up:

Ex. 14. Choir Reeds and foundation stops, 16-ft.

Two exciting pages follow, the prelude broken arpeggios modulating over a series of pedal points through D flat, D, and B to C sharp minor, at which point the choral begins to assert itself. Finally after a vigorous crescendo it appears ff in right-hand chords, against left-hand arpeggios derived from the introduction—arpeggios that are apt to be lost when powerful reeds are used, so these stops are best reserved till the ritenuto on the last page. The closing bars recall the slow arpeggiando chords of the opening, but they are now built down instead of up. These closing pages are very brilliant and sonorous.

It is generally agreed that No. 3 is the pick of the set. Its superiority—at all events its ready appeal—is no doubt due to its being based on three subjects (if we may regard the introductory flourish as a subject) instead of on a half-dozen or so, as is the case with Nos. 1 and 3. It is, on the whole, the easiest to play, and its registration is comfortable. It suffers sometimes from too rhapsodical a performance at the hands of players who apparently forget that all the necessary freedom and fantasy are in the notes themselves; any additional caprice is likely to make it sound merely eccentric. And I have heard the exquisite adagio portion ruined by a rubato so violent that the rhythm and relative note-values have disappeared. It may be as well to add that the worst travesty came from a famous recitalist whose technique is equal to the severest demands. Unfortunately this passage—like the work as a whole—called not for sensational technique, but for something that the famous recitalist had been too busy to acquire.

These three pieces, despite some lapses, are among the choice things in organ music. Franck, we know, added the finishing touches on his death-bed. The fact reminds us of two other great men whose musical 'last words' were spoken through the organ—Bach and Brahms. The Three Chorals are fit company for Before Thy throne I come and the Eleven Choral Preludes.

Gramophone Notes

BY 'DISCUS'

The recent shortage of orchestral records is more than made up this month, so many having been sent for review that space is insufficient to do them all justice. One might, for example, turn out an article of decent length on the remarkable set of Wagnerian records just issued by H.M.V. on six 12-in. d.-s. and three 12-in. s.-s., but the particulars, plus a few comments, must suffice. The series opens with a d.-s. of a couple of extracts from the Rhinegold (I give the exact titles, so that you may spot your favourite bits)—'The Dawn over Valhalla: Alberich steals the gold' and 'The Descent to Nibelheim: the Capture of Alberich.' From the Valkyrie come (a) The Prelude: 'Siegmond seeks shelter from the storm' and 'Siegmond sees the sword hilt in the tree'; (b) 'Siegmond greets the spring night' and the Finale from Act I, 'Siegmond draws out the sword'; (c) The Introduction to Act 2, 'Brünnhilde's battle cry,' 'Wotan warns Brünnhilde not to disobey'; (a) 'Brünnhilde foretells Siegmund's death'; the 'Ride of the Valkyries'; (e) 'Brünnhilde gives Sieglinde the broken sword' and 'Brünnhilde implores the protection of fire.' On the three single-sided records are further extracts from the Valkyrie—'Wotan bids farewell to Brünnhilde,' 'Wotan kisses Brünnhilde into a deep slumber,' and 'The rock is surrounded by fire.' The conductors are Albert Coates and Eugène Goossens, the vocalists Florence Austral, Edith Furmedge, Tudor Davies, Clarence Whitehill, and Robert Radford. The singing is in English, though we are not always aware of the fact. But in most of this music the voice has to play second fiddle, so nobody will complain if a good deal of the text has to be taken on trust. And anyway, the usual Wagner libretto is such tosh that it can well be spared. The reproduction is extraordinarily good. Remembering an evening at Covent Garden recently, during which I dozed through the Valkyrie, I feel that for those of us who know the opera and can fill in the gaps, this is the way to take our Wagner. After all, it is merely a development of the 'cut.' At the opera-house the works are cut, not always skilfully, and rarely in a drastic enough manner. Life is short and art is long; when it is so confoundedly long as the Ring something sweeping has to be done about it, and this method of taking Wagner potted and under our own roof-tree is made the easier by the descriptive booklet issued by the H.M.V., in which a note on the Ring is followed by a detailed description of each record, with music-type illustrations. Of course, another use of the series is as by way of preparation for a visit to the opera. Primed beforehand with these records and descriptive notes, one may go to a few performances and speedily become the compleat Wagnerian. This enterprise of the H.M.V. is the best thing they have done so far. Their records of the Emperor Concerto and the Fifth Symphony merely give us music that is already played to death in London concert-halls, whereas opportunities for hearing lengthy extracts from the Ring, with first-rate vocalists, are rare. So I take off my hat to the H.M.V., and look forward to the day when we shall have a series of records of Wagner's best and least-heard opera—The Mastersingers.

From the Columbia Company come some admirable orchestral numbers: Turina's Danzas Fantásticas on two 12-in. d.-s., played by the Queen's Hall Orchestra conducted by Sir Henry Wood—vividly picturesque affairs; an old friend, The Caliph of Bagdad Overture, and Chabrier's Habañera, played by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Eugène Goossens (12-in. d.-s.); and a selection from Pagliacci (12-in. d.-s.), played by the Queen's Hall Light Orchestra, conducted by Alick Maclean.

The Columbia Company has now started on the educational track with a set of three 10-in. d.-s. records showing the characteristics of the instruments of the orchestra—violin, viola, 'cello (no double-bass), piccolo, flute, and oboe; cor Anglais, clarinet, bass clarinet, bassoon, contra bassoon, and horn; trumpet, cornet, trombone, bass trombone, and tuba. All play the same example—a familiar phrase or two from Beethoven. There are advantages in hearing them in this way, but I fancy that their characteristics are better shown by passages well suited to their peculiarities. The phrase from a Beethoven Scherzo delivered by the tuba or bass clarinet, for example, merely shows what they cannot do, i.e., play a lively tune. An accompanying pamphlet consists of a note by Major J. T. Bavin, an explanation of each instrument by Lieut. H. E. Adkins, and well-produced illustrations.

Last of the orchestral records, and second to none in vivid clearness, are two H.M.V. 12-in. d.-s. of Strauss's Don Juan, conducted by Albert Coates.

A good military band record is one of the 1st Life Guards in a selection from Ruddigore (Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.-s.).

Chamber music is scanty this month, and the two records received happen to be arrangements. In a record of 'O dolce contento,' from the Magic Flute, and a Valse de concert by Wilcocke, played by flute and clarinet (Robert Murchie and Haydn Draper) with pianoforte, the interest lies mainly in the brilliant playing of these two well-known wood-windists (Col. 10-in. d.-s.). From the Æ.-Voc. comes a 12-in. d.-s. with the second and third movements of Mozart's Trio in E, arranged by Tertis for violin, viola, and pianoforte, played by the arranger, Sammons, and Ethel Hobday—a very pleasant and well produced bit of music.

The three pianoforte records are rather above the average in interest—the Schumann-Liszt Fruhlingsnacht and Schumann's Traumeswirren, played by Moiseiwitsch (H.M.V. 10-in. d.-s.); Sapelnikov, brilliant in a Gavotte of his own and Liszt's Le Rossignol (Æ.-Voc. 10-in. d.-s.); and a 12-in. d.-s. Col. of Busoni in Chopin's A major Prelude and G flat Study, a Scotch Step by Beethoven, and the player's transcription of what is vaguely described as a 'Prelude to Choral' by Bach. The last-named is the Chorale Prelude on Rejoice now, good Christian souls, the melody of which is well-known in this country as 'Luther's Hymn,' and therefore associated with solemnity rather than with the sprightliness shown here. It is a pity the chorale melody does not stand out more clearly in this record. The hearer unfamiliar with it is apt to notice little beyond the scintillating right-hand part. It is a wonderful little piece, and although we may be sure that Bach never dreamt of it in this dazzling form, we may be equally certain that he would have enjoyed it. Busoni makes the Scotch Step an engaging thing, too, with Beethoven in a new rôle.

Two brilliant violin records have just been issued: Sarasate's Zapateado, played by Heifetz (H.M.V. 10-in.), and Sevcik's Bohemian Dance and Moszkowsky's Guitarre (arranged by Sarasate), played by Bratza (Col. 10-in. d.-s.). In the Heifetz and in the second of the Bratza performances there are some fascinating passages in harmonics.

Two much-arranged—in fact, too-much arranged—pieces appear as 'cello solos played by Warwick Evans: Handel's Largo and Mozart's Ave Verum (Æ.-Voc. 10-in. d.-s.). After hearing them in all sorts of forms for many years I am more than ever persuaded that they are best as their composers left them—tenor solo and chorus respectively.

Of a large batch of vocal records I have space to mention only a few: Elgar's Sea Pictures, sung by Leila Megane, with orchestral accompaniment, conducted by the composer (two 12-in. d.-s. H.M.V.)—words not always clear, otherwise excellent; orchestral part a feature, especially in 'In Haven'—'Na, Gretelchen hier warte, Gretelchen' (10-in.) and 'Der kleine Sandmann bin ich' (12-in. H.M.V.), from Hansel and Gretel, sung by Alma Gluck and Louise Homer; 'Home to our mountains,' from Il Trovatore, sung by Margaret Balfour and Hardy Williamson, and 'Fierce now the flames glow,' from the same opera, sung by Margaret Balfour (Æ.-Voc. 10-in. d.-s.); 'Promesse de mon avenir,' from Le Roi de Lahore, sung by Eric Marshall (Æ.-Voc. 12-in., with explanatory notes); 'Addio, Mignon,' from Mignon, sung by Lenghi-Cellini (Æ.-Voc. 10-in., with explanatory notes); 'Thou'rt passing hence,' and Pinsuti's The Raft, sung (all too well) by Malcolm McEachern (Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.-s.); and Nazareth and Fauré's The Palms, sung (again better than the songs deserve) by Norman Allin (Col. 12-in. d.-s.). There is also an impressive Chaliapin record, 'Song of the Viking Guest,' from Sadko, and a trivial Tetrizzini, 'Ombra leggera,' from Dinorah. Both these are H.M.V. 12-in. If there is a more desolatingly banal piece of coloratura flappedoodle than this Dinorah song it has yet to come my way. (I hope it won't.)

A VIOLIN CONTEST: OLD VERSUS NEW

The Æolian Hall was not nearly large enough to contain all who wished to be present at the final stage of the Cobbett competition for British makers of stringed instruments. The Lord Mayor presented the prizes—the first (£25) to Mr. Alfred Vincent, and three prizes of £10 each to Messrs. W. Robinson, A. Richardson, and W. Glenister. After the winning instruments had been heard in performances by the adjudicators (Messrs. Albert Sammons, Alfred Hobday, Cedric Sharpe, and W. W. Cobbett), the Vincent violin and a Stradivari were played behind a screen, the audience being invited to indicate their preference by a show of hands. On this occasion, as at previous tests of the kind, the voting was a slight, but clear, majority in favour of the modern instrument.

During the proceedings Mr. Cobbett addressed the gathering in an informing and enthusiastic speech which we are glad to be able to give in full. He said:

At this stage of the proceedings a few explanatory words on the aims and ends of this competition will not be out of place. As a preliminary, I will ask your indulgence for the use of the word 'luthier' to express a maker of all kinds of stringed instruments. It is French, I know, but convenient, and it clamours for admission into our language.

These aims are perhaps more tinged with democratic sentiment than those would imagine who do me the honour of taking an interest in those of my activities which relate to chamber music—an art touched with the finer and deeper issues of abstract music, and therefore appealing only to a limited section of the community.

The violin, considered as an instrument, is more (or if you prefer, less) than the prima donna of the symphony orchestra, the leader of that wonderful combination the string quartet, or the instrument which in the hands of a virtuoso sways the emotions of large audiences in the concert-rooms of great cities.

In its fine art aspect it has won through from the first. Certainly in early days, in the 16th century, it began badly, relegated to the playing of ribald tunes to the profane vulgar, and looked upon with disfavour by the dignified performers upon instruments of the sober viol family; but it quickly took its place as the interpreter of the higher aspirations of the serious musician and his ecclesiastical patrons.

The luthiers of the Brescian school, Andreas Amati and Gasparo da Salo, responded by producing violins so perfect in tone and craftsmanship that they have been excelled only to a fractional extent by such artists as Stradivari and Guarneri.

It is not to be wondered at that the composers of each succeeding generation have utilised an instrument (or group of instruments) brought to such a pitch of perfection, for the writing of the glorious ensemble music they have given to the world of educated musicians. Educated, yes. But what of the greater world of uneducated music-lovers? They also have to be considered. The violin meant little to them half-a-century ago, as I well remember. There lingered still a little of the old contemptuous feeling, but now the violin has come into its own.

I hope I shall not disturb the equanimity of the 'superior person' if I say that, though the truth cannot be contested that much trash is played, and sometimes very badly played, at cinemas, restaurants, hotels, piers, &c., a great deal of string music of a very appealing kind is heard in these locales, occasionally finely played by competent performers, even by conservatoire-trained artists. It results that the general public, even the proletariat, has awakened to the fact that the violin, lately held so cheap, is adding a touch of romance to its drab existence, and for once the aspirations of the democratic thinker are realised. Further we are reminded by to-day's doings of the important rôle played by the luthier in this peaceful revolution, so far removed from the public eye.

Players have increased and multiplied enormously, and all are seeking for old violins by makers of repute, but there are not enough to go round. Each year sees a diminution of their number by accident and by wear and tear. There you have the fount and origin of these competitions. The day has come when the production of good new violins has become a pressing need.

Five years ago it came under my notice that British luthiers were turning out some remarkably fine instruments, among them Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, to the excellence of whose new violins I pay willing tribute. But, as usual, the dear old sluggish British public was taking little notice, and importing in great numbers from abroad fiddles much inferior to those of native origin, and so it occurred to me to institute a Violin Competition open to British luthiers alone.

Fifty-six responded, and my house was invaded by a procession of fiddle-cases of coffin-like aspect, which led to a rumour in the neighbourhood that I was starting a necropolis. If I had done so, perhaps three thousand years hence—but I will not pursue that subject any further.

Nor will I bore you with details. I will only say that the letters I have since received from luthiers all over the country assuring me that the competition had materially served the cause, impelled me to start another of these laborious undertakings, and this time I invited luthiers to submit a complete quartet of instruments, sixteen of which you see before you to-day.

This naturally had the effect of limiting the number of competitors, for it is one thing to make a violin, another to take on those violins of a larger growth, the viola and 'cello—a much more difficult task. Twenty entered in the first instance; but I may mention that another dozen of would-be entrants have appeared on the horizon during the last few days. Finally, thirteen submitted sets of instruments, fifty-two in all, and Mr. G. A. Parker, of Wood Green (to whom I am much indebted) took charge of them. At his place a series of eliminating tests were made last month, leaving the four sets you see before you to be adjudicated upon to-day.

My Lord Mayor has distributed the prizes, so that you know already that Mr. Alfred Vincent has come out first, and I heartily congratulate him upon his success. Though a comparatively young man, his work was known to Joachim, who gave him great encouragement. In one respect he has a great pull over the average luthier, being a solo violinist and quartet leader. He is principal violin at His Majesty's, and Mr. Fletcher, the conductor, speaks enthusiastically of his abilities. You can imagine how priceless an advantage it must be to a maker to be an accomplished player as well as luthier, with ear attuned to every nuance of tone. As recently as yesterday week, in a large theatre, he performed upon one of the instruments submitted, and I think you will be as astonished as I was to hear that it was then still 'in the white.' On another of his violins, after only two days' probation, Mr. Sammons performed the Elgar Concerto to a packed audience at Queen's Hall a few weeks ago. On yet another Mr. Arthur Beckwith has been playing with success at New York, so that it must be conceded that the prize-winner has made good.

Mr. William Robinson, to whose instruments many artists have been attracted by their fine tonal qualities, though working for a time as a saddler, has always had the ambition to make violins. Quite a touching account of his youthful aspirations is to be found in the Rev. Meredith Morris's book on British violin-makers:

'As a boy [he says] I spent my coppers, not on sweets, but on the empty boxes which had contained them. These I converted into fiddles for the country lads to play upon. I toiled through weary years up to manhood, and dreamed of the time when I should make a real fiddle. I am happy to have lived to see my dreams come true.'

I too am happy that Mr. Robinson has won a prize to-day, for he has the true spirit of the craftsman who does not work entirely for pelf.

We were all very much struck by the beauty of Mr. Arthur Richardson's work, but not surprised, for, like old Stradivari, he is an expert wood-carver. The arts are not so far apart. I read in Mr. Heron Allen's indispensable book on violin-making that the great Benvenuto Cellini, whose father was a luthier, condescended to design and execute the ornaments for a violin.

Mr. Richardson won the first prize in 1917, and tells me that his success has brought him numerous commissions at home and abroad. On this occasion he has acquitted himself admirably, and his instruments will repay your careful examination.

Mr. William Glenister has been in his time a jack-of-all-trades, and it is surprising that he has been able to turn out with his own hands violins of such excellent tonal characteristics. But such surprises are not uncommon in the violin world. Mr. George Robey as violin-maker would seem at first blush to be a humorous proposition—but no! He has not only made some very satisfactory violins, but writes to me: 'Later on I may be able to do something for the violin industry.'

In what does the art of violin-making consist? We know the luthier's aims—tone quality, tone equality, tone volume, to which must be added adequate adjustment; but is scientific accuracy the desideratum, or is it—the adjustment of course excepted—a matter of inspiration, of intuition? I incline to the latter view. The word empirical is not a pleasant one, but it is of honourable application in this case. The thicknesses and the curves must vary in harmony with the density of the wood employed, and here comes the manifestation of the luthier's talent. Also he must have a flair in the choice of the wood. For example, if the wood is soft the plates must be thicker. Stradivari seemed to have found some exceptionally hard pine, and was able to make thinner plates with safety. Old violins from his master hand, in perfect condition, will always be sought after, and prices, high as they are, will go on increasing; but the old creaks, badly cracked and played out, will have a mere curio value. They offer no resistance to the bow, they have no sting, and this is where the new violins come in. The same applies of course to the violoncello, and it is worthy of note that Pablo Casals is playing just now on a brand new instrument for that very reason.

My last words will relate to the judging. A violin-maker said to me the other day, 'You have a ticklish job before you, Sir.' It is indeed a ticklish job, an amalgamation of listening and playing, especially playing. To judge by listening alone is dangerous, and I will tell you why. The personality of the player obscures the basic tone of the instrument, and the greater the artist the stronger the personality.

To judge bow in hand is much safer, the player being all the time conscious of the tone-quality of the instrument. Here you have the secret of the fabulous prices paid for violins of the master luthiers. The possessor of such an instrument finds in the quality of tone a recurring joy each time he passes the bow across the strings. No Epicurean ever devised a greater luxury.

I thank my personal friend, Mr. Albert Sammons, a great artist whose playing you all know and admire, for what he has done and is about to do this afternoon, and I thank also those admirable chamber-music players, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Hobday and Mr. Cedric Sharpe for their invaluable services, also the much esteemed members of my home quartets. And I have to express not only my own gratitude, but that of every luthier in the country, to the Federation of British Music Industries for organizing this function at great expense. It is simply splendid of them. Further, I have to thank the proprietor of the Strad newspaper—the organ of the British luthier—and its admirable leader-writer Mr. Towry Piper, for the publicity they have given to the competition. Thanks are also due to my friend, Mr. Whittall, and another who desires to remain anonymous, for their contributions to the supplementary prizes.

And finally I tender our thanks to the proprietors of Æolian Hall for so kindly placing it at our disposal. They have afforded us every facility, and have even been at the trouble of removing two rows of stalls to make room for the instruments you see below.

In short, I am overwhelmed by the kindness showered upon me, and am only too conscious of the inadequacy of any verbal acknowledgment. This my friends will, I hope, understand.

I will conclude with the Gladstonian aphorism:

'To perfect that wonder of travel the locomotive has perhaps not required the expenditure of more mental strength and application than to perfect that wonder of music, the VIOLIN.'

Music in the Foreign Press

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

EDOUARD LALO

On the occasion of the centenary of this composer's birth, the Revue Musicale publishes (March) articles on his work by Paul Dukas, on his life by Pierre Lalo, and extracts from his correspondence with Adolphe Jullien, accompanied by comments by the recipient.

RECOLLECTIONS OF THE PETROGRAD OPERA

Prince Serghéi Wolkowsky, the quondam director of the Petrograd Opera, gives (in the same issue) interesting particulars of the period after 1870.

In those days people went to the opera for the sake of hearing not works, but favourite singers, or favourite arias, or even favourite notes. The artists, spoilt by the prevalent bad taste, would resort to strangely inartistic methods: Angelo Masini, who was one of the finest tenors that ever were, when he sang La donna e mobile, used to hold Gilda's letter in his hand and gradually tear it to shreds. When the anticipated encore came, he would put his hand in his pocket, pull out a second sheet of paper, and delight the audience by repeating both the music and the tearing. The popularity of Italian music stood in the way of Russian music making headway. It was the time of Moussorgsky, Borodin, and Rimsky-Korsakov, but the public would have nothing to do with them. I attended the first performance of Boris Godounov (1874). The opera collapsed amidst uproarious protests.

The Emperor Alexander III. did not like modern Russian music. Every year the repertory for the coming season was submitted to him for approval, and invariably he would strike out Rimsky-Korsakov's name.

One day Madame Litvine was vainly trying to persuade my predecessor, Vsevolozsky, to produce Tristan:

'Just think,' she said, 'how beautiful her death.'

'Maybe,' he replied, 'but how boring her life!'

Russian singers used to ignore the importance of clear enunciation. When I was appointed Director (1899) I called their attention to the point, and even circulated a notice giving a list of current defects. This was hailed with derision, and the whole Press (except old Suvorin, the editor of the Novoye Vremya) scoffed at the Director who issued circulars on so trifling a matter.

HOW TO STAGE EURYANTHE

In the Neue Music-Zeitung (February 15 and March 1) Rolf Lauckner considers the difficulties which attend the staging of Euryanthe, examining in turn the solutions provided by Kreutzer's cuts, Neitzel's suggestions, Mahler's practice, Stephani's revision, and Moser's adaptation of the music to a new libretto entitled The Seven Ravens and the Faithful Sisters (this work was given at Berlin in 1915 and at Darmstadt in 1921). He suggests a remodelling of the libretto on lines which he circumstantially describes.

MUSICAL MUNICH

The February 1 issue of the same periodical is devoted to Munich as a musical centre.

CONTEMPORARY COMPOSERS

The January and February issues of the Musikblätter des Anbruch contain a wealth of informing articles on composers of to-day: Delius, by Heinrich Simon; Alban Berg and Anton Webern, by Erwin Stein; Krenek's first Symphony, by Paul Bekker; and Wellesz's stage-works, by Paul Pisk.

Dr. O. von Riesemann writes on Issaye Dobroven, a young Russian composer, whom he describes as slightly influenced by Scriabin, and very much by Moussorgsky. Dobroven, he tells us, has written a good deal of pianoforte music, a Violin Sonata, songs, and is well worth knowing.

WAGNER'S WIDOW IN DISTRESS

Referring to an article by Dr. Siegfried Avon which gave the tidings of Frau Wagner's financial distress, the Signale (March 7) points out that no royalties accrue to her from the performance of Wagner's works, and suggests that the period covered by the present copyright laws is too short.

Occasional Notes

In its issue for March 7 Punch made a telling appeal in support of the fund now being raised at the Royal Academy of Music towards the building and equipment of a small theatre for the study and performance of opera. We mention this Punch appeal with special pleasure, because too often music when asking for help has to depend far too much on its own press—a press which reaches only a comparatively small, special (and rather needy) section of the population.

Now that interest in music is more widely spread than ever it was, such an institution as the Royal Academy of Music has a right to be considered as a national affair, and the warm support given at the present juncture by Punch, The Times, and other leading papers will not only help the Academy, but also improve the status of the art among the general public. It is a happy coincidence, by the way, that the Chair of the Directorate of Punch and of the Committee of Management of the Royal Academy of Music happens to be filled by one and the same person—Mr. Philip Agnew.

There is everything to be said on behalf of the appeal, and nothing against it. The recent Centenary celebrations have made us all aware of what music in this country owes to the Academy, and the projected theatre is to serve as a permanent memorial of the event. The form of the memorial should appeal to the public because, thanks to various causes, there is now an enormous new public interested in opera. Moreover, for the first time in the musical life of this country, something in the way of a school of English opera is clearly on the way. The welcome—and it must be confessed, unexpected—success of The Immortal Hour, the amazing runs of The Beggar's Opera and Polly, the warm welcome given to recent performances of The Boatswain's Mate and Nicholas Gatty's Prince Ferelon, the publication and approaching production of Holst's The Perfect Fool, and the news that some of our young composers are turning their attention to works of the kind—all these facts add point to the R.A.M. appeal. Who are to perform these English operas if not English singers? Where are they to get their operatic training? And where are our young operatic composers to look for trial performances? How important a factor a students' theatre soon becomes is well shown at the Royal College of Music, where two or three years ago a spare basement was converted into a theatre. The Times of March 10 pointed out that in the short period since this R.C.M. theatre was opened several performances of standard operas, either whole or in part, have been given during each term—The Mastersingers, Figaro, Don Giovanni, Faust, Madame Butterfly, Hansel and Gretel, &c., besides productions of new works by British composers. For some of these performances students have painted the scenery, made the dresses, and have taken a hand in the conducting. For practical insight into all that goes to the making of an opera nothing can take the place of such a theatre. It is in fact an extra class room, and one that touches the art at so many points—composition, playing, singing, conducting, organization, &c.—that it is second to none in usefulness.

Until the R.A.M. has such a theatre it is seriously handicapped. During its hundred years of life it has never before asked for public help, and it does so now only after making a great effort itself. It has paid £3,500 for the site, and is ready with £10,000 of the £35,000 required for the building and equipment. A further £6,000 has been raised privately. It now asks the public for the remaining £19,000, and we cannot believe it will ask in vain.

The British Medical Journal of February 24 contained a letter from Dr. E. Dykes Bower, of Gloucester, discussing the place of music in education. Most of us are gratified by the prominence given to music in the recent report of the Consultative Committee (with which Mr. Percy Scholes will deal fully in our next issue), but Dr. Bower thinks the subject is treated in 'rather a perfunctory and inadequate manner.' The main purport of his letter, however, is to draw the attention of his brother-doctors to the practice of instrumental music as an aid to surgical skill. He says:

For the development of manual dexterity—as, for instance, in the case of an ophthalmic surgeon, or, indeed, for any operating surgeon—I can imagine no better training than learning to play a musical instrument, such as the pianoforte or the organ, and preferably, perhaps, the former. Such a training gives precision and ambidexterity, independence and flexibility of fingers and wrist, and delicacy and lightness of touch and manipulation, in a way that it would be difficult to overestimate. . . . Speaking for myself I can only say that I have found pianoforte playing of the greatest possible help as a manual training in the practice of operative surgery and in the carrying out of all the various surgical manipulations that one has constantly to deal with in his daily work. Any amount of trouble is expended in teaching students how to carry out the details of antiseptic and aseptic surgery; might not a little of that time and energy be quite as profitably employed in teaching them how to use their hands with gentleness, lightness, and precision?

I well remember on one occasion, many years ago, going round the wards of a hospital with a very eminent surgeon in this country, when he asked a student to percuss the chest of one of the patients. After the student had completed his examination the surgeon, addressing him, said: 'I think, Mr. —, we may safely conclude that you do not play the pianoforte!' It is not difficult to imagine from that remark what the effect of the student's clumsy and rough attempts at percussion were on the poor emaciated patient.

All surgical operations, and certainly the more difficult and delicate ones, necessitate, of course, a more or less high degree of manual dexterity, but even the most difficult and complicated operative measures in surgery do not require anything like the manual skill that is requisite for a musician who has to play a difficult piece of music—say a Bach fugue—correctly and intelligently. It is a fortunate thing that such is the case, otherwise it would be a bad look-out for a large number of patients who, sooner or later, have to come under the surgeon's knife.

In general surgery there is usually a certain amount of what one may term margin for error, very little margin indeed in ophthalmic surgery, and practically none in music.

An editorial note to Dr. Bower's interesting letter draws attention to yet another aid to manual neatness. The post that brought Dr. Bower's letter brought one also from Dr. Charles J. Hill Aitken (of Kilnhurst, Yorks), headed: 'Wool-rug making as an aid to surgery.' Dr. Aitken says:

A well-known surgeon lecturing on abdominal surgery told his students that if they wished to become experts at bowel operations they must start by learning to darn their socks—a statement that probably amused many of his hearers. For the last few months I have been making a wool rug, and having occasion to do a small operation the other day—the first for a long time—I was delighted to find how steady my hands and deft my fingers were. To the general practitioner who rather dreads his occasional operation because of possible clumsy fingers I can recommend wool rug making.

If knitting and kindred sports help the surgeon's hands they will surely help the musician's, so we pass the tip on. Some of us have often wished for a quiet, restful, and at the same time useful way of spending the odd waste moments at concerts. Now we know. Make wool-rugs, and improve your playing.

Several correspondents have lately written asking us to take a strong line on the question of the semi-professional. We gladly do so, but the line is exactly opposite to that taken by our correspondents. They regard the increasing employment of half-timers as a menace to the profession; we look on it as a solution of some of the economic difficulties of the day. Nobody pretends that there is anything like enough work, either in concert engagements or teaching, to provide a decent living for all the properly qualified people. What is to become of the many hundreds of well-equipped musicians turned out every year? The majority have worked with a view to earning their living by their music. When they find this can't be done, the wise among them get some kind of business job of not too exacting a nature—one that leaves them with free evenings, Saturdays, and Sundays—and make their music a pleasant means of eking out their income. It is far better for the profession that they should thus become half-timers, and so relieve the overcrowded market.

They interfere little with the full-time professional (because the engagements they take are usually of the small 'expense-fee' type), and they fill a place and maintain a good standard in quarters that would otherwise be poorly served. The capable semi-professional singer in particular is a godsend to the small local choral society in need of a reliable yet inexpensive soloist or leader. A good many young people claiming to possess good trained voices write to us asking whether they would be well-advised to relinquish their business posts and take up singing as a means of livelihood. Our advice is always the same: stick to the certainty—business—and sing as an extra. We remember hearing Sir Henry Walford Davis say recently that there is a great work to be done by the 'half-timers.' Music is to them a welcome change from business, and so they bring to it a freshness and enthusiasm that are too often beyond the blasé professional.

One of our correspondents is particularly bitter on the subject of semi-professional organists. We think he is wrong. There are hundreds of men who have had little training but who, thanks to enthusiasm and natural bent, are well qualified to direct the music at churches where the choral services are few and simple. Such churches are rarely able to afford a stipend of more than £20 or £30 a year. A post of this kind is of no use to a professional, whereas to a man on the spot, of fair skill, and fond of the work, it is both a hobby and a pleasant way of adding to his income one of those little extra bits that keep the bank balance on the right side. Nobody looks on the £30 as pay; it is merely an expression of thanks from parson and congregation. Advertisements in which a microscopic stipend is offered are a constant and easy object of attack, but there is little ground for complaint unless the advertiser asks for an unreasonable amount of duty in return. Practically all musicians do a certain amount of honorary work, giving their services occasionally as performers, or helping local musical activities by work on committees. This is the organists' contribution, and it is to their credit that so many of them, professional and semi-amateur alike, regard their work as something more than a mere business proposition.

We wish we could believe that church people as a body realised more fully their debt to these organists, some of whom, we know from personal experience, spend their honorarium in buying music and in fitting themselves for the better performance of their duties.

A few months ago, when collecting material for our article on the centenary of Henry Littleton, we came across a quaint card. The above discussion of the semi-professional brings it to mind, so here it is:

J. H. MEW,

(ORGANIST OF ST. JOHN'S CHURCH)

TEACHER OF MUSIC,

BOOKSELLER, STATIONER, MUSIC, AND PRINT SELLER

HIGH STREET, NEWPORT.

Where may be obtained Hair, Nail, Tooth, Clothes, and every description of Brushes; white, brown, and fancy Soaps.

PIANO-FORTES FOR SALE OR HIRE,

ALSO TUNED AND REPAIRED.

Harp, Violin, and Guitar Strings.

QUADRILLE BALLS ATTENDED WITH PIANO-FORTE, OR A FULL BAND.

Periodicals regularly supplied—Account Books ruled to order.

PUBLIC CIRCULATING LIBRARY.

Well, variety is the spice of life, and it is pleasant to think of Mr. Mew going from flower to flower—a cake of soap, a toothbrush, an account book to be ruled, a choir practice to be taken, a library volume to be changed, or what not—and extracting a little honey from them all. Which of the Newports was thus singularly blessed? Mon. or I. of W.?

In her recently-published book, The Singer's Pilgrimage, Madame Marchesi says that from F sharp upwards no woman should sing on any vowel but a, and that, on the other hand, no man who wishes to preserve his voice should sing an open a on a top note. It would be interesting to know how many songs there are that may be safely undertaken by singers who wish to respect the text as well as preserve their voice.

We recently commented on the curious results of dictating musical names and titles when the dictatee happens to be unmusical. Here are a couple of orders just received by a music publisher:

A Canticle setting: 'At Wood in Sea.'

'1 Bk. Fumes for organ on the main Bach, by Litz.'

The Musician's Bookshelf

Contrapuntal Technique of the 16th Century. By R. O. Morris.

[Oxford: The Clarendon Press.]

Lamb speaks somewhere of books which are no books—biblia a-biblia: Court calendars, directories, pocket-books, and the like, plus a few antipathetic histories. 'With these exceptions,' he said, 'I can read almost anything. I bless my stars for a taste so catholic, so unexcluding.' In much the same way most of us had not gone far in our student days before finding ourselves oppressed with music which is no music, and the deadliest of it was struck counterpoint. One of the odd things that struck most of us was the fact that although the professors of this dismal science almost invariably began by telling us that the laws of the game were derived from illustrious composers of the past, they ended by writing most of the examples themselves, on the ground that it was difficult to find suitable passages in the works of the illustrious ones aforesaid. It is strange that this anomaly seems to have escaped public exposure until the appearance of Mr. Morris's book. He makes no bones about it. His first chapter opens with a quotation from Rockstro's Rules of Counterpoint, in which that writer says piously that his 'little treatise' contains no novelty:

The rules it prescribes are those, and those only, to which Palestrina, Vittoria, Luca Marenzio, and the greatest of their contemporaries, yielded their loving obedience.

But a few pages later Rockstro climbs down with:

It was the author's original intention to have illustrated the present treatise entirely with examples selected from the works of the Great Masters. . . .

But the difficulty of finding passages exactly adapted to illustrate the precise rule falling under discussion was so great, that . . .

in short, the author found it necessary to write a lot of examples himself, helped out by 'Fux and other famous contrapuntists.' (Not famous composers, observe!)

As Mr. Morris points out, the rules laid down by Rockstro are not peculiar; they are more or less common to all text-books on the subject. And as these rules have only the slenderest connection with the 16th century music on which they are alleged to be based, we have to make our choice between rules and music. Is it to be Byrd and Palestrina, or Rockstro and Prout? Mr. Morris answers for himself in this book; and as he happens to be a skilful and attractive writer, treating of a live subject, the result is an unusual combination—a stimulating piece of literature and a real contribution to musical science.

The chapter on 'Rhythm' is a very clear and thorough exposition of a problem that confronts all who take up the study of old polyphonic choral works. Mr. Morris shows that the double system of accentuation (i.e., the freedom of the individual parts and the fixed metrical scheme of the whole), which is at first difficult to grasp, has a familiar analogy in poetry, where the metrical accent and the natural rhythm of the words rarely coincide for more than a few words at a time. He gives the opening lines of Paradise Lost as an example. Read with strict attention to the metre they are a monotonous sing-song, with stress laid on prepositions and articles. The natural stress of the words must be preserved:

. . . . for it enables us to distinguish between the more and the less important elements of the thought which the words convey. Yet the metrical scheme also persists. You may not hear it, but it is somewhere at the back of your head all the time, as a kind of pattern or standard to which every line of the poetry is referred, more or less unconsciously, for comparison. And the delight of reading good verse arises largely from this duality of apprehension. Each verse as it comes is both true to itself and true to type; the ear catches the stress in all its variety, the mind retains its hold on the quantities—short and long, long and short—in orderly recurrence.

This alternation of agreement, clash, and interplay of the rhythmical and metrical accents is a vital feature of poetry when combined with balance. 'Too much coincidence means monotony; too much at-oddness means chaos.' Mr. Morris goes on to apply this conception to music, showing the student how to find out the rhythmical accent in cases where the bar-line gives no clue, and where the words themselves do not help—as is sometimes the case in old music. In this connection, it is interesting to note that Mr. Morris favours regular barring of old music, on what seem to be good grounds:

As the incidence of the measure is a real factor in the construction of the work, the present writer is inclined to recommend regular barring, with a stress, mark to show the incidence of the rhythmical accents.

He adds the warning that this stress-mark should not be regarded as a sforzando.

By the bye this is one of several parts of the book that should be read by madrigal singers and conductors.

In the section on changing-notes Mr. Morris has an interesting comment on a hitherto-accepted dictum of Parry's. Most of us have taken Parry's word that the formula known as the nota gambiata became such a mannerism with the early 17th century contrapuntists, that they sometimes missed what Parry calls its 'true significance.' Parry quotes this from Byrd:

as an example wherein the figure

. . . appears in a form in which the discord of the seventh made by the passing-note is shorn of its resolution.

But Mr. Morris shows that this 'true significance,' so far from being lost sight of by Byrd and his contemporaries, scarcely existed in earlier times, and he quotes from Brumel (f. 1500) a passage which is little more than a string of very freely used changing-notes.

Speaking of consecutives, Mr. Morris shows that the scholastic rule: 'Passages which would be incorrect without suspensions are equally incorrect with them,' will not hold water if we are to go to the great contrapuntal composers for guidance. But examination candidates had better play for safety a bit longer, and remember that their examiners are not yet flocking to the great contrapuntal writers for guidance, though a few have made a start towards that quarter.

Perhaps Mr. Morris quibbles in his remarks on modal harmony. Such a thing, he says, has never existed:

Modality is properly a term of melodic definition—it is only in a derivative sense that harmony can be described as 'modal.' In that sense, you might say that modal harmony is harmony formed strictly from the diatonic series of notes constituting the mode in which the melody of any given piece is written.

I venture to think this confounding of modal and diatonic is misleading. We may write harmony containing no note that is not in the mode of a given melody, and yet the result need not be modal. It may be merely diatonic. As a familiar example, take the plainsong melody Pange lingua (Mechlin version). We may harmonize it in such a way that the tune appears to be in C: that is diatonic harmony. But we may also harmonize it so that even a hearer with only a slight feeling for the character of the modes will at once know it to be Phrygian. And although, as Mr. Morris says, the modes began to lose their identity when musica ficta became generally practised, the characteristics of the various modes were far from being destroyed. Even in Bach we find good examples of this. The great six-part organ-piece on Aus tiefer noth is a case in point: despite its sprinkling of accidentals, it remains unmistakably in the third mode. In fact, one of the remarkable facts about the whole modal system is its toughness; it dies very hard. The fairly liberal use of a characteristic note from any one of the modes is sufficient to give a flavour to a work otherwise in a major or minor key, just as the mere rubbing of a dish with a scrap of garlic will (I am assured) flavour the joint served thereon. For example, it is sometimes objected that the title 'Dorian' applied to Bach's D minor Toccata and Fugue is a misnomer, because the work not only uses B flat and C sharp, but also modulates freely. But can anybody fail to detect the general flavour of the Dorian mode, brought about by the frequent use of the B natural? And in the long five-part Prelude on Vater Unser we have the same modal characteristic through the C sharp in the key of E minor (Dorian mode transposed). That Bach felt this seems to be shown by the signature of these two works—no flat in the first, and two sharps in the second.

In the chapter headed 'Some Technical Features of the English School,' Mr. Morris says some things that badly needed saying. Far too many musicians appear to regard the technique of composition as a more or less mechanical affair: if you write well you have technique; if ill, you haven't. Technique is far more than this—in fact, the more we think about it, the more difficult it is to say where technique ends and style begins. As Mr. Morris truly says:

... every technical difference, whether between one man and another, or between one school and another, probably has a psychological counterpart, and really implies a corresponding difference in outlook.

And he goes on to show how marked were the differences of outlook between the English and the Roman schools of polyphonists. Yet until recent days musicians generally assumed that the polyphonic school was much the same everywhere, and that as England produced some quite sizable men we could pay them no greater compliment than to call them 'English Palestrinas.' No doubt the misconception was partly due to the fact that the small amount of Elizabethan music doled out a generation ago was bowdlerised. The English school was always rougher and more adventurous than its contemporaries abroad, both in regard to melodic outline and harmonic flavour. It was this latter feature especially that beat our fathers and grandfathers. They were, says Mr. Morris,

... sadly perplexed at some of the things they found, and no wonder. Mendelssohn never played them such pranks. Who were Tallis and Gibbons and those other old fogies, that they should dare put such things on paper, and call it harmony? So armed with a pen mightier than any sword, the editors with one consent began to edit; timely suppressions and judicious emendations were the order of the day, until finally Tallis, Byrd, & Co. emerged with their hair curled and their beards trimmed, quite presentable, quite fit for the best Victorian society—but curiously unlike their real selves.

This review is running to such lengths I must resist the temptation to discuss the sections dealing with fugue (the 16th century fugue is neatly described as 'a procedure, not a form'), canon, double counterpoint, and design. The reader will find them full of suggestive matter—a welcome relief from the usual text-book re-hash of rules.

A work of this kind is next door to useless without abundant musical illustrations. Mr. Morris gives no fewer than two hundred and sixty-one, some of them of considerable length. They are lumped together at the end of the book—an arrangement more convenient for the publisher than for the reader. A few misprints may be pointed out. On page 12, line 9, Ex. 242 should be Ex. 245; Ex. 142, a dot is missing from the E; Ex. 161, a minim rest is needed in the opening bar of the tenor; Ex. 200, the treble clef should be given in the under staff; Ex. 201, the flat in the bass of bar 2 belongs to the first note; Ex. 203, in bar 35 the last note of the tenor phrase is missing, and in Ex. 243 the A in the bass, two bars from the end, should be dotted.

Probably some years will pass before this admirable book will make much impression in academic quarters. If this proves to be the case, there will be irony in the fact, for, after all, it merely does what the existing text-books professed to do and didn't; it goes to the great composers for guidance instead of to the deadly Marpurg, Fux, & Co., and as a result it deals with a living art instead of a dead science. Meanwhile, let thanks be given to Mr. Morris for having achieved a real feat. He has written a book on counterpoint that may be read with pleasure for its own sake. If there be any other book on the subject with a similar power of attraction it has not so far come my way. But I have a whole shelf-full of the other kind. H. G.

Our Favourite Musicians: from Stanford to Holbrooke. By Sydney Grew.

[Foulis, 6s.]

It has been suggested that Mr. Grew should have entitled his book 'My Favourite Musicians.' But as he admits on his first page that he has other favourites as well as those he discusses here, 'Some' would be better than 'My.' Further, as a musician may be anything from a composer to a timpanist—and even a singer—the title should have made clear the fact that the book was concerned only with composers. Mr. Grew discusses eleven of them (in his Preface he says there are ten)—among them Ethel Smyth, Holst, Vaughan Williams, Boughton, Holbrooke, Walford Davies, Bantock—and he gives us some illuminating things about most of them. Had the whole been up to the standard of its best parts the volume would have been a very valuable aid to the popular appreciation of contemporary native music. But Mr. Grew seems to have been undecided as to the character of his audience. At times he is giving the trained musician food for thought: at others he is serving up milk for babes. In the latter category must be placed the far too numerous insignificant personal details. Such things are of value only when they throw light on the subject; too many of these do no more than suggest the gossip columns of our cheaper press. For example, we are not interested in the account of Bantock's tea ('two rounds of buttered toast, a slice of a certain familiar cake, and a pot of tea, all sent up from the curator's kitchen'), and even the fact of half a piece of that familiar cake being handed to Mr. Grew fails to rouse us. In almost all the papers some petty details of this kind obtrude themselves. Even in the dedications (each section is inscribed to a friend of the author's) Mr. Grew cannot resist the temptation to drag in some purely personal touch, e.g., 'To Appleby Matthews, in remembrance of the pork-chop sandwiches' and 'To Frank Mullings, with especial recollection of the General Election of 1909.' We are all for freedom in matters of this kind, because we are convinced that in the past too many books and journals dealing with music have repelled the average reader by being dry or matter-of-fact, or pontifical, or high-horse—sometimes all the lot at once. But authors should be able to meet their readers half-way, and make the task of the latter easy and pleasant without being trivial. With due respect to Mr. Grew, whose well-stored mind and ready pen we fully appreciate, we think he has not found the middle course that would have made his readable and instructive book quite first-rate.

One or two points are inaccurate or debatable. Sir Henry Walford Davies is still organist at the Temple Church. On page 152 we are told that he gave up the post in 1919. On page 67 we read:

'Yet perhaps it is well that Elgar, or his publishers, will not permit such works as The Apostles to be performed by all and sundry. It may surprise my readers to know that you have to procure a sort of passport before you can give in public one of the later oratorios.'

But neither Mr. Grew nor his readers need be surprised. The 'passport' is merely an assurance that an adequate orchestral and choral force is available, and that the solos will be in good hands. Exactly the same assurance is needed in the case of other works of Elgar (including the Symphony), the larger choral works of Gounod, and it has been in force with The Golden Legend ever since that work was published. It is an entirely reasonable protection of the composer from the risk of his work suffering in reputation through a hopelessly inadequate performance.

In speaking of Holbrooke, Mr. Grew says that:

'It almost seems that he compels critics to speak adversely about him and his music. Fortunately he makes the critics contradict themselves.'

Mr. Grew then quotes a critic's favourable opinion of Holbrooke's Violin Sonata (1918), and sets against it the same critic's opinion delivered (a year or so later) to the effect that Holbrooke was:

'One of our disappointments. I wrote warmly of him years ago [i.e., around 1902] because we thought he had a future. He has not fulfilled his early promise. He has developed in facility, but not proportionately in emotional depth, and still less in intellectual depth . . .'

And so on.

Now, Mr. Grew implies that this was not an honest and considered opinion, but a bad case of a critic getting his own back rather meanly. ('Within a year or so after the favourable opinion on the Sonata Holbrooke attacked this critic, and the critic then wrote' the passage quoted above.) But where is the contradiction? Because a critic speaks favourably of a given work must he for ever after hold his peace on the composer's work in general unless his verdict is favourable? As an experienced and judicious critic himself, Mr. Grew, we feel sure, would claim the right to 'contradict' himself in this way as often as occasion arose. Even in the case of a single work a critic no less than a private individual may be allowed to revise his opinion from time to time without being accused of petty spite. Mr. Holbrooke has always been more or less in the ring, trailing the tail of his coat, but none of his controversial efforts has been feebleness than a recently published brochure in which he has endeavoured to show his critics disagreeing with themselves and with one another. Even in the political world this method of discrediting one's opponents is now regarded as futile. Music has suffered too much already from the kind of consistency that results from a critic's fear of contradicting this year what he said last. The two verdicts may be as far apart as black from white, yet both may be honest and, at the time, valuable. We hope that in a reprint of the book Mr. Grew will recast pages 250 and 251. It may be added that he has been happy in his publisher. The print and binding are excellent, and the portraits of the composers alone are worth the price charged for the book.

H. G.

Mark Hambourg's How to play the pianoforte (C. Arthur Pearson, 3s. 6d.) is a new edition of his recent work How to become a pianist. The title has been altered, a publisher's note informs us, with a view to appealing to a wider public, and the book has been thoroughly revised. An entirely new chapter on 'How to play Chopin' has been added and some extra technical exercises have been included. In his new chapter the author takes as the subject of his specimen lesson the Mazurka (Op. 33, No. 4) in B minor. He refers to the legend that a mazurka can only be played or danced with the correct spirit by a Pole or a Russian, but holds the opinion that this is an exaggeration and that most people with a good sense of rhythm can acquire the right swing of it if they understand where to put the necessary accent. His detailed consideration of the Mazurka in B minor provides an interesting and illuminating lesson. The chapter also contains some sane remarks on the playing of Chopin generally. Mr. Hambourg deplores the tendency of so many people in playing Chopin's music to take an exaggeratedly sentimental view of its character:

They play it with too much pedal, they distort the melodies beyond all measure with rubato effects, and altogether give what seems to me a rather sickly and neurotic interpretation of his works which is somewhat degrading to the nobility of his many-sided imagination. . . . The creator of the F minor Ballade, the Sonata in B minor, the Polonaise in A flat, &c., shows a strength of passion and a manly virility of conception of these masterpieces which prove that there was a masculine side to his mind. . . . Schumann has best described Chopin himself and his music when he said of him: 'Sweetness combined with strength'; and it is that strength imparting nobility to the sweetness which Chopin's most ardent admirers so often fail to discover, or emphasise, thereby taking away something from the measure of his greatness.

For the benefit of those who have not seen the first edition of this excellent little book, it may be pointed out that amongst other things dealt with there are chapters on 'How to practise,' 'On fingering and memory,' 'Some common mistakes and how to avoid them,' 'Playing in public,' and 'A specimen lesson on the first movement of the Moonlight Sonata of Beethoven.' There are many illustrations and diagrams, and under the heading 'The daily pianist' will be found an abridged compendium of five-finger exercises, scales, thirds, arpeggi, and octaves as practised by the author.

G. G.

Modulation made easy, by E. Douglas Tayler (Bosworth, 1s. 3d.), is a little book of about forty pages, which obviously does not claim to be an exhaustive treatise on modulation. It aims, the writer tells us, at giving the reader an intelligent grasp of key-relationship, and of simple methods by which agreeable modulations may be made for examination and other purposes, without resorting to blind imitation of set patterns. Mr. Tayler writes in a very free and easy style, and his little book should prove useful as an introduction to a more comprehensive study of the subject. G. G.

[Reviews of new music are unavoidably held over.]

Church and Organ Music

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS AND CHOIR TRAINING

The March issue of the Music Teacher discusses the above subject in an article that does the College a good deal less than justice. Speaking of the Archbishops' Committee on Church Music the writer expresses a hope that ... one of the first things the Committee will consider is why the Royal College of Organists remains so doggedly one-sided in its examinations. It tests a man in playing the organ, but not in that even more important side of a Church musician's work—training a choir.

First of all, how can the writer be sure that any defect in the College examinations is the result of the authorities being 'doggedly one-sided'? He admits 'the obvious difficulty of testing a man's ability to train a choir.' Very well; would it not be reasonable and charitable to ascribe the shortcomings of the examination to these obvious difficulties, rather than to assume them to be the result of deliberate policy? But the Music Teacher is quite sure about it all: 'No excuse as to the obvious difficulty . . . can avail the Royal College of Organists.' Why not? 'Obvious difficulty' is usually regarded as an extenuating circumstance.

Later on we read:

In some of the social qualities by which a widely-equipped musician makes his work attractive, it is almost impossible to examine, one admits. And to judge a man fully, one needs to see him, week after week, at his choir practice, and hear him at his organ.

As this course is obviously impossible, it is absurd to blame the College for the fact that 'Associates and Fellows have not been tested adequately in the most vital part of their Church work.'

The Music Teacher after complaining (not unreasonably) that at present the choir-training side of the syllabus consists of a few questions only, goes on to speak of the choir-training examination instituted by the College in 1909, 'the most valuable step the College has ever taken,' and says 'that only lethargy has allowed this test to be dropped.'

Here are the facts: The College set out to strengthen its examinations on the choir-work side in 1909. It devised an excellent scheme, but unfortunately this scheme could not be included in the ordinary syllabus for various reasons—e.g., the examination periods were already over-congested, and any considerable addition would have made it impossible for many of the country candidates to attend; a growing number of organists work for the College diplomas with a view only to teaching, organ-playing, and concert work; others hold office in Nonconformist Churches, where the conditions are so different from those in the Establishment, both in regard to the vocal material (mixed-voice choirs instead of boys and men) and the type of service and music, that it is impossible to frame a choir-training examination that will cover both classes. Finally, there is the question of expense. An adequate examination of every candidate would take several weeks, with a special choir in attendance. The College is not a teaching institution, so its income is small, and the cost of such an examination would be far beyond its power.

Owing to these reasons, the choir-training examination was started as an extra test, held annually (instead of half-yearly, like the ordinary examinations) and with no academic distinction for the successful candidates. It has to be stated with regret that few organists came up to the scratch. But the examination went on, and was beginning to show encouraging results—in May, 1914, there were fourteen candidates—when the war broke out. The numbers of course dropped in the following year, and the College—suddenly forced to economise, like other institutions—naturally suspended it.

But that the R.C.O. is not at all lethargic or stubborn on this point is shown by the fact that the Council has from time to time discussed the possibilities of reviving the examination, and, as a matter of fact, before this Music Teacher article was written a committee had already been appointed to devise a way by means of which the test could not only be revived, but made more comprehensive and attractive.

The Music Teacher goes on to ask, 'What has become of the lectures the College used to organize?'—and hints at more 'lethargy.' The answer is simple: the lectures were dropped in 1917, because the income of the College was so much reduced owing to the war that it could not afford the cost. Here again, a revival is under consideration.

Finally, the Music Teacher speaks scornfully of 'the pitiful part' played by the College 'in the petition to the Archbishop of Canterbury' a few years ago:

From that encounter it came out badly, being, indeed, perfectly impotent in the face of the polite putting aside of the petition (which concerned the dangerous position of the organist, in being liable to dismissal by his vicar without the right of appeal to a higher authority).

Our readers will remember this petition. If it led to nothing very definite, the College was not to blame. Nor was the Archbishop, nor, indeed, anybody else. The comparative failure of the College action was due to the peculiar circumstances that govern the profession of church organist. Where there can be no fixed hours of work, no uniformity in the amount of time or skill demanded, and no standard rate of pay, and where the office itself is not an essential part of the Establishment (however desirable an addition it may be), there can be no kind of protective union. In the event of a dispute, a profession that is (so to speak) a luxury, that has no legal status, and no protective union, must inevitably proceed piano moderato. The Music Teacher thinks this is 'a pitiful part' to play, but does not suggest the only alternative—a kind of strike threat. The Music Teacher may wish to see organists joined together on a trade union basis, with the usual concomitants of direct action. That would indeed be a 'pitiful part' for one of the oldest and most important (though unessential) branches of the musical profession to play.

(Continued on page 264.)

MADRIGAL

BY

JOHN WILBYE

Edited by H. ELLIOT BUTTON

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegretto

SOPRANO

ALTO

TENOR

BASS

mf

Thus saith my Clo - ris bright, when we of Love sit downe and talke to -

mf

Thus saith my Clo - ris bright, when

Allegretto

(For practice only)

mf

mf

Thus saith my

mf

Thus saith my Clo - ris bright, when we of Love sit downe and

- geth - - - er, and talke to - geth - - -

we of Love sit downe and talke to - geth - - -

Clo - ris bright, when we of Love sit downe and talke to - talke to - geth - er, and talke to - er, Thus saith my Clo - ris bright, when we of Love sit er, and talke to - geth - er, Thus saith my geth - er, and talke to - geth - er,

- geth - er, Thus saith my Clo - ris bright, when we of Love sit downe and talke to - geth - er, Thus saith my Clo - ris bright, when we of Love sit downe and talke cres. Thus saith my Clo - ris bright, when we of Love sit downe and talke cres. downe and talke to - geth - er, and talke to - cres. Clo - ris bright when we of Love sit downe and talke to - cres. to - geth - er, and talke to -

No. 1398.

AFTER MANY A DUSTY MILE.—Edward Elgar.

Price 3d.—4d.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

No.
614	Absence ...	H. Goetz	2d.
217	* Do. (A.T.T.B.)	J. L. Hatton	2d.
181	* Do. ...		1d.
67	Adieu love, adieu	G. A. Macfarren	3d.
312	Adieu, my native shore	Pearsall	3d.
943	Adieu, sweet Amaryllis
	J. W. G. Hathaway	2d.
1227	Do. ...	C. Macpherson	3d.
390	Adieu to the woods
	S. J. G. Egerton	3d.
658	Advice to lovers ...	P. W. Pilcher	2d.
913	After the battle	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	2d.
674	Ah, my dear Son (Carol, 3 V.)		3d.
1375	Ah! what is love ...	W. McNaught	3d.
515	Ah! woe is me (6 V.)	H. Lahee	4d.
648	Airley Beacon	C. V. Stanford	2d.
568	Airs of Summer ...	J. L. Roeckel	4d.
17	All among the barley	E. Stirling	2d.
971	*All for my true love	H. D. Wetton	3d.
81	All is not gold that shineth bright
	in snow (5 V.)	W. J. Westbrook	3d.
394	*All is still ...	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
802	All Souls' Day	J. Rheinberger	3d.
59	All ye woods and trees and bow'rs
	J. L. Hatton	1d.
83	* Do. (5 V.)	H. Lahee	1d.
940	Do. ...	H. W. Wareing	3d.
1037	*Allan Water	arr. H. E. Button	2d.
478	*Allen-a-Dale	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
1020	* Do. ...	J. B. McEwen	3d.
334	Already snow has fallen	R. Franz	1d.
113	Alton Locke's Song
	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
1011	*Amaryllis I did woo
	John E. West	2d.
1322	*American National Songs (Three)		1d.
972	Amintor's well-a-day
	John E. West	3d.
1364	An address to the nightingale
	W. W. Pearson	3d.
175	An Autumn song ...	C. Pinsuti	3d.
20	An emigrant's song	W. Macfarren	2d.
1074	*An Empire song	A. C. Mackenzie	3d.
1053	An end will I bring	Schubert	3d.
1387	*An old Song resung
	H. B. Gardiner	4d.
485	And then no more	R. Raff	2d.
1103	*Angelic hunter, The
	arr. J. Brahms	3d.
1091	Angel's call, The	I. I. Viotta	1d.
960	*Angel's greeting, The	J. Brahms	3d.
1167	*Angelus (Tuscany)	E. Elgar	4d.
1340	*Anglers, The	W. W. Pearson	2d.
30	Angler's Trysting-tree, The
	C. W. Corfe	3d.
1039	*Annie Laurie	arr. H. E. Button	2d.
108	Annie Lee ...	J. Barnby	1d.
182	April showers	J. L. Hatton	2d.
218	Do. (A.T.T.B.)		1d.
1318	Arethusa, The	W. Shield	3d.
137	Arise, sweet love ...	H. Leslie	1d.
97	Arise, the sunbeams hail	F. Berger	3d.
520	Around the maypole tripping
	J. L. Hatton	1d.
859	*Arranmore Boat Song
	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	4d.
457	*Arrow and the song, The	W. Hay	3d.
973	As Amoret with Phillis sat
	John E. West	2d.
1054	As dewdrops at morn	Schubert	3d.
525	As I saw fair Flora	F. Corder	3d.
146	As it fell upon a day	S. Reay	3d.
619	As the ripples flow
	E. A. Sydenham	2d.
1052	As the watcher longs	Schubert	3d.
900	As through the land	J. Pullett	2d.
796	*As torrents in summer	E. Elgar	2d.
1180	As when the sun renews his strength (Madrigal)	C. E. Miller	3d.
1257	*Ash Grove, The	arr. Dunhill	3d.
1105	At Andernach in Rhineland	Abt	3d.
393	At first the mountain rill
	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
987	At her fair hands	J. Elliott	2d.
788	Do. ...	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
335	At parting	R. Franz	1d.
358	*At the coming of the Spring
	J. L. Hatton	3d.
195	Auburn		3d.
582	*Auld Lang Syne	arr. E. Land	1d.
71	Autolycus' Song	C. A. Macrone	3d.
1066	* Do. ...	C. Lee Williams	3d.
1058	Autumn	W. Macfarren	3d.
274	Do. (T.T.B.B.)		3d.
353	Do. ...	A. C. Mackenzie	1d.
1162	Autumn fields, The	N. W. Gade	3d.

No.
464	Autumn is come again (5 V.)
	F. Corder	3d.
403	Autumn song ...	S. Reay	3d.
683	Do. ...	J. Rheinberger	2d.
484	Ave Maria ...	J. Raff	3d.
241	* Do. ...	H. Smart	1d.
968	*Awake, awake	G. Bantock	3d.
76	*Awake, awake, the flow'rs unfold
	H. Leslie	1d.
25	Awake the starry midnight hour
	Mendelssohn	2d.
923	*Away to the woodlands
	H. W. Warner	3d.
978	*Baby's feet, like sea shells pink, A
	C. H. Lloyd	3d.
225	Bacchanalian Song (A.T.T.B.)
	J. L. Hatton	3d.
193	Bait, The (Come live with me)
	J. L. Hatton	1d.
996	*Ballad, A (8 V.)	T. Wendt	3d.
1016	Ballade of Midsummer		3d.
1017	Ballade of Spring		4d.
1044	*Battle of the Baltic, The
	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
861	*Battle song, A	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	3d.
578	Do. ...	E. A. Sydenham	3d.
1334	*Beacon, The	A. Carse	3d.
689	Beauty, arise	K. J. Pye	3d.
841	Before me careless lying (5 V.)
	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
1238	*Beleaguered, The	A. S. Sullivan	2d.
56	*Belfry Tower, The	J. L. Hatton	1d.
1311	*Belgian National song
	F. Campenbout	1d.
572	Bells across the snow	Ch. Gounod	3d.
432	*Bells of St. Michael's Tower, The
	W. Knyvett (5 V.), arr. R. P. Stewart	4d.
1271	*Ben Bowlegs (humorous)
	W. W. Pearson	3d.
984	Bendemeer's Stream	J. Pointer	2d.
1216	Beside the river ...	A. Jensen	2d.
793	Better music ne'er was known
	C. H. H. Parry	3d.
184	*Beware ...	J. L. Hatton	1d.
220	Do. (A.T.T.B.)		1d.
111	*Bird of the Wilderness	J. Barnby	3d.
196	Do. ...	J. L. Hatton	3d.
1157	Birds are singing, The	Hans Sitt	2d.
798	Birthday serenade, A	G. Elvey	3d.
1308	Birchlight, The	E. Elgar	3d.
300	*Bishop of Mentz, The	Pearsall	3d.
1107	*Black Monk, The (Welsh
	folk-song) arr. R. Boughton	3d.
55	*Blow, blow thou winter wind
	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
1254	Blow, breeze, from the North
	G. Elvey	3d.
1369	Blow, western wind
	W. W. Pearson	3d.
661	*Blue-bottle's fate, The
	(humorous) A. H. Ashworth	3d.
544	Blue-eyed lassie, The	F. Brandeis	2d.
933	*Blwyddyn Bywyd	D. Protheroe	3d.
187	Blythe is the Bird	J. L. Hatton	2d.
399	*Boat Song	H. Leslie	3d.
357	Do. ...	E. Prout	4d.
1088	Do. ...	F. Schubert	2d.
385	Boat, The	R. Schumann	3d.
3	*Boating Song	E. G. Monk	2d.
521	*Boatman's Good-night, The
	F. Schira	1d.
545	*Bonnie Bell	A. C. Mackenzie	2d.
1310	*Boy, The (humorous)
	A. H. Brewer	3d.
63	*Break, break on thy cold grey stones, O sea	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
99	Breathe soft, ye winds	J. B. Calkin	1d.
1307	* Do. ...	W. Paxton	1d.
878	Bridal Song	H. Leslie	4d.
639	Bright be thy dreams	Oliver King	2d.
402	*Bright-hair'd morn, The	S. Reay	3d.
584	Bright Moon	John E. West	2d.
1222	*Bring me a golden pen
	F. H. Cowen	3d.
601	Broken Flower, The	Oliver King	2d.
447	Brook, The	C. G. Reissiger	3d.
1015	*Brownies, The	Moellendorff	3d.
223	Busy, curious, thirsty fly (A.T.T.B.)
	J. L. Hatton	2d.
743	*Butterfly, The	J. Blumenthal	4d.
1095	*By a gentle river laid
	John E. West	3d.
1002	*By the waters of Babylon
	P. Cornelius	2d.
1147	By woodland and wayside
	E. Franz	2d.

No.
1272	Call John (humorous)
	arr. W. W. Pearson	3d.
1122	Calm is the lake ...	F. Abt	3d.
359	Calm night ...	J. L. Hatton	3d.
380	Calm of the sea, The	H. Hiles	4d.
911	*Capture of Cremona, The
	arr. T. R. G. Jozé	3d.
314	Caput apri defero...	Pearsall	3d.
178	*Caravan, The	C. Pinsuti	1d.
1251	*Cargoes	H. B. Gardiner	3d.
1273	Carrion Crow, The (humorous)
	W. W. Pearson	3d.
607	Cavalier, The	C. Goodall	3d.
529	Cavalry song	C. A. Macrone	3d.
635	Cephalus and Procris
	A. W. Batson	3d.
482	Chafer's Wedding, A (humorous)
	Lewandowski	6d.
1087	Chapel, The	C. Kreutzer	3d.
427	*Charge of the Light Brigade, The
	E. Hecht	4d.
85	*Charm me asleep (6 V.)	H. Leslie	3d.
906	Do. ...	J. B. McEwen	3d.
847	*Chase, The	E. German	3d.
757	*Cherry ripe	A. H. Brewer	3d.
583	Do. ...	arr. E. Land	1d.
1255	* Do. ...	W. G. Ross	2d.
731	Do. (6 V.)	S. P. Waddington	3d.
1212	Cheshire cheese, The
	arr. J. C. Bridge	3d.
734	Chi la Gagliarda	B. Donato	3d.
375	Chieftain to the Highland bound, A
	Pearsall	2d.
466	* Do. ...	O. Prescott	1d.
94	Childhood's melody	F. Berger	3d.
101	Chivalry of Labour, The (5 V.)
	J. B. Calkin	4d.
1145	Chloe, that dear bewitching prude
	H. Willan	2d.
1147	*Chorus of Empire
	C. A. E. Harriss	3d.
66	*Christmas...	G. A. Macfarren	1d.
1109	*Christmas greeting, A	E. Elgar	6d.
314	Christmas song, A	Pearsall	3d.
967	Do. ...	M. Pratorius	2d.
845	Close to my heart...	W. Davies	3d.
677	*Clouds, The	J. Rheinberger	3d.
823	Come again, sweet days
	J. Dowland	2d.
726	*Come away	E. German	3d.
873	* Do. ...	H. Parker	4d.
1169	Come away, come away, death
	arr. Arne	2d.
56	* Do. (5 V.)	G. A. Macfarren	3d.
51	* Do. (5 V.)		3d.
58	Come celebrate the May
	J. L. Hatton	1d.
668	Come, fairies, trip it	F. Iliffe	3d.
102	Come fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.)
	J. B. Calkin	3d.
118	*Come follow me, A	Zimmermann	1d.
1143	Come forth, the summer's
	innumur hear	E. Franz	2d.
14	Come, heavy sleep	J. Dowland	2d.
745	Come if you dare...	Purcell	4d.
1210	Come, lasses and lads
	arr. J. C. Bridge	3d.
899	Come let me take thee	J. Pullett	2d.
317	Come let us be merry	Pearsall	1d.
507	*Come live with me	W. S. Bennett	1d.
360	Do. ...	J. L. Hatton	3d.
193	Do. (The Bait)		1d.
497	Come, May, with all thy flowers
	J. L. Gregory	2d.
1052	Come, O come, dearest, come

AFTER MANY A DUSTY MILE

PART-SONG

WORDS FROM THE GREEK ANTHOLOGY (ANONYMOUS) TRANSLATED BY EDMUND GOSSE*

MUSIC BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(OP. 45, No. 3)

ARRANGED FOR S.A.T.B. BY THE COMPOSER

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegretto
p non legato pp dolce

SOPRANO
Af - ter ma - ny a dust - y mile,

ALTO
p non legato pp dolce
Af - ter ma - ny a dust - y mile,

TENOR
p non legato. pp dolce
Af - ter ma - ny a dust - y mile,

BASS
sonoramente p legato
Af - ter ma - ny a dust - y

(For practice only) Allegretto $\text{♩} = 84$
p non legato pp
sonoramente

Wan-d'rer, lin - ger here a - while; Stretch your limbs in this long

Wan-d'rer, lin - ger here a - while; Stretch your limbs in this long

Wan-d'rer, lin - ger here a - while; Stretch your limbs in this long mile, Wan-d'rer, lin - ger here a - while,

* With the kind permission of the Translator

Copyright, 1922, by Novello and Company, Limited

Originally published for T.T.B.B. in THE ORPHEUS, No. 364

AFTER MANY A DUSTY MILE

grass; Through these pines a wind shall pass

grass; Through these pines a wind shall pass

grass; a wind shall pass

Stretch your limbs in this long grass; Through these pines a wind shall

That shall cool you with its wing.

That shall cool you with its wing.

That shall cool you with its wing.

pass That shall cool you with its poco rit.

AFTER MANY A DUSTY MILE

Comodo

Grasshop-pers shall shout and sing, Grasshop-pers shall shout and sing,

Grasshop-pers shall shout and sing, Grasshop-pers shall shout and sing,

cantabile
Through these pines a wind . . shall pass,

pp wing. Through these pines a wind shall cool you with its

Comodo $\text{♩} = 76$

While the shep-herd on the hill, . . Near a foun-tain war-bling still, ten.

While the shep-herd on the hill, . . Near a foun-tain war-bling still, ten.

cres. through . . these pines a wind . . shall pass, . . dim.

wing, through these pines a wind shall pass, . .

AFTER MANY A DUSTY MILE

Mo - du - lates, when noon is mute, . . .

Mo - du - lates, when noon is mute, . . .

Lin - ger here a - while; . .

Grass-hop-pers shall shout and sing, . .

Lin - ger here a - while;

Sum - mer songs a - long his flute, . . .

Sum - mer songs a - long his flute, . . .

Grass-hop-pers shall shout and sing, . . .

Wan - d'r'er, lin - ger here a -

AFTER MANY A DUSTY MILE

molto cantabile
mf dolce

Sum - mer songs a - long his flute; . . Un - der - neath, un - der - molto cantabile

mf dolce

Sum - mer songs, songs a - long his flute; Un - der - neath a molto cantabile

mf

Wan-d'rer, lin - ger here, lin - ger here . . a - while, . . . a - mf cantabile

- while; . . . Un - der - neath, un - der -

mf

- neath a spread-ing tree, . . None so ea - - sy - limb'd as he, Shel-tered, spread-ing tree, un - der - neath a . . spread - ing tree, a . . spreading tree,

- while, Un - der - neath a spread-ing tree, . . shel - tered

- neath a spread-ing, spread-ing tree,

AFTER MANY A DUSTY MILE

rit. Come prima
pp non legato

shel-tered from the dog-star's heat. . . Rest; and then, on freshened

rit. pp non legato

Shel-tered from the dog-star's heat. . . Rest; and then, on freshened

rit. pp non legato

from the dog-star's heat. . . Rest; and then, on freshened

rit. pp

Shel-tered, shel-tered from the dog-star's heat. . . .

Come prima

rit. pp

feet, You shall pass the for-est through. . . .

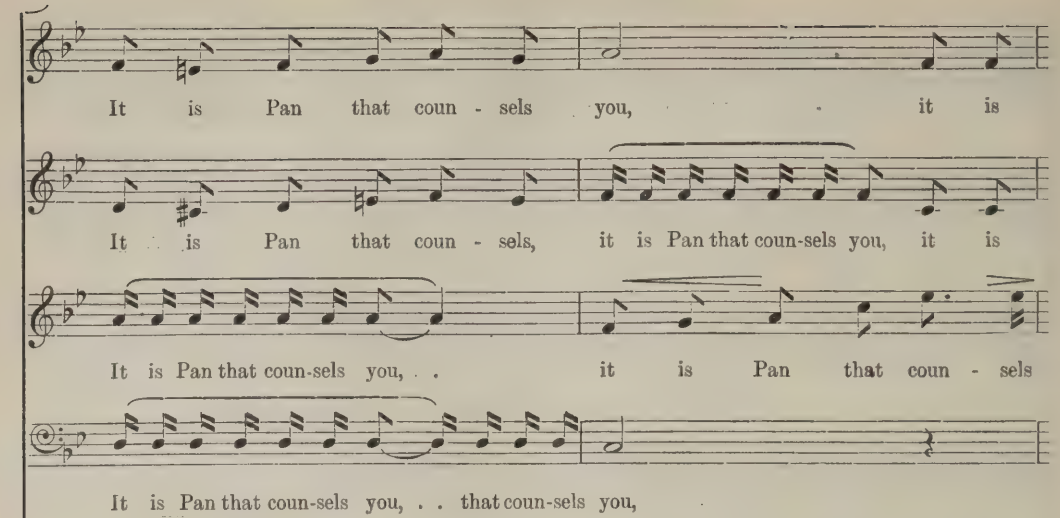

feet, You shall pass the for-est through. . . .

feet, You shall pass the for-est through. . . .

cantando pp

Rest; and then on freshened feet, . . . Pass the for-est through.

AFTER MANY A DUSTY MILE

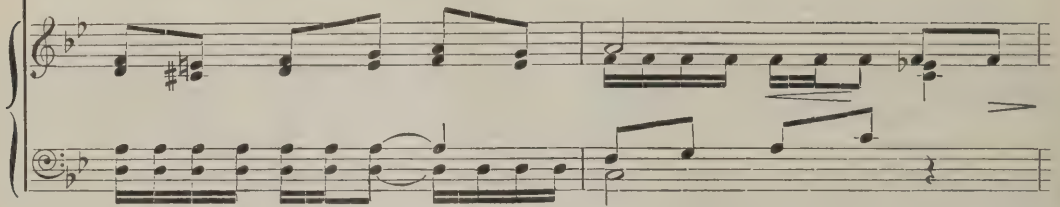

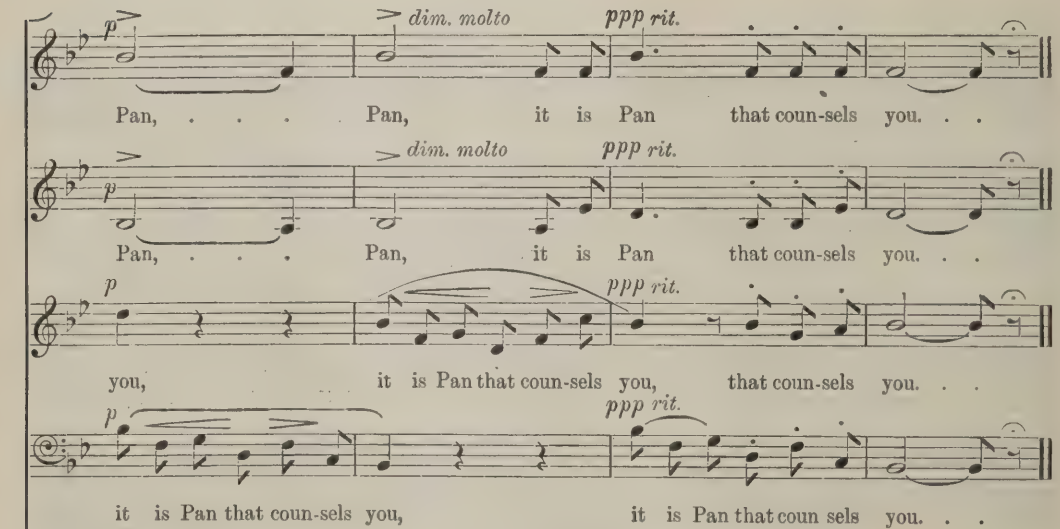

It is Pan that coun - sels you, it is

It is Pan that coun - sels, it is Pan that coun-sels you, it is

It is Pan that coun-sels you, . . it is Pan that coun - sels

It is Pan that coun-sels you, . . that coun-sels you,

Pan, . . . Pan, dim. molto it is Pan ppp rit. that coun-sels you. . .

Pan, . . . Pan, dim. molto it is Pan ppp rit. that coun-sels you. . .

you, it is Pan that coun-sels you, ppp rit. that coun-sels you. . .

it is Pan that coun-sels you, ppp rit. it is Pan that coun sels you. . .

f

to geth - er, Be - ware of Love, (deere) Love is a walk - ing geth - - - er, Be - ware . . of Love, (deere) Love geth - - - er, Be - ware, be - ware . . of Love, (deere) Love geth - - - er, Be - ware of Love, (deere) Love is a walk - ing

f

mp

sprite, a walk - ing sprite, And Love is mp

is a walk - ing sprite, and Love is this and that, and Love is mp

is a walk - ing sprite, and Love is this and that, and Love is mp

sprite, a walk - ing sprite, and Love is this and that, and Love is mp

p

this and that, And O I wot not what, and O . .

p this and that, And O . . . I wot not what, and O I

p this and that, And O . . . I wot not what, and O I

p this and that, And O . . . I wot not what, and O I

p

mf
I wot not what, And comes and goes a - gaine, I wot not..
mf wot not what, And comes and goes a - gaine, I wot not
mf wot not what, And comes and goes a - gaine, I
mf wot not what, And comes and goes a - gaine, I wot not

p whith - er, and comes and goes a - gaine, I wot not.. whith - er.
p whith - er, and comes and goes a - gaine, I wot not whith - er.
p wot not whith - er, and comes and goes a - gaine, I wot not whith - er.
p whith - er, and comes and goes a - gaine, I wot not whith - er.

Poco più mosso
f No! no! these phan-toms are to breed a - ma - zing, No! no! these ff No! no! these phan-toms are to breed a - ma - zing, f No! no! these phan-toms are to Poco più mosso
f No! no! these phan-toms are to breed.. a - ma - zing, to

Tempo 1mo. p

phan-toms are to breed a - ma - zing, . . . For .

No! no! these phan-toms are to breed a - ma - zing, breed a - ma - zing, to breed a - ma - zing, For . . in her breed a - - ma - - - zing, For . . in her

Tempo 1mo.

rall.

. . in her eyes I saw his torch - light bla - zing.

p rall.

For . . in her eyes I saw his torch - - light bla - zing.

rall.

eyes I saw his torch - - light bla - zing.

rall.

eyes I saw his torch - - light bla - - - zing.

rall.

(Continued from page 258.)

We spoke above of the 'comparative' failure of the petition. We used the adjective because all who are in close touch with Church music circles know that the petition, and the subsequent meeting of the Archbishop and the College deputation, did a great deal of good. Wide publicity was given to the matter, and as a result the position of the organist and the relations between organists and clergy have greatly improved. In any case, the R.C.O. spared neither time nor labour in trying to improve the status of the organist and in supporting his cause.

The status of the organist is not yet all it ought to be. Probably it will always fall a trifle short, because there must necessarily be many hundreds of amateurs and semi-amateurs working in small and poor parishes, and so a recognised standard of efficiency is impossible. But that status is infinitely better than it was twenty years ago, and the improvement is due almost entirely to the R.C.O. The College is managed by a Council which, as a representative body of specialists and all-round musicians, is second to the governing body of no other musical examining institution in the country. The Council has from time to time revised the syllabus, always in the direction of making the scheme more comprehensive. (We hope we are not giving away secrets when we say that both the Associateship and Fellowship papers are being overhauled at the present moment.)

We must credit the writer of the Music Teacher article with the best of intentions. Like the rest of us, he feels that an improvement in Church choir-work is overdue. But the R.C.O. authorities are no less wide awake to the needs of the hour, and they would, we are sure, welcome criticism that is both fair and constructive. The Music Teacher attack is neither. There is a suspicion of spite about it, and it shows little knowledge of the facts and difficulties of the case.

OLD VILLAGE CHURCH MUSIC*

BY DONALD MACARTHUR

Speaking broadly, the mediæval village church had no vestry, no choir, no instrument. What was very much a 'said' service satisfied there for ordinary purposes; musicians could be imported for the Church Feast or other special occasions. The post-Reformation period through which the old choral foundations (the 'quires and places where they sing' of the Prayer Book) maintained their existence with difficulty, had therefore nothing in this respect to take away from the villages, and only one gift to give them—the metrical psalm sung to tunes of French-Swiss invention or English imitations of such. (Germany contributes little to this stock: the affinities of Tudor Protestantism were more with Calvin than with Luther.) Though soon set here in four parts—with the cantus in the tenor after the contemporary fashion—these virile melodies, built for congregational use, could stand without harmonies (as originally intended), and in the villages they did so, the clerk 'raising' them. Even a pitch-pipe seems to have been considered an unmanly luxury for such a purpose.

The changed conditions of the Restoration period had their effect in this matter. By 1700 we find a new style of psalmody, a native product, coming into print and use, very much lighter in texture than the solid Genevan stuff which Ravenscroft and Playford had standardised. Purcell's influence may have counted for something in this newer style, which had an obstinate predilection for triple time. 'Rockingham' (the tune now generally sung to 'When I survey the wondrous Cross') is a good, sober example of the new manner. Others, even in the earlier period, were more florid, such as:

'Eastcheap.' Harmonia Sacra, 1730.

Lyra Davidica (1708) had already produced the familiar tune to 'Jesus Christ is risen to-day,' with its many flourishes. One cannot imagine either of these tunes sung with a descant in the Tudor fashion. As the 18th century went on melodies became even more exuberant, till they degenerated into the imbecilities of the so-called 'fuguing' tunes with their feeble imitative under-parts.

Good or bad, all this was indoor music in contrast to the old Huguenot psalms, which were emphatically outdoor music in origin. Goudimel and Bourgeois thought of their tunes in terms of a crowd singing outside on a hill—as in a popular movement, subject to persecuting interruptions, must often happen—rather than as for a congregation within the walls of a church. The new style caught the general ear. It demanded harmonic support in a way that the old did not—and got it. The west-gallery band of instrumentalists still lingering in country places in our grandparents' days was part of the answer to this new demand, first made in town churches where there happened to be no organ (by no means an uncommon condition), and later in the villages.

Village church bands began to come into existence about 1780, and were dying out in 1850. They flourished in what was a trivial and jejune period in English Church music when Nares, Clarke-Whitfield, and Jackson were names to conjure with. People are still to be met with to whom the church band is a distinct memory of their youth; 'the queer noises they made' is generally the one point remarked upon. Neither matter nor manner sounds attractive; the last of them was no doubt the worst of them. The subject when mentioned is dismissed with a contemptuous smile. It deserves better.

When the villages began to provide support for the new psalmody their most elementary effort took the form of an instrumental bass (one violoncello or bassoon or whatever it might be) to hold up the vocal parts. If you were smart—and a bit talented—you had clarinets and flutes as well; if you were very smart and ambitious, you got fiddles. To account for the comparative rarity of fiddles, it has been suggested that there was a prejudice against them, from their secular associations. But Zola's Les violons pleurant la volupté is somewhat beyond the 18th century rustic mind; and where 'whittle and dub' were still the accompaniments of their revelry, the flute might equally well recall moments of heated levity to introspective folk such as they were not. The fact that a wind instrument with spaced stops is so much easier to learn than strings is sufficient explanation of why the fiddle was rare; though some of the music, gradually growing more elaborate with its interludes, symphonies, and other embellishments, looks as if it were written for strings rather than wind. The ground, if string, generally spoken of as the bass-viol, was always a violoncello—not a double-bass. If not a 'cello it would be a bassoon or sometimes a serpent. The 'sarpint' was a strepitous beast; to judge from what can be heard from its improved descendant, the ophicleide, in Continental churches, it must have been a terrible weapon in any but expert hands.

Documented complete evidence of the composition of these village church bands, and of the music that they used, is very hard to come by—records of a matter so little considered as to seem hardly worth preserving, and, where they still exist, difficult to get news of. But Goathurst, a small Somerset village under the Quantocks, is fortunate in possessing not only the complete music library of its west-gallery choir, but an exceptionally full series of churchwardens' accounts from which the history of the band can be traced. In these accounts, with their varied details, there is no mention of music in any form till 1786, when a modest 2s. is paid for 'a pitch-pipe for the Gallery.' Some careless account-keeping during the Napoleonic war period is cleared up in 1812; among the arrears, back-pay for 'the Singers,' three in number. These, whom one naturally guesses to have been an alto, a tenor, and a bass, get the magnificent stipend of 6s. 8d. per annum—and have to wait for it, too! Thus we arrive at a four-part choir of which the melody people receive nothing but the honour of singing the tune. Why should anybody be paid for such a simple matter? Next, but not till 1826, comes a 'Violoncello for the use of the Singers in the Church,' followed by regular annual payments for strings, &c. Another pause until 1833 before two flutes are added to complete the accompaniment. Village tradition is definite that there was a clarinet, too, and remembers the name of the player; there is nothing as to this on the record, but performers sometimes provided their own instruments. And so things continue till 1857, when the band fades out on the purchase of an organ.

* The substance of a paper read to the Somerset Archaeological and Natural History Society.

On the face of it, Goathurst was tardy in accepting current fashions, and leisurely in developing them. Records apart, each step in its musical progress except the sad finale might have been expected some twenty years earlier than its actual happening. Allowing for the fact that this village was behindhand, and content to do things on a modest scale, we get a fair picture of how such church bands grew into existence.

Thus the band. Now as to its repertoire. The music library consists of a set of score and part-books cue'd for instrumental use, a stock-book for new music awaiting distribution into the books in current use, and a large super-folio, mostly of anthems, from which the whole quartet could sing. This last is vilely written, both as to music and text, while the official books (bound in 1827, but containing music which is obviously much older) are the work of a clerk in the squire's estate-office, who is paid for his work in the churchwardens' accounts. True to his calling, he copies music beautifully, engrosses his titles with elegant flourishes, and his text is copperplate.

Taking these volumes together, they contain:

- Two hundred psalm-tunes, more or less; many of them standard and familiar;
- Forty-four Anthems;
- Three settings of the Sanctus: obviously from printed books;
- One Jubilate Deo: florid and foolish;
- One Gloria in Excelsis: a dull, but decent setting.

The last is astonishing, considering the period; it was no doubt meant to be used as an anthem at Morning or Evening Prayer. Quite a number of other anthems are settings of collects; most unfit matter for such treatment. In the whole group of forty-four anthems there are but four traceable to print; and these, things that were sung everywhere in their day. There are stacks of rubbish in the collection in general, with a crystal—if not a jewel—here and there. Some of the effects are bewildering. In an anthem, for example, in the super-folio, one of the movements opens with a nice little conventional Handelian fugal exposition, and ends with a page which, if sung as it is written, would make Stravinsky stare.

Now where did all this unwinnowed heap of stuff come from? For certain a great deal of it was written locally, i.e., in the county of Somerset at least; and only a small proportion of that ever saw print. Somerset had in the period a number of local composers, some of them of quite lowly social position, who achieved print. Of this group, Thomas Hawkes (1786-1857), a Wesleyan, compiled a Psalmody for his Society, in the preface of which it is stated that the tunes were chiefly composed by local amateurs of Somerset and Wiltshire.

Amateurs? Now we have a key. Hawkes and those others, like the more famous farm-labourer, Shoel, were professional musicians of a sort, trained enough to write without technical blunders, whereas much of the Goathurst music (and some of the most interesting) is obviously 'amateur' in the derisory sense, with counterpoint which, striving to be ambitious, succeeds only in being grotesque, and errors in harmony that could never have been made by the copyist. Who were these 'amateurs'? The members of the choir and band themselves. There would be at least one 'scholar' among them who could get their efforts on to paper; the parish clerk, the schoolmaster, an estate-office clerk like our scribe—there are remains of his efforts as a composer in the books, of which the less said the better—or a musical farmer, such as the original owner of the super-folio. Their productions would often be composite, like the folk-song, although, unlike the folk-song, self-conscious. Goathurst's neighbourhood has given little to the folk-song recorder; villagers engaged in making music would naturally cease to be interested in the countryside music that grew.

We can picture our music-makers at work, gathered in the house-place of the village inn. Somebody has brought an idea of a new tune that would go to one of the metrical Psalms; it is hummed over, criticised, possibly some customer outside the party concerned ventures a suggestion, and occasionally escapes snubbing for his pains; in such case his share in the final result is promptly forgotten by the workers. On the whole, they are an ignorant and obstinate set. So much the better. Obstinance is conservative; it discourages intentional 'freak' experiments. Ignorance, rushing in where knowledge hesitates to tread, reaches illuminating surprises now and again. You see how nicely they balance each other. At last they have got their melody on paper; the harmonizing begins. Oh, those harmonies! The impression they give is that some sort of framework was blocked out first with a fine general disregard or ignorance of elementary rules, after which each member set about embellishing his own part, with the result that may be imagined. In this process of adornment the tenor is usually the most exacting; the turn, runs, and passing-notes are the frequent flowers along his way, however plain his fellows' path may be. Some of these ornaments look as if they could not possibly have arrived till the piece had reached its second or third edition, so to speak. In more ambitious forms of psalm-tunes, in anthems, &c., of course the business of 'harmonization' is longer, because the instrumentalists claim their say, and must have their full share of importance. At the back of the whole process lurks the ghost of Handel, though Mozart as a pale shade occasionally flits across the scene. Handel means the still more perilous venture of contrapuntal devices which they face with the same courage of ignorance, and sometimes, strange to say, stumble on something really effective and nearly up to 'sealed pattern.'

In the study of this music, crude as it may be, one is in fact dealing with a folk-art whose very existence as such has been quite overlooked. What has been described is, of course, not peculiar to the village named, nor to the county of Somerset. Books from any part of England will, when investigated, tell the same tale; the difficulty is to come across them.

Parishes which possess such books would do well to have them carefully looked through. From the very mixed catalogue given earlier in this article a half-dozen or so of psalm melodies have been recovered for use as hymn-tunes in the place of their origin, together with some specimens of anthem work, and the parishioners are proud of a local possession. They have been purged of glaring blunders of harmony, while every effort has been made to preserve their general outline, particularly in the bass, often as characteristic as the melody. Severe selection from among the many in the books has secured psalm melodies that prove really 'congregational'—for it must be remembered that none of this music was intended to be congregational. The singers of the old gallery conceived themselves to be artists; they would have heartily approved that canon of the 8th century, which said: 'If anyone who does not occupy a place in the choir-stalls presumes to sing, let him be anathema.'

'Tis the gallery have got to sing, all the world knows,' said Mr. Penny. 'Why, souls, what's the use o' the ancients spending scores of pounds to build galleries if people down in the lowest depths of the church sing like that at a moment's notice?'

Attributions are, of course, difficult where so many of the pieces are without a name. The recovered music is supposed to be at least local; in some cases, actually of the parish of the MSS. The refrain of their setting of Tate and Brady's Psalm cxiii., detached from a poor context, now serves their descendants as a cheerful L.M. tune :

An 'Evening Hymn' claims Cooksley as composer ; as there was a family of that name at Goathurst in 1840 it is likely to have been made there. In current use this striking tune runs :

As 'laid out' in the books both the barring and the harmonies are plainly the work of a musical illiterate ; rather a worse specimen of rustic harmony than even the average :

There is some funeral music of interest : a setting of the Sentences and 'I heard a voice' from the Burial Service. This was heard again after nearly a century of silence at the Dedication of a Churchyard Extension in the Parish in 1913 :

The lines are broad, the melody good, and one of the movements has a straightforward bit of imitation :

Whom I shall see for my-self and mine eyes shall be-hold

Of the anthems the most interesting is a setting of the twenty-third Psalm in four movements—chorus, tenor solo, treble and bass duet, chorus. The leading subject is :

The text is conflate ; a mixture of the Bible and the Prayer Book version, such as might be expected in communal construction, each member contributing his portion of melody with words to fit so far as he remembered them. There is a modal passage at the end of the tenor solo—about the only instance of such tonality in the books :

And one wonders what village Bach was responsible for this fine phrase :

There is a spirit of somewhat riotous cheerfulness in the West Country music of this kind ; a suggestion that the performers were thoroughly enjoying themselves. (This note is not so insistent in examples from the Midlands and the North.) It is a thousand pities that the old village church band has irrecoverably gone. With all its faults it was a little art-corporation of performers—and often, as we see, producers—in every parish of the countryside. Village life of to-day has so few amenities and so little social initiative that the loss must be deplored of all those interests of the past that brought folk and kept them together ; the church band among them.

We are glad to see that organists are doing their bit in the revival of our old music. Owing to England's backwardness in the matter of organ construction a couple of centuries ago, our old organ composers were handicapped. Nevertheless, they managed to write a good deal of excellent music, a series of which has been edited by John E. West and published by Messrs. Novello. Examples now appear in a good many recital programmes, and one or two enterprising players have even played whole recitals of early English organ music. Mr. Herbert Hodge gave one at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey recently, playing works by Locke, Blow, Greene, Boyce, Croft, Purcell, and Christopher Gibbons. Good !

At Llandaff Cathedral, on February 20, the University College Choral Society and the Cathedral Choir united to sing Haydn's Insane et vane cura, Bach's O Light Everlasting, and Mozart's Splendete Te, Deus. Dr. David Evans conducted, and the Cathedral organist, Mr. G. Beale, was at the organ.

Who wrote the famous Ave Maria so long credited to Arcadelt? For long musicians have been content to accept Arcadelt's ascription, although it is only fair to note that J. R. Sterndale Bennett, in the new edition of Grove, says that 'the authorship is extremely doubtful.' Now at last the problem is solved by the publication in the Louvain Review (7th year, No. 1) of a letter from Saint-Saëns to Father Joseph Kreps, organist of the Benedictine Abbey of Louvain: 'I learned from Dietsch, who was for a long time organist of the Madeleine, that he himself composed the celebrated Ave Maria, attributed to Arcadelt, and that its celebrity was due to fraud.' Dietsch, who became conductor of the Grand Opera in 1860, died in February, 1865. G. F.

Messrs. Blackwood have just issued a sixpenny booklet that should be on the desk of all who have to choose anthems. It is a classified list, published by the Committee of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland on Psalmody and Hymns. The anthems are arranged in four lists, according to the degree of difficulty. A fifth list contains specially long and difficult anthems, and two supplementary tables give solos from oratorios and settings of the Canticles. Each page contains six columns, wherein are set out the title, composer, publisher, price (Staff and Sol-fa), the season for which the work is suitable, and remarks as to the voices required, solos, and, in the case of big works, a word about the structure as well. This is the most practical and useful work of reference that has come our way for a long time.

We have received a batch of programmes of recitals given during the past few months on Wednesday afternoons at St. Fin Barre's Cathedral, Cork, by Mr. J. T. Horne. They show a fine choice from the best organ music, old and new—Bach's Passacaglia, Sonatas by Mendelssohn, Elgar, and Harwood, Franck's Pièce Héroïque, West's Fantasia, Parry's Wanderer Fugue, Chorale Preludes by Parry, Darke, and Vaughan Williams, a sprinkling of arrangements, and excellent vocal and string relief from Bach, Handel, Franck, &c. The recitals were prefaced by explanatory comments.

A service of British psalm and hymn tunes was held at Oakfield Road Church, Clifton, on February 19. Mr. Arthur S. Warrell played organ preludes based on the hymn-tunes sung, and the Sonata Britannica of Stanford. Dr. Beckh in an address traced the growth of four-part congregational singing. The tunes sung were 'St. Ann's' and 'Martyrdom' (Preludes by Parry), 'St. Mary' (Prelude by Charles Wood), 'Martyrs' and 'University' (Preludes by Harvey Grace). M. E. B.

At Sherwood Wesleyan Church, on February 21, the choir—combined for the occasion with that of High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham—gave 'An Evening with Handel,' singing solos and choruses from various oratorios. Mr. Blyton Dobson conducted, and also played the Overture to Otho and a Concerto movement. The choirs repeated the performance at High Pavement Chapel a week later.

At Winchester College Chapel, on March 17, the Nightjars Madrigal Society (conductor, Dr. E. T. Sweeting) sang a fine list of unaccompanied works by Bach, Parry, Weelkes, Brahms, and Cornelius. Mr. J. A. Sowerbutts interspersed these with organ solos by Bach, Wesley, Franck, Vierne, &c. A collection was made for the Organists' Benevolent League.

Rossini's Stabat Mater and Mendelssohn's Forty-second Psalm were sung at the City Temple on March 10 by the Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Allan Brown, with Mr. G. D. Cunningham at the organ. The Messiah will be sung on April 14.

ORGAN RECITALS

- Mr. F. G. Milford Ogbourne, St. Saviour's, Ealing—Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Introduction and Variations on an Original Theme, Hesse; Air with Variations in A, Best.
- Mr. H. A. Fricker, Metropolitan Methodist Church, Toronto—Allegro agitato and Cantilène (Sonata No. 13), Rheinberger; Scherzo, Pièrre; Fugue in E flat, Bach.
- Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, Trinity Wesleyan Church, Sale—Allegro Maestoso (Sonata No. 2), Claussmann; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach.
- Mr. Harold M. Dawber, Longsight Free Christian Church, Birch Lane—Trumpet Tune and Air, Purcell; Fugue in G, Bach; Cradle Song and Caprice, Harvey Grace.
- Mr. E. A. Moore, St. Margaret's, Ilkley—Toccata in C, Bach; Prelude and Fugue in D minor, E. A. Moore; Andante Cantabile (Symphony No. 4), Widor.
- Mr. B. J. Maslen, St. Stephen, Lansdown—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Cradle Song, Harvey Grace; Pastorale, Franck; Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford.
- Mr. Arthur E. Temple, Free Church, St. Ives—Choral Prelude, 'I give to thee farewell,' Bach; Spozalizio, Liszt; Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford.
- Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Siciliano, Bach; 'Old 104th,' Parry; Variations on a Ground Bass and Final Fugato, Bertram Hollins; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn.
- Mr. Harry Wall, St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside—Overture to 'Comus,' Arne; Meditation, Harvey Grace; Légende, Vierne; Solemn Festival, Rheinberger.
- Mr. H. C. Warrilow, National Institute for the Blind—Serenade, Watling; Impression No. 1, Karg-Elert; Allegro grazioso, Frank Bridge.
- Mr. Allan Hamer, Bloemfontein Cathedral—Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells; Prelude on a Theme of Tallis, Darke.
- Mr. Phillip Miles, Holy Trinity, Gray's Inn, Holborn—Introduction and Fugue (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach.
- Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End—Prelude and Fugue in F, Buxtehude; Finale in B flat, Franck; Passacaglia in D minor, Max Reger.
- Mr. J. Gray, Adam Smith Hall, Kirkcaldy—Phantasie in D flat, Rheinberger; Fanfare in D, Lemmens.
- Mr. Norman W. Newell, St. Mark's, Leeds—Prælium, Max Reger; Passacaglia, Bach; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn.
- Dr. A. C. P. Embling, St. Laurence's, Reading—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Rhapsody, Howells.
- Mr. Francis W. Sutton, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley.
- Mr. Stanley Lucas, Harecourt Congregational Church, Canonbury—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Finale, Lemmens.
- Dr. Edgar Faulkner, St. Thomas's Cathedral, Bombay—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Solemn Melody, Walford Davies.

APPOINTMENTS

- Mr. J. H. Ingham, organist and choirmaster, Holy Trinity, Southport.
- Mr. G. H. Johnson, organist and choirmaster, St. Matthias Salford.
- Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, organist and choirmaster, St. Mary Magdalene's, Ashton-upon-Mersey.

Prizes totalling 25,000 francs will be offered in an international competition for new sacred music and organ works. The organizers are the Procure de Musique Religieuse, 3, Rue de Mézières, Paris. Particulars are to be had of the Director, M. l'Abbé Delépine, at the above address. The judging board will have Dubois as president.

The London Scottish Choir will give its twenty-ninth annual concert at Kingsway Hall on April 11, at 7.30, with Miss Flora Woodman, Miss Catherine Spalding, and Mr. John Booth as soloists. Mr. T. Arnold Fulton is the conductor.

Competition Festival Record

THE ELIZABETHAN FESTIVAL

The promoters may well feel gratified by the success of this venture. The number of entries was inevitably small compared with those of festivals in which huge classes of solo performers help to make an imposing total. It has to be remembered, however, that all the music was of a type with which the average singer is unfamiliar; owing to unavoidable delays the syllabus was issued too late for some choirs to prepare in time; there were no money prizes, cups, or medals; and the date of the Festival was uncomfortably close to several other metropolitan competitions, including the huge London Musical Festival. In view of these facts, the entry was unexpectedly good. But numbers matter less than spirit, and there was no mistaking the happy-family feeling that animated all the partakers. The general standard of performance showed the need for some such intensive effort as this on behalf of Elizabethan music. As Dr. Vaughan Williams said, most of the choirs would have given a first-rate account of themselves in a part-song or an anthem, but the rhythmic and other problems set by a madrigal were at present beyond them. The good counsel and massed rehearsals the choirs received from Dr. Vaughan Williams, Sir Richard Terry, and Mr. E. T. Cook will surely bear fruit.

We hope the Festival will become an annual event. There is room for a competition in which all concerned specialise in fine old music, and above all, when the fine old music is that of a great period in our musical history. It is good to hear, therefore, that the Committee is already considering the arrangements for a 1923 Festival.

The prize-winners in the choral competitions were as follows:

Large choirs (sacred and secular): One entry. Morley College (Mr. Gustav Holst).

Large choirs (sacred): One entry. L.C.C. Philharmonic Society (Mr. G. W. T. Peatt).

Smaller choirs (sacred): 'Our Lady of Victories.' Kensington (Mrs. P. Collis).

Smaller choirs (secular): Petersfield (Miss Causton) and Dr. Herman Brearley's Contest Choir, Blackburn, a tie. Smaller choirs (secular): Dr. Brearley's Choir.

Girls' Clubs: The G.F.S. Choir (Miss M. Turner).

BEDFORD.—The third Bedfordshire Eisteddfod Competitive Musical Festival lasted ten days during February and March, and collected about five thousand competitors in seventy-seven classes. Prizes in the senior choral competitions were won by Shillington Choral Society, Queen's Works Choral Society, and Primrose Hill Male-Voice Choir (Northampton).

BRISTOL.—This Festival, which has now reached the age of twenty, was held from March 11 onwards, with over a thousand entries, which represented about three thousand competitors.

CARLISLE.—From March 4 to March 8 this Festival assembled the musical resources of this exceedingly musical neighbourhood, and produced some choral singing of the highest class. Dr. Adrian C. Boulton and Mr. Philip Brown had great praise for the male-voice class (Goodwin Male-Voice Choir) and mixed-voice class (Carlisle Madrigal Society).

EDINBURGH.—A seven-days' Festival concluded on March 3 with abundant choral competitions. There were 'A' classes and 'B' classes, all well supported. The principal tests and results in the former were as follows: Male-voice choirs—The Fond Lover (Bantock) and Full fathom five (Dunhill): 1st, Wallsend-on-Tyne Male-Voice Choir (Mr. G. W. Danskin). Mixed-voice choirs—The shower (Elgar) and Come, gentle swains (Michael Cavendish): 1st, The William Morris Choir, Glasgow (Mr. William Robertson). This Choir was also first in the female-voice 'A' class. 'B' winners were Clydebank Female-Voice Choir and Barr and Stroud Male-Voice Choir. The adjudicators were Sir Henry Walford Davies, Mr. Percy Scholes, Mr. Hugh S. Robertson, Mr. Wilfred Senior, Mr. Harold Samuel (pianoforte), and Miss E. G. Knocker (strings). The Festival, of which Mr. F. H. Bisset is chairman, has now, in its fourth year, become established as an event of first-class importance.

HUDDERSFIELD (The 'Mrs. Sunderland' Competitions).—During its thirty-five years' history this Festival has made gradual progress, and this year, for the first time, the competitions occupied four days (February 7-10) and two halls. One of the features of the Festival was the soprano solo class which produced seventy performances of Handel's Care Selfe. The tests for mixed-voice choirs were Wilbye's Sweet honey-sucking bees and Cornelius's Surrender of the Soul; the male-voice choirs sang Stanford's Autumn Leaves and Lovatt's Hereward the Wake.

SOUTH-EAST LONDON.—The third annual competition Festival held in this district, which is to all appearances the least propitious in London, was carried to a triumphant success. The junior competitions, held on February 16 and 17, brought thirty-six entries in eight classes, and produced some very good results. At the end thirteen hundred children sang together under the baton of Mr. Geoffrey Shaw. The senior competitions were held on March 12, 14, and 15. The winning choral societies were Metrogas (Mr. Hugh James), Bermondsey Central Hall (Mr. S. W. Sharvell), St. Gabriel's College Ladies' Choir (Miss M. Wills), and the Browning Settlement Ladies' Choir (Miss Dawnay). St. John's Fellowship was first of seven Mothers' Meetings. At the final concert massed choirs sang Bach's Sleepers, wake! under the direction of Dr. Adrian C. Boulton.

ENFIELD.—The Festival (March 17) is largely a children's event. This year—the fifth—found the competition well-established. Entries had increased to nearly three hundred. A feature was the singing of the school and organization choirs as a whole, with a few outstanding—for example, Chase Side Boys (Mr. H. D. Vincent), Senior Girls, Bush Hill Park (Miss A. E. Deane), and St. Michael's Band of Hope (Miss Gertrude Mare). The vocal quality in the large solo classes showed the results of the admirable training in the schools of this district. Miss B. N. Bord and Messrs. John Graham, Geoffrey Shaw, Harvey Grace, and H. H. Stubbs judged.

LONDON.—The vast London Musical Competition Festival lasted from March 5 to March 17, and brought innumerable competitors to Central Hall, Westminster, where they appeared in a hundred and twenty-eight classes. About twenty adjudicators officiated, and were able to report a steadily advancing standard. Conspicuous successes were won by a Girl Guides' Choir brought from the Isle of Man by Mr. E. T. Cook; the Watford Choral Union (a male-voice choir from Rickmansworth), conducted by Mr. Wallis Bandy; by South-West Choral Society, conducted by Mr. A. R. Saunders, which won the Daily Telegraph Shield for choral societies; and by Mr. Percy Baker's Ladies' Choral Society from Bedford.

'Alto' writes asking why competition festivals never include a class for male altos. Such voices are rare, and are valuable for Cathedral and quartet work, and 'Alto' thinks that the supply and quality would be helped by a little corner in the syllabuses of our chief festivals.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Young lady, moderate pianist and amateur violinist, would like to join dance or concert orchestra for either instrument; also to have mutual practice with another instrumentalist or vocalist, lady or gentleman. London area.—J. P., c/o Musical Times.

Vocalist and violinist (gentleman) desires to meet a good lady or gentleman accompanist for mutual practice. Leytonstone or Wanstead district preferred.—R. C., c/o Musical Times.

Gentleman (24) would like to meet a gentleman about the same age who is an artistic pianist and good accompanist. London district.—W. J., c/o Musical Times.

Viola player (moderate skill), would like to join a quartet—Haydn, Mozart up to Op. 18, Beethoven. South of England or Wales preferred.—Mr. H. H. MASON, 1, Wilmont Avenue, Kingstown, Ireland.

Violinist wishes to join concert or dance orchestra for Saturday evenings, or church orchestra for Sunday evenings.—M. N., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady vocalist, trained, wishes to meet good accompanist for mutual practice in Birmingham district.—N. B., c/o Musical Times.

Student (singing) desires to meet a good accompanist for mutual practice. Grays district.—Miss M. H., 10, Crest Hill Avenue, Grays, Essex.

Gentleman pianist desires to meet vocalists or instrumentalists for mutual practice, and to assist at orchestral rehearsals.—W. S. PORTER, 'Crenden,' Lansdown Road, Cheltenham.

Second violin would like to join orchestra for amateur operatic or musical society, or otherwise, rehearsing Thursdays or Fridays after office hours in City.—J. W. HUGHES, 4, Moorgate, E.C.2.

Young lady pianist wishes to meet vocalists or violinists for mutual practice, Blackpool.—J. J., c/o Musical Times.

Highly capable pianist, possessing large selection of classical music, wishes to meet good solo instrumentalist, vocalist, or pianist. London district.—V. H., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (gentleman, age twenty-four) desires to meet a gentleman of about same age who is an artistic pianist and good accompanist.—B. B. B., c/o Musical Times.

Flautist wishes to get into touch with pianist, violinist, and 'cellist for mutual practice. S.E. London district.—C. R., c/o Musical Times.

Vocalist (lady) and violinist (gentleman) desire to meet pianist and violinist for mutual practice. Birmingham district.—G. A. C., c/o Musical Times.

Gentleman (23), with well-trained baritone voice, desires to meet a good accompanist (young gentleman) for mutual practice two or three evenings a week. Within four miles of Abbey Wood.—D. C. MCQUEENEY, 73, Federation Road, Abbey Wood, S.E.2.

Violinist (male) would like to join string or pianoforte trio, quartet, or quintet, to practise orchestral or chamber music; first or second violin. Experienced player.—J. P. WALKER, 115, Waleran Buildings, Old Kent Road, S.E.1.

Young pianist would like to meet keen violinist and 'cellist to form quartet for practice. Age about eighteen preferred. S.E. district.—A. KINGSLAND, 38, Marler Road, Forest Hill, S.E.23.

Letters to the Editor

THE INFLUENCE OF THE ELIZABETHAN COMPOSERS ON PURCELL

SIR,—Dr. Froggatt in his letter about Byrd and Weelkes in your March issue states that Purcell was quite uninfluenced by the Elizabethan composers. I do not think this is so, though there are very few of his works which show this influence. But I think some certainly do. One is the eight-part anthem O Lord God of Hosts mentioned by Dr. Froggatt. The style of the anthem is quite different from that of the 16th-century composers, but Purcell uses the voices at the climax of the anthem in precisely the way they did. He takes a phrase of a certain shape and rhythm and makes each one of the eight voices sing it, beginning it on any beat of the bar, and ignoring the bar-lines altogether. The phrase is sprinkled about all over the page of the score quite in the Elizabethan manner. The fact that this anthem ends with an unadorned 4 3 2 3 suspension, a very Elizabethan and a very un-Purcellian way of ending, shows further the Elizabethan influence. The fine eight-part anthem Hear my prayer suggests the influence of Byrd; not by any intricacies of rhythm, but by its grinding, clashing counterpoint, and by the fact of the whole anthem being really one big phrase. There are none of the cadential stopping places characteristic of Purcell's period. This anthem also has an Elizabethan touch at the close, the 3rd being omitted in the last chord. In the Service in B flat, dull though much of it is, there are continual traces of Elizabethan influences. Such are the half-close at the words, 'Thou art the King of Glory, O Christ'; the occasional use of triple rhythms when the time is two in the bar; and the rhythmical shape of many passages which corresponds to passages to the same words in Gibbons in F. These two services, unlike each other in general effect, are often alike in small details.

One small mistake of Dr. Froggatt's I should like to correct. He raised my interest by referring to a Byrd composition in Purcell's handwriting in the library of this College. There is, however, no such manuscript. The manuscript referred to at Mr. Helst's lecture was a copy made by Purcell in score of John Parsons's Funeral Service. Parsons died in 1623. The really interesting thing about the manuscript is not so much that Purcell should have made a copy of an Elizabethan composition, as that he should have barred it with bars of irregular lengths. It is some proof that he understood Elizabethan music.—Yours, &c.,

HFATHCOTE D. STATHAM.

S. Michael's College, Tenbury.

March 11, 1923.

SOME NOTES ON HUNGARIAN GIPSY MUSIC

SIR,—During a recent stay at Budapest I made it my business to learn as much as I could about the celebrated gipsy musicians and their art. I do not confess to a profound knowledge of my subject, but I feel sure that what I did learn will interest the many for whom the words 'gipsy' and 'Hungarian' have a romantic significance. My authorities were all men of the highest education, and were also born Hungarians, and so my information must not be dismissed as the sort of fairy-tales that are so often told to foreigners.

First then as regards the gipsies themselves. They form about one-fifth of the population of Buda—and the erudite reader will recollect that Budapest consists of two towns of which Buda is the older. The gipsies are of small stature and not, generally speaking, half so dark-skinned as they are imagined to be. They seem to be as notorious for thieving as their English brethren. But for some reason that seems never sufficiently to have been explained they are almost to a man natural musicians. At the age of five the little boys learn to play the violin by ear, and begin to accumulate that immense stock of traditional music which can hardly be described as national, yet is so typical of their race. They set great store by their gifts for music apart from utilitarian reasons, and a famous gipsy violinist will hand down his first name to several generations, who are proud to bear it.

Nevertheless they are as lazy in their music as in other pursuits, and will never bother to learn the technique of their instruments properly or even to learn the notes. And this has a curious effect on their ensemble. The reader can no doubt easily sing a counterpoint or 'second' to a tune he knows, and with two people it is certainly not difficult. But add a third person and the thing is not so easy. First of all, which of the three will sing the inner part? Even when this is decided, an inner part is much more difficult than a bass. Imagine then what happens when, of the four members of the string quartet, three are improvising. Each wishes to make his part interesting, and the result is a curious thickness of texture which is very noticeable. (In listening to the music of Bartók and Kodály we remark a rather similar thing—no doubt they have been influenced unconsciously by the Zigeuner.)

The gipsy bands which play in the cabarets and restaurants are variously composed of the many I have heard personally. The string quartet generally forms the nucleus. A double-bass is often added, and also a clarinet which plays always in unison with the first violin even in the quietest passages. Then there are almost always one or even two instruments which are a cross between a zither and a xylophone—instruments which may be sufficiently described as grand pianofortes with no keyboard and a reduced compass. The performer has a hammer in each hand and plays a sort of arpeggio figure (à la Brinley Richards & Co.) with surprising celerity and facility. A full band thus sounds rather sodden and unwieldy owing, as I said above, to the texture, and particularly to the heavy bass.

The music performed consists of folk-song and dance. Some of the tunes are pretty well-known to English people through the arrangements by Liszt and Brahms. As in all folk-music, only the extreme emotions—melancholy and joy—are portrayed. Many of the songs will not bear translation—one of the most popular may be paraphrased as 'The man who has not six girl friends is a fool and ass'—and the dances partake very much of the Slav character, with their passionate whirlings and stamping of feet.

I fear I may have to destroy one of my countrymen's illusions regarding the wonderful individual playing of these people. I have heard at Budapest the playing of the gipsy who has most repute, and his technique was muddy and his tone particularly thin and spiky. The bands certainly play with great dash and go, very like the Southern Syncopated Orchestra, but their sentimentality and over-exaggeration are painful. No one admires temperament more than I do, but this is too much of a good thing. I have often heard Violet Clarence, who has acquired the knack of playing the arrangements by Liszt and Brahms, accused of the above faults. But she gives a true picture, and the faults are not hers! To show that these gipsies do not really care what type of music they play so long as it possesses a tune of sorts, I can adduce that they have taken to 'jazz' as a duck to water. The reader may say that this is only because, to get their living, they have to play to the international type of Jew and adventurer; but I have found this fondness for jazz in the most obscure cabarets. The same with their dances. One hardly ever sees the Czardas danced now; it is the latest form of the shimmy, and the newest type of ball-room dance. O tempora! O mores!

One more word about the folk-music. It is of a very original type. It is not strictly sentimental like the German, or fresh and jolly like the English and Basque, or vaguely disquieting and awkward like the Scandinavian. It is rather languorous, passionate, with more than a hint of cruelty. This, I fancy, is apparent even in the decorous settings which are known to us, and is still more noticeable at Budapest.

In conclusion, the mistake must not be made of mixing up the Hungarians and the Gipsies. The former struck me as rather more stolid than otherwise. They speak their language very slowly, so that even I, who have no gift of tongues, could converse with the aid of an invigorating phrase-book which started off its 'General Conversation' with the sentence 'There is a well-shaped damsel,' and continued in the style of the Restoration!—Yours, &c.,

C. À BECKET WILLIAMS.

WE HOPE HE SEES THIS!

SIR,—This is written in the hope that it will catch the eye of a previous user of Dr. Vaughan Williams's MS. full score of his Sea Symphony. Who he is I have not the faintest inkling. He must have been a very timid person, for he had literally covered this score with enormous blue pencil-marks, presumably inserted in order to aid his scattered wits at the performance. They included the final consonants of every sustained word sung by the choir inserted in all four parts; huge breath marks before, in the course of, and at the end of each phrase, not only for choir but for soloists; the names of the instruments written in full before any passage—important or unimportant —they had to play; the words 'Cue for Chorus' inserted some bars before the chorus entries; and last, but not least, when any bar came along with a different number of beats from those preceding and following it, the score was a forest of blue trees through which it was practically impossible to see any wood. It is very difficult to find the mental attitude of this gentleman and others of his kidney. I need hardly say (1) That no one worthy of the title of conductor could possibly hope to conduct from the score until the marks were erased; (2) The score was not his property, and therefore he had no right to mark it at all; (3) It must have occurred to him that the next user would have to spend hours—I myself spent five or six, and finished two large pieces of india-rubber—in erasing the marks; (4) He must also have known that if the score fell into the hands of some other demented dastard who treated it likewise, that a second or third erasure of heavy blue pencil would render it illegible. It is, I repeat, difficult to understand how any sane man could do such a thing. I have come across other similar cases before, but never one so bad as this. The mystery of the thing lies in the fact that the Sea Symphony is not a work which the amateur or inexperienced conductor would be likely to attempt.—Yours, &c.,

EDWARD C. BAIRSTOW.

Minster Court, York.

March 11, 1923.

CÉSAR FRANCK, LÉFÈBURE-WÉLY, AND SCOTSON CLARK

SIR,—Mr. Harvey Grace in the March instalment of his interesting article on Franck's Organ Music, expresses surprise that 'Franck seems to have set out to write in the idiom of that popular composer, Léfèbure-Wély.' César Franck was probably the most catholic (in the true sense of the word) organist-composer who ever lived. He was not only a great admirer of Léfèbure-Wély's tuneful pieces, but was also fond of Scotson Clark's marches. He played to me more than once on his private organ Scotson Clark's then popular Marche aux Flambeaux, and said it was more typical than Meyerbeer's March with the same title. It may not be generally known that César Franck's organ compositions were first heard in London within the walls of Scotson Clark's London Organ School. As a pupil I heard the organ pieces which Mr. Harvey Grace so admirably describes, played by the teachers and advanced organ students there as far back as the year 1878.—Yours, &c.,

ANDREW DE TERNANT.

36, Somerleyton Road, S.W.9.

ACOUSTIC PROPERTIES OF A CHURCH

SIR,—Could any of my fellow readers give me a hint as to how I could improve the acoustic properties of St. Cyr's Church, Stonehouse? I have been at a neighbouring Church for twenty-seven years where there was an excellent chancel and church for 'sound.' Now I come to Stonehouse, my native place, and find a chancel which is most discouraging in its results. It is fairly lofty, and the choir is 2-ft. higher than the congregation. It is true the floor of the chancel is covered with felt, but I am told the defect was just as bad before this was put down. It is rather narrow, and while the organ occupies one side-chapel, the other is open and used for seating. New members of the choir feel a kind of 'dulling' when they sing, and find it is really hard work. Perhaps some one has got a remedy for what is really a very discouraging effect on the choir's efforts Sunday by Sunday.—Yours, &c.,

ARCHIE M. BOUCHIER.

Queen's Road, Stonehouse, Glos.

March 13, 1923.

'ST. MATTHEW' PASSION: A QUESTION OF 'CUTS'

SIR,—All who heard the splendid rendering of the St. Matthew Passion by the Bach Choir on March 7, must have rejoiced at the way in which each little point of interpretation was brought out with just the right emphasis. It was a treat, too, to find that the difficulties of the great chorale at the end of the first part are no longer insuperable. But in making the necessary cuts, was not one number sacrificed which could ill be spared? The whole spirit of the 'Thunder and Lightning' chorus is so intimately connected with the attitude of St. Peter in the following piece of narrative that Our Lord's rebuke, 'Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish by the sword . . .,' might almost be taken as the key-note to this portion of the work. It is the complete answer to the violent imprecations of the preceding chorus.

It was the omission of this number (No. 34) presumably, which caused the authorities of St. Paul's Cathedral to tamper with the words of the chorus in a way which was artistically indefensible. When these are read in connection with this rebuke, any weakening of the curses becomes equally unnecessary and undesirable on moral grounds.

I may be attributing to Bach, or his librettist, an interpretation which they did not intend; but even if the juxtaposition of these two numbers is an accident, it is a very happy accident; for it rids us of any religious qualms which might be felt in putting every emphasis possible into the great chorus. The chorus gives the indignant feeling of St. Peter and the other fiery natures who were standing by. The apostle then acts on the impulse which found verbal expression in the chorus, and this vindictive spirit is at once sternly rebuked as un-Christian.—Yours, &c.,

Oakhurst, Harrow-on-the-Hill. HUGH GARDNER.

UNSCRUPULOUS PIANOFORTE-DEALING

SIR,—May I have the courtesy of space to bring to the notice of your readers a matter which concerns a very large public—the public, that is, who buy pianofortes? I refer to the risks run by pianoforte-buyers who purchase instruments from amateur or otherwise inexperienced dealers, some of whom, indeed, are quite unscrupulous when the sale of a pianoforte is in question.

Two recent actions in a County Court sufficiently illustrate the point. In each case damages were claimed by a plaintiff against a defendant who had sold a worthless pianoforte as an instrument in good condition. In each case judgment was given for the plaintiff, both cases revealing either the defendant's complete ignorance of the pianoforte's construction or his flagrant deception of the customer as to its actual condition.

It is, I think, to the very real interest of the public that they be warned as to the dangers which menace the unwary pianoforte-buyer. He should be on his guard. Worn-out and useless pianofortes, euphemistically described as 'second-hand bargains,' make one sort of trap for him. New pianofortes appear before him as what they are not, by means of the simple device of a bogus name-plate which conceals their real origin. In any case a pianoforte is of elaborate and highly technical construction, and defects in it are easily hidden from the uninstructed eye. For all these reasons pianofortes should be bought only from dealers who are pianoforte experts.

I should be very grateful for your publication of these facts and this warning.—Yours, &c. (for and on behalf of the Federation of British Music Industries),

R. H. TATTON
(Organizing Director).

117-123, Great Portland Street, London, W.1.

THE CASE OF VIERNE: SOME PARALLELS

SIR,—Apropos of your remarks concerning the straitened circumstances of Louis Vierne, another glaring example of that parsimony and meanness which are so typical of the French—vide Cellini's experiences with Francis I. and Mr. Edward Hutton's remarks on the same trait apropos of Il Divino Aretino—the following passage from Chamfort shows that they are the same now as they were in his time—and before:

'J'ai vu à Anvers dans une des principales églises, le tombeau du célèbre imprimeur Plantin, orné de tableaux superbes ouvrages de Rubens, et consacrés à sa mémoire. Je me suis rappelé à cette vue que les Estienne, Henri et Robert qui par leur érudition grecque et latine ont rendu les plus grands services aux lettres traînèrent en France une vieillesse misérable, et que Charles Estienne, leur successeur, mourut à l'hôpital [i.e., poor-house], après avoir contribué presque autant qu'eux aux progrès de la littérature. Je me suis rappelé qu'André Duchêne qu'on peut regarder comme le père de l'Histoire de France fut chassé de Paris par la misère . . . Samson, le père de la Géographie, allait à soixante-dix ans faire des leçons, à pied, pour vivre . . . Corneille manquait de bouillon à sa dernière maladie. La Fontaine n'était guère mieux.'

And he proceeds to quote one Abbé de Longueue: 'C'est ainsi qu'on en a toujours usé dans ce misérable pays.'

The treatment of Fauré (who you will remember was not long ago reported to be in a far from flourishing condition, and for whom a benefit concert was held) and of Louis Vierne is in the pure French tradition, as also is the impudic effrontery of attempting to raise a fund in this country for an electrical blowing apparatus for the Notre Dame organ. This shows their kinship with the race to whose ancestors they owe their name, and of whom by a quaint turn they have become the bitterest political enemies and the most indefatigable of traducers. The whole of French art to-day is tainted with the pinched meanness and poverty of spirit of which this other kind of meanness is merely a manifestation on a lower level. 'As above, so below!'—Yours, &c.,

KAIKHOSRU SORABJI.

175, Clarence Gate Gardens, N.W.1.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of April, 1863:

AN AMATEUR, playing the Bass Concertina, wishes to join some other Amateurs of the Concertina for the practice of concerted music. Address to J. J., East Temple Chambers, Whitefriars Street, E.C.

KENNINGTON.—Mrs. Gordon gave a concert at the Horns on Friday, March 20. She was assisted by Miss Hersee, Miss Wilmot, Mrs. Percy, Messrs. Cooper and F. and L. Walker, vocalists; and by Herr Lehmyer, Mr. Pearce, and Master Oscar Beringer, pianists.

FOR SALE, a powerful and brilliant-toned ORGAN, built by a London builder. It has 2 manuals, with mother-of-pearl and tortoiseshell keys. The Great organ, compass CC to G, contains 10 stops; the Swell organ, compass tenor C to G, contains 7 stops; the Pedal organ has the bourdon stop; coupling stops, to unite the Swell and Great organs, and pedals on Great organ, a lower octave of swell continued on stopped diapason, and 3 composition pedals. There are 63 external pipes, 30 of which are beautifully illuminated, and the remainder richly gilt. The entire length is 16-ft. 3-in., and the height 11-ft. For particulars, apply to Mr. Edward Ford, Warminster, Wilts.

Sharps and Flats

The opera to be given at the Grand Theatre on Thursday next is Wagner's Rotterdamering.—Local paper.

At a social evening at — church, to give a send off to two missionaries, the choir sang Mendelssohn's anthem, 'How lively are the messengers.'—Local paper.

Look at the splendid orchestra they have at Bournemouth under Sir Dan Godfrey. Thousands of visitors go there to hear it. The reputation it has is world-wide. If Bournemouth can afford an attraction like that I am sure Brighton can.—Harry Preston.

I am actually running away before England (which is the most musical country in the world) finds me out.—Arthur Bliss.

I am always tired of music, nevertheless I cannot live without it.—Paul Whiteman.

Frankly, I am a sensuous creature who cannot follow the Franckist type of sound-cogitation with much pleasure. Higher thought and banality, or at least monotony of expression, so often go together, and I have little joy in humanity when undistinguished. Probably snobbery, but there are times when I feel that higher thought should be left to the lower orders.—Leigh Henry.

Why are the frequenters of serious concerts so alarmingly ugly? . . . Why have they the air of mummies who have crept out of the Pyramids in order to accomplish a rite? Why have they not the air of having come into a public-house to get a pint of beer?—Arnold Bennett.

Madame Gerhardt is the last singer in the world to mitigate the luxurious melancholy of Schubert's Winter Journey Cycle, and in fairness one must allow that there was no sign that any one of the assembled thousands objected to the enormous dose. You would think, to look at Madame Gerhardt's admirers, that calf-love was one of the cardinal virtues and suicidal mania a form of heroism.—Richard Capell.

Quartet in F major, Op. 96 Dvorák

THE CHARLES WOODHOUSE STRING QUARTET

(known as the 'NIGGER QUARTET')

—London Concert Programme.

Some people have a gift for writing music that resembles the gift other people have for playing the pianoforte or for fiddling. Dozens of young musicians to-day have a facility for putting notes together in quite an engaging way. Two or three of them may possibly develop into significant composers; and Bliss and Goossens stand as good a chance as any.—Ernest Newman.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

A chamber concert was given at Duke's Hall on Wednesday afternoon, March 7, the programme of which was of exceptional variety. It began with Lemare's organ arrangement of the Spasmo of Liszt (Mr. Thomas Edwards), and concluded with a most effective version of Mendelssohn's Bee's Wedding, arranged for two pianofortes by Mr. F. Corder, and played by the Misses Denise Lassimonne and Betty Humby. Between these items came Saint-Saëns's Variations on a Theme of Beethoven for two pianofortes; an interesting String Quartet in B flat minor (MS.), by Mr. W. A. Smith (Ross Scholar)—a serious effort of considerable promise; a Passacaglia for violin and viola (Handel-Halvorsen) (Messrs. J. Pougnet and H. Berly); a Serenata for two violoncellos, by Piatti; and, in addition, A Sheaf of Songs from Leinster, by Stanford, admirably sung by Mr. Howard Fry; a MS. song by Mr. Michael Head (Costa Scholar), sung by the composer, with accompaniment for string quartet and pianoforte; and a set of Lenten Hymns for solo voice by Mr. Derick Ashley.

On March 21 and 22, the opera class gave two performances of Trial by Jury and Pagliacci, under the direction of Mr. Henry Beauchamp, the cast being varied for each date.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Fifteen free open scholarships are offered this year, the preliminary examinations for which will be held on Wednesday, May 30, and the final competitions in June. The last date of entry is April 25. The scholarships comprise two composition, four pianoforte, one organ, three singing, one hautboy, one bassoon, one trombone, and, notably, two for violin.

The next A.R.C.M. examination will commence on April 16. So many subjects have recently been added to the syllabus that a list giving the present scope of the examination will be of interest. Associateship may now be obtained for pianoforte, organ, violin, viola and 'cello, singing (all solo or teaching), harp, all wind instruments (wood or brass), theory of music, composition, the teaching of musical appreciation, aural training and sight-reading, pianoforte accompaniment, elocution and declamation, and military bandmastership. Some standard paper-work is compulsory.

M. J.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

An interesting and well-attended lecture-recital was given at the College on March 7 by Dr. C. W. Pearce, assisted by Mr. Louis Pecsikai (violin) and Mr. L. Lebell ('cello), on the subject of the use of the organ in old English chamber music. The illustrations included three Trios by C. F. Abel, a pupil of Bach, who, the lecturer stated, was in reality the direct link between that great master and Haydn in the development of what is known as 'Sonata form.'

Extracts from Purcell's works for organ and strings, &c., were also performed to the appreciative audience.

A feature of the usual terminal concert at Queen's Hall was the performance of the Overture to The Wreckers, the orchestra being conducted by the composer, Dame Ethel Smyth, also of an In Memoriam Elegy for strings and organ composed by the Director of Studies, Dr. C. W. Pearce.

Successful distributions of certificates gained under the College scheme of local examinations were held at Dover, Worcester, Reading, and Grimsby, when the College was represented variously by Sir Frederick Bridge, Mr. Stanley Roper, and by the secretary.

ELGAR'S MUSIC TO BINYON'S ARTHUR

Sir Edward Elgar's incidental music for Mr. Laurence Binyon's romantic drama Arthur is, of course, a slight thing in comparison with the great works which made and established his fame. The office of the musician, in such cases, is restricted not only by tradition but by necessity, and Elgar has too keen a sense of what is due to the poet to intrude and insist on precedence. It is the office of a friend that he has performed—and performed it with the unerring tact of ideal friendship as well as with the skill of the past-master of his craft. His share consists of brief interludes and occasionally a few bars en sourdine during a pathetic scene or stirring battle music to idealise the very academic stage encounter between the opposing forces of King Arthur and Launcelot. Like all his work this also bears the unmistakable mark of his individuality. In the tender phrases which characterize the unfortunate Elaine as in the rousing phrases which prepare us for the clash of arms, the Elgarian idiom is evident even though there is not the faintest likeness between this and any other music of his. In fact if we were to seek for any special significance, we should certainly point to this as yet another proof of the manifold quality of Elgar's genius which can adapt itself to the most varied situations without ever losing its typical accent. Symphony or concerto, oratorio or prelude show with equal clearness their common source.

We should imagine that other situations of Mr. Binyon's play—besides those chosen for musical treatment or support—must have tempted Elgar, for the drama would easily make a capital libretto. If he refrained and kept back his hand, it must be that he considered himself bound to keep music in a subsidiary position and wholly subservient to the drama. His reticence in this respect is an example to all composers of 'incidental' music which they can easily imitate, if they cannot imitate his extraordinary deftness in the handling of a comparatively small orchestra. F. B.

THE BOATSWAIN'S MATE AND PRINCE FERELON

Dame Ethel Smyth conducted her Boatswain's Mate and Mr. Nicholas Gatty his Prince Ferelon at the Old Vic. on March 1. Both operas are good music. Music saves each from certain perils each seems to be heading for. This work of Dame Ethel's is assuredly her masterpiece, and when it gets its chance it should take firm hold on the public. We sit and enjoy every moment of the genial and rich little score, but at the same time do feel a certain undercurrent of distrust lest (when the chance comes) the bigger public, who will never rate words and action below the music, may not here and there resent a rather heavy deliberateness in the humorous utterance and 'business.' Perhaps this is merely a matter of 'producing,' and crispness and rapidity at the crucial moments may be obtainable. Miss Muriel Gough was the capable, comely Landlady who makes all the men of the piece look so small. Mr. Robert Curtis was the Bos'n, and Mr. Sumner Austin his Mate, who (for a consideration) shams a burglary of the inn. Mr. S. Harrison charmed us as the Policeman, so operatic and at the same time so real; the appreciation of the Old Vic. was peculiarly warm and human over his recitative of the classic warning that 'anything you say will be taken down and may be used as evidence against you.'

The peril skirted by Mr. Gatty's most elegantly refined little fairy-tale opera is in the slightness of the theme, which would indeed be insipid for most adults' taste if there were not that adroit, neat, delicate music always there to beguile. In this tale of a very odd court, where a king presses his daughter to bestow her hand on a court dressmaker, there might well be some addition of jest or sarcasm. Still, the music does fairly save the day. The production (a revival after two years) was adorned with fanciful new dresses by Miss Christina Walshe. Miss Winifred Kennard was the fastidious princess, Mr. Austin her uncritical royal father, and Mr. Clive Carey the versatile Prince Ferelon who (to keep the plot going) fails under three disguises to win the lady, but of course eventually succeeds. C.

THE ARNE SOCIETY'S REVIVAL OF COMUS

We all knew Arne's gavotte-like drinking song By the gaily circling glass we can see how minutes pass, but mostly, I suppose, did not know that it had anything to do with Comus, or indeed that there was any link between Arne and Milton, until recently when the Arne Society (and how many even knew there was an Arne Society?), produced Arne's Comus in the Inner Temple Hall—an admirable setting, rich and stately, for this piece of refined revelry. Arne, to tell truth, was with his Comus of 1738 as negligent towards Milton as Purcell was, a generation earlier, with his Fairy Queen, towards Shakespeare, and modern producers have to repair the literary ravages of bygone musicians. So what was spoken at the Inner Temple was Milton, and what was sung (to nondescript words) was Arne, and although not much of Milton's scheme was left, somehow the entertainment was very pleasing. Time it is, perhaps, that has rendered a Covent Garden revue of 1738 almost aristocratic in flavour, and so possibly some refined little society of two hundred years hence may be exhuming the worst futilities of our Stolls and our Cochrans, and finding curious pleasure in them. But no!—this is not fair to Arne, who, though no eagle, was always to be respected. When the revuistes of 1738 carved up Comus for a night's entertainment they might hope but vainly to compete with a future London's baseness of vulgarity. Their music was by one of the best musicians available, a genial man, we should say, in spite of the formalism of the time; a cheerful if not a springing melodist, conspicuously safe and reasonable, still not pompous. Somehow the great poetry of the 17th and the decent music of the 18th century did not seem too ill-mated in to-day's light. The panelled hall, the graceful and not too assured amateur performance, the beauty of the dresses (some 18th century, some Arcadian), made us all feel improved men and women as we went away from the delicate entertainment. Miss Elizabeth Mitchell-Innes, as the Lady, was the best singer. Miss Susan Lushington conducted the small orchestra. The Arne Society is said to propose further similar revivals of its inspiring musician's work. C.

'HOW TO SING MOZART'

This was the title of a lecture delivered by Mr. Herman Klein at Wigmore Hall on March 12. The revival of interest in Mozart is a conspicuous feature of contemporary musical life, and a natural corollary to the modern movement, which acknowledges more kinship with the 18th than the 19th century. But perfect performance is indispensable to the revival, and, whilst the instrumental tradition has maintained itself, that of Mozartian song has unfortunately declined. Probably this is due to the breaking of the last links represented by living memory. When teaching in London, the younger Garcia resided in the house of Mr. Klein's parents, and the elder Garcia, a famous 'Don,' made his débüt when many of Mozart's singing contemporaries were still to be heard. He thus imbibed the tradition, which he handed on to his son, as he did to his famous daughters, Milibrán and Pauline Viardot. There are, however, other reasons for the decline, which is by no means limited to the singing of Mozart, but affects the entire art of song. In enumerating these reasons it is perhaps a pity that Mr. Klein did not lay more stress upon that which consists in the modern impatience to arrive at success by short cuts. He did however outline the prevalent defects, and indicated the essential requisites of Mozartian song. These were charmingly illustrated by his pupil, Miss Leonie Zifado, who sang a number of Mozart arias with remarkable purity of style. The lecture did not err on the side of heaviness. Mr. Klein wisely tempered the effect of his censure of present-day singing with some entertaining history and anecdote. It is a pity that a discourse so pleasantly instructive did not draw a larger audience. We can think of many singers who would have benefited by it. E. E.

'THE ORCHESTRAL PROBLEM OF THE FUTURE'

On February 13, Dr. Adrian C. Boulton spoke to the members of the Musical Association on 'The Orchestral Problem of the Future.' It was necessary at the outset, he said, briefly to traverse some historical ground, although to do so in detail was superfluous before such an audience. The strings ever since the days of Monteverdi had formed the foundation of the orchestra. At first the wind had been used merely as extras, but that department had gradually been developed until with Mozart and Beethoven it was, if not exactly independent, at any rate a distinct entity. Wagner's use of the wind was much more advanced, and as, in his later years particularly, he was able to have anything he wanted, he multiplied both the number of his wind instruments and the orchestral tints thereby obtainable. It was quite possible, however, provided the necessary trouble were taken, to give many of Wagner's works quite satisfactorily with a much smaller orchestra. Strauss and Mahler, and others of the modern German school, had been extravagant in the way in which they had piled instrument upon instrument, for the mere sake, it would seem, of bigness, until the result was a thick and muddy tone. Their works often gained by having the instruments reduced. This could not, however, be said of every huge score. It was only fair to recognise that with some of our British composers—as, for example, Gustav Holst in The Planets—it was evident that they employed certain scoring because only in that particular way could they present the conception they had in their minds. To alter the scoring was to alter the effect.

Owing to the enormous growth of these huge orchestras of to-day, orchestral concerts meant serious loss. There was scarcely an orchestral undertaking in London which even paid its way, if one might except the Promenade Concerts, and these had been so long established that Londoners knew when and where they were held, and so they required comparatively little advertising. Moreover, the conditions under which concerts were given in London militated against the attainment of a really high and consistent standard. It was impossible for a musician to earn a livelihood by playing only at orchestral concerts. He had to help in gramophone recording, to play at a theatre, and to fill up as best he could whatever spare time he had by teaching. This effort to undertake so many duties was the cause of the pernicious deputy system which struck at the root of efficiency. These things were better managed in some places abroad. At Amsterdam and in America it was frankly recognised that orchestral concerts were not a paying proposition, and so the orchestras were subsidised either municipally or by private generosity. The members of the orchestra gave practically the whole of their services to their work, rehearsals in the morning and concerts in the evening. The afternoon was free for teaching if they so liked, but they were not obliged to do this, for every member, provided he behaved himself and kept up his playing, had from the moment of his engagement no further anxiety about his livelihood, and he received a pension on retirement. As the conductor had absolute discretion as to the number of rehearsals he wanted, he was able adequately to prepare all the works in his programme. The nearest approach to this ideal over here was at Manchester, where the orchestra was kept together during the summer by playing at Llandudno. Harrogate and Hastings also had a similar interchange. A very high degree of ensemble was possible under such conditions, especially as the deputy system was avoided.

If music was as deserving of State recognition as any other form of art, and it was becoming better realised what an important part it might bear in the life of the nation, then a sum less than half what was spent annually on the British Museum would ensure the maintenance of an orchestra in London on the lines, for instance, of the Amsterdam orchestra. Its scheme of operations would include the giving of orchestral concerts of the highest character, both technically and æsthetically, in London, and the travelling to provincial centres for a like purpose. As these concerts became more and more of an institution they would be better supported by the public, and the benefit would be immeasurable. Though the proposal might sound Utopian, and though it might seem improbable of attainment at present, Dr. Boulton said he felt sure that it could be made a reality, and he was even more certain that the idea ought to be realised.

London Concerts

UNIVERSITY CHOIRS

On Wednesday, March 14, the Musical Societies of Oxford and Cambridge—or, to be precise, the Oxford Bach Choir, the Cambridge University Musical Society, and the Oxford Orchestral Society—combined to give a concert at the Albert Hall in aid of the Appeal Fund for Women's Colleges at Oxford. The orchestra was led by Miss Mary Venables, of the Oxford Orchestral Society, and Miss Beatrix Beale, of the orchestra of the Cambridge University Musical Society. The former played the solo in the Benedictus with considerable skill. The University players were reinforced by twenty-eight extra players, most of whom were professionals, but all the violins were amateurs of the Universities.

The first half of the programme was devoted to Beethoven's Mass in C, to which Sir Hugh Allen, the conductor, is a great devotee. There is none of the great works in musical literature concerning which there is so much controversy as the Mass, and none which is so differently interpreted. Few speak of it with such unlimited enthusiasm as Prof. Tovey, who in his prefatory note on the programme deals recklessly with metaphors, and speaks of one passage as 'one of the most supreme strokes of genius that have ever been realised.' The general opinion of cultivated musicians is that (as is so admirably expressed by Mr. Colles in The Times in his criticism of this performance) it is outside the regular canons of criticism, and that the best description yet given to it is 'a glorious failure'—in the sense that Beethoven, in trying to make his Mass both an act of worship and a poignant drama, has written much glorious music but achieved neither end. It is worth noting that this is its centenary, as it was completed a hundred years ago.

Sir Hugh Allen has great power of stimulating the singers and players under his control to sustained effort, but it cannot be denied that both choirs and orchestras tired a little before the end of the work. There was some excellent singing, especially in the Gloria. The balance was unusually good owing to the fact that the choirs, domiciled as they are in University towns, had at their command a larger supply of male voices than is usual; but undergraduates are not as a rule at the age at which the male voice is at its best. The soloists were Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Archibald Winter, and Mr. Norman Williams.

After the Mass came Brown Earth, by Cyril B. Rootham, the conductor of the Cambridge Musical Society, which was played for the first time. The text from Thomas Moulton's Down here the Hawthorne, with its intimate feeling, is very suitable for musical setting, and Dr. Rootham handled it with much sympathy, imagination, and keen instinct for choral effect. His employment of the invisible chorus is particularly striking. Parry's English Suite for orchestra and Vaughan Williams's impressive Towards the Unknown Region, completed the concert.

The Queen was present during the performance of the Mass, and there was a large audience—which should, however, have been larger.

A. K.

THE BACH CHOIR

The Bach Choir has given two performances of the Bach Passion according to St. Matthew, the first of which took place at Queen's Hall on Wednesday, March 7. An interesting essay might be written on the persistence of the character of certain choirs in spite of changes of conductor. Many musicians have in the last fifteen years or more been in charge of the Bach Choir, but it has always remained the same except when at one or two recent performances Sir Hugh Allen stimulated it to unwonted energy. Its chief characteristic has always been that it carries the British virtues of sobriety and restraint to the point where the almost become ultra-respectable defects. Under Dr. Vaughan Williams it remains true to type. There was some beautiful singing in the Chorales, and the performance was marked by a fine intellectuality, but also by an apparent inability—or unwillingness—to give full emphasis to the dramatic points in which the music abounds. It is a commonplace to say that every performance of the St. Matthew Passion must differ from every other in technical details, since every conductor must have his own way of overcoming the initial difficulty, and that it never can be reproduced in the exact way that the composer intended. On the whole Dr. Vaughan Williams's arrangements were excellently adapted to the conditions of this particular performance. The boys of the Temple Church and the female voices of St. Paul's School and Morley College, trained by Mr. Holst, gave valuable assistance. Of the soloists Mr. George Parker was both dignified and sonorous in the part of Christ, and the part of the Evangelist was taken by Mr. Archibald Winter, whose name is not very familiar. His style and diction were so admirable that almost he would have deserved to be called an ideal exponent of the part, if his voice had been of the right type.

A. K.

THE PHILHARMONIC CHOIR

The most adventurous of London choirs gave us (at Queen's Hall on March 14) one of those concerts which make us thankful that somebody has taken the lead. We hear that the public is specially requested (per Mr. C. Kennedy Scott, conductor) to take a lead from the Choir and support it by purse and presence a good deal more gratefully than hitherto. The Choir deserves such support. It is rapidly becoming the large-scale equal of the Oriana, and one could not easily give higher praise. On this occasion the programme comprised Go, song of mine (Elgar), Sea-drift (Delius), Hecuba's Lament (Holst), April (Balfour Gardiner), and The Bells (Rachmaninov).

Go, song of mine, was much admired. Sea-drift either drugged you with its loveliness, if you were content to sit back and drink sound, or it went on irritating you if you followed the Walt Whitman poem, and felt that the words had properties of their own. Mr. Herbert Heyner seemed over-conscious of their pathos. Miss Clara Serena, on the other hand, was quite a detached Hecuba. Perhaps that was why the work, all good Holst, sounded as if it had been composed easily. April entered with rainbow colours, and the 'Oh to be in England' feeling; the words, however, were Edward Carpenter. The Bells had started as Poe's, but a linguistic voyage had returned them to English rather misshapen. To the music, and to the question of this 'first performance in London' (and second in England), we are disposed to reply in the formula of theatrical trials: 'Yes. Very good. We will write to you.'

X.

OTHER CHORAL CONCERTS

Except in its surroundings, the musical service held at Southwark Cathedral on February 17 was a concert. A rare one, such as we would expect from, say, the Philharmonic Choir in 'another place,' and from no other. The object was concert-like, for it was a bringing of good up-to-date music to those who are not so placed that they can seek it up West for themselves. The givers of the Cathedral concert knew their public well, and learnt to know it better on that Saturday afternoon, when there was still an army at its doors after all sitting and standing room had been taken. The Cathedral choir distinguished itself among Cathedral choirs of the kingdom. Others of them are no doubt capable of performing so difficult a musical programme, but this one has the credit of doing it, and doing it well. The choir sang Goossens's Silence (a Gloucester Festival work), Holst's Hymn of Jesus, Bax's Of a rose I sing, and César Franck's 150th Psalm. The London Symphony Orchestra was in support, and did its own work in the Bach-Elgar Fantasia and Fugue, and Franck's Symphony.

The London Sunday School Choir is apparently so vast that it has a 'selected choir' to represent it in the Royal Albert Hall. There, on this busy February 17, a few select hundreds gave anthems, part-songs, Smart's Te Deum in F, and the rest, with Mr. W. H. Scott conducting.

Nothing that the London Choral Society has done since its post-war revival has been better than its singing of Jesu, Priceless Treasure at Queen's Hall on February 21. Mr. Arthur Fagge and his singers won little less credit for some madrigal singing.

Mr. H. L. Balfour was the conductor on March 3 at the Royal Albert Hall, when the Royal Choral Society gave Hiawatha complete. It was an afternoon of popularities and successes, which Mr. Balfour shared with the choir, the music, and the tenor soloist, Mr. William Boland.

An 'Oriana' concert bears much the same relation to an average choral concert as The Beggar's Opera production does to an average theatrical production. The analogy came to mind at Aeolian Hall on March 6. The interlude of folk-dances (with Mr. Sharp at the pianoforte) helped it. Mr. C. Kennedy Scott answered to a true encore (a rare thing) when he gave Vaughan Williams's O vos omnes twice. A modern Byrd, the composer writes in strong and melting lines, and his harmony knows not Spohr.

On the same evening, at Queen's Hall, the Westminster Choral Society produced A Tale of Alsatia, an effective light work by the conductor, Mr. Vincent Thomas. Alsatia lay between Fleet Street and the Thames in the Middle Ages, and the 'tale' takes birth in a Carmelite sanctuary there.

Bach's Mass in B minor was performed by the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society at the Northern Polytechnic on March 10, Mr. Allen Gill conducting. The choral singing was everything that is expected of this admirable choir.

In our last issue 'H. F.' praised a performance of Verdi's Requiem by the People's Palace Choral and Orchestral Society. Quick on its heels came (March 3) King Olaf and Blest Pair of Sirens, by which it will be seen that Mr. Frank Idle and his choir are busy workers. In the news of other choral happenings we find four hundred voices of the London Baptist Association singing under Mr. Ernest Harbott at the People's Palace on February 28; Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society at work on The Revenge, The Golden Legend, and The Cricket on the Hearth, on March 14, Mr. David M. Davis conducting; and the nineteen-year old Battersea and Wandsworth Choral Union singing Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast on March 16.

By its works the Ealing Philharmonic Society (Mr. E. Victor Williams) may be known as a London, not a suburban, choir. Its singing expresses mastery, not apology, and it is by right that it tackles such a work as Brahms's Requiem (Ealing Town Hall, February 17). Among the extras were the Bach-Elgar Fugue and Jadassohn's Serenade for wind instruments.

Dulwich Philharmonic Society, another choir of standing, happened to be relaxing, on the same evening, with Carmen. The Society's conductor of former years, Mr. Arthur Fagge, was back at his post.

ARTHUR BLISS'S COLOUR SYMPHONY

Arthur Bliss's Gloucester Festival Colour Symphony reached Queen's Hall on March 10. The composer conducted. We may in time get used to the peculiarly inapt name of this work, just as a suburban Londoner who lives in a Parsifal Road or Wistaria Avenue in time loses sight of the ridiculousness of such street-names. The question of names for musical works is difficult. Against the simple 'Symphony in B minor' is to be urged the objection against the simple 'High Street'—it is not distinctive enough in these days of monstrous urbanisation and of endless symphony-making. Names were long ago found necessary to distinguish between Oxford Street and the Strand, and people long ago seized on the convenience of names for musical works, Moonlight and Appassionata sonatas, Jupiter and Eroica symphonies. A name well-chosen may be a grace as well as a convenience, but how difficult in music seems the choice! The naming of your symphony should probably be the very last act in its composition. Your work—written, say, at Golder's Green—may in completed state call for the title 'Arcadian,' whereas if you had deliberately set out to write music somehow related to wild northern isles challenging implacable seas, the after name might well turn out to be 'A Garden Suburb Fantasy.' Mr. Bliss's unlucky Colour has this disadvantage, that if there is anything in the suggested analogy between colours and music every symphony is a colour symphony, and we are reminded of those families of our acquaintance where the offspring seem to be practically innominate, the daughter of the house answering to some such term as Girlie and the son to Boykin or the like. This colour analogy has long been the field of play of a weak fancifulness, but even if an analogy there be, the inappropriateness of calling a whole symphonic movement Red or Blue is seen if we reflect that while a distempered wall may be Red or Blue, a picture cannot.

(What colour, in one word, is Titian's 'Bacchus and Ariadne'?) But this 'colour' theme was seized on (as Vaughan Williams's 'London' had been the month before) by the programme annotators of March 10 for fantastic literary developments. Because furnaces are red, one theme in the Red movement (Scherzo) became labelled Furnaces. But it turns up again in the Green Finale.

The Symphony is assuredly one of the most engaging works of the newer music. In it and its like we may behold something similar to the breaking-up of stately old verse-forms into a lively, impatient, elliptical prose, full of crisp neologisms and inverted commas. 'Not verse now, only prose.' Well, no; not only. In this brilliant farrago the voice does keep dropping into lyrical numbers. It sings a snatch, fires up into an enthusiastic harangue, falls back on rapid, racy talk. 'The world is so full of such marvellous things.' We all, I should think, enjoyed the dazzling motley of this music, its gay wit and joyousness, and not least the curious plaintive humour of the Blue movement. One would like to know it better, to see if the opening Andante Maestoso (Purple), which appeared the least assured of the four, may not really prove to be an adequate first movement. Mr. Bliss conducted, and the audience was extremely cordial. His departure from England is a real loss.

Serge Prokofiev's Pianoforte Concerto in D flat, the same afternoon, curiously enough had, in intention at least, some relation to the Symphony, but in realisation must be judged to be poor stuff. And for the Summer Pastoral of Honegger there is hardly anything to be said. C.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS

At the Queen's Hall Symphony concert on February 24, Sir Henry Wood introduced the Suite of incidental music to Maeterlinck's The Blue Bird, by the Russian composer Ilya Satz, which had not been heard in this country before. This presumably was the reason for its being called 'new,' which in the ordinary sense of the word cannot be considered accurate, seeing that the composer has been dead some twenty-five years. It is the legitimate function of an enterprise like the Queen's Hall Symphony concerts to satisfy the curiosity of the public concerning composers who have attracted attention in other countries, and therefore the inclusion of the Suite was justified, even though the music is of no great value. The Suite is cleverly scored in a not very recondite way, and the composer has a certain sense of humour, but taken all round the music cannot be said to have any distinctive quality. The chief feature of the concert was Madame Suggia's brilliant and impressive performance of Elgar's Violoncello Concerto, which is now gradually taking its proper place among the composer's works.

The Symphony at this concert was Borodin's second, a work which may almost be taken as typical of Russian music at the time that it was composed. It was admirably played, and it is obvious that the public taste for music of this kind is still stronger than some people would have us suppose.

A. K.

GOOSSENS'S NEW SINFONIETTA

Eugène Goossens conducted the London Symphony Orchestra on February 18, and his own new Quarter-of-an-Hour Symphony (or Sinfonietta) was included in the programme. It has three movements—a sonata-form first, a 'Romanza' second, and a scherzo-like third. Some of the subject-matter is used in more than one movement, and there is a 'motto theme' (picked up in the street from a whistling passer-by) that appears in all. The whole work flies in the face of some of the theories and principles of its own composer, as laid down in numerous lectures and articles: but if he does not object to such defiance, nobody else is likely to do so. So far as can be seen, nothing has been lost by this frank adoption of the old-fashioned 'development' system and by the representation of 'extra-musical emotion'! The fact is, of course, that none of these young men bite half as hard as they bark.

The whole work—in subject-matter, harmony, and orchestration—is very interesting, and its conciseness should lead to its being heard often enough for the public to find out whether it likes it—a point about which it seemed a little in doubt at the first performance, probably not finding the harmonic scheme immediately accessible. P. A. S.

KUSSEWITZKY AND THE L.S.O.

Kussewitzky conducted the Scriabin Poem of Ecstasy at the London Symphony Orchestra's concert on March 5. As a Scriabin conductor he is of course very great, and on this occasion he seemed to carry with him successfully the public and the press. Nevertheless there were details lacking (bits of orchestral colour that got lost in the mass, and so forth), and the spirit of the whole performance was hardly so exalted as we have become accustomed to expect.

In the Mozart G minor Symphony the conductor partially failed through over-devotion to details, his phrasing becoming very sectional, and the 'all-through' feeling (especially of the first two movements) suffering accordingly; nevertheless the performance had the quality of perfect neatness and finish, and some may have been satisfied with the presence of these qualities, which are by no means to be despised.

The Liszt Dance of Death is, at best, a piece of trumpet vulgarity. Alexander Borovsky played the solo part in this. He is a pianist who has apparently trained his fingers beyond his ears, and in both his main item and his encore additions showed little sense of beauty of tone.

P. A. S.

THE ROYAL AMATEUR ORCHESTRA

Since the war the Royal Amateur Orchestra has been in a state of more or less suspended animation. It gave one special concert about a year ago, but at Queen's Hall on March 13 it resumed what may be called its normal activities. The concert gained social distinction from the fact that The King and Queen were present. Though The King himself has frequently gone to the smoking concerts of the Orchestra, of which he is the patron, he has never attended a ladies' concert, nor had he ever before been accompanied by The Queen on his visits. We could not help reflecting how good it would be if Their Majesties could be induced to pay honour to some of our regular symphony concerts, to which such a visit would be of inestimable benefit.

The time was when the Royal Amateur Orchestra was without question the first of our bodies of non-professional players, but since the war many other excellent bodies have been formed and have been making great progress, so that it now behoves the oldest Society to look to its laurels. Competition of this kind is always healthy.

Under Mr. A. W. Payne the high standard has not in any way been lowered, and the playing was throughout the evening full of point and spirit. The principal orchestral numbers were the Overture to The Merry Wives of Windsor and the Overture to the Rosamunde of Schubert, which were conducted by Mr. Payne. Sir Landon Ronald, who is the honorary conductor of the Orchestra, directed among other things Järnefeldt's Praeludium and two movements from Bizet's L'Arlesienne arranged by himself. A. K.

ENGLISH PIANOFORTE MUSIC

The English Elizabethans are already on the way to full recognition as choral composers, and at last also becoming known by their keyboard works. Mr. Harold Craxton's pianoforte recital at Wigmore Hall, on February 16, received support that showed that he had made no mistake in allotting a large portion of his programme to Byrd, Bull, and Farnaby, and another considerable portion to their successors Blow, Purcell, and Arne. Altogether his English music excursion covered a period of a century-and-a-half to two centuries of native keyboard composition, and it was of interest not merely for the intrinsic value of much of the music played, but also for its suggestion of continuous development.

Bull's King's Hunt was perhaps the best played piece upon the programme. Unless both its details and its proportions are just right it tends to sound a little 'exercisy.' Mr. Craxton, however, made it perhaps the most genuinely engaging piece of the afternoon, and his Byrd and Farnaby selections fell little behind. His crisp manner helped him much in music of this kind. There are still pianists who do not know these composers, despite the existence in easily accessible form of a mass of their best works, edited by Bantock and published by Novello.

Blow did not thrill, but Purcell and Arne gave great pleasure. Of the latter composer the recitalist played a Sonata and a Minuet. Croft, a greatly neglected keyboard composer omitted at this recital, has since been promised for a later one.

All the groups of old pieces played were preceded by brief explanations and descriptions, so put forth as to awaken the obvious interest and gratitude of the audience. P. A. S.

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

For the first time, Eugène Goossens conducted a Philharmonic concert on February 22, and, as might be expected, he chose an ambitious programme. It comprised a new work, McEwen's Solway Symphony, another that was unfamiliar, Dukas's Le Péri, and Stravinsky's Sacre du Printemps, the whole being prefaced by a Mozart Overture. The Solway Symphony was written some years ago, and performed for the first time at Bournemouth last October. It has been published under the auspices of the Carnegie Trust. There are three movements, entitled respectively 'Spring-tide,' 'Moonlight,' 'The South-West Wind,' and the whole is inspired by the beauties of the scenery to the north of the Solway Firth. The music has those sterling qualities of workmanship which are associated with its composer, and also the sense of picturesqueness of which he has given many proofs elsewhere. It is not displayed to the best advantage by its orchestration, which is somewhat unenterprising. That it produces an effect of monochrome may perhaps not be inappropriate, but in that case we could have wished for a more suggestive atmosphere. The method of writing, with its dependence upon devices of development, demanded more variety if these were not to become obtrusive. The general impression left upon at least one listener was the contradictory one that the music was very much better than it sounded. In the section entitled 'Moonlight,' this may have been due to defective proportions in the relative intensity of the orchestral parts. We all know the difficulties arising from the inevitably scanty preparation of all our orchestral concerts, and Goossens, brilliant as he is, cannot perform miracles against time. In other respects the performance appeared to be a good one.

For some reason the Stravinsky work was not so well played as Mr. Goossens's own concerts, although a large proportion of the orchestra was identical. It takes, however, very few strangers to affect the ensemble in a work of such difficulty, and also there was the vague feeling that some players, whether old or new, were not grappling with the music with the same determination to do it justice that prevailed on the earlier occasions. There were one or two precarious moments, and it speaks wonders for Goossens's exceptional control that there was no actual mishap. Of the Dukas work it is scarcely necessary to say much beyond that the French composer, by means of instrumental resource, contrives, like his compatriots in another art, to make a very palatable dish out of ingredients that, of themselves, promise little.

E. E.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Elena Gerhardt has sung much Schubert, Schumann, Franz, Brahms, and Strauss at her recitals at Queen's Hall, and there has been remarkable evidence of her popularity. Her technique is not without flaw, but of course it is her power of interpretation that springs to the eye—yes, to the eye, for even before she sings a note she appears like a model for a statue of Germania; and her singing completely captures the spirit of 19th century German song (which embraces Strauss). All is divinely beautiful at its best; then, at inferior moments, declaring itself a middle-class or peasant art, unctuous, complaisant; and, at its worst, exposing, with the most naïve immodesty, a saponaceous mass of uncritical sentiment.

Madame Gerhardt's great technical virtue is her admirably-moulded diction. The experimental writer of wordless songs, and also the imperfect singer who robs songs of their words, ought carefully to note from Gerhardt how much of music there is in the variety of well-enunciated words. The flaws in her singing, apparently unnoticed by a public basking on the rich juices of sentiment which she distils, are due to her failure to keep enough supply of breath in reserve. Always in moments of duress it is noticeable. Sometimes she even sings a phrase a vuoto, and she shows disinclination to impose on herself the physical strain necessary for fully sustaining a long passionate phrase—thus in Schumann's Provençal Song the tones petered out just when they should have risen to a climax. Hence it is too that her higher tones sometimes harden in her attempt to sustain a due density. Gerhardt's diction makes her singing, but in sheer vocalisation her technique breaks down—there was the simplest example of this in the blurring of the turn in the phrase 'Wie so milde, wie so gut' (Schumann's Er, der herrlichste). Madame Paula Hegner's accompanying is partly to be thanked for our pleasure at the Gerhardt concerts.

Mr. Frank Mullings was heard in a mixed concert at Queen's Hall. The difference between his loudest and softest tones is greater than in any other voice I have heard. His biggest notes have the force of Tamagno's, and in his power of strengthening emphasis he may be compared with Caruso. His softest tones are mere whispers, with no more substance and no more importance. They are usually quite uncontrolled—and what a thousand pities! Mr. Mullings detracts inexpressibly from the value of his singing by not properly linking up tension and relaxation, so that after a tremendously telling tone and a whole phrase glowing with colour the next moment may see it all drop, helplessly loose and flabby. Mr. Mullings would be one of the great operatic tenors of the world if he marshalled better his straggling forces. At present he is a law to himself. An Italian bass, Carlo Zamano, at this concert demanded 'Be mine the delight!' (the Faust duet) in huge tones that sought to vie with the tenor's: the air was rent. Miss Olive Jenkin, who also sang, has a good voice of rather colourless character.

An excellent baritone, Ugo Donarelli, sang, at one of Lady Dean Paul's concerts, antique and modern arias. He gave an undeviating bel canto, and showed interpretative ability too. His work was secure and serene, and yet it was not always just sleek.

Miss Gladys Moger made a pleasant arrangement of songs, and it struck one that she has lately advanced in her art. Her faults were to weigh down words that could not bear weight, and to rob the open vowels of their due value. Though pleasure was given by her singing, it was difficult to escape an impression of cramped diction. Thus in a cradle song of Scontrino the singer in straining after clearness of utterance lost resonance and spontaneity. There were new cradle songs of Herbert Howells and Armstrong Gibbs. Miss Moger's recitals always deserve attention for the sake of her intellectual observation.

Miss Sheila MacDonald, who sang at Queen's Hall, would, if we hadn't known, been guessed to be Sicilian rather than Scottish, for she energetically sought to carry out her description of 'dramatic' soprano. Neither in volume nor colour was her voice dramatic, and when she attempted intensity her highest notes were pinched—for instance, in the song from Act 3 of Aida. How difficult is this lovely air, which demands a groundwork of steady tone on which is elaborated the most delicate of superstructures! The succession of notes leading to the high C was starved. Nevertheless she has an uncommonly fine voice. Her singing of the recitative of Weber's Sofly Sighs was something to remember for its contemplative beauty.

If Miss Sheila MacDonald was too free with the behaviour known as temperamental, Miss Annabel MacDonald, who sang a week or so later, was too reserved. She almost puritanically bottled up a good voice, eking it out as though each note were a forbidden delicacy. The programme was rather severe, and this severity was accentuated by the singer's precise, controlled style.

Miss Katharine O'Dwyer's concert was 'only a little one.' Her voice is of light and agreeable quality, but as yet it does not respond to any considerable range of emotion.

Madame Lily Zaehner, mezzo-soprano, displayed at Wigmore Hall a good, powerful voice which was not flexible enough to give particular grace to the lighter songs in the programme. But it suited others, notably Brahms's Gipsy Songs.

H. J. K.

CONTEMPORARY MUSIC CENTRE

The programme which this Centre presented on March 7 in its dual capacity, connecting the British Music Society with the International Society for Contemporary Music, might have been specially designed to illustrate its policy, for, of the three works it comprised, one was by a British composer of established repute, another by one who still has his name to make, whilst the third was a representative work from the Continent. It was the last-named that proved on this occasion the most important. The composer was Paul Hindemith, the foremost of those regarded in Germany as leaders of the younger generation. It was to be expected that he would write a good String Quartet, for he is the viola player of a very good team led by Amar. It is quite remarkable how the viola comes to be associated with composition in most countries, commencing with our own, in the persons of Frank Bringe, H. Waldo Warner, and Rebecca Clarke. Hindemith may be described as modern, but not 'ultra,' though in Germany it takes little nowadays to draw the latter designation from conservative critics. His writing is remarkably proficient and resourceful, and his ideas denote a pronounced, though not aggressive, individuality. Richard Strauss is reported to have said to him, 'But why do you write atonally, when you have talent?' ('Warum schreiben Sie atonal? Sie haben doch Talent!') The first movement of the Quartet is somewhat dry, but the interest increases remarkably as the work proceeds, and the Finale, which has the character of a modern Giga, is almost vertiginous.

Mr. Arthur Hinton's Quintet, in which Miss Katharine Goodson was the pianist, shows, like most of his music, an inability to forget what the Germans have done in this line, and yet it achieves a moderate degree of independence within its narrow tradition, thanks chiefly to a certain impulsive quality in its romanticism, which holds attention, except where the tradition imposes stencil-work. In any case it is skilled writing. The other English work was a String Quartet by H. E. Randerson, a pupil of John Ireland. It reveals a thread of independent thought which, no doubt, was the reason why it recommended itself to the selection committee responsible for these programmes. Nevertheless its performance was somewhat premature, for the actual composition of the music made of it a mosaic—of fragments, sometimes effective, but insecurely welded together.

The string players were the Mandeville Quartet, who were severely taxed by a programme of this adventurous quality. It can scarcely be said that the playing was perfect, for they have not as yet the necessary experience, but they had evidently worked hard at the three compositions, and no doubt profited much by the ordeal. E. E.

Music in the Provinces

BANGOR.—A new combination, formed by Mr. Jeremiah Jones, and known as the Tabernacle Choir, gave its first concert on February 20, the chief feature being Schubert's Song of Miriam.

BENFIELDSIDE.—Under the conductorship of Dr. E. J. Sloane, Benfieldshire Choral Society recently gave its seventh concert before a crowded audience at the Olympia, Blackhill. The choir of a hundred voices sang Dowland, Elgar, Sullivan, &c. Miss Dorothy Silk was one of the soloists.

BEN RHYDDING.—The choruses sung by the Ben Rhydding Operatic Choir, on February 24, included pieces from Glinka's Life for the Tsar, Gluck's Iphigenie in Tauris, and Rossini's Semiramide.

BIRMINGHAM.—Mr. Richard Wassell's Birmingham Choral Union gave the Messe Solennelle of Gounod on February 24. Its triteness threw into relief Miss Marjorie Sutham's beautiful playing in Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto. —Mr. Joseph Adams's setting of the 103rd Psalm, for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra, in which the composer carries on the tradition of the late Dr. Gaul, had its first Birmingham performance on March 12, the Choral and Orchestral Association officiating under the composer's baton. —Bach's Motet, Jesu, meine Freude, was the feature of a Festival Choral Society concert, Sir Henry Wood conducting. An impressive performance was given. In some madrigals, otherwise capably sung, the weight of massed tone told against delicacy and finish. —The Midi Symphony of Haydn, given in true classical style, and Mozart's E flat Violin Concerto, with Madame Renée Chemet in the solo music well-disposed towards its grace, were in Mr. Eugène Goossens's programme at an orchestral concert in the Mossel series; the conductor's By the Tarn was also given. —A recital by Miss Mary Abbott of works by Bach, Schumann, Chopin, and others revealed a young pianist with a future; to a natural genius for the instrument she unites keenly vitalized interpretative gifts. —The last Symphony Concert of the season had Elgar's A flat Symphony as its outstanding feature; it was capably performed. In Haydn's Violoncello Concerto in D, Miss Joan Willis played the solo part with musicianly skill. —At a popular concert by the City Orchestra a programme based on a plébiscite in which Wagner, Beethoven, and Schubert outdistanced all others drew a large attendance; no British music was included. Mr. Appleby Matthews conducted on each occasion, and in one of the Orchestra's Sunday series included, with great acceptance, Brahms's Symphony in D. —The Mid-Day concert programmes have included J. B. McEwen's F minor Violin Sonata, played by Miss Elsie Stell; Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte Sonata, played by Miss Winifred Browne; Beethoven's A major 'Cello Sonata, with Mr. Johan C. Hock and Miss Beatrice Hewitt collaborating; and a solo cantata by Alessandro Scarlatti, O di Betlemme al terra, in which Miss Eveline Stevenson, singing with taste and ability, had the assistance of Mr. Bernard Jackson at the pianoforte and a quartet of strings. A cycle of settings of de la Mare poems by C. Armstrong Gibbs was sung with fine technique and intelligence by Miss Emily Broughton. —Dr. Goodey's song recital to the British Music Society included Ravel's arrangement of five Greek folk-songs. On this occasion, as on many others this winter, the felicity of Mr. Michael Mullinar's accompanying seemed to inspire the singer of the evening. —A sonata recital by Mr. Alex. Cohen, with Mr. Lloyd Hartley accompanying the violin on the pianoforte, included works by Lekeu, Boughton, and Franck.

BRADFORD.—Mr. Hamilton Harty conducted the Hallé Orchestra at the Bradford Subscription concert on February 16, when his own Comedy Overture (revised form) and Turiña's Danzas Fantásticas were heard in the city for the first time. —At the concert of the Bradford Permanent Orchestra, on February 17, under Mr. Julius Harrison, the programme represented Haydn, Mendelssohn, Svendsen, Délibes, and Balfour Gardiner. Mr. Maurice Cole was the pianist in Saint-Saëns's second Concerto. —Clarinet Trios by Beethoven (in B flat) and R. H. Walthew (in C minor) formed the staple of the Free Chamber Concert on February 26. —Mr. John Coates gave his recital of 'English and French Love Songs,' on March 1, at the Mechanics' Institute. —The Bradford Old Choral Society gave a Coleridge-Taylor concert on March 7, with Herbert Heyner, John Adams, Dorothy Clark, and Sara Fischer as principals. —Maurer's once-popular Concertante for four solo violins and orchestra was an item at the Bradford Permanent Orchestra concert on March 10, when Mr. Julius Harrison conducted. The Drake String Quartet played the D minor Quartet of Frank Bridge at the Bradford Free Chamber Concert of March 12.

BRAMPTON (Cumberland). —Gade's The Erl-King's Daughter was performed by the Choral Society on February 22. The Society draws its membership from Brampton, Gilsland, and the villages on the fell-sides of the northern Pennines. Mr. F. Drakeford conducted a large choir and band.

BRISTOL.—The Symphony Orchestra gave its second endowment concert in Colston Hall on February 21. The object of the effort is to set up a fund under which a full combination of Bristol instrumentalists will be able to give a series of symphony concerts with special regard to local art. Mr. Maurice Alexander conducted, and Miss Irene Scharrer was the pianist in Tchaikovsky's Concerto. Other items in the programme were a poem by Giovanni Clerici, The Triumph of Progress (conducted by the composer) and the Pathetic Symphony. —The Ladies' Choir, conducted by Miss Florence Bradfield, was assisted by the Kenderdine String Quartet on March 1. The chief feature of the programme was Holst's Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda (third group), of which a preliminary hearing was given a few weeks earlier, when Mr. Arnold Bax lectured on 'Gustav Holst.' Part-songs completed the programme. —On March 2 the London Scottish Choir sang Bantock's Sea Sorrow, Cuddle Doon (Hugh Robertson), and Stracathro (Hutchinson), in Colston Hall, conducted by Mr. Arnold Fulton. —Before members of the West of England Musical Society Mr. Rutland Boughton lectured on March 3, his object being to advocate solo singing with string accompaniments, and illustrations provided included Holst's Songs for voice and violin, Vaughan Williams's On Wenlock Edge, and the lecturer's Symbol Songs. —Clifton Chamber Concert Party played Tanéïev's Pianoforte Quintet in G minor, and Brahms's String Quartet in A minor. —Horfield Baptist Choir performed Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast and The Death of Minnehaha on March 7, conducted by Mr. E. Harris. —At the last of the Duck, Son, & Pinker concerts on March 14 the London Symphony Orchestra played Dame Ethel Smyth's Overture to The Wreckers and the Overture and Intermezzo to The Boatswain's Mate, the composer conducting. The rest of the programme was conducted by Mr. Albert Coates, and included The Lincoln Imp (W. H. Reed), Kikimora (Liadov), and Scriabin's The Divine Poem.

CARDIFF.—At the Capitol, on February 18, Mr. Lionel Falkman's orchestra played a Cortège Byzantin by Ganne, the King Stephen Overture, and a Liszt Hungarian Rhapsody. —At Park Hall on the same date Mr. Garforth Mortimer's orchestra played an Intermezzo, Fête des Papillons, by Wilke, and the Ruy Blas Overture. —The Birmingham String Quartet played Quartets by Mozart, Haydn, Glazounov (Orientele), Dohnányi, and Frank Bridge on February 21. —The Musical Society at its second concert for the season, on February 23, performed the complete Hiawatha trilogy. Mr. T. E. Aylward conducted, and the principal singers were Miss Elsie Suddaby, Mr. John Booth, and Mr. Herbert Heyner.

CHATHAM.—Raff's third Symphony, Im Walde, was the principal work played by the band of the Royal Engineers on February 20. Other pieces were Lalo's Norwegian Rhapsody in A and Massenet's Phédre overture. —A quartet of strings from the Royal Marine Orchestra played Beethoven's third Quartet on March 4. Mr. R. W. Tufnell arranged the programme, which included among choral items Wesley's Let us lift up our hearts. —The Royal Marine Orchestra played Beethoven's sixth Symphony and a Scherzo by Moussorgsky on March 5. —On March 6 the Royal Engineers gave Dvorák's fourth Symphony.

DURHAM.—Under the auspices of Durham University Choral Society, Mr. William Ellis, organist of Newcastle Cathedral, lectured on Elizabethan Songs on March 5.

EDINBURGH.—At the Reid orchestral concert on February 17, Prof. Tovey had the assistance of the Dutch Quartet. The programme included a Triple Concerto for violin, viola, and violoncello, by the Dutch composer, Mr. Julius Röntgen, whose son was the violinist of the party. In a Bach Concerto the continuo was played by Prof. Tovey on a Weber duplex coupler pianoforte. In the evening of the same day the Dutch Quartet played Debussy's String Quartet, Beethoven's Op. 18, No. 4, and, with Prof. Tovey at the pianoforte, Brahms's Quintet, Op. 34. On February 21, the Tir Nam Beann Society gave a concert of Gaelic music, the choral pieces being sung by the Gaelic choir under Mr. Neil Orr. Mr. J. A. Moonie's choir, at its annual concert in Usher Hall on February 21, sang the first two parts of the Hiawatha trilogy, Mr. James A. Moonie's choral ballad, Killiecrankie, and a new poem for orchestra by Mr. W. B. Moonie, The Riders of the Sidhe, the last conducted by the composer. The choir numbered two hundred voices, and the orchestra fifty players. The fifth of this season's Nelson Trust concerts, on February 26, was the occasion of a visit of Miss Dorothy Silk, who was accompanied by Mr. McEwen in songs by Purcell, Holbrooke, and Bach. Mr. John Petrie Dunn (pianoforte) and Dr. Douglas Dickson (violin) played Purcell's Sonata in G minor. The Edinburgh String Quartet assisted Prof. Tovey, on February 26, in his lecture on Beethoven's third period, and played the Quartet in B flat, Op. 130. Prof. Tovey played the Sonata, Op. 109.

Recitals were given by Mr. Harold Samuel (in a Bach programme) on March 5, and Madame Gerhardt on March 7. St. Andrew Amateur Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. R. de la Haye, played Elgar's Wand of Youth, and the Ruy Blas Overture on March 8. At the Nelson Hall concert, on March 8, the chief features were Schumann's String Quartet in A minor and Brahms's Pianoforte Quintet, Op. 34, in which the Edinburgh String Quartet was assisted by Mr. McEwen. Mr. David Hutchinson was the singer in Vaughan Williams's On Wenlock Edge. At Leith Choral Society's concert on March 9, the programme included Coleridge-Taylor's Bon-bon Suite and Gade's Spring's Message. A small orchestra accompanied, and the Edinburgh String Quartet played. The conductor was Mr. Christie Jupp. The Reid orchestral concert on March 10 assumed special importance by the performance, under the direction of Prof. Tovey, of Beethoven's Mass in D. The Choral Union sang the chorus work, and the English Singers (Miss Flora Mann, Miss Lillian Berger, Mr. Steuart Wilson, and Mr. Clive Carey) were the principals.

EXETER.—At the February meeting of the Chamber Music Club Medtner's Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Op. 21), Debussy's Petite Suite for pianoforte (four hands), and Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Trio in C minor were the chief items.

FORFAR.—Caractacus was performed on March 1 by the Forfar Choral Union. Mr. Stephen Richardson conducted, and an orchestra of nineteen accompanied.

GLASGOW.—At a concert promoted by the Bach Choir, on February 15, Dr. Boyce's Sonata in D minor for two violins and pianoforte was played by Miss Bessie Spence, Miss Dorothy Macgeorge, and Mr. A. M. Henderson. The Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company opened a fortnight's season at the Theatre Royal on February 19.

GOOLE.—Goole Musical Society, numbering a hundred voices and supported by an orchestra, performed Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast and The Death of Minnehaha on March 13, conducted by Mr. Walter Porter.

GRANTHAM.—The Grantham Philharmonic Society, conducted by Mr. Edward Brown, performed Acis and Galatea and Elgar's In the Bavarian Highlands on February 22. There were a hundred and fifty singers in the chorus.

HALIFAX.—At its second concert, the Hebden Bridge Male-Voice Choir sang the pieces with which it won the Challenge Cup at the Halifax Festival. The solo portion of the programme was sustained by Miss Florence Austral (soprano), Mr. John Dunn (violin), and Mr. Peter Dawson (bass). Dr. A. C. Tysoe, of Leeds, scored a great success on March 8, when his Halifax Choral Society gave a fine concert performance of Samson and Delilah, in the Victoria Hall. Miss Edna Thornton took the rôle of Delilah, and the Leeds Symphony Orchestra played notably.

HUDDERSFIELD.—An orchestral programme, with songs and pianoforte items, was presented by the Huddersfield Philharmonic Society on February 24 in the Town Hall. March 6 found Mr. C. H. Moody (Ripon Cathedral) conducting the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society in Parry's Ode on the Nativity and Songs of Farewell, also choral items by Byrd, Elgar, and Vaughan Williams.

KEIGHLEY.—At the second concert of the Keighley Clef Club branch of the British Music Society a miscellaneous vocal and instrumental programme of Handel, Verdi, Dvorák, Chopin, Massenet, Ireland, Baines, and Balfour Gardiner was presented on February 17. In the Municipal Hall, on March 7, the Keighley Orchestral Society, under Mr. Arthur Lloyd, played works by Schubert, Liszt, Jarnefelt, Weber, &c.

LEEDS.—An historical programme of vocal music ranging from Sumer is icumen in to works by Elgar and Vaughan Williams was conducted by Dr. E. C. Bairstow on February 21 at the Leeds Philharmonic Society's concert. Mr. Johan Rasch, the Dutch violinist, collaborated with Mr. Lloyd Hartley (pianoforte) in a recital on February 23 that included Elgar's Sonata. Mr. Eugène Goossens conducted Mozart's Symphony in C (Köchel, No. 338) at the Saturday Orchestral Concert on February 24. For a week beginning February 26 the British National Opera Company occupied Leeds Grand Theatre. The works presented included Parsifal (with Kirkby Lunn as Kundry), Phæbus and Pan, and Hansel and Gretel (with a crowded children's matinée). The Wednesday Chamber Concerts in Belgrave Lecture Hall by the Ghent Quartet concluded on February 28, when Quartets by Beethoven and Dvorák were played. The G major Quartet of Vitezlav Novák and that in E minor by Dame Ethel Smyth were among the works performed at the Bohemian Chamber Concert on February 28.

At Leeds University on February 29, Mr. Frederick Dawson gave a recital of works by the late William Baines. Miss Kathleen Frise-Smith, the Leeds pianist, at the third of her concerts on March 5 played Tcherepnin's Concerto in C sharp minor, Op. 30, and Sgambati's Concerto in G minor, the orchestral parts being played on a second pianoforte. Works by Byrd, Tye, Palestrina, Viadana, &c., were sung in Latin, at Leeds University, on March 5, by the local Roman Catholic Cathedral Choir. Coleridge-Taylor's Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast was given on March 7, by the Woodhouse Lane U.M.C. Choir. Sir Michael Sadler, as vice-chancellor, presided at Mr. Arthur J. Dobson's lecture on 'Bach and the Passion Music,' at Leeds University, on March 10, when extensive illustrations were afforded by members of the Parish Church Choir. Mr. Howard Carr, the Harrogate conductor, directed the orchestra on March 11, at the Empire Theatre, in a programme of Beethoven, Wagner, Moussorgsky, &c. Burley Choral Society presented Stanford's Phaëdra on March 13.

LIVERPOOL.—At Crane Hall, on February 15, Mr. J. E. Matthews (violin) and Mr. John Tobin (pianoforte) played Sonatas by Elgar, Arnold Bax, and Grieg. The sixth concert of the season for young people, organized by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, took place on February 17. Dr. C. S. Grundy was the lecturer on 'Tunes in many dresses,' and an orchestra, conducted by Mr. G. E. Stuteley, played illustrations. The British National Opera Company closed a three weeks' season at Olympia on February 24. At the Rushworth & Dreaper children's concert at Picton Hall, on February 24, Miss E. Allen discoursed on 'Rhythm.' The Habañera from Carmen, Funeral March of a Marionette, and Grainger's Shepherds' Hey, were among the pieces played in illustration. At Rushworth Hall, on the same date, Mr. Frank Merrick lectured to the Music Teachers' Association on the 'Fitzwilliam Virginal Book,' and played illustrations on the pianoforte. A recital of songs by Roger Quilter, accompanied by the composer, was given by Miss Dorothy Ledsome on February 28.—In connection with the British Music Society a local composers' group has been formed, and at the first meeting, on February 28, a Violin Sonata by Mr. Ernest Lodge and a Pianoforte Concerto by Mr. Douglas Miller were performed, the latter with a second pianoforte in lieu of orchestra.—At a Bach Concert, on March 6, Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch played the Chromatic Fantasia, the Concerto in A minor, and the first Sonata for violin.—The eighth and final orchestral concert of the series promoted by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper for the young took place on March 10, when Suites by Bach, Grieg, and Bizet, and the Overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream, were played under the direction of Mr. Gordon E. Stutely.

MANCHESTER.—At the Hallé concert of February 22 Mr. Harty conducted the first post-war performance in the North of Strauss's Heldenleben. In clarity, freedom of treatment, and general sanity of conception, this reading stands out conspicuously even in Harty's fine Straussian record this season.—The Brand Lane concert of February 24 brought Kussewitzky in place of Furtwängler, with Nikisch as solo pianist. Both were new to Lancashire audiences, and we hope to hear the conductor in works, say, of Scriabin, in which his readings are unchallenged; others play Weber, Wagner, Liszt, or even Tchaikovsky, probably as well as he does. Gerhardt has sung twice at this series—once with orchestra, under Sir Henry Wood, and on March 24 a song recital.—The Wagner evening on March 1 brought unexpectedly fine Siegfried singing from Alfred Jordan, and superb emotional climaxes from Miss Agnes Nicholls.—On March 8 the big C major Symphony of Schubert and minor works by Vaughan Williams and Holst formed the solid portion of the programme, Madame Chemet playing Lalo as only she can.—The Co-operative Wholesale Society Ma'e Choir and the Manchester Vocal Society, under Messrs. Alfred Higson and Harold Dawber respectively, concluded successful seasons on March 14.—The concluding concert of the Hallé series on March 15 brought the reappearance of Beecham as conductor in the rarely-heard C major Symphony (No. 36) of Mozart, and Hamilton Harty played the solo part in his B minor Pianoforte Concerto. The enthusiasm of the audience was well-nigh unexampled, and in acknowledging the warmth of his reception Beecham paid deserving and obviously sincere tributes to Harty and to the Hallé Orchestra, which he pronounced was second to none in Europe taking it all in all.—The concluding Hallé Saturday 'Prom.' was drawn wholly from Irish composers, and the presence of Plunket Green and Sir Charles Stanford further emphasised the Hibernian quality of the evening.—Recitals have been numerous, and that of Miss Alison King in Wolf song selections calls for first mention. Miss Roebuck's singing of traditional carols and songs, often unaccompanied, was only partially successful.—Miss Edith Robinson's Quartet has undergone some reconstruction, and is now a much finer exponent of chamber works—witness the César Franck and Schumann A major done during February.—Mr. Edward Isaacs has assumed control of the Tuesday Mid-day Series, in succession to Mr. William Eller, who retired on March 15.

NEWCASTLE.—At the fourth concert of the season, on February 18, the Philharmonic Orchestra played the Fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra by Edgar L. Bainton which received the Carnegie Trust award in 1921. The composer was at the pianoforte.—At the 'international celebrity' concert on February 21, the performers included the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Landon Ronald. Miss Adela Hamaton was the pianist in César Franck's Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra.—At its second annual concert on February 22, Benton Orchestral Society played Cherubini's Anacreon Overture, Beethoven's second Symphony, a Suite for strings by Purcell, a Ballet Suite by Rameau, and Sibelius's Valse Triste. Mr. Tom H. Clay, who conducted, is also the conductor of the Cumberland Orchestral Society at Carlisle.—The Bach Choir's sixty-first concert, on February 25, was designed as a Byrd and Weelkes Tercentenary celebration. The programme included Come, woeful Orpheus, and Sanctus, Benedictus, and Agnus Dei, and pianoforte pieces by Byrd, madrigals and two lively Ayres by Weelkes (Take here my heart and Ah, ha, this world doth pass). In addition the choir sang a part-song by Mr. Edward Crowe, one of the members, and Arnold Bax's Mater Ora filium. Miss Harriet Cohen played pianoforte music by Scarlatti, Bach, Ireland, Bax, and Goossens.—The fourth and final concert for this season of the McConnell Wood Northumbrian Select Choir took place on March 6, when the choral pieces included Elgar's Spanish Serenade, Vaughan Williams's The Turtle Dove (for men's voices), and The Miller's Wooing (Eaton Fanning).—The Oppenheim Music Society, at its fifty-ninth concert (the last of this series) on March 8, performed Saint-Saëns's Variations for two pianofortes on a theme by Beethoven, Schumann's Sonata in D minor for violin and pianoforte, Vaughan Williams's On Wenlock Edge, Glazounov's String Quartet, Op. 39, and Sinding's Variations in E flat minor for two pianofortes.—Under the auspices of the British Music Society Dr. Edmund H. Fellowes lectured on March 10 on the 'Elizabethan Lutenists,' singing some of Dowland's Ayres to his own accompaniment on the lute.

NOTTINGHAM.—Mr. William Woolley conducted his choir on February 22 in a programme that included While the bright sun (Byrd), Arise, awake (Morley), The surrender of the soul (Cornelius), Angel spirits ever blessed (Tchaikovsky), Day is departing (Woolley), Nightwatch (Brahms), and other works on the same plane.

OKEHAMPTON.—The Choral Society, numbering seventy voices, sang The Banner of St. George and Hear my Prayer, on February 13, conducted by Mr. Sydenham James.

OXFORD.—The Guild of Singers and Players gave a concert in the Assembly Room on February 10, when the works performed included Rameau's Trio for flute, 'cello, and pianoforte, a Scena by Joseph Marx for soprano, flute, and pianoforte, Pan mourning for Syrinx, a piece for the same combination by Georges Hué, Soir Païen, two Sapphic Lyrics by Albert Mallinon, and Bach's Sonata in F major for violin and pianoforte.—The Hungarian Quartet provided the fifth Subscription Concert on February 15, and played Brahms's Op. 51, No. 2, Mozart's second Quartet in D minor, and Tchaikovsky's first Quartet in D.—On February 16 the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Landon Ronald, played Tchaikovsky's Symphony Pathétique and César Franck's Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra, Miss Adela Hamaton being the pianist.—The novel experiment was tried in the Town Hall on February 18 of combining in one orchestra all the professional players of orchestral instruments. Mr. Maurice Besly conducted, and the programme included Lalo's Aubade, Beethoven's Coriolan Overture, and Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, Mr. W. K. Stanton being the soloist. The band is intended to be a permanent institution.—Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay gave a recital on March 1.—The Elizabethan Singers sang music new and old in the Town Hall on March 4.—On March 5 Miss Marjorie McTavish gave a pianoforte recital, including two pieces by Paul Corder. Mr. Steuart Wilson was the singer.—On March 8 the Orchestral Society, conducted by Mr. Maurice Besly, included in its programme Elgar's Violin Concerto (with Miss Margaret Fairless as soloist), Debussy's L'Après-Midi d'un Faune, and Balfour Gardiner's Shepherd Fennel's Dance.

PLYMOUTH.—On February 28 the Orchestral Society played Max Bruch's Concerto for violin and orchestra (with Miss Florence Woolland as soloist), the Hebrides Overture, From the New World Symphony, excerpts from Tristan and Isolde, and the Mastersingers Overture.

ROCHESTER.—St. Hilda Colliery band from South Shields played Hubert Bath's Symphony for brass band, Freedom, on March 7.

SCARBOROUGH.—The fourth of the newly-revived chamber concerts was given on February 28 at the Prince of Wales Hotel. Miss Dorothy Silk sang Bach and Handel Arias, and pieces by Purcell and Brahms. Miss Muriel Davenport played pianoforte works by Mozart, Schumann, and Albeniz. To the initiative of Mr. A. C. Keeton and Mr. G. F. Mitchell, is due this, the first series of chamber concerts at Scarborough for over ten years.—On March 12 and 13 the Scarborough Philharmonic Society, under Dr. Thomas Ely, gave concerts in the Spa Theatre. Mr. Frederick Dawson played several pieces, the Australian baritone, Mr. Harold Williams, sang a number of songs, and the choir contributed unaccompanied items by Elgar, Coleridge-Taylor, and Bantock.

SHEFFIELD.—The Sheffield 'Five o'Clock,' on February 21, was distinguished by songs from Caccini, Dowland, &c., up to Bax and Besly. Rameau's Suite No. 4, for clavier, flute, and violoncello contrasted effectively with Goossens's Five Impressions of a Holiday, scored for a similar combination.—Violoncello Sonatas by Marcello and Grieg graced the Mid-Day recital at the University on February 23.—The same day, the Sheffield String Quartet rendered a good account of works by Mozart, Dvorák, and Tchaikovsky, in the Mappin Hall.—Miss Rich's Ladies' Choir, a hundred and twenty strong, with an orchestra conducted by Mr. Allan Smith, appeared at the Victoria Hall on February 24, in a miscellaneous programme.—Sir Landon Ronald brought the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra to Sheffield on February 27. Dvorák's New World Symphony, and César Franck's Symphonic Variations (pianist, Miss Adela Hamaton) were the chief items.—Miss Helen Guest played Arensky's Pianoforte Concerto in F (with Miss Gwen Jones at the second pianoforte), at her recital on March 5. This work was selected by plébiscite, it being chosen in preference to those of Moszkowsky, Scriabin, Schumann, Beethoven, Mozart, and Tchaikovsky.—The 'Five o'Clock' programme of March 7 included a repetition (by request) of Goossens's Five Impressions, also Mozart's double Pianoforte Concerto in E flat.

SHREWSBURY.—The Philharmonic Society gave its first concert of the season on February 1. The programme was miscellaneous, consisting of The Death of Minnehaha, the third Leonore Overture, and Meistersinger and other operatic selections. Mr. F. G. Rowland conducted.

TORQUAY.—On March 14, Mr. H. G. Crocker's Orchestra of thirty performers played Holst's St. Paul's Suite, Mozart's Serenade in G, and Bach's Violin Concerto in A minor. Mr. Crocker was the solo violinist and conductor.

YORK.—The York Musical Society, conducted by Dr. E. C. Bairstow, on March 13 gave a notable interpretation of The Dream of Gerontius, with Mr. Steuart Wilson as Gerontius.

MUSIC IN IRELAND

His many friends in Ireland were delighted to learn that the popular Italian musician, Dr. Michele Esposito, for forty years Professor at the Royal Irish Academy of Music, Dublin, had been given the Order of the Crown of Italy by the King of Italy, carrying with it the title of Commendatore. The formal presentation was made by the Italian Consul on February 26.

On February 21 Miss Jean Nolan (a former pupil of the great Hungarian master, Chevalier Korbay) gave a song recital at the Abbey Theatre. She was heard in a varied programme by Franck, Brahms, Schumann, Vaughan Williams, and Tchaikovsky.

Belfast audiences had a great treat on February 16, at Ulster Hall, when Miss Stiles-Allen, Mr. Ifor Thomas, Miss Marie Hall (violin), and Mr. Percival Garratt (pianoforte) appeared at the second concert of the Provincial Subscription series.

On February 19, the Brodsky Quartet gave a recital at Dublin, under the auspices of the R.D.S., one of the attractions being a delightful Quartet in C minor, by Esposito, Op. 69. On February 26, Prof. Esposito's combination of strings wound up a successful season.

The O'Mara Opera Company opened a season at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, on February 26, ending on March 17. All the old favourites were well received.

Mr. Walter Rummel gave a successful pianoforte recital at Ulster Hall, Belfast, on February 28.

At the Derry Feis (March 6 to March 10) the adjudicators were Prof. Granville Bantock, Miss Denne Parker, and Miss Editha Knocker. Over three hundred and forty competitors entered, a slight increase on last year.

Prof. Bantock said that it would 'do the choirs in England good to come to Ireland to hear how Church music should be sung.' The prize-winners' concert was a huge success.—On March 9 the Dublin University Choral Society, now in its eighty-seventh year, gave a good performance of Coleridge-Taylor's Hiawatha, under the baton of Mr. Hewson.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

At the subscription concert on February 17, we had the pleasure of renewing our acquaintance with the Russian pianist Leonid Kreutzer, who exhibited his skill in Brahms's D minor Concerto and in Berlioz's Harold Symphony. Illness prevented Dr. Muck from appearing at the concert of February 18, and M. Dopfer conducted a programme of French orchestral works, in which only one—Florent Schmitt's Tragédie de Salomé—was a novelty for Amsterdam. On February 22 Dr. Muck gave us an exquisite Beethoven programme, including the Fugue, Op. 133, arranged for string band by Felix Weingartner. At the concert of March 1 M. Loewensohn took up the cause of a young Dutch composer, Mlle. Henriette Bosmans, by introducing her new Violoncello Concerto. Although this composition suffered from certain faults noticeable in works of beginners—viz., undue length and lack of proportion between the solo part and that of the strongly predominating orchestra—it gave evidence of much talent. Carl Flesch's consummate mastery of the violin was the sensation of the following concert, when he played Bach's E major Concerto and the G minor by Max Bruch. On March 8 the subscribers were agreeably surprised by being given an 'extra' concert for which no admission was charged! The programme contained three orchestral works by Strauss, of whose music Dr. Muck is one of the most capable interpreters. The items were Thus spake Zarathustra, the Suite Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, and Till Eulenspiegel. The approach of Max Reger's fiftieth anniversary (March 19) was signalled by two concerts. On March 11 we heard the extremely clever Variations and Fugue on a Theme by J. A. Hiller, and the song with orchestra, An die Hoffnung. Madame Ilona Durigo sang both this and Brahms's Alt Rhapsodie, the choral part of which was given by the Apollo male choir. (By the way, there are probably few male choirs of like proportions that could vie with the Apollo in its velvety pianissimos, to say nothing of its general high standard of singing.) A very interesting Fauré concert was given by the Alliance Française. The evening opened with a lecture, and the scheme comprised Fauré's second Violoncello Sonata, the second Pianoforte Quartet, a series of songs (Mlle. Doris Dettelbach), and two exquisite items for harp solo, which were admirably performed by Madame Rosa Spier.

An evening given by Mlle. Madeleine Monnier, the Parisian violoncellist, with the assistance of Madame Coba Swaan (pianoforte), attracted such a large audience that the hall was sold out many days in advance. A recently-formed combination, called the Parisian Trio, deserves special mention. These players bid fair to become among the foremost in their line; indeed, more refined performances of the works they played (Trios by Beethoven, Ravel, and Chausson) are difficult to imagine.

Recitals have been given by young Spivakovsky (helpless in the Brahms Violin Sonata), Lula Mysz-Gmeiner, and Eduard Behm (in songs), and Madeleine Grovlez (pianoforte). Finally, mention must be made of two very interesting evenings when the Italian singer Geni Sadero sang old Italian folk-songs, which she herself had collected in the various provinces of Italy. W. HARMANS.

NEW YORK

The fashion of changing conductors in mid-winter and of introducing guest-conductors has grown so universal in our orchestras that one must either keep a note-book or have a very alert memory to know whom to expect to see in charge from week to week. Mr. Coates's visit to New York this winter was shorter than his two previous appearances here, and as Mr. Damrosch's vacation was not quite finished when the Englishman sailed for home, Bruno Walter was engaged to conduct three performances of the New York Symphony Society. Mr. Walter's fame seems to have been chiefly that of an operatic conductor at Vienna and Munich, and about his work on the concert-platform on the other side of the ocean we hear little. Judging from his performances with the Symphony Society he has no such marked individuality as a concert conductor as would arouse enthusiasm or even call for special comment. He is not in the least sensational—is not even dramatic—but just a careful, conscientious, and painstaking musician, leaving the listener without any particular inclination either to praise or blame. His best work was done in Mozart's D minor Symphony; his least satisfactory performance was that of the first Symphony of Brahms.

The Philharmonic Society in its 'educational series' of five concerts produced recently, for the first time in America, Schreker's Chamber Symphony. Only one composition by this young Austrian has been heard in this country before—viz., a Prelude to a Drama, played last season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Schreker is distinctly a modern, and if he does not go to the extreme of Schönberg and Milhaud neither does he write music that is grateful to the ear or satisfying to the intellectual demands of the cultivated listener. It is empty and meaningless, and in spite of Mengelberg's masterly attempt to produce something out of nothing, it fell on unresponsive ears. To introduce such compositions in an 'educational' series is about as sensible as to expect a school-boy to study the differential calculus while he was still learning the multiplication table.

Joseph Stransky, who has conducted the orchestra of the Philharmonic Society for twelve years, has resigned, and Willem van Hoogstraten was speedily elected to fill his place. It sounds like a simple statement of fact, but there is a mystery connected with the affair that arouses curiosity. Apparently Mr. Stransky expected to be asked to renew his contract. That evidently he was not asked is plain, but the whys and wherefores are not so plain. Mr. van Hoogstraten is comparatively unknown and inexperienced as a conductor. He conducted the Stadium concerts last summer, for three weeks, and even in so short a time he made both friends and enemies.

Mr. Frederic Lamond, after playing with the Philharmonic Orchestra, appeared in a recital before a large and appreciative audience. The programme was long and exacting, beginning with Brahms's Variations on a theme by Paganini. The Sonata Appassionata followed, and was easily Mr. Lamond's greatest accomplishment of the evening. His European reputation as a Beethoven player was quickly understood. Lamond established himself as a pianist of the front rank, and he will be welcomed again.

Six weeks after the appointed time, the London String Quartet appeared with Mr. Arthur Beckwith in Mr. Levey's place. One recognises Mr. Beckwith's sterling qualities, and the extraordinarily difficult position he was called upon to fill as a substitute for Mr. Levey. The programme included Quartets by Mozart and Beethoven, and one by J. B. McEwen dedicated to the players. It is still hoped that Mr. Levey may sufficiently recover from his illness as to appear with the Quartet before the season closes.

At the beginning of the operatic season Mr. Gatti announced only two novelties; but new operas that even deserve a trial are very scarce in these days. The two chosen compositions were Anima Allegra, by Franco Vittadini, and Mona Lisa, by Max Schilling. The first has just been given, and the second will quickly follow. Franco Vittadini was born at Pavia in 1884, and has written one other opera which has never been produced. Anima Allegra had its première at Rome, and has also been heard in Spain and South America. Operas are generally tragic, but the Joyous Soul is mirthful from beginning to end. There is no note of sadness; everyone is full of fun and happiness, and while a joyous rôle suits Lucrezia Bori, it must be a heavy strain to have to be continually more merry and frolicsome than all the other merry and frolicsome ones. Probably Miss Bori is the only one in the Company who could carry off such a situation; she does it and does it well, though all her colleagues are capable artists. The stage settings in the old Spanish home and the gipsy camp are remarkably fine; the costumes are superb; but the book has not even a vestige of a plot, and the music is of the lightest character, with occasional snatches of pretty tune and long stretches of commonplace. A work of genius it is not, and a long life can hardly be predicted for it, yet it is quite on the cards that this young Italian may some day do something far better than this trifle.

M. H. FLINT.

ROME

The month of February has been of particular interest to the frequenters of the Augusteo on account of the number of 'celebrity' concerts which have been given there during the month. The first visitor was Pietro Mascagni, ever popular at Rome. He directed two concerts to overflowing houses. Besides Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in the first concert, and Dvorák's From the New World in the second, each occasion was remarkable for the performance of a new Symphonic Impression written by Mascagni himself expressly for the Augusteo, and inspired by the statue of Sta. Therese, by Bernini, one of the least-known masterpieces of the great artist, which is hidden away in an out of the way church on the Via Tuscolana. Mascagni's new work met with an exceedingly favourable reception. Leopold Stokowski, the director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, was the second on the list, and besides the 'Seventh,' included also Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony in his programme. Considerable interest was roused by the successive visits of the Moravian Meistersingers, who gave two concerts, a feature of which was their illustration of the folk-song of Moravia.

In the great Academic Hall of the Pontifical School, Don Raffaele Manari, the Lateran organist, gave the second of his historical organ recitals with a 17th-century programme. This series of concerts is meeting with great success, not only for the justly merited name of the organist, but also for the fact that organ recitals at Rome are sufficiently rare to prove a real attraction to music-lovers.

The Philharmonic Society, which is always to the front with excellent schemes, has been very busy during the month both with afternoon and evening concerts. A great favourite at Rome, Paul Loyonnet returned to us after a year's absence, and gave two concerts, the first of which was honoured by the presence of the Queen Mother. The pianist confined himself to classical programmes. At the time of writing the Philharmonic is giving hospitality to the famous Léner Quartet. These players initiated their visit with a programme in which figured a new Quartet by Leone Weiner, the Hungarian, a work in F minor, which won the Coolidge prize last year. Although well received for its excellent execution and for the brilliancy of certain of its passages, the Quartet is not one which demonstrates anything beyond a fine technical capacity—unless it may be a marked tendency to use motives of dubious originality.

Another novelty for Roman audiences, presented at the Philharmonic concerts, was the Spinnlied for violoncello, written by David Popper, and performed by a young artist of the Romagna, Amleto Fabbri, who is recognised as a player of great promise.

The Sala Bach continues to be a rendezvous of the foreign visitors to the city—an honour due to its position near the Piazza di Spagna and the Pincio. The month began with Edwin Fischer's pianoforte recital. A Bolognese visitor, Realdo Erba, introduced a new composition by his Bolognese master, Schieppati, entitled Nostalgies of the sette-cento, which, if a good production in itself, cannot claim to have caught the atmosphere of the 17th century.

The Teatro dei Piccoli, the unique marionette theatre, appealed to English residents by preparing and staging a puppet representation of The Tempest in English. The programme sought to justify the somewhat dubious experiment by the well-known paradox of Anatole France, that nowadays Shakespeare ought to be meditated or seen only in a puppet show. Be this as it may, the matter would be out of place here except for a mention of the revival of the musical interludes, especially chosen from the works of Gluck and Purcell.

LEONARD PREYTON.

TORONTO

Dr. Edward Broome's Oratorio Society, the second large choral organization to be heard this season, gave two concerts on February 5 and 6 in Massey Hall, one almost entirely orchestral, the other devoted to Elijah. The Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, under Nicolai Sokoloff, selected a strange mixture—the César Franck Symphony (played with dignity and care), Strauss's Don Juan, and the Prelude to the Mastersingers. Don Juan did not follow comfortably after the Symphony. Between there were sandwiched Cyril Jenkins's Silent Land and Dr. Broome's Evening. Jenkins's works have as yet made very little impression here. The choralists knew and enjoyed Elijah, in which they sang with ease and authority. Four new soloists were heard—Miss Ursula Greville (England), Miss Mary Jordan, Mr. Ernest Davies, and Mr. Norman Joliife (New York). An orchestral matinee for children found a large audience keenly appreciative of the following numbers (annotated by the assistant conductor, Mr. Shepherd): Jarnefelt's Praeludium, Prelude to Hänsel and Gretel, Largo from New World Symphony, a Strauss Valse, and the Finale of the Peer Gynt Suite.

The Mendelssohn Choir week (Mr. H. A. Fricker conducting) included five concerts, with a total attendance of well over fourteen thousand people. Both chorus and orchestra—the Philadelphia, under Leopold Stokowski—have improved considerably since their last meeting, the former in quality of tone, the latter in brilliance of detail. Assisting artists were M. Alfred Cortôt (an amazing pianist with a strange detachment of style), Miss Marie Tiffany (soprano), and Mr. John Barclay (baritone), both of whom were well received.

The a cappella music heard on February 13 included: Adoramus Te and Exultate Deo (Palestrina); Thou knowest, Lord (Purcell); Apostrophe to the Heavenly Host (Healey Willan), for double choir; Happy Isles (Bantock), and The Abode of Love (Gustav Ferrari); both for female voices.

On February 15 the programme included Bach's Sleepers, Wake, Brahms's first Symphony, two of Holst's Choral Hymns from the Rig Veda, and two Gymnopedes of Satie, orchestrated by Debussy.

Brahms's Requiem was given on February 16, and a Wagner programme for the afternoon of February 17. The final programme, on February 18, was miscellaneous.

Among the new works those most deeply appreciated were the Holst Rig Veda Hymns—sound, firm impressions of the East from a sane Western perspective, and great favourites with the choir—and Dr. Healey Willan's Apostrophe, specially written for the Mendelssohn Choir, a work of fine but heavy structure.

Toronto received a visit from the Winnipeg Male-Voice Choir on February 23. This six-year-old choir, under Mr. Hugh C. M. Ross, is making its second tour in two years, and visiting St. Paul, Eau Claire, Chicago, London, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, New York, Brooklyn, Detroit, Milwaukee, Minneapolis. Such initiative and enterprise for such a small body of sixty-five, are to be greatly admired. With sharp, clean-cut style, and splendid vitality, the choir sang among other things: The Réveille (Elgar); Matona, Lovely Maiden (di Lasso); Bushes and Briars (arr. Vaughan Williams); Dance of the Gnomes (MacDowell); Feasting I Watch (Elgar); Ecstasy (Duparc); and Heartache (Dvorák).

The Frank Blachford Quintet played Frank Bridge's Quintet in D minor for the Toronto Chamber Music Society on February 7.

Among the works given on February 9 and 10 by the Hamilton Elgar Choir, under Mr. H. W. Hewlett and the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, under Nicolai Sokoloff, were Liszt's 13th Psalm and Dale's Before the pining of the stars.

The Hambourg Concert Society gave us Ireland's E minor Trio on February 25.

At the second sonata recital, on February 28, the programme comprised Brahms's A major, Sinding's E major, the Bach Chaconne, and Schumann's Papillons.

Among those recently heard in concert and recital have been Ferdinand Fillion and Paul Wells; Myra Hess; Ernest Hutcheson, in a Liszt programme; Madame Grace-Smith in Old France; Eustache Horodyski (pianoforte); J. Campbell McInnes in Songs for Children; and H. A. Fricker in an organ programme, Small choral societies such as the Male-Voice Club, the Scottish Chorus, the Victoria College Glee Club, the University of Toronto Glee Club, Eaton Choral Society, and the Murray-Kay Choral Society, have been busy.

H. C. F.

[We regret that the notes from our Berlin, Vienna, Paris, and Budapest correspondents arrived too late for insertion.—EDITOR.]

Obituary

We regret to record the death of CHARLES FRANCIS ABDDY WILLIAMS, at Milford, Lymington, on February 27. He was born at Dawlish, July 16, 1855. He received a part of his musical education at Leipsic Conservatory, being at the same time organist at the English church in that city. He was appointed organist of Dover College in 1881, organist and choirmaster, St. Mary Boltons, 1885, and music-master at Bradfield College in 1895. During his stay at Bradfield (he left there in 1901) he made the school performances of Greek plays famous. (For Alceste he wrote incidental music in the modes, for Greek flutes and cithara.) He graduated Mus. Bac., Cambridge, in 1891. An authority on a good many subjects, especially Greek music, ancient rhythms, and the history of the organ, he wrote much and well on all of them. He was a frequent contributor to this journal—a delightful article on ancient conceptions of rhythm appeared in our columns as recently as February. He had the all-too-rare gift of dealing with erudite subjects in a manner so pleasant as to beguile many a reader who in the ordinary way would pass them by. His death came as a shock to a large circle of friends and musicians.

Miscellaneous

We have received the programme of the Cambridge Festival of British Music, inaugurated by the Cambridge University Musical Society. The dates are June 2-8, and the scheme includes a madrigal concert by the English Singers; performances of works of Byrd, Weelkes, and Purcell by the combined choirs of King's, St. John's, and Trinity Colleges; folk-dancing by the local branch of the English Folk-Dance Society (including a new ballet by Vaughan Williams); 18th-century English operas; an orchestral concert by the University Musical Society; a chamber music concert by the University Musical Club; an organ recital by Dr. Alan Gray; and lectures by Mr. E. J. Dent and Dr. E. W. Naylor. Dr. Cyril Rootham is the general musical director. Messrs. Metcalfe & Co. are the agents.

Mr. James Brown will give a lecture on the 'Teaching of Stringed Instruments' on the evening of April 18 at the Edric Hall of the Borough Polytechnic Institute, Borough Road, London, S.E. Tickets are obtainable by application to the secretary of the Institute. A recital of concerted string music will be included.

The Novello Choir (conductor, Mr. Harold Brooke) will give a concert, with orchestra, at the Bishopsgate Institute, on April 17, at 8, with an attractive scheme that includes Purcell's King Arthur, Madrigals by Wilbye, Brahms's Liebeslieder, and Holst's St. Paul's Suite for strings.

Vaughan Williams's On Wenlock Edge and Franck's Quintet will be the chief items at a chamber concert to be given at Mount View Hall, Harringay, on April 16, at 8, by a capital party, with Eric Greene as tenor soloist and Eric Brough at the pianoforte.

Can any reader tell us the composer and publisher of a fifty-years-ago setting of Charles Kingsley's The Poacher's Widow?

We have received a copy of the 1923 edition of the indispensable Musical Directory, published by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co. (6s.).

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BURGESS, FRANCIS.—The Music of the Palm Sunday Rite, with the Passion Gospel. (The English Gradual, Part 3, No. 2.) 1s. net.

—The Music of the Good Friday Rite, with the Passion Gospel. (The English Gradual, Part 3, No. 4.) 1s. net.

—The Music of the Holy Saturday Rite. The English Gradual, Part 3, No. 5.) 9d. net.

BYRD, WILLIAM.—“Come, come, help, O God.” Five-part Anthem. Edited by SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE. (No. 1106, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

CRÜGER, J.—“O wondrous Love!” (Rex Sæculorum). Chorale, arranged with special accompaniments, by T. L. CLEMENS. 6d.

GOODHART, A. M.—“The Lord is terrible and very great.” Anthem for General Use. (No. 1101, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

IVIMEY, JOHN.—Six Kyries. 3d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 370, contains the following music in both notations.—“In London Town.” Unison Song. STANLEY MARCHANT. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Piano-forte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

Book 270. Nonsense Songs. Vocal Parts only. A. B. STANLEY MARCHANT 4d. —

STANFORD, C. V.—Four Intermezzi, for Organ:

No. 1. Pastorale. (Original Compositions for the Organ. New Series, No. 91.) 2s.

No. 2. Marcia Eroica. (Original Compositions for the Organ. New Series, No. 92.) 2s.

No. 3. Hush Song. (Original Compositions for the Organ. New Series, No. 93.) 2s.

No. 4. Intermezzo. (Founded upon an Irish Air). (Original Compositions for the Organ. New Series, No. 94.) 2s.

SULLIVAN, A.—“Saviour, Thy children keep.” Anthem for Evening Service. Arranged for S.S.A.A. (Novello's Chorister Series, No. 69.) 4d.

TOMPSON, O.—“Fulfillment.” Song. 2s.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2402. “Our Master hath a garden.” Hymn-Anthem. H. E. CRIMP 2d.

No. 2411. “John Ball shot them all.” Four-part Song. ADAM CARSE 2d.

No. 2412. “Spring bursts to-day.” Easter Carol. GEOFFREY SHAW 2d.

WALKER, J. E.—“The Lord's Prayer.” 1½d.

REDUCED PRICE.

HUGHES, MARGARET A.—Physical Exercises in the Infant School. (Novello's Elementary Music Manuals, No. 11.) Lined paper covers. 6s.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BANKS, H. C., JUN.—“Meditation.” For Organ.

CANDLYN, T. F. H.—An Easter Antiphon. For Double Chorus. 15 cents (8d.).

—“Finale.” On a Tonic Pedal. For Organ.

—“Skye Boat Song.” Scotch Folk-Song, arranged for S.S.A. 15 cents (8d.).

CHADWICK, G. W.—Suite in Variation Form. For Organ. $2.50 (10s.).

DICKINSON, C.—“Romance.” For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

FRYSINGER, J. F.—“The Seraph's Strain.” For Organ.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

GILBERT, H. M.—“Beyond the starry skies.” Anthem.

HARRIS, CUTHBERT.—“Berceuse.” For Organ.

JAMES, P.—“Benedictus es Domine.” In C. 15 cents (8d.).

—“Father, the day is over.” Vesper Hymn. On Card.

MARTIN, M. P.A.—Chaconne in B minor. For Organ.

WARREN, E. R.—“Christ went up into the hills.” Anthem.

—“Soldiers of Christ, arise!” Anthem. 12 cents (6d.).

WEBBE, W. Y.—“Salvator Mundi.” Sacred Cantata for Passiontide. 75 cents (3s.).

ZIMMERMAN, W. P.—“An April Song.” For Organ.

—“A Revery.” For Organ.

BECHSTEIN
PIANOS

THE BECHSTEIN PIANO needs little recommendation to cultured tastes. Its beautiful tone and incomparable touch—qualities which have gained for it the esteem of every music-lover, and have set a standard to the world—are as exquisite and as characteristic as ever.

Write or call for Catalogue.

126, NEW BOND STREET
LONDON, W. I.

TELEPHONE: GERRARD 2653.

STEINWAY

MUSIC LOVERS
CAN OBTAIN
PERFECT RESULTS
ONLY FROM THE PERFECT INSTRUMENT
THE STEINWAY.

15-17, LOWER SEYMOUR STREET,
LONDON, W. I.

CELLIST.—A Master of his Instrument; admitted as being in the first rank of living Soloists, at present studying in London, would like to meet one or two pupils desirous of perfecting their knowledge, or being coached for recital work. Moderate fee to sincere pupils. Reply to “R.” c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. I.

NEW MUSIC FOR STRINGS.

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE.

EDGAR BARRATT. Price net. s. d.

HEBRIDEAN LEGEND 2 6

A melodious and atmospheric tone-poem of moderate length, by the composer of the celebrated CORONACH. Encored at every performance so far given.

ERIC FOGG.

CAPRICE 2 0

Lively and dainty, in the Scherzo style. Contains some effective double-stopping which may however be omitted if desired.

EDWARD MACDOWELL.

LONG AGO (from Four Songs, Op. 56) 2 0

One of MacDowell's most exquisite little melodies, transcribed by A. WALTER KRAMER.

CYRIL SCOTT—KREISLER.

LOTUS LAND 2 6

A famous pianoforte piece transcribed by the world's master violinist. Played by him with immense success throughout his recent tour in England.

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE.

ERIC FOGG. Price net. s. d.

POEM 3 6

There are very few really interesting and well-written pieces of moderate length for 'cello and piano. This 'Poem' therefore fills a very definite need. It is full of character, and admirably written from the soloist's point of view.

CYRIL SCOTT.

VESPERALE 2 0

The tranquil melody of this well-known piece is perfectly suited to the 'cello tone. The transcription is by the well-known 'cellist, BORIS HAMBURG.

ELKIN & CO.'S PIANO AND STRINGS SERIES.

(Piano, Two Violins, 'Cello, Double Bass optional.)

LATEST ADDITIONS.

No. 12. CORONACH Edgar Barratt

13. TWO EASTERN SONGS Agnes Mary Lang

14. MOONLIGHT ON THE LAKE Roger Quilter

Price each, 2s. net.

Complete list of the series post free on application.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

PIANOS

GRAND and UPRIGHT

By High Grade Makers.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND FOR SALE OR HIRE PURCHASE.

CHAS. STILES & CO.

74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW,
LONDON, W.C.1.

Phone: MUSEUM 439.

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL. WEEKLY ORGAN RECITALS

EVERY THURSDAY EVENING, AT 6.30 P.M.

The RECITALISTS for APRIL are as follows:

1923. April 12. DR. EAGLEFIELD HULL, F.R.C.O.
" April 19. MR. G. THALBEN BALL, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., of the Temple Church.
" April 26. MR. E. H. LEMARE, F.R.C.O.

One of the chief objects of these Recitals is to give those interested an opportunity of hearing the finest Organ Music played by Organists of the front rank on a modern instrument, and under ideal conditions acoustically.

MOLLENHAUER

FLUTES
AND PICCOLOS

MESSRS. J. MOLLENHAUER & SONS possess a hundred years' world-wide reputation as makers of first-class Wood-Wind Instruments. Their Flutes and Piccolos are unrivalled in purity of tone, pleasing intonation, and solidity of mechanism, and are consequently used by the leading artists in every land.

Catalogue from—

FAUPEL BROTHERS,

4 & 5, OLD CHANGE, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.4

Telephone: City 5693.

Far Eastern inquiries to be addressed to our Hong-Kong office,
P.O. Box 631, Hong-Kong.

JOHN BLACKBURN, LTD.,

(ESTABLISHED 1885),

PUBLISHERS OF CHURCH MUSIC,

Invite Composers to submit MSS. of

SACRED CANTATAS, ANTHEMS, or GLEES.

Prompt payments for those accepted.

Stamps must be enclosed to cover return postage in case of MSS.
being unsuitable.

JOHN BLACKBURN, LTD.,

The Great Yorkshire Music Publishers,

188, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

ANTHEMS FOR ASCENSIONTIDE.

*Above all praise and all majesty	Mendelssohn	2d.	Let not your heart be troubled (Double Chorus unac.)	M. B. Foster	4d.
*Achieved is the glorious work	Haydn	14d.	*Let not your heart (Four-part)	Myles B. Foster	4d.
*Achieved is the glorious work (2nd Chorus) ..	Haydn	2d.	*Let their celestial concerts all unite	Handel	2d.
*All glory to the Lamb	Spohr	4d.	*Lift up your heads	Handel and J. L. Hopkins, each	2d.
*Awake up, my glory	M. Wise	4d.	*Lift up your heads	S. Coleridge-Taylor	4d.
*Christ became obedient unto death	J. F. Bridge	2d.	*Lift up your heads	W. Turner	3d.
Christ is not entered into the Holy Places ..	Eaton Fanning	4d.	*Look, ye saints	Myles B. Foster	4d.
Come, ye children	Henry John King	4d.	O all ye people, clap your hands	H. Purcell	4d.
For it became Him	Oliver King	2d.	*O clap your hands	J. Stainer	8d.
God is gone up	*Croft, 6d.; W. B. Gilbert	3d.	O clap your hands	T. T. Trimmell	4d.
*God, my King	Bach	2d.	*O God, the King of Glory	H. Smart	6d.
Grant, we beseech Thee	H. Lahee	2d.	*O God, when Thou appearest	Mozart	4d.
Grant, we beseech Thee (Collect)	A. R. Gaul	4d.	*O how amiable	J. Barnby	4d.
*Hallelujah unto God's Almighty Son	Beethoven	2d.	*O Lord our Governour	H. Gadsby	4d.
*How excellent Thy Name, O Lord	Handel	2d.	O Lord our Governour	Marcello	2d.
*If ye then be risen with Christ	Ivor Atkins	6d.	*O risen Lord	J. Barnby	2d.
If ye then be risen	*F. Osmond Carr and J. Naylor, ea.	4d.	*Open to me the gates	F. Adlam	6d.
If ye then be risen (Two parts)	F. W. Wadeley, 2d.; M. B. Foster	4d.	*Rejoice in the Lord	J. B. Calkin	2d.
In My Father's house	H. Elliot Button and J. Maude Crament, ea.	6d.	*Sing unto God	F. Bevan	4d.
In that day	George Elvey	6d.	*Ten thousand times ten thousand	E. Vine Hall	4d.
In that day (Open ye the gates)	F. C. Maker	4d.	*The earth is the Lord's	T. T. Trimmell	6d.
*It shall come to pass	B. Tours	4d.	*The Lord is exalted	John E. West	2d.
I will not leave you comfortless	W. Byrd	4d.	*The Lord is King	H. Gadsby, 8d.; H. J. King, 6d.; W. King	3d.
*King all-glorious	J. Barnby	3d.	Thou art a priest for ever	S. Wesley	4d.
*King all-glorious (with Chorus arr. for four voices) ..	J. Barnby	6d.	*Unfold, ye portals	Ch. Gounod	4d.
Leave us not, neither forsake us	J. Stainer	2d.	*Where Thou reignest	Schubert	4d.
Let not your heart	Eaton Fanning and G. Gardner, each	4d.	Who is this so weak and helpless	Rayner	3d.

ANTHEMS FOR WHITSUNTIDE.

And all the people saw	J. Stainer	8d.	In My Father's house	J. Maude Crament	4d.
*And suddenly there came	Henry J. Wood	4d.	It shall come to pass	G. Garrett	8d.
And when the day of Pentecost	C. W. Smith	4d.	*It shall come to pass	B. Tours	2d.
*As pants the hart	Spohr	2d.	Let God arise	Greene	8d.
*As the hart pants	Mendelssohn	2d.	Let God arise	T. T. Trimmell	6d.
Behold, I send the promise	J. Varley Roberts	6d.	*Let not your heart be troubled	H. G. Trembath	2d.
*Come, Holy Ghost	Attwood	3d.	Look down, Holy Dove	B. Luard-Selby	4d.
Ditto (Three-part, s.s.a.)	Attwood	3d.	*O clap your hands	J. Stainer	8d.
Come, Holy Ghost	Elvey and J. L. Hatton, each	6d.	*O give thanks	G. Elvey	4d.
Come, Holy Ghost	C. Lee Williams and *Palestrina, each	3d.	*O Holy Ghost, into our minds	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
Come, Thou Holy Spirit	J. F. Barnett	4d.	*Oh! for a closer walk with God	Myles B. Foster	2d.
Do not I fill heaven and earth	Hugh Blair	4d.	O taste and see	*Goss; A. H. Mann, each	4d.
*Eye hath not seen (Two-part setting)	Myles B. Foster	4d.	O taste and see	Sullivan	2d.
*Eye hath not seen (Four-part setting)	Myles B. Foster	4d.	O Thou, the true and only Light	Mendelssohn	3d.
Fear thou not	Josiah Booth	2d.	O where shall wisdom be found	Boyce	8d.
Give thanks unto God	Spohr	6d.	*Our blest Redeemer	E. V. Hall	4d.
Glorious and powerful God	Orlando Gibbons	4d.	*Peace I leave	J. V. Roberts	4d.
*God came from Teman	C. Steggall	6d.	*Praised be the Lord daily	J. B. Calkin	2d.
*God is a Spirit	W. S. Bennett	2d.	Sing to the Lord	Smart	2s.
*Great is the Lord	W. Hayes	6d.	*Spirit of mercy, truth, and love H. A. Chambers B. Luard-Selby each	Gibbons	6d.
*Grieve not the Holy Spirit	J. Stainer	4d.	The eyes of all wait upon Thee	Gibbons	2d.
Hail! breath of life	Thomas Adams	2d.	*The Glory of the God of Israel	T. Adams	4d.
Happy is the man	E. Prout	10d.	*The Lord came from Sinai	John E. West	4d.
He that dwelleth in the secret place	Josiah Booth	6d.	The Lord descended	Hayes	2d.
*Holy Spirit, come, O come (Ad Spiritum Sanctum) ..	G. C. Martin	2d.	The Lord is in His Holy Temple	J. Stainer	6d.
I was in the spirit	Blow	8d.	The Lord is in His Holy Temple	E. H. Thorne	2d.
*I will magnify Thee	J. H. Parry	4d.	The love of God is shed abroad	S. Reay	2d.
*I will not leave you comfortless	Bruce Steane	3d.	There is no condemnation	H. S. Irons	4d.
*I will pray the Father	G. W. Torrance	2d.	The Spirit of God	Arthur W. Marchant	4d.
*If I go not away	Thomas Adams	2d.	*The wilderness	John Goss, 3d.; *S. S. Wesley	8d.
*If I do not away	A. J. Caldicott	4d.	*When God of old came down from Heaven	E. V. Hall	4d.
*If ye love Me	Bruce Steane, 3d.; C. S. Heap	2d.	We will rejoice	Croft	6d.
*If ye love Me	W. H. Monk, Tallis, and R. P. Stewart, each	2d.	When the Day of Pentecost	A. Kempton	4d.
*If ye love Me	Herbert W. Wareing and W. J. Westbrook, each	4d.	Whosoever drinketh	J. T. Field	2d.
*In divers tongues	Palestrina	3d.

ANTHEMS FOR TRINITYTIDE.

*Almighty and everlasting God	Gibbons	2d.	In sweet consent	E. H. Thorne	4d.
Almighty God, Who hast promised	H. Elliot Button	14d.	In the fear of the Lord	J. Varley Roberts	4d.
*Angel Spirits, ever blessed	Tchaikovsky	3d.	Let the peace of God	J. Stainer	6d.
Ascribe unto the Lord	S. S. Wesley	6d.	*Let Thy merciful ears	A. R. Gaul	2d.
Behold, God is great	E. W. Naylor	6d.	*Light of the world	E. Elgar	4d.
*Beloved, if God so loved us	J. Barnby	2d.	Lord of all power and might	E. T. Chipp	4d.
Beloved, let us love one another	Gerard F. Cobb	2d.	*Lord of all power and might	William Mason	2d.
Be ye all of one mind	Arthur E. Godfrey	4d.	Lord of all power and might (men's voices) ..	J. Barnby	3d.
Blessed is the man	John Goss	6d.	Lord, we pray Thee H. A. Chambers and *J. Varley Roberts ea.	J. Barnby	2d.
Blessing and glory	Boyce	2d.	O Father blest	A. R. Gaul	3d.
Blessing, glory	Bach	8d.	O God, Who hast prepared	B. Tours	6d.
Come, ye children	Josiah Booth	4d.	O joyful Light	King Hall	2d.
God came from Teman	C. Steggall	6d.	*O Lord, my trust	*J. Goss and A. H. Mann, each	4d.
God so loved the world	Matthew Kingdon	2d.	O taste and see	A. Sullivan	2d.
Grant, O Lord	Mozart	2d.	O taste and see	Boyce	8d.
Grant to us, Lord	H. Elliot Button	14d.	O where shall wisdom be found?	Arnold D. Culley	2d.
*Hail, gladdening Light	J. T. Field, 3d.; *G. C. Martin	6d.	Ponder my words, O Lord	Spohr	3d.
*Holy, holy, holy	Crotch	6d.	*Praise His awful Name	G. C. Martin	3d.
Holy, Lord God Almighty	T. Bateson	6d.	*Rejoice in the Lord	Mendelssohn	2d.
*How goodly are Thy tents	F. Ouseley	2d.	Sing to the Lord	Mendelssohn	10d.
*How lovely are Thy dwellings	Spohr	2d.	*Stand up and bless	J. Goss	6d.
*Hymn to the Trinity	Tchaikovsky	2d.	Teach me Thy way	W. H. Gladstone, 2d.; Frank L. Moir	4d.
I am Alpha and Omega	Ch. Gounod, J. Varley Roberts each	4d.	*The Lord hath been mindful	S. S. Wesley	4d.
I am Alpha and Omega	J. Stainer	2d.	*The Lord is my Shepherd	G. A. Macfarren	2d.
I beheld, and lo!	Blow	8d.	*The Lord is my Shepherd	J. Shaw	8d.
I know that the Lord is great	F. Ouseley	2d.	The Lord will comfort Zion	H. Hiles	8d.
I saw the Lord	Cuthbert Harris, 4d.; *J. Stainer	8d.	Thou art worthy, O Lord	F. E. Gladstone	4d.
I will magnify	J. Shaw	6d.	Thou shalt shew me the path of life	Alan Gray	2d.
I will sing of Thy power	Greene	6d.	Three in One and One in Three (S.S.)	F. W. Wadeley	3d.
I will sing of Thy power	A. Sullivan	2d.	We humbly beseech Thee	H. Elliot Button	14d.
I will sing unto the Lord	H. Wareing	4d.	Whosoever is born of God	H. Oakeley	4d.
*In humble faith	G. Garrett	2d.	Who can comprehend Thee	Mozart	4d.
*In Jewry is God known	J. Clarke-Whitfield	2d.

* * * Anthems marked thus (*) may be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 14d. to 3d. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SACRED MOTETS OR ANTHEMS

FOR FOUR AND FIVE VOICES

By WILLIAM BYRDE,

AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES.

IN ONE VOLUME.

EDITED BY SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE,

C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Price - Four Shillings.

CONTENTS.

1. BE UNTO ME, O LORD, A TOWER OF STRENGTH	William Byrde
2. IN THE DEPARTURE OF THE LORD	Dr. Bull
3. LOOKE DOWNE, O LORD	William Byrde
4. AN HEART THAT'S BROKEN AND CONTRITE ...	John Dowland
5. O LORD, TURN NOT THY FACE FROM ME ...	John Wilbye
6. O LORD, HOW DOE MY WOES ENCREASE ...	Orlando Gibbons
7. I'LE LIE ME DOWNE TO SLEEPE IN PEACE ...	G. Coperario
8. I LAID ME DOWN TO REST	William Byrde
9. NOT UNTO US	Thomas Ford
10. O GOD, THE ROCK OF MY WHOLE STRENGTH...	John Wilbye
11. HIGH, MIGHTY GOD	Francis Pilkington
12. O LORD, CONSIDER MY COMPLAINT	John Warde
13. COME, COME, HELP, O GOD	William Byrde
14. IN DEATH NO MAN REMEMBERETH THEE ...	A Ferabosco

Nos. 4, 5 and 13 may be had separately.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CANTATAS, &c., BY J. S. BACH

IN THE

WELSH LANGUAGE.

JESU, PRICELESS TREASURE

(JESU DYRCHAFEDIG)

MOTET

WELSH TRANSLATION

BY

REV. GWILYM WILLIAMS, B.A.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

BIDE WITH US

(AROS DI GYDA NI)

CANTATA

WELSH TRANSLATION

BY

REV. GWILYM WILLIAMS, B.A.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

JUST PUBLISHED.

GOD'S TIME IS THE BEST

(AMSER DUW—GOREU YW)

CANTATA

WELSH TRANSLATION

BY

REV. GWILYM WILLIAMS, B.A.

Price Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S Sunday School Anniversary Music ANTHEMS.

*Sun of my Soul	J. H. ADAMS
†Thine for ever	H. ELLIOT BUTTON
†I love to hear the story	MYLES B. FOSTER
†Lord, Thy children guide and keep	J. H. MAUNDER
†Hosanna we sing	JOHN E. WEST

Price Fourpence each.

† Tonic Sol-fa, 2d. each.

* Tonic Sol-fa, price 3d.

HYMNS AND TUNES.

No.	SET I.
1.	Come, children, on and forward GEORGE C. MARTIN
2.	For the freshness of the morning LADY EUAN-SMITH
3.	I love to hear the story FREDERIC CLAY
4.	Come, O come! in pious lays J. STAINER
5.	Thine for ever! God of Love W. C. HARVEY
6.	Jesu, Whom Thy children love H. ELLIOT BUTTON
7.	Sweetly o'er the meadows fair F. A. CHALLINOR
8.	Would you gain the best in life C. J. MAY
9.	On our way rejoicing WALTER B. GILBERT
10.	Now the daylight goes away J. ADCOCK

SET II.

1.	Again the morn of gladness J. STAINER
2.	The Angels' Song ALBERTO RANDEGGER
3.	Forward, Christian children ALFRED MOFFAT
4.	The Golden Shore J. STAINER
5.	Saviour, blessed Saviour JOHN E. WEST
6.	Enter with thanksgiving F. H. COWEN
7.	Man shall not live by bread J. VARLEY ROBERTS
8.	Stars, that on your wondrous way J. STAINER
9.	The day is past and over JOSEPH BARNEY
10.	God will take care of you FRANCES R. HAVERGAL

SET III.

1.	We march, we march, to victory JOSEPH BARNEY
2.	Hark! hark! the organ loudly peals GEORGE J. BENNETT
3.	O what can little hands do H. ELLIOT BUTTON
4.	While the sun is shining T. ADAMS
5.	I love to hear the story H. J. GAUNTLETT
6.	The roseate hues of early dawn A. SULLIVAN
7.	Lord, Thy children guide and keep A. S. COOPER
8.	In our work and in our play F. WESTLAKE
9.	The Beautiful Land J. STAINER
10.	Gentle Jesus, meek and mild J. STAINER

SET IV.

1.	The boys and girls of England J. STAINER
2.	The crown is waiting J. STAINER
3.	The City of Light E. J. TROUP
4.	He dwells among the lilies LADY EUAN-SMITH
5.	God is in Heaven! Can He hear H. ELLIOT BUTTON
6.	The Good Shepherd J. STAINER
7.	A little kingdom I possess R. S. NEWMAN
8.	Raise your standard, brothers E. J. TROUP
9.	Flowers ALBERTO RANDEGGER
10.	Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me HORATIO PARKER

Both Notations, price Sixpence per Set.

Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS EACH. CLOTH, TEN SHILLINGS EACH.

No.	No. 1.	No. 5.	No. 6.
1. Interlude	Th. Dubois	1. Jour de Noces	J. Stuart Archer
2. Chanson de Matin	Edward Elgar	2. Festival Prelude on "Ein feste Burg"	W. Faulkes
3. Fantasia on the old melody "Urbs Beata"	W. Faulkes	3. Legend	Harvey Grace
4. There is a green hill far away	Ch. Gounod	4. Allegretto Pastorale	H. M. Higgs
5. Marche Triomphale	Alexandre Guilmant	5. Benediction Nuptiale	Alfred Hollins
6. Ave Maria	A. Henselt	6. Sursus Corda	John N. Ireland
7. Grand Chœur No. 2	Alfred Hollins	7. Alla Marcia	John N. Ireland
8. Andantino in D flat	Edwin H. Lemare	8. Adagio Cantabile	Edwin H. Lemare
9. Chanson Triste	P. Tschaikowsky	9. Fanfare	J. Lemmens
10. Prelude to "Lohengrin," Act I.	R. Wagner	10. Intermezzo	B. Luard-Selby
11. Romanza	W. Wolstenholme	11. Easter Morn	John E. West
12. Allegretto in E flat	W. Wolstenholme	12. Finale in B flat	W. Wolstenholme
No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).	No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1. Chanson de Nuit	Edward Elgar	1. Nocturne	Thomas F. Dunhill
2. Alla Marcia	Myles B. Foster	2. Postludium	William Faulkes
3. Minuetto	Alexandre Guilmant	3. Andante Tranquillo	H. M. Higgs
4. Lied	H. Hofmann	4. In Springtime	Alfred Hollins
5. Barcarolle	H. Hofmann	5. Madrigal	Edwin H. Lemare
6. Spring Song	Alfred Hollins	6. Triumphal March	J. Lemmens
7. The Curfew	Edward J. Horsman	7. Allegro in B flat	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
8. Pastorale in E	Edwin H. Lemare	8. Choral Prelude on "Rockingham"	C. Hubert H. Parry
9. Ave Maria d'Arcadelt	Franz Liszt	9. Prælium Pastorale	J. Stainer
10. Cantique d'Amour	Theo. Wendt	10. Romance in F minor	Tschaikowsky
11. The Seraph's Strain	W. Wolstenholme	11. Romance in A flat	H. Sandford Turner
12. Le Carillon	W. Wolstenholme	12. Festal Commemoration	John E. West
1. Scherzo in A flat	Edward C. Bairstow	1. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26)	Beethoven
2. Melody	S. Coleridge-Taylor	2. Blest are they that mourn (Requiem)	Brahms
3. Serenade	H. Hofmann	3. Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35)	Chopin
4. Fridal March	Alfred Hollins	4. Funeral March	William Faulkes
5. Berceuse	Edwin H. Lemare	5. Funeral March ("Saul")	Handel
6. Melodie in E	S. Rachmaninoff	6. I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah")	Handel
7. Aubade	A. Strelitzki	7. Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte")	Mendelssohn
8. Nocturne in C sharp minor	P. Tschaikowsky	8. O rest in the Lord ("Elijah")	Mendelssohn
9. Procession to the Minster ("Lohengrin")	R. Wagner	9. Marche Solonelle	Schubert
10. Passacaglia	John E. West	10. Marche Funèbre	Tschaikowsky
11. Fantasia upon the Plain-song Melody "Ad cenam Agni"	Healey Willan	11. Finale from "Symphonie Pathétique"	Tschaikowsky
12. Allegretto in A flat	W. Wolstenholme	12. Lament	John E. West
1. Arietta	S. Coleridge-Taylor	1. Chorale Prelude, "In dulci júbilo"	J. S. Bach
2. Souvenir de Printemps	Joseph Holbrooke	2. Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio")	J. S. Bach
3. Andante in D	Alfred Hollins	3. Quem Vidistis, Pastores	W. T. Best
4. Pavane in A	Bernard Johnson	4. Venite in Bethlehem	W. T. Best
5. Harmonies du Soir	Sigfrid Karg-Elert	5. December—Christmas Morn	Frederic H. Cowen
6. An Eton Memorial March	C. E. Lloyd	6. Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols	William Faulkes
7. Allegro alla Marcia	A. L. Peace	7. For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah")	Handel
8. Visione	J. Rheinberger	8. Pastorale	Theodore Kullak
9. Chant sans Paroles	P. Tschaikowsky	9. Chorus of Shepherds	J. Lemmens
10. Prelude to Act III. ("Die Meistersinger")	R. Wagner	10. Christmas Pastorale	Gustav Merkel
11. Allegro Pomposo	John E. West	11. A Christmas Pastoral	B. Luard-Selby
12. Canzona	W. Wolstenholme	12. Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.")	John E. West

SHORT PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

These Short Preludes are intended for use chiefly as Introductory Voluntaries to Divine Service, more especially in those churches where the time allowed for such is, of necessity, somewhat limited.

No.	Book I.		No.	Book IV.
1.	Andante Grazioso	Thomas Adams	1.	"Elevation"—Andante e Legato	Thomas Adams
2.	Andante	W. G. Alcock	2.	Andante Religioso	Myles B. Foster
3.	Largamente	George J. Bennett	3.	"Simplicity"—Andante	Barry M. Gilholy
4.	Andante Religioso	Myles B. Foster	4.	Largamente	R. G. Hailing
5.	Andantino	Alfred Hollins	5.	"Dialogue"—Andante Grazioso	Charles H. Lloyd
6.	Adagio Cantabile	Alfred Hollins	6.	Andantino	Arthur W. Marchant
7.	Larghetto	Charles J. May	7.	Con Moto Moderato	William Sewell
8.	Andante con Moto	John E. West	8.	Andante Amabile	William Sewell
9.	Andantino quasi Allegretto	John E. West	9.	Andante	Clement M. Spurling
10.	Andante	W. Wolstenholme	10.	Andante Sostenuto	F. Cunningham Woods
Book II.			Book V.
1.	Andante con Moto	Thomas Adams	1.	"Invocation"—Andante Grazioso	Thomas Adams
2.	Con Moto	W. G. Alcock	2.	Andante con Moto	Percy E. Fletcher
3.	Moderato	H. A. Chambers	3.	Poco Adagio	Myles B. Foster
4.	Marziale, poco Lento	Myles B. Foster	4.	Andante Espressivo	Ignace Gibsons
5.	Moderato	Alfred Hollins	5.	Adagio	Alfred Hollins
6.	Andantino	Alfred Hollins	6.	Poco Lento	Charles H. Lloyd
7.	Adagio	Charles J. May	7.	Andante Dolente	Arthur W. Marchant
8.	"Hymnus"—Andante e Sostenuto	John E. West	8.	Andantino con Tenerezza	William Sewell
9.	Andante Serioso	John E. West	9.	Andante con Moto	Clement M. Spurling
10.	Adagio	W. Wolstenholme	10.	Adagio Molto	F. Cunningham Woods
Book III.			Book VI.
1.	Moderato e Legato	Thomas Adams	1.	Dolente	Edmund T. Chipp
2.	Moderato	W. G. Alcock	2.	Andante Sostenuto	Myles B. Foster
3.	Andante con Moto	George J. Bennett	3.	Andantino	R. G. Hailing
4.	Andante	H. A. Chambers	4.	Con Moto	Alfred Hollins
5.	Grazioso molto Espressivo	Myles B. Foster	5.	"Communion"—Cantabile	J. Lemmens
6.	"Song without Words"—Con Moto	Alfred Hollins	6.	Andante Religioso	Arthur W. Marchant
7.	Andante	Alfred Hollins	7.	Lento	Charles J. May
8.	Andante Dolente	John E. West	8.	Larghetto	Albert Robins
9.	Andante Pastorale	John E. West	9.	Adagio e Mesto	William Sewell
10.	Adagio	W. Wolstenholme	10.	Andante Affetuoso	William Sewell

LONDON: NOVELL AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s. d.
76.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO Alec Rowley	1 6
78.	SCHERZO G. J. Bennett	2 3
79.	THREE PRELUDES G. J. Bennett	2 3
80.	DÉSÉSPOIR Ch. Quef	1 6
81.	CAPRICE IN D FLAT J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
82.	THREE PSALM-PRELUDES, No. 1 H. Howells	1 6
83.	" " " " No. 2 H. Howells	1 6
84.	" " " " No. 3 H. Howells	1 6
85.	THEMA OSTINATA... .. C. C. Palmer	1 6
86.	COVENANTERS' MARCH R. G. Hailing	1 6
87.	CHORAL MELODY... .. C. F. Waters	1 6
88.	CONCERT OVERTURE IN F MINOR ... Alfred Hollins	3 0
89.	HOMAGE TO HANDEL S. Karg-Elert	3 6
90.	THREE SHORT AND EASY POSTLUDES (2nd Set) F. W. Wadely	2 3
91.	INTERMEZZI (No. 1, Pastorale) C. V. Stanford	2 0
92.	" (No. 2, Marcia Eroica)... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
93.	" (No. 3, Hush Song) C. V. Stanford	2 0
94.	" (No. 4, Intermezzo Founded upon an Irish air C. V. Stanford	2 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

AN ORGAN METHOD

TWENTY-FOUR ORGAN LESSONS,

BY DR. HERBERT BOTTING.

THIS Book contains all that is essential for a student to learn Organ Technique in the briefest form possible, consistent with thoroughness. Each "Lesson" contains sufficient work for a week's practice, for a pupil of average industry and ability. This arrangement will facilitate the teacher's work.

PRICE

4/-

NET.

The majority of the 24 Lessons are divided into three sections:—(a) Manual alone, (b) Pedals alone, (c) Manuals and Pedals together; every pedal exercise being immediately followed by a study for hands and feet together, with further practice in the same kind of pedalling. This will give variety and interest to the student's work.

The "Definitions," the description of an ordinary Three-Manual Organ, "Abbreviations Explained," and "Hints upon Registering," will be useful for instruction and reference, and it is hoped that the "Twelve Common-Sense Suggestions to Young Deputy-Organists" will prove of assistance.

Of all Music Dealers, or, if offer No. 17 is mentioned, post FREE from:

PAXTON'S LONDON: 22, HIGH STREET,
NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.1.

Send for complete Organ Catalogue (50r), post free.

Ask to see a copy through our "On Approval" Department.

JUST PUBLISHED

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

CATHEDRAL ORGANISTS

PAST AND PRESENT.

A RECORD OF THE SUCCESSION OF ORGANISTS

OF THE

Cathedrals, Chapels Royal, and Principal Collegiate Churches of the United Kingdom, from about the period of the Reformation until the present day,

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES, EXTRACTS FROM THE CHAPTER BOOKS, ANECDOTES, ETC.

By JOHN E. WEST.

Price ... Nine Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HOMAGE TO HANDEL

STUDIES IN VARIATION FORM

FOR ORGAN

ON A GROUND BASS OF

HANDEL

BY

SIGFRID KARG-ELERT

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORGAN MUSIC

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

No.		s. d.
1.	DITHYRAMB	2 6
2.	COMMUNION	1 0
3.	INTERLUDE	1 6
4.	PÆAN	3 6
5.	SHORT POSTLUDE	1 0
6.	REQUIEM ÆTERNAM	2 3
7.	ANDANTE TRANQUILLO... ..	1 6
8.	CAPRICCIO	2 6
9.	TWO SKETCHES	1 6
10.	CONCERTO IN D MAJOR	3 0
11.	THREE CATHEDRAL PRELUDES	3 0
12.	SONATA No. 2, IN F SHARP MINOR	3 0
13.	FANTASIA "CHRISTMASTIDE"	3 6
14.	RHAPSODY	3 0

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

Edited by ERNEST NEWMAN.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY
HARVEY GRACE

Cloth, gilt, xviii. + 319 pages.

WITH OVER TWO HUNDRED MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price Twelve Shillings net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

THE TIMES LITERARY SUPPLEMENT

The first impression with regard to this book is a sense of surprise that it should have waited for Mr. Grace to write it: the second, one of satisfaction that the task came into his hands. . . . The book is for organists who wish to know Bach better; it is therefore rightly technical and frankly critical. Because of the latter quality it is also worth reading by those who are not organists. . . . The whole leaves the effect of a competent mind working direct on the material and not through others.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

It is the most comprehensive and open-minded treatment of the subject in existence. . . . There is hardly a man in this country better equipped than Mr. Grace for writing on this one branch of Bach's many activities; he speaks not only with the authority of a theoretical analyst, but with the even greater authority of a man who has played the works on many divers organs.

DAILY NEWS
A STIMULATING BOOK

All who have read . . . cannot fail to have been impressed by the wide knowledge shown by Mr. Grace, and the thoroughly human way in which he expresses his learning.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE

It is the great merit of Mr. Grace's book that he never fails to discriminate and distinguish—even if one need not necessarily accept all of his judgments as final. Add that historically and technically it is admirably accurate and complete, and that it is written further in a delightfully light-handed, even humorous, style, and nothing more need be said to commend the volume to the musical reader.

THE NATION AND THE ATHENÆUM

In principle this is a technical book of instruction; it is written to remind organists of what "old Bach" wrote for their instrument; and it gives a great deal of practical help towards execution and interpretation. But it is not only useful for the man who makes a noise up in the organ-loft and doesn't have to be perpetually kneeling down or standing up all through the service; it will be interesting to the listener in his pew down below. It is, indeed, a valuable listener's guide to all sorts of Bach; and will end by leaving the reader, whether an organist or not, in a position to enjoy Bach more than he did before.

NEW WITNESS

Apart from its contribution to scholarship and its creative accuracy of fact, this book is unusually vivid, illuminating, and practical. . . . There seems to me to be that fusion of academic clarity of thought with imaginative understanding which is as often desired in a book like this as it is missing. . . . We come to the end of the book knowing Bach the organist as he must veritably have been, and not as we would like to think him. . . . The book is admirably done, and no less pleasant than it is able.

YORKSHIRE POST

Mr. Grace writes with the discrimination of a judicious critic and the practical knowledge of an expert organist, and the result is a handbook from which all organists, even the cleverest, may gain some useful suggestions. To the inexperienced player it will be an indispensable vade mecum.

YORKSHIRE OBSERVER

The first book in English to deal adequately and comprehensively with the organ works. . . . The fearlessness and candour of his remarks . . . and the evident scholarship of the author, should commend his work to all serious students of Bach, organists as well as non-organists.

MUSICAL OPINION

Mr. Harvey Grace's book is not merely an excellent text-book for organists, but also an important contribution to Bach literature. . . . It contains a great deal of information—historical, critical, and practical—that is new and valuable. This information, moreover, is clearly and attractively imparted. . . . The book has a very important practical side. The question of registration is fully and ably dealt with. Both the particular suggestions and the generalisations are excellent.

BIRMINGHAM POST

The chorale preludes . . . engage Mr. Grace's attention, and are surveyed with fine critical insight. But he does an even greater service in taking the fugues in his stride and by insisting on the elemental poetic quality in the greater among these. . . . The notion of the fugue as half a work of art and half a student's exercise is by now well exploded; and Mr. Grace's book will play a part in its final dissipation. To the budding organist it will come as a saviour from many misconceptions unwittingly fostered by the pedantry that still lingers among those entrusted with his training.

LIVERPOOL DAILY POST AND MERCURY

Will be welcomed by musicians. Mr. Grace preserves a sense of proportion in dealing with a subject over which writers are apt to lose their heads.

THE REFEREE

May be read with profit not only by every organist but by every admirer of the great composer.

THE SCOTSMAN

Written by an organist, addressed primarily to organists, and necessarily entering at some length into the technique of performance, the book is nevertheless one for all music-lovers, for it is an admirable guide to an understanding of the processes of Bach's artistic development.

SUNDAY TIMES

The student of the organ works could have no better guide than Mr. Grace.

CHURCH TIMES

Mr. Grace's excellent book. . . . For other than organists and would-be organists the present work offers much interest and instruction.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER

Altogether a delightful and well-written volume.

THE CHRISTIAN WORLD

This masterly survey of Bach's organ works. . . . The book will be a great delight to a sympathetic organist, and even those who are not organists but who take pleasure in Bach will find it delightful. . . . Those organists who read this book can hardly fail to be stirred up to give various audiences a much fuller range of Bach music. . . . Enlightened critical comment. . . . Illuminating analyses.

MUSICAL NEWS AND HERALD

Here is a book on Bach—"Old Bach," . . . which will surely help on this ever-young composer. . . . three hundred pages of delightful criticism, guidance, and appreciation. He brings humour to bear, and imagination, in addition to the well-considered results of life-long study and experience. . . . The whole book is delightful.

THE MUSIC TEACHER

A new book on Bach is something rare and greatly to be desired. Here comes Mr. Harvey Grace, with a study of The Organ Works of Bach that will delight the heart of every lover of this mighty music. . . . It contains the fruit of a lot of original investigation and fresh thinking. . . . We like particularly his treatment of the wonderful chorale preludes.

THE CHOIR

Mr. Grace has done his work right worthily. He recognises the faults in Bach's works, and does not fail to point them out, but in his praises he never lapses into extravagance. His eulogies are discriminating, and we feel we are safe in accepting his dicta. Finally, he possesses an attractive literary style, and the freshness of his humour makes well-nigh every page attractive.

ORGANISTS' QUARTERLY JOURNAL

Every organ student in the land should at once become acquainted with Mr. Harvey Grace's book The Organ Works of Bach. Rarely have we been more thoroughly interested in, or derived greater pleasure through the perusal of any book relating to matters musical. It is written in a most delightful vein. . . . To the organ student it is absolutely invaluable.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

National Institute Edition of the Works of BRITISH BLIND COMPOSERS.

This Edition, published under the auspices of the National Institute for the Blind, is exclusively devoted to the works of high artistic value by Blind Composers.

2s. each, except where stated.

PIANOFORTE.

1. Five Lyric Pieces. 3s. ... Alfred J. Thompson
2. Noël ... William Wolstenholme
3. Ten Poetic Fancies (Books I. & II.).
3s. each Book ... Horace F. Watling
4. Venetian Boat Song ... Sinclair Logan
5. Rondo Scherzando, in B flat ... Frederick W. Priest
6. Sketch (suggested by the flight of an Aero-plane). 2s. 6d. ... Hubert G. Oke
7. Rondo Alla Tarantella, in A flat ... Alfred Wrigley
8. Three Sketches for a Young Player :
(1) "Little Soldiers"; (2) "Fairy Tale";
(3) "Bedtime." 2s. 6d. ... Hubert G. Oke
9. "Moods of a Mind":
Vol. I.: "Repose"; "Merriment."
Vol. II.: "Sadness"; "Gladness."
2s. each Vol. ... H. V. Spanner
10. Rustic Dance, in D minor ... Horace F. Watling
11. Caprice, in C ... Sinclair Logan
12. Spanish Serenade ... William Wolstenholme
13. Zingaresca ... Llewellyn Williams

14. Two Sketches for Pianoforte :
"Autumn"; "Winter" ... Chas. G. Broan

ORGAN.

15. Minuet Antique, in D flat ... Horace F. Watling
16. Toccata in D minor. 2s. 6d. ... T. G. Osborn
17. Bohemesque in G. 2s. 6d. ... William Wolstenholme
(Specially composed for the opening of the Grand Organ, Johannesburg.)
18. Fantasia in E. 2s. 6d. ... T. G. Osborn
19. Rondino in D flat ... William Wolstenholme
20. Marche Héroïque, in E flat. 2s. 6d. ... Horace F. Watling
(Specially composed for the opening of the Grand Organ, Johannesburg.)

VOCAL.

21. Song: "Echo" ("Come to me in the Silence of the Night") ... William Wolstenholme
22. Song: "Early one Morning" (Old English
Words) ... Sinclair Logan
23. Serenade: "Sleep, dear Heart" ... Sinclair Logan
24. Two Songs:
(1) "Dolcino to Margaret" (Kingsley)
(2) "As the barque floateth on" (Bulwer Lytton)
Hubert G. Oke

The Edition may be inspected, gratis, at the National Institute's Showroom, 224, Great Portland Street, W.1.

RYALLS & JONES, LTD., MUSIC PUBLISHERS.

224, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, LONDON, W.1 AND 109, GRANGE ROAD, BIRKENHEAD.

SONGS OF LOVE

(LIEBESLIEDER)

WALTZES

FOR PIANOFORTE DUET

(with Voices ad lib.)

THE ENGLISH WORDS BY

W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY

JOHANNES BRAHMS.

(Op. 52.)

Vocal Part, 2s.

Edition for Pianoforte Duet, 8s.

Accompaniments arranged for Orchestra by
Gerrard Williams.
Parts (MS.) on hire.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

GUIDE TO A.R.C.M. DIPLOMA. PIANO TEACHERS' EXAMINATION.

By A. H. FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M., &c.

The Crescent, Roundhay, Leeds, Yorks.

Ice Press, &c.

"A handy brochure: gives a clear idea of what is expected."—Musical Record.

"Candidates want advice of this kind."—Musical Herald.

"Most original and encouragingly helpful."—J. H. Thomas, Esq.,
L.R.A.M., and many others. Price 1s. 8d. post free.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SIX TRADITIONAL MELODIES

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE DUET

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

No.

1. FELTON'S GAVOTTE.
2. ENGLISH FOLK-SONG—"How delightful to see."
3. IRISH MELODY—"Silent, O Moyle."
4. SCOTCH MELODY—"Wi' a hundred pipers."
5. WELSH MELODY—"Loudly proclaim"
("Ymadawiad y Brenin").
6. ENGLISH FOLK-SONG—"The Keys of Canterbury."

N.B.—These duets are so arranged that in Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 6 the Primo part, and in Nos. 4 and 5 the Secondo part, may easily be played by a boy or girl not very advanced in technique.

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

NEW PUBLICATIONS IN THE YORK SERIES.

- | | | |
|--|--------------------|-----|
| 809. COMMUNION SERVICE, B minor ... | Arthur Henry Brown | 6d. |
| 813. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, B minor | Arthur Henry Brown | 4d. |
| 815. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, B flat | C. W. Parnell | 6d. |
| 816. LIGHT (S.A.T.B.) ... | T. Tertius Noble | 4d. |
| 817. TO MY LOVE (T.T.B.B.) ... | T. Tertius Noble | 4d. |
| 818. WHEN I AM DEAD (S.A.T.B.) ... | T. Tertius Noble | 4d. |
| 819. SAVE US, LORD, OR WE PERISH (S.A.T.B.) | T. Tertius Noble | 4d. |
| 820. Ditto (T.T.B.B.) | T. Tertius Noble | 4d. |
| 821. BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD (S.A.T.B.) | T. Tertius Noble | 5d. |

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

ENGLISH LYRICS

SET TO MUSIC BY

C. HUBERT H. PARRY.

EACH SET, PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

FIRST SET.

- | | | | | | |
|------------------------------------|--------------------------|-----------------------------------|-----|-----|--------------------|
| 1. *My true love hath my heart ... | Sir Philip Sidney | 3. Where shall the lover rest ... | ... | ... | Scott |
| 2. Good-night ... | Shelley | 4. Willow, Willow, Willow ... | ... | ... | Shakespeare |

SECOND SET.

- | | | | | | |
|--------------------------------------|--------------------|-------------------------------------|-----|-----|--------------------|
| 1. O Mistress Mine ... | Shakespeare | 3. No longer mourn for me ... | ... | ... | Shakespeare |
| 2. Take, O take those lips away ... | Shakespeare | 4. Blow, blow, thou winter wind ... | ... | ... | Shakespeare |
| 5. When icicles hang by the wall ... | Shakespeare | | | | |

THIRD SET.

- | | | | | | |
|--|-----------------|-------------------------------|-----|-----|-----------------------|
| 1. *To Lucasta, on going to the wars ... | Lovelace | 4. *Why so pale and wan ... | ... | ... | Suckling |
| 2. If thou would'st ease thine heart ... | Beddoes | 5. Through the ivory gate ... | ... | ... | Julian Sturgis |
| 3. *To Althea, from prison ... | Lovelace | 6. Of all the torments ... | ... | ... | William Walsh |

FOURTH SET.

- | | | | | | |
|--|-------------------------------|--|-----|-----|--------------|
| 1. *Thine eyes still shined for me ... | Emerson | 4. Weep you no more ... | ... | ... | Anon. |
| 2. *When lovers meet again ... | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell | 5. There be none of beauty's daughters ... | ... | ... | Byron |
| 3. *When we two parted ... | Byron | 6. Bright star ... | ... | ... | Keats |

FIFTH SET.

- | | | | | | |
|-------------------------------|-----------------------|-----------------------------------|-----|-----|--------------------------------|
| 1. *A stray nymph of Dian ... | Julian Sturgis | 4. Lay a garland on my hearse ... | ... | ... | Beaumont & Fletcher |
| 2. *Proud Maisie ... | Scott | 5. Love and laughter ... | ... | ... | Arthur Butler |
| 3. *Crabbed age and youth ... | Shakespeare | 6. A girl to her glass ... | ... | ... | Julian Sturgis |
| 7. A Lullaby ... | E. O. Jones | | | | |

SIXTH SET.

- | | | | | | |
|---------------------------------------|--------------------|--------------------------------------|-----|-----|-------------------------|
| 1. *When comes my Gwen ... | E. O. Jones | 4. *A lover's garland ... | ... | ... | Alfred P. Graves |
| 2. *And yet I love her till I die ... | Anon. | 5. At the hour the long day ends ... | ... | ... | Alfred P. Graves |
| 3. *Love is a bable ... | Anon. | 6. Under the greenwood tree ... | ... | ... | Shakespeare |

SEVENTH SET.

- | | | | | | |
|--|-----------------------|--|-----|-----|-----------------------|
| 1. On a time the amorous Silvy ... | Anon. | 4. O never say that I was false of heart ... | ... | ... | Shakespeare |
| 2. Follow a shadow ... | Ben Jonson | 5. Julia ... | ... | ... | Herrick |
| 3. Ye little birds that sit and sing ... | Thomas Heywood | 6. *Sleep ... | ... | ... | Julian Sturgis |

EIGHTH SET.

- | | | | | | |
|----------------------------|-------------------------------|-------------------------|-----|-----|------------------------|
| 1. Whence ... | Julian Sturgis | 4. Dirge in woods ... | ... | ... | George Meredith |
| 2. Nightfall in winter ... | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell | 5. Looking backward ... | ... | ... | Julian Sturgis |
| 3. Marian ... | George Meredith | 6. Grapes ... | ... | ... | Julian Sturgis |

NINTH SET.

- | | | | | | |
|------------------------------------|--------------------------|------------------------|-----|-----|--------------------------|
| 1. Three aspects ... | Mary E. Coleridge | 4. Whether I live ... | ... | ... | Mary E. Coleridge |
| 2. A fairy town (St. Andrew's) ... | Mary E. Coleridge | 5. Armida's garden ... | ... | ... | Mary E. Coleridge |
| 3. The witches' wood ... | Mary E. Coleridge | 6. The maiden ... | ... | ... | Mary E. Coleridge |
| 7. There ... | Mary E. Coleridge | | | | |

TENTH SET.

- | | | | | | |
|--|---------------------------|-----------------------------------|-----|-----|-------------------------------|
| 1. My heart is like a singing bird ... | Christina Rossetti | 4. The child and the twilight ... | ... | ... | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell |
| 2. Gone were but the winter cold ... | Alfred Cunningham | 5. From a city window ... | ... | ... | Langdon Elwyn Mitchell |
| 3. A moment of farewell ... | Julian Sturgis | 6. One silent night of late ... | ... | ... | Herrick |

ELEVENTH SET.

- | | | | | | |
|------------------------------------|-------------------------------|--|-----|-----|-------------------------------|
| 1. One golden thread ... | Julia Chatterton | 5. The faithful lover ... | ... | ... | Alfred Percival Graves |
| 2. The spirit of the Spring ... | Alfred Percival Graves | 6. If I might ride on puissant wing ... | ... | ... | Julian Sturgis |
| 3. What part of dread eternity ... | Author unknown | 7. Why art thou slow ... | ... | ... | Massinger |
| 4. The blackbird ... | Alfred Percival Graves | 8. She is my love beyond all thought ... | ... | ... | Alfred P. Graves |

TWELFTH SET.

- | | | | | | |
|----------------------------------|-------------------------|---------------------------------|-----|-----|------------------|
| 1. When the dew is falling ... | Julia Chatterton | 4. When the sun's great orb ... | ... | ... | H. Warner |
| 2. To Blossoms ... | Herrick | 5. Dream pedlary ... | ... | ... | Beddoes |
| 3. Rosaline ... | Lodge | 6. O World, O Life, O Time ... | ... | ... | Shelley |
| 7. The sound of hidden music ... | Julia Chatterton | | | | |

* Published separately, price 1s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

SOLOS FROM THE SACRED CANTATAS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

In eight Books—each Book, Two Shillings.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

- Air WITHIN MY HEART OF HEARTS ("A Stronghold Sure").
- Air OUR JESUS HATH FOR AYE ("God goeth up").
- Air MY HEART EVER TRUSTING ("God so loved the world").
- Air O GRANT US, MIGHTY LORD ("Jesus, now will we praise Thee").
- Air SIGHING, WEEPING ("My Spirit was in heaviness").

ALTO.

- Air THOU, WHOSE PRAISES NEVER END ("Bide with us").
- Recit. { THE FATHER HATH APPOINTED HIM ("God goeth up").
- Air { MY SPIRIT HIM DESCRIBES ("God goeth up").
- Air INTO THY HANDS ("God's time is best").
- Air REJOICE, YE SOULS, ELECT AND HOLY ("O Light Everlasting").

TENOR.

- Air LORD, TO US THYSELF BE SHOWING ("Bide with us").
- Recit. { WHY HAST THOU THEN, O GOD ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
- Air { FAST MY BITTER TEARS ARE FLOWING ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
- Air REJOICE, O MY SPIRIT ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
- Recit. { THE MIGHTY GUARDIAN ("Thou Guide of Israel").
- Air { HIS FACE MY SHEPHERD LONG IS HIDING ("Thou Guide of Israel").
- Air AND WHY ART THOU, MY SOUL, SO FEARFUL ("When will God recall").

BASS.

- Recit. { HE COMES, THE LORD OF LORDS ("God goeth up").
- Air { 'TIS HE, WHO ALL ALONE ("God goeth up").
- Recit. { IT IS NOT MINE ("God so loved the world").
- Air { ON MY BEHALF " "
- Recit. { YEA, THIS THY WORD ("Thou Guide of Israel").
- Air { WHOM JESUS DEIGNS " "
- Air YET SILENCE ("When will God recall").

SECOND SET.

SOPRANO.

- Air OPEN WIDE, MY HEART ("Come, Redeemer").
- Air FATHER, WHAT I PROFFER ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
- Air COME, VISIT, YE GLOWING ("How brightly shines").
- Air I HAVE WAITED FOR THE LORD ("If thou but sufferest").

ALTO.

- Air GOD'S ENSAMPLE THUS TO FOLLOW ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
- Air JESUS SLEEPS ("Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth").
- Recit. { INCLINE THINE EAR ("Lord, rebuke me not").
- Air { THE LORD HATH HEARD ("Lord, rebuke me not").
- Air ALL EARTHLY POWERS FROM GOD INHERIT ("Praise thou the Lord").

TENOR.

- Recit. { THE SAVIOUR NOW APPEARETH ("Come, Redeemer").
- Aria { COME, JESU, COME ("Come, Redeemer").
- Air WHAT VOICE IS WITH THE TEMPEST ("From depths of woe").
- Air TUNEFUL HARPS AND VOICES ("How brightly shines").
- Air THOU ART MY GOD ("Lord, rebuke me not").

BASS.

- Air THE PASCHAL VICTIM HERE WE SEE ("Christ lay in death's dark prison").
- Air DO THINE ALMS ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
- Air WITH JESUS WILL I GO ("Wailing, crying").
- Recit. { AH, WHEN ON THAT GREAT DAY ("Watch ye, pray ye").
- Air { BLESSED RESURRECTION DAY ("Watch ye, pray ye").

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the Studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

1.	FIVE-FINGER STUDIES	Part I	31.	DOUBLE NOTES	Part I
2.*	"	"	"	32.	"	"	" 2
3.	SCALES	Part I	33.	"	"	" 3
4.	"	"	34.	"	"	" 4
5.	BROKEN CHORDS	Part I	35.	OCTAVES	Part I
6.	"	"	"	36.*	"	" 2
7.	"	"	"	37.	CHORDS	Part I
8.	"	"	"	38.	"	" 2
9.	"	"	"	39.*	STACCATO
10.	LEFT HAND	Part I	40.	REPETITION	Part I
11.	"	"	"	41.*	REPETITION AND TREMOLO	" 2
12.	"	"	"	42.	"	"	" 3
13.	"	"	"	43.*	PART-PLAYING	Part I
14.*	ARPEGGIO	Part I	44.	"	"	" 2
15.	"	"	45.*	ORNAMENTS	Part I
16.	"	"	46.	"	" 2
17.	VELOCITY	Part I	47.	ACCOMPANIED MELODY	Part I
18.	"	"	48.	"	"	" 2
19.	"	"	49.	EXTENSIONS AND SKIPS	Part I
20.	"	"	50.*	"	"	" 2
21.	"	"	51.	RHYTHM	Part I
22.	"	"	52.*	"	" 2
23.	"	"	53.	EXERCISES FOR THE WEAKER FINGERS.
24.	FIGURES IN SEQUENCE	Part I		By J. A. O'NEILL.
25.*	"	"	"	54.	WRIST STUDIES (Handgelenksübungen).	By
26.	BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES	Part I		ARNOLD KRUG.
27.	BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES	"	55.	EXERCISES FOR FACILITATING INDEPENDENCE OF THE FINGERS (Übungen für die Selbständigkeit der Finger).	By
28.	SHAKES	Part I		ARNOLD KRUG.
29.	"	"	56.	PRELIMINARY STUDIES IN PLAYING POLYPHONIC MUSIC (Vorübungen für das polyphone Spiel).	By
30.	"	"		ARNOLD KRUG.

* These Books contain Studies composed by Mr. Franklin Taylor specially for this Series.

FIFTY-SIX BOOKS, PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

FROM THE ABOVE:

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE THREE SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOUR

OLD

ENGLISH DANCES ENGLISH DANCES

SET 1.

SET 2.

COMPOSED BY

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

	s.	d.
Full Score	21	0
String Parts	9	0
Wind Parts	17	8
Ditto (small orchestra)	13	2
Military Band	19	0
Pianoforte Solo	5	0
Violin and Pianoforte	6	0
Quintet (Pianoforte and Strings)	5	0
Extra Strings, 8d. each.

	s.	d.
Full Score	25	0
String Parts	11	3
Wind Parts	30	3
Pianoforte Solo	5	0
From the above: "MINUET D'AMOUR."
Pianoforte Solo, 2s. 3d. ; Violin and Pianoforte, 3s. ;
Quintet for Pianoforte and Strings, 5s.
Extra Strings, 8d. each.
Full Score	7	0
String Parts	2	0
Wind Parts	3	8
Military Band	7	6

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHÉMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

PRICE, COMPLETE, FIVE SHILLINGS ; SEPARATELY, 2s. 3d. EACH.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Violin and Pianoforte complete	6	0	Full Score (Full Orchestra)	15	0
Violin and Pianoforte separately, each	2	3	Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra	9	0	Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra	10	5	Strings, each Number	3	0
Ditto, for Full Orchestra	17	5	Separate String Parts, 8d. each.
			Military Band Arrangement	19	0

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S LATEST CONCERT AND TEACHING SONGS.

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

"When all the World is young"

MONTAGUE F. PHILLIPS.

"O Ship of my Delight"

"Dolorosa" "Butterfly Wings"

"Nightfall at Sea"

ROGER QUILTER.

"There be none of Beauty's Daughters"

"Morning Song" "Fairy Lullaby"

GERRARD WILLIAMS.

"Lombardy Poplars" "Rondel"

MALCOLM SARGENT.

"My Heart has a quiet sadness"

GRAHAM PEEL.

"The Setting Sun" "A Conundrum"

R. CONINGSBY CLARKE.

"Spinning" "Silver Waters"

HERMANN LÖHR.

"Whatever is, is Best"

"Beauty" "Roadways"

"The Cobbler"

GUY D'IIARDELLOT.

"Just a Dream"

"You came to Me"

"Sometimes in my Dreams"

TERESA DEL RIEGO.

"Deeper my Love"

"All's Well"

MOLLY CAREW.

"Love's a Merchant"

"Tiptoe"

"The Piper of Love"

GUSTAV HOLST.

"Lovely kind and kindly loving"

GERALD CARNE.

"Here in the Quiet Hills"

ERIC COATES.

"I Pitch my Lonely Caravan"

"Blue Sky and White Road"

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

May be had of all Music Sellers.

NEW YORK AND SYDNEY.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CLAUDE DEBUSSY D'UN CAHIER D'ESQUISSES PIANO SOLO.

A very delightful piano piece dating from a period in Debussy's career at which his individuality began to assert itself, has been happily rescued from oblivion. "D'un Cahier d'Esquisses" has remained all but unknown even to many of the composer's greatest admirers, a fate due simply to adverse circumstances and by no means deserved by the work. Although the title implies a mere sketch, the piece is a finished and beautifully-wrought work, highly representative of the composer's personality.

Also for PIANO DUET and for VIOLIN AND PIANO.

Price each, 2s. net.

NOCTURNE PIANO SOLO.

This work is not unlike the favourite "Clair de Lune" in the "Suite Bergamasque" in character, but more amply developed and of greater emotional power. It is not excessively difficult to play, and will therefore appeal even to pianists of moderate abilities.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W. 1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 963.—Vol. 64
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

MAY 1 1923

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, K.C.V.O., Mus.Doc., F.R.C.M.

A SPECIAL COURSE FOR THE TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS will commence next term. Full particulars can be obtained on application.

MIDSUMMER TERM will begin on Thursday, May 3.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

LECTURES on the "History of Music" will be given by Dr. F. G. SHINN, on Wednesdays, May 9, 16, 23, and 30, at 4.30.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, Saturday, May 26, at 8.

CHAMBER CONCERT, Monday, May 19, at 3.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: Sir HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus.Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

The College offers a complete Course of Musical Instruction to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of 70 Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

There is a JUNIOR DEPARTMENT for pupils under sixteen.

Examinations for the Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) in all subjects held twice a year in April and September.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir S. Ernest Palmer, Bart., F.R.C.M., for the encouragement of All British Composers and Executive Artists).

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 8, p. 127; Augener, p. 254; Peters, Vol. 2, No. 4.)

Pastorale in E, César Franck. (Novello.)

Theme and Variations in D, from Serenade, Op. 8, Beethoven. Best's Arrangements, No. 75, p. 985. (Novello.) This Arrangement only.

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the July, 1923, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for January, 1923.

All Candidates for the next Examinations must send in their Names for FELLOWSHIP by JUNE 7th, for ASSOCIATESHIP by JUNE 14th. In the case of NEW MEMBERS proposal forms duly filled up must be sent in before JUNE 2nd. No names will be entered after the above dates.

Regulations may be had on application.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

N.B.—The College will be closed at 4 o'clock on May 17th (except for correspondence), and will be reopened at 10 on May 28th.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

MR. HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., will give an ORGAN RECITAL (1,757th) on May 1, and every Tuesday, at 1 p.m., at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

(CORPORATION OF LONDON.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL ... SIR LONDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.G.S.M.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical subjects and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, and Opera.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

SUMMER TERM began April 23rd.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools Examinations (open to general public), free.

Telephone: Cent. 4459. H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

ROYAL

MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.

Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1922-1923.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS

(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council).

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Thirty-first Year.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.

Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE Western Correspondence College.

Principal: DR. GERTRUDE BEST,

Mus.Doc., Dunelm., L.R.A.M.

Expert Preparation for Matric., Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc., and all recognised Examinations in Music.SPECIAL COURSE FOR L.R.A.M. PAPER WORK.Dr. BEST gives personal lessons (Pianoforte) in London and Gloucester.

Address, THE STUDIO, GLOUCESTER.

JOHN B. WOOD, MUS. BAC.
C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M.THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.*EXPERT TUTORS.*THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY, COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
INTERPRETATION,
FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
FOR MUSICIANS.Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institutions have been enrolled as pupils.Write,
6, BOLTON ROAD, FARNWORTH, BOLTON.APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.

Correspondence Courses in this subject will be given as under:—

- (a) First General Course.
- (b) Advanced Course.
- (c) Course with an additional section for Teachers.
- (d) Advanced Course for Teachers.

Further particulars from the Secretary,
(DEPT. A) THE WARDROP CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE,
21, BEDFORD ROW, LONDON, W.C.1.THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.PIANO PLAYING KEPT UP without keyboard practising.Not the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising.Even when circumstances make keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard.This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency should take my Postal Course.SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 16,000 successful students add their testimony."From Brain to Keyboard"
Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System.
When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.1.LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS.

President for 1923, SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

Particulars of Membership, and of Appointments-register
for Vacant Posts (no fees) from—

Hon. Secretary:

DE CRESPIGNY HOUSE, DENMARK HILL, S.E.5.

CALISTHENICSFOR THE MUSCLES USED IN SINGING

As taught and perfected for 20 years.

Astonishing increase of POWER, QUALITY, RANGE
and EASE of SINGING assured by five minutes' practice twice (better three times) daily.No more sore or relaxed throat, or strained voice.

BY CORRESPONDENCE, £3 3s.

THOS. CHURCH SAXBY, L.Mus.T.C.L.,
UNDERCLIFFE, LEWESL.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.Mus. T.C.L.
PAPER WORK.THOROUGH PREPARATION BY CORRESPONDENCE AT MODERATE INSTALLMENT FEES. RECENT SUCCESSES.

Write to-day for Prospectus.

MIDLAND CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE,
59, SPRING GARDENS, BUXTON.MR. HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., will give an ORGAN RECITAL at St. Stephen's Walbrook, on Thursday, May 10, at 1.10 p.m.

ST. NICHOLAS COLE ABBEY,
QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.

HANDEL'S ORATORIO

WILL BE PERFORMED ON

"THE MESSIAH"

WEDNESDAY, MAY 23, AT 6.15 P.M.

SOLOISTS:

Miss LUCY GOODWIN.

Miss HOPE JACKSON.

Mr. BEN MORGAN.

Mr. KENNETH ELLIS.

Organist - - Mr. HERBERT HODGE.

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE, Mile End Road, E.

SATURDAY, MAY 12, at 7.30 p.m.

GOUNOD'S "FAUST"

WILL BE PERFORMED BY

THE PEOPLE'S PALACE CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES

(300 performers).

Conductor - - Mr. FRANK IDLE, F.R.A.M.

Miss MARYAN ELMAR.

Miss HAYWARD WEBB.

Mr. RICHARD RIPLEY.

Mr. DAVID EVANS.

Mr. JOSEPH FARRINGTON.

Organist - - Mr. HERBERT HODGE.

WEIGHT TOUCH IS THE METHOD YOU WILL EVENTUALLY ADOPT.

AS a Pianist you have often wondered how the great artists produce such beautiful tone—it is simply WEIGHT TOUCH, in fact this modern technique is absolutely necessary to meet the exceptional demands of modern pianoforte playing. The CHARLES A. GILLET method of Weight Touch has been adopted and endorsed by a large number of pianists of high musical attainments—their testimony confirms its many advantages over the older methods.

Details of Mr. CHARLES A. GILLET'S Special Courses, both PERSONAL AND CORRESPONDENCE, will be gladly sent to all serious inquirers.

THE CHARLES A. GILLET

Pianoforte School

(Studio M.T.), 11, SOUTH MOLTON ST., LONDON, W.1.

To all Pianists, Violinists, and 'Cellists THE TECHNIQUER.

ERNEST FOWLES, Esq., F.R.A.M.
and "THE TECHNIQUER."

"I have been experimenting with the 'Techniquer,' and now write to tell you that I believe it may be of the greatest service in the case of bad instances of 'webbing.' To correct such is to bring about a far greater degree of muscular independence in the fingers, and I believe that your apparatus may be of the highest possible value in that direction. Naturally, the instinct of a modern pianist is against the use of an aid of this kind, but I am continually meeting cases in which it is desirable.

"Very kindly yours, ERNEST FOWLES."

"Hand Development," with 15 photos, 1s. 6d.

Full particulars of "The Techniquer" from the Secretary,

Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O.,

'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale. 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

LONDON SEMI-NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD,
CENTRAL HALL, WESTMINSTER.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 15th, 1923.

MALE-VOICE CHOIR - - PRIZE £75.

MIXED CHOIR - - - - PRIZE £25.

SOLOS, ETC.

Syllabus (two penny stamps) of Hon. Secs.,

J. DAVIES, 107, Falmouth Road, London, S.E.1.

D. B. JONES, 24, Distin Street, Lambeth, London, S.E.11.

YOU MUST MEMORISE.

LILIAS MACKINNON

undertakes to develop

PERFECT MEMORY FOR PIANISTS

in Six Correspondence Lessons for £3 3s.

EVERY PUPIL SUCCESSFUL.

Write for Booklet, with Testimonials,

1, PAULTONS SQUARE, CHELSEA, S.W.3.

MR. CHARLES TREE

RETURNS FROM UNITED STATES CONCERT AND LECTURE TOUR END OF THIS MONTH (MAY).

Now Booking for coming season.

How to ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE PRODUCTION (5/2 post free).

"BEL CANTO" EXERCISES (3/7 post free). New, 1922.

(If difficult to obtain, write direct to author.)

Concerts, &c., address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W.5.

L.R.A.M. AND L.T.C.L. POSTAL COURSES.

MR. GILBERT M. THOMAS,

M.A. (Cantab.), L.R.A.M., A.Mus. T.C.L.

Private Pupil of

STEWART MACPHERSON,

BACKHAUS,

OSCAR BERINGER.

These Courses are the outcome of many years devoted almost entirely to this individualised correspondence coaching, and embody the teachings of the leading Masters of the day, ensuring the gaining of the Diploma in the shortest possible time.

100% SUCCESSES—L.R.A.M., Christmas, 1922.

7 Correspondence Pupils entered: 7 passed.

Terms, Testimonials, Appreciations, on application:

BROADWOOD HALL STUDIOS, CONDUIT STREET, W.1.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Pupils prepared for A.R.C.M. and A.R.A.M. Exams.

Notice of last Pupils' Concert:

"A number of Mr. Albert Garcia's pupils sang excellently at the concert which they gave on Wednesday evening. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.

TEACHING SINGING AND ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS

Numerous Successes both in Singing and Elocution Exams. at

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.

Complete preparation.

Also Special Short Instructional Courses in Voice-Production and The Art of Teaching Singing, to meet particular requirements of the General Practitioner in Music.

MR. W. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

INGLESIDE, GOLDSWONG TERRACE, NOTTINGHAM.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—The Wigmore

Hall and Piano Galleries, Ltd., have now forty-two Music Studios; Grand Piano in every room. Every comfort and convenience. Inclusive rates. Apply, 32-42, Wigmore Street, W.1.

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

SPECIAL COURSES.

1. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
2. "First" and "Final" Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. London and Durham.
3. A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.
4. Trinity College Diplomas.

PERSONAL LESSONS ALSO IN BRISTOL AND LONDON.

SUCSESSES : During the past three years 122 pupils of DR. SPRANKLING have been successful in Examinations for Degrees and Diplomas in Music.

Candidates entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL. TELEPHONE: BRISTOL 3033.

DEGREES IN MUSIC.

EXPERT AND INDIVIDUAL TUITION
BY CORRESPONDENCE

FOR

Oxford Preliminary Arts, Durham Matriculation,
A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O., Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc.

Also for B.A. and B.Sc.

The Staff includes highly qualified Graduates in Music,
Arts, and Science.

For Terms address:

MR. J. CHARLESTON, B.A. (Hons. Oxon. and Lond.),
14, Elsham Road, Kensington, W.14.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE
LESSONS (named the "Simplex" Course), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

Dame Clara Butt writes: "I advise all would-be Singers and all interested in the Teaching of Singing to take the 'Simplex' Course. They will find it most helpful."

Mr. Ben Davies writes: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

For Full Particulars address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE.

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.), A.C.P.

MATRIC. : - - Successes - 92.

MUS. DOC.

If you are a Mus. Bac. the Guarantee Course for Mus.Doc. is £20.

MUS. BAC.

The Guarantee Course, originated by the M.C.C., represents the best offer ever made to Students of Music. For one Fee, which can be paid by easy instalments, Tuition is given until the Degree is gained. Students can take their own time over the Lessons, and, during vacations, two or more Lessons can be taken weekly.

A Degree for £20.

If you are an A.R.C.O. or F.R.C.O., SPECIAL CONCESSIONS are granted.

A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O.

RECENT SUCCESSES 11

Three Students passed F.R.C.O. January, 1923

The Course includes Registration of Pieces, Extemporisation, Essay, General Questions. GUARANTEE COURSE. One Fee for both Diplomas.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

Combined Guarantee Course for both Diplomas.

Pianoforte can be taken for L.R.A.M., and Singing or Elocution for A.R.C.M., or vice versa.

Courses include S. VIII., IX., and S. XIII., Musical Appreciation, A.R.C.M.

A.Mus. T.C.L.

This Diploma can be gained in Theory only, and if you are an A.R.C.O. you need take only "The Art of Teaching."

At a recent Examination a student of the M.C.C. gained 92 per cent. of marks for Counterpoint.

Single Subjects.

Tuition is given in the following Subjects:

- | | |
|-------------------|----------------------|
| (a) Harmony. | (f) Art of Teaching. |
| (b) Counterpoint. | (g) Musical Form. |
| (c) Composition. | (h) Memory Training. |
| (d) Mathematics. | (i) French. |
| (e) English. | (k) Essay. |

Vacation Classes.

These will be held at Nottingham as follows:

1st M.B.	August	7, 8, 9.	Sept. 4, 5, 6
Exercise Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc.	"	14, 15, 16.
Final Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc.	"	21, 22, 23.
A.R.C.O. and A.Mus.T.C.L.	"	28, 29, 30.
F.R.C.O. and L.Mus.T.C.L.	"		Sept. 11, 12, 13

The Classes will be conducted by a Mus.Doc. of Durham, and an F.R.C.O. This Tutor has an intimate knowledge of the latest requirements of the Examiners.

A careful analysis will be made of recent questions, and Students will work papers under Examination conditions.

Elocution and Singing.

Private Lessons (at any time) in London—Nottingham—Leicester—Bedford—Luton—Loughborough.

FREE - Guide to Matric., Mus. Bac.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

"ST. MORITZ," 201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

An Entirely New Departure HARMONY FOR PIANISTS

BY
DR. PERCY RIDEOUT,

D.Mus. Lond., A.R.C.M.

*Being Harmony in Pianoforte Idiom—
without written exercises.*

A COURSE OF INSTRUCTION
BY CORRESPONDENCE in CHORDS
and ORNAMENTAL DEVICES, together with their TEMPERAMENTAL VALUE as bearing on MUSICAL APPRECIATION and
INTERPRETATION, the whole being based on and ILLUSTRATED by music written for the Pianoforte.

AN ESSENTIAL PART OF A PIANIST'S
EQUIPMENT, affording a CLEAR INSIGHT into the MATERIAL FORMING THE
STRUCTURE OF MUSIC, and its MEANING.

The foundation of the Art of Style and Interpretation.

For further particulars, apply—

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

Pianoforte School,

(Studio M.T.), 11, South Molton St., London, W.1.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 Book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot,"
in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Eastern Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury."

"Is an acknowledged authority. . . ."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet,
eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance,
astonished me."

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments made.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

THE BECHSTEIN PIANO needs little recommendation to cultured tastes.
Its beautiful tone and incomparable touch —qualities which have gained for it the esteem of every music-lover, and have set a standard to the world—are as exquisite and as characteristic as ever.

Write or call for Catalogue.

126, NEW BOND STREET,

LONDON, W.1.

TELEPHONE: GERRARD 2653.

STEINWAY

MUSIC LOVERS
CAN OBTAIN

PERFECT RESULTS

ONLY FROM THE

PERFECT INSTRUMENT

THE STEINWAY.

15-17, LOWER SEYMOUR STREET,

LONDON, W.1.

PIANOS

GRAND and UPRIGHT

By High Grade Makers.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND FOR SALE OR HIRE PURCHASE.

CHAS. STILES & CO.

74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW,
LONDON, W.C.1.

Phone: MUSEUM 439.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6.

Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

FRANK CARLETON

(TENOR).

ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, Etc.

"Mr. Carleton is the possessor of a powerful tenor voice of rare range and capacity, and his rendering of the song, 'How lovely are Thy dwellings' (Liddle), was a fine performance."

Northwich Guardian, July 14, 1922.

Address: 58, Hazel Street, Audenshaw, near Manchester.

HAROLD KNOWLTON (B.Sc.)

TENOR.

St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.

39, Granville Road, Stroud Green, N.4.

MR. SAM PAYNE

TENOR.

(late of St. Paul's and Exeter Cathedrals).

For Oratorio, Concerts, &c.

Communications to 35, Lurline Gardens, Battersea Park, S.W.11.

MILLARD THOMPSON

(L.T.C.L.), TENOR.

17, Forest View Road, Higham's Park, E.17.

LEONARD SALISBURY (A.R.C.M.),

Founder and Basso of "The Gresham Singers,"

Gives Lessons in Voice-Culture and Singing.

'Phone or write, 3, Uffington Road, S.E.27.

Tele: Streatham 2525.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.

8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5.

London Wall 4033.

MRS. J. R. MAITLAND

A.R.M.C.M.

ASSOCIATE OF THE MADRID CONSERVATOIRE OF MUSIC.

Pupil of Backhaus, Egon Petri, Dr. W. Carroll, &c.

Prepares for the L.R.A.M. and other examinations.

Lessons in advanced Pianoforte Technique and Interpretation.

Special Correspondence Courses in Theory, Harmony, &c., at

Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1.,

Tuesdays and Thursdays.

"Lusitania," Curzon Avenue, Beaconsfield, Bucks.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

SOLO PIANIST.

For terms, vacant dates, &c., apply to

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN

VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.

FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT.

MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.

Nearly 700 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M. (Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A., Performer and Teacher.

Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.

"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.

Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

Phone: 1715 Maida Vale

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,

Glennholme, The Common, Hessle, E. Yorks.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-EIGHT YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

* * * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Sir HENRY WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. D. and MUS. B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L. Mus. L.C.M. (1922 List), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-nine. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus.B., Dunelm.,

F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations, Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, Essay Models, Sight-Reading, and Practical tests in 6 Lessons.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-23 ... 219 Correspondence Pupils successful.

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-23 ... 50 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

ARCHIBALD CURTIS, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

Professor of Singing, Trinity College of Music. VOCAL TEACHER. Special coaching for L.R.A.M., &c. Postal Course for Teachers. Many Successes. The Studios, 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

MR. EZRA EDSON, Mus. Bac. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,

Coaches by Correspondence to individual requirements. 76, Harboro' Hill Road, Barnsley, Yorks.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., Etc. Voice

Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm.,

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 403 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES AND PREPARES MSS.

FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-

INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,

Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C., makes a speciality of PREPARING Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes. 5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,

SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: March, 1923—3 out of the 6 passes in the March Examination for First Mus. Bac., Durham. These successes bring up the total to over 140 at Durham alone. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

MR. HERBERT C. MORRIS, M.A. Cantab., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., F.T.C.L. Postal Tuition for R.C.O., R.A.M., R.C.M., and T.C.L. Diplomas. Past Successes over 60. A.R.C.O. (25); F.R.C.O. (26).
99, Tettenhall Road, Wolverhampton.

DR. TAYLOR teaches through the post any musical subject. Accompaniments written or revised. Successful preparation for all exams. Portland Place, Lancaster.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
- (2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
- (3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
- (4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham, including September, 1922.
2 L.R.A.M. successes, January, 1923.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

R.C.O. SUCCESSSES IN PAPER WORK:

- | | |
|--------------------------|--------------------------|
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1909. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1909. |
| 5 F.R.C.O., July, 1909. | 12 A.R.C.O., July, 1909. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1910. | 22 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1910. |
| 11 F.R.C.O., July, 1910. | 22 A.R.C.O., July, 1910. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1911. | 14 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1911. |
| 10 F.R.C.O., July, 1911. | 15 A.R.C.O., July, 1911. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1912. | 8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1912. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1912. | 14 A.R.C.O., July, 1912. |
| 12 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1913. | 6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1913. |
| 10 F.R.C.O., July, 1913. | 10 A.R.C.O., July, 1913. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914. | 11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914. | 12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915. |
| 5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915. | 9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916. | 8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917. | 4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917. |
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1918. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. | 10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920. | 6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. | 7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921. |
| 6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921. | 8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921. |
| 5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. | 5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922. | 5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922. |
| 8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. | 6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923. |

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte): A.T.C.L. (Vocal and Pianoforte.) Registered Teacher, T.R.C. Postal Tuition for Theoretical, above Diplomas: also General Musical Knowledge and Advice. Bawburgh, Norwich.

HENRY M. BYRON, CONCERT DIRECTOR. Established 1890. Address, 75, Church Road, Leyton, London.

THE CLIFTON COOKE SCHOOL OF SINGING. Established 1888. "Pre-eminent for Professional Training." Principal: Mr. Clifton Cooke (Author of "Practical Singing," Kegan, Paul & Co.), offers exceptional advantages to serious professional students. Periodical competitions for valuable Free and Assisted Scholarships. For interview address Secretary, 26m, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

EASTBOURNE.

DOWNSMEADE BOARDING SCHOOL FOR BOYS. Modern education with special musical training if desired. Prospectus on application to the Headmaster, F. E. Wilson, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

CHAMPION HILL SCHOOL.—Choir School, Denmark Hill, S.E.5. Train 12 minutes Victoria. L.C.C. cars pass door. Solo and Chorus boys for Services, Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Telephone Brixton 2124. Apply Secretary.

SOLO and CHORUS BOYS supplied for Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Apply to Francis Sutton, St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.3.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL. CHORISTERSHIPS.

Board, Lodging, Education, and Medical Attendance Free. Candidates must have a good voice and correct ear, and should be between eight and eleven years of age. Education for the Public Schools. Apply to The Rev. the Precentor, The College, Durham.

KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

There are VACANCIES in the Choir for Alto, Tenor, and Bass Choral Scholars. Choral Scholarships are tenable by those who intend to take a University Degree. The value of the Scholarship is £80 a year, with considerable allowances in addition. The Competition will be held on Tuesday, May 29. Applications to be sent in not later than May 22. For further information apply to The Deans, King's College, Cambridge.

EXETER CATHEDRAL CHOIR.

There will shortly be a VACANCY for a TENOR. Salary £130. Candidates must be Members of the Church of England. Good sight-reading essential, previous experience desirable. Applications, stating age, with copies of not more than three recent testimonials, should be sent without delay, to The Rev. the Succentor, The Close, Exeter.

ELY CATHEDRAL. There is a VACANCY for a TENOR LAY-CLERK. Stipend £110. For particulars and Forms of Application, apply to The Dean, The Deanery, Ely.

PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.—Lay-Clerk WANTED, Tenor Voice. Applications to be sent in not later than May 15. For particulars apply to Mr. G. J. Gray, Chapter Clerk, Peterborough.

ST. BARNABAS, Kensington.—REQUIRED, TENOR SOLOIST (£25) and BASS (£20). Write, Ewart Dartrey, 8, Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn, N.W.6.

ST. JOHN'S, Notting Hill, W.—SOLO TENOR and BASS REQUIRED. Salary £20. Write, J. S. Robson, 33, Colville Terrace, W.11.

VOLUNTEERS WANTED, Youths and Men, to join Choir, Church of the Great Sacrifice, Maiden Lane, dedicated to boys who died in the War. Apply, Organist, 21a, Maiden Lane, W.C.2.

TENOR VOCALIST and ACCOMPANIST; tall and of good appearance and address, desires to augment income. Any proposition carrying a moderate salary and involving a few hours' work daily, welcomed from any section of the musical world. Chas. Francis, 39, St. George's Road, Palmer's Green, N.13.

WANTED, an ORGANIST and CHOIR-MASTER, for Hertford Congregational Church. Apply in first instance to Secretary, 51, Sele Road, Hertford.

WANTED immediately, a PUPIL-ASSISTANT, able to play Church of England services. Post of Sub-Organist of the Minehead Churches offered at £30 per annum. Practice allowed on a Norman & Beard three-manual electric-blown organ. Apply F. B. Porkess, "Clayton," Fownes Road, Alcombe, Minehead, Somerset.

ORGANIST REQUIRES DEPUTY for a North London (Barnsbury) Church, on May 20, August 5 and 12. Write, "H.," 207, Brecknock Road, N.19.

WANTED, Sheet-Music Assistant, as First Sales. Thorough knowledge of the Catalogues, and must have had practical experience in the Music Department. Age not under thirty years. Good prospects and permanency. Reply, giving full particulars, salary expected, &c. "S. J. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TEACHING CONNECTION. Healthy West-Coast Town. Well-established. Singing, Piano, Violin. Satisfactory reasons. Goodwill, £250. "H. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for Sale.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

BARGAIN.—APOLLO ORGAN, Two Manuals and Pedals. Seen London. Require Mustel Organ. "K," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN, by Mason & Hamlin. 14 Stops; treble 5 sets, bass 3 sets, and one octave of sub-bass. Walnut case. In first-class condition. Seen Wormit U.F. Church. Inquiries to J. M. Patterson, The Fife House, Wormit, Fifeshire.

TWO-MANUAL KARN in new con. oak case. 500 reeds. R. and C. pedals. Oak bench. £80. "F.R.C.O." Park Crescent, Erith.

TWO-MANUAL and PEDAL REED ORGAN. Good condition. Foot and hand blowers. £50 cash. 162, Heythorp Street, S.W.18.

AMERICAN ORGAN (Mason & Hamlin), Walnut case. 12 Stops. Couplers. Splendid Instrument. Offers invited. 53, Queen's Road, Beckenham, Kent.

FOR SALE.—Mustel ORGAN. One Manual. Twenty Stops. £85. Large Broadwood Grand, £75. Both in fine condition. Blackburn, 17, The Drive, Hove.

FOR SALE.—Large HARMONIUM, dark wood. C Keyboard, five-octave; ten Stops. £30, or near offer. Roberts, Castle Grove, Kendal.

PNEUMATIC PEDAL ATTACHMENT, for Piano, with Stool. Straight Pedal Board. £5. Stone, 22, King Street, Yeovil.

NORMAN & BEARD PIANO PEDALS, with Bench. First-class order. £11. Turnbull, Old Benwell, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

FOR SALE.—PIANO PEDALS, concave, radiating. Excellent condition. With music-holding Stool. £7, or offer. "E., " Glenfreme," Crescent Road, New Barnet.

FOR SALE.—Chappell MIGNON GRAND. Mahogany. Six legs. Perfect. £125. Jeffreys, 25, London Road, Maldon, Essex.

PIANO.—Upright Grand for SALE. Nearly new. A fine instrument, by Chappell, of English burr-walnut, dark, splendid wood, and in excellent condition. £75. Owner leaving for Canada. May be seen by appointment only. No dealers. Apply, M. St. A., 8, Kinnoul Mansions, E.5.

PIANO.—Bluthner Small Concert Grand, modern (pre-war). Splendid instrument. Bargain. £250, or near offer. Price new, to-day, £400. Box 101, W. H. Smith & Son, Strand House, W.C.2.

FOR SALE.—VIRGIL CLAVIER, good condition. £4, or offer. Clark, 63, Denmark Villas, Hove.

SONG LYRICS, comic or otherwise, 10s. each, or would agree with composers to arrange speculatively. Mrs. J. E. Thomas, New Mills, near Newtown, Montgomeryshire.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus.Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O., on "The Development of Chamber Music." Six complete Model Essays, with hints. Important. Send 4s. 6d. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED.—Second-hand Copies of Tozer's Setting of the PROPER OF THE MASS. Write to Choir-master, 8, Salisbury Street, Liverpool.

GROVE'S DICTIONARY.—Second-hand Copy WANTED. Austin Robinson, The Firs, Mansfield.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy New Song by Oakley, "LOVE FOR EVER LOST." Compass: B to D (F optional). Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover St., W.1.

WANTED.—Copies of "A SHROPSHIRE LAD" (Set of Five Songs), by A. Redgrave Cripps. (Published Stainer & Bell, 3s.) Advertiser will pay 4s. per copy (orig. 1914 edn.), if in reasonably good condition. "X," 11, Ambrose Place, Worthing.

WANTED.—ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for Thurso Parish Church (Norman & Beard Organ). Salary £50. Would get in addition Singing Mastership (part-time) under the Caithness Education Authority, at a Salary of about £100. Scope for private teaching, especially violin. A Singer preferred. Apply, J. Grant, Session Clerk, Thurso.

PARISH CHURCH, Stoke Newington. Additional BASS WANTED. £20. Norman Collie, 52, Queen Elizabeth's Walk, Stoke Newington, N.16.

MORE PUPILS— HIGHER FEES.

More pupils and higher fees are the natural outcome of increased efficiency in teaching. Teachers of music who have yet to make their reputation find THE MUSIC TEACHER invaluable as a source of fresh ideas and up-to-date information. It is extraordinarily practical. The most brilliant teachers in Great Britain contribute to it.

Teachers with long experience value THE MUSIC TEACHER as a means of keeping in touch with what their professional brethren are thinking, saying, and doing.

Free advice is given to readers by the following authorities, on any problems connected with the undermentioned subjects:

PIANO	Mr. CUTHBERT WHITEMORE
SINGING	Mr. WALTER FORD.
SCHOOL MUSIC	Mr. ROBERT MCLEOD.
STRING MUSIC	Mr. JAMES BROWN.
EXAMINATIONS	Miss NANCY GILFORD.
PROFESSIONAL PROBLEMS IN GENERAL	THE EDITOR AND HIS STAFF.

If you have not seen THE MUSIC TEACHER you have missed something worth having. A presentation copy will be sent free for the asking.

FREE SPECIMEN COPY.

To The Manager, "THE MUSIC TEACHER," Montague House, Russell Square, London, W.C.1.

Please send me a free specimen copy of "THE MUSIC TEACHER," as mentioned in the "Musical Times" for May.

Name (Mr., Mrs., or Miss).....

Address.....

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL.

WEEKLY ORGAN RECITALS

The last Recital of the present Series will be given by

MONS. MARCEL DUPRÉ

(PREMIER GRAND PRIX DE ROME)

ON

THURSDAY, MAY 3, 1923, AT 6.30 P.M.

An interesting item on the Programme will be an Improvisation in the form of a Symphony consisting of the four movements, based on themes to be submitted :

ALLEGRO.
SCHERZO.

ANDANTE.
FINALE OR FUGUE.

THE "DISCUS" REGD.

ORGAN BLOWER

THE QUIET EFFICIENCY OF THE "DISCUS"—

Blower is largely responsible for its widespread adoption in Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. Nearly a thousand are now in use. Apart from its quietness of working the "Discus" is a very attractive financial proposition. It saves the wages of a blower, and gives the organist the opportunity for rehearsal at all times. Any organ, large or small, can be fitted with the "Discus," and the motive power may be either electric motor, gas, or oil engine. Constructed of metal throughout, well designed and of the best workmanship. Its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOKLET.

MADE BY

B. WATKINS AND WATSON

ORGAN BLOWING SPECIALISTS FOR THE PAST THIRTY YEARS

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ blowing.

WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the College in April last.

FELLOWSHIP (F.T.C.L.).—Abraham D. Cohen.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Cecilia E. Blay, Evelyn I. Brightman, Veronica M. Brown, Edgar Carr, Florence G. Christmas, Marion Cowland, Alice Humphrey, Constance M. Julyan, Doris A. Keys, Hilda E. Kine, Allan E. Medd-Hall, Aileen Moran-Guy, Edith M. Robb, Herbert Spencer.

VIOLIN.—Dorothy F. Sexton.

SINGING.—William Hartshorn.

ORGAN.—Edwin A. Adams.

ELOCUTION.—José Carr, Kathleen Dewhirst, Florence M. Dickinson, Betty Keighley, Mary Wade.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Gweneth E. Bean, Margaret Barry, Frederick W. Beaver, Dorothy K. Bocker, Monica L. Brownjohn, Ada F. Byrne, Mary A. Conway-Gordon, Dorothy J. Cook, Martha Cotton, Winifred N. Davall, Mabel H. Davies, Elsie L. Edwards, Minnie E. Elliott, Ernest Esling, Kathleen M. Harvey, Theodora B. Haynes, Catherine J. Hoddinott, Lillian M. A. James, Muriel H. Lloyd, Edith C. Lusby, Annie Mason, Gwendolyn Morgan, Constance N. Newton, Dorothy L. Nightingale, Eileen S. H. Palmer, Mabel A. Purches, Doris Read, Ethel M. Royle, Ivy L. Savill, Ethel L. Tissington, Mary W. Tompkin, Winifred F. Vyse, Alice M. Whitehead.

CERTIFICATES.

PIANOFORTE.—David McK. Bartlett, Gladys M. Coomber, Elspeth L. M. Davies, Sidney J. Hibbs, Evelyn C. King, Alvena Thompson.

VIOLIN.—Alfred J. Ensor.

ORGAN.—Ernest E. Birchneil.

The following successful candidates were examined in the Dominions, India, and South America in 1922.

FELLOWSHIP (F.T.C.L.).—Doris M. Bettesworth, Gertrude C. Bredow, Rose A. E. Briasco, Nonie Griffin, Mabel L. James, Ruby Nelson, Elva Skinner, Sydney O. Thrower, Hilda Vincent.

LICENTIATE IN MUSIC (L.Mus.T.C.L.).—Robert Dalley-Scarlett.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Zada Aagaard, Violet R. A'Bear, Ann Allport, Gertrude Anderson, Beatrice Apter, Hannah Arkin, Elva M. Baker, Mabel S. Baker, Marie F. Baker, Nancy M. Barber, Eunice C. Bastiaenoz, Frances B. Baxter, Dorothy J. Betteridge, Veronica Blake, Grace Brandon, Coral R. Brown, Beryl K. Burn, Kathleen M. Cahill, Kathleen Callaghan, Madge Carew, Doreen Carr, Maggie J. Cartner, Kathleen M. M. Cassidy, Dorothy Chaffer, Mary E. Christian, Charlotte A. Clampitt, Lilian Clayforth, Inez M. Clayton, Adeline D. Cobham, Alix Cockburn, Eileen Cody, Mary Collins, Marjorie S. Connellan, Winnifred Cooke, Goolbanoo N. Cooper, Laura M. Cox, Priscilla A. D'Altera, Doreen E. D'Arcy, Constance Deare, Florence Death, Aloys Dorasumy, Muriel A. R. Duncan, Jean Dunlop, Gertrude Dunn, Eileen M. Eldred, Grace E. Edleman, Agnes Evans, Frances M. Everett, Avis Edwardes, George W. J. Ellis, Ruth Fagan, Louise Fassel, Alice V. Faulkner, Nora Fernandez, Winnie Ferry, Grace L. Fishlock, Lorna L. Forbes, Bell Frederick, Doris M. Gardner, Ethel W. Geddes, Jessie Gell, Ethel F. Giles, Jean M. Gillies, Minnie Goode, Juanita V. Grose, Violet Groves, Phyllis T. Halpin, Margaret T. Harris, Sylvia R. Harrison, Beryl Higgett, Hilda Hirschmann, Frances M. Hirst, Eva Hubner, Florence M. Hutchinson, Sadie Irwin, Bella Jacobson, Gladys D. Jacoby, Rebecca Javen, Erin V. Jayasingha, Edith M. Jennings, Muriel Jonas, Doris Jones, Grace V. Jones, Veronica Keany, Hazel M. Kemp, Mary Kerridge, Ada Kirkpatrick, Edna J. Kitson, Fanny Lakofski, Iris I. Lawson, Vera A. Le Grande, Phyllis E. Lincoln, Elizabeth M. Logan, Olive A. Lyons, Eileen R. Maley, Veronica Mansfield, Zenobia Manson, Hannah Markey, Josephine Milligan, Louisa M. A. Morrison, Gwendolyn E. Moss, May L. Mountney, Marjorie Muggleton, Ada Muirhead, Aileen M. Mullane, Ruby E. Munro, Mabel C. McAlister, Winifred McCarthy, Emily McConville, Trissie McDonald, Eileen N. McElna, Barbara McFerran, Jeanie R. F. McKenzie, Muriel A. I. MacLaren, Alexander F. Mackinnon, Josephine MacNamara, Doris L. Narnst, Mary K. Nel, Horatio H. W. Nelson, Elaine Newton, Cecil A. Noakes, Aileen Nolan, Gladys P. Oliver, Nora O'Neill, Win Openshaw, Isabel Palmer, LICENTIATES—contd.

Agnes M. Paterson, Thelma Paton, Rosette Péreira, Doris M. Peris, Lily Petkoon, Marjorie Plunkett, Hester A. Pretorius, Dorothy E. Prictor, Lulu G. Pugh, Nettie Purdie, Evelyn M. Rabbitts, Alice I. Renton, Irene Rica, Gertrude van Rij, Forestone Sanderson, Rose B. Short, Jeannie Sim, Edna Sinclair, Herbert J. Smith, Marjorie E. Smith, Ruby Smith, Winifred O. Stevens, Doreen Stracey, Annie J. Streeter, Claudia J. Sutherland, Lucy Takarangi, Olga M. Taylor, Vida E. Thomas, Rona R. Thomson, Doris Thorne, Jacoba Tomkins, Marie E. Tootell, Jeanie L. Torrance, Fredericka L. Toussaint, Kathleen B. Trimble, Blanche K. Truscott, Margaret F. Vaz, Irene S. Walker, Bebe Weiske, Ivy V. Wekworth, Phyllis Weston, Ella M. Williams, Maizie I. Wood, Edna Wright.

SINGING.—Emily M. M. Cook, Agnes G. Hallam, Laura G. Jared, Lucy Kingsford, Mary Kinna, Aileen M. S. McDade, Moya McManaway, Mary J. O'Reilly, Marjorie Plunkett, Elva Skinner.

ELOCUTION.—Joan E. Allport, Roemer E. E. Boecking, Rosaline Braine, Hettie Clark, Patrick J. Dear, Monica J. Dolphin, Edna M. Fenner, Anita J. M. FitzGerald, Helen C. Gooch, Joan M. C. Green, Frances M. Hanna, B.A., Marjorie R. Hawley, May H. Hercus, Mary Hosking, Victoria Jefferson, Ethel Keen, Norma E. McLean, Frances E. Macrow, Ella M. Precious, Daisy A. Smith, Phyllis M. L. Simpson.

ASSOCIATE IN MUSIC (A.Mus.T.C.L.).—Edgar H. Fewkes.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Queenie C. E. Adams, Agnes M. Aim, Marjorie E. Allan, Hannah Arkin, Beryl Armstrong, Mary Astill, Edna M. Avery, Edith Baikie, Cecil M. Baillie, Ivy P. Barber, Olive A. Barber, Evelyn R. C. Barnard, Emily J. Batterham, Mabel Battershill, Mary E. Beamish, Margaret Bellgard, Olive E. Bendall, May P. Bennett, Sadie Bew, Vera G. Billing, Gladys Bishop, Enid Blake, Roemer E. E. Boecking, Edna V. Bourke, Gladys Brislin, Mercia Brooks, Alison Browne, Yvonne Bryant, Millie Cameron, Leila M. Campbell, Roberta Carroll, Olive Cavell, Grace A. E. Cheros, Olive Christie, Beryl E. Clarke, Marion M. Crabtree, Muriel Croxford, Violet M. Crump, Florence J. Daniel, Muriel S. Daniel, Horace J. Davies, Ivy Davis, Herbert E. Dawes, Aileen E. de Lacy, Alma J. Dickens, Mavis C. Dix, Teresa M. Deane, Margaret A. Deighton, Jean E. Don, Anne Dryman, Madge P. Dunlop, Winifred P. Dutton, Hazel L. Elliott, Ethel M. Ennis, Lillian M. Enright, Winifred M. Esquilant, Mabel Falloon, Ethel M. Farraher, Vera M. Fitzpatrick, Thelma M. Floyd, Marjorie A. Foster, Minnie R. Frapwell, Margaret A. D. Frazier, Aruba French, Ada E. Frye, Iris C. Fulton, Esther D. Fysh, Flora R. Gavronsky, Ivy Gilbert, Ethel F. Giles, Margaret V. Gillanders, Elaine Gilmour, Myrtle Giorgi, Mary R. Golding, Hubert D. Gorvett, Winifred M. A. Gray, Eileen Greathead, Ruby Greis, Mavis Grieve, Annie C. Hall, Marjorie A. L. Hall, Dorothy Handisides, Amanda P. Hansen, Myrtle B. Harrison, Margaret Harburt, Elizabeth M. Harvey, Kathleen Hedge, Max Van Heerden, Dorothy Herdgen, Phyllis M. Henfrey, Mary G. Hight, Bertha M. Hitchens, Bertha R. Holz, Kathleen Hooley, Mavis R. Hore, Alma G. A. Horner, Muriel C. Indge, Lilian Isaacs, Eunice A. Jansen, Muriel E. Jefford, Agatha Johnson, Doris M. Jones, Wylla M. Jones, Marjorie Keegan, Charlotte Kennedy-Smith, Phyllis V. King, Eileen C. Kirk, Ada Kirkpatrick, Doris A. Knox, Rosie A. Kowarsky, Margaretha Kubenka, Norma Laurison, Margaret Lawson, Iris Lette, Esmé Lewers, Mary K. Lewers, Annie H. Lewis, Lila Liles, Edith A. Looe, Alice E. F. Lucas, Ruth Lundon, Elsie Lynch, Nancy Lynch, Laura B. Mackay, Rosemary Malcolm, Ivy E. Mannion, Hannah O. Marrett, Olive S. Martin, Alice C. Mathieson, Isabel V. Mazlin, Eva Mellish, Lily Michel, Lillian Milburn, Dora E. Millar, Mabel Millen, Kitty Miller, Sarah C. Mills, Anna Moffat, Elizabeth W. Muir, Nona Mulvey, Ella A. Mumm, Florrie Murphy, Nellie M. McCormack, Kathleen McDonald, Lena McDonald, Eugénie McDowell, Eileen N. McElna, Moira B. McGillewie, Jeanie R. F. McKenzie, Kathleen McMahon, Margaret M. Nankivell, Mary Kirkness-Nel, Margaret Nickoll, May Norcross, Brighta L. Norman, Beatrice O'Donohue, Edna O'Keefe, Mona M. Paddon, Grace Parrant, Gwendolyn I. Parry, Thelma Paton, Ernest R. Pearce, Doris M. Pendlebury, Doris Pepper, Maud Pereira, Gladys J. T. Perrett, Hilda Phillips, Rashelle Phillips, Elsie J. Pitman, Dorothy Pitt, Irene A. Platel, Florence Pollock, Dulcie Pratt-Barlow, Clarice L. Pudney, Irene G. Pudney, Lucy E. Quin, Magdalena D. Raath, Evelyn Ray, Doris N. Reed, Gloria E. M. Reynolds, Florence Richardson, May Roberts, Doris R. Robertson, Dorothy M. Robson, Freda Rodger, Eileen M. Rodriguez, Florence Roper, Doris Rose, Marie B. Rose, Nea B. Sanders, Azilla Sawtell, Joyce Schlesinger, Bertha M. V. Schneider, Veronica Shale, Rose Shames, Leonore M. Sherwin, Eleanor Shewan, Hannah Sinclair, Elizabeth A. Somerville, Lynda Spence, Roberta G. Spencer, Emma C. Stevenson, Vona Story, Amy F. Stratford, Mary D. Sturrock, Marion Taylor, Dorothea Thams, Mary M. Toker, Alice Topham, Dorothy E. Tremayne, Erna Van Blommestein, Torá B. Wadner, Druzilla Wagner, Madge Wagner, Elsie Waite, Irene S. Walker, James P. Wallis, Gladys I. Watson, Maud R. Welsh, Jean D. Whyte, Nellie Williams, Stanley H. Williams, Irene M. Wilson, Edith M. Wiltshire, Hilda M. Windle, Gwendoline M. Wing, Pansy H. Wood, Mavis C. Woodward, Althea G. Yettie.

SINGING.—Kate I. Andrews, Doris E. Biggs, Marie Doherty, John H. Lovell, Lona Mulvey, Katie Nelson, Gladys V. C. Petrie, Vivienne Sivell, May A. Tutton.

VIOLIN.—Jean M. Baird, Mary J. Baird, Marie F. Baker, Dily M. Cumming, Ethel W. Geddes, Winifred Gourley, Muriel C. Indge, Dorothy H. Johnson, Annie C. Rankin, Guido Santorsola, Bertha Shulman, Mabel Warren (Cello).

ORGAN.—Edward A. Golding, Ernest E. White.

ELOCUTION.—Mildred J. Adam, Sister Mary G. Allen, Jean E. Barlow, Dorothy E. Beckett, Alice M. Campbell, Gwladys E. Carlsson, Annie J. Carter, Edith L. Cashmore, Grace A. E. Cheros, Winifrede M. Chisholm, Violet F. Couldridge, Dorothy M. Dethlefs,

(Continued on page 308.)

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(Continued from page 307.)

Elizabeth Durlacher, Rhoda M. Felgate, Nell Floyd, Doris D. Foster, Marie L. Fourcade, Francis H. Frye, Alice D. Gould, Nell D. Graham, Dossie Hall, Hilda Harris, Alma Higginbotham, Sylvia Holford, Doris Holiday, Ruby F. N. Humble, Leah Hyman-Radutsky, Iris H. James, Dorothy E. Jenkin, Hazel E. Johnson, Bessie M. Jones, Eileen L. Leary, Winifred V. Ledbury, Mary O. Littlejohn, Ethel Melman, Dorothy R. Millar, Agnes M. Montgomery, Roma E. Moseley, Ivy M. Mullen, Ellen J. Murray, Elsie M. McPeak, Beatrice Newman, Violet M. Perry, Eileen Robinson, Hugh Taylor, Jean A. Trundle, Bernice Walshaw, Margaret Williams, Stella P. Wise, Winifred R. Wood.

CERTIFICATES.

PIANOFORTE.—Thelma R. Bell, Hilda Billon (Hons.), Vera Blair, Doris E. Bloomfield, Zoe B. Britter, Nellie Brook, Letitia E. Brown, Winifred E. Burns, Hilda Burtonwood, Florence H. Carey, Mary Collins, Florence Crowe (Hons.), Beryl I. Edwards, Ivy Elliott, George W. J. Ellis, Ivy M. Errington, Winifred Flower, Edith N. Forbes (Hons.), Edith C. H. Fyfe, Vera E. Hall, Thelma Harvey, Clarissa J. Hattam, Dorothy I. Holguette (Hons.), Sylvia V. Hough, Jessie Huntley (Hons.), Ethel M. Job, Grace Joseph, Helena Keane (Hons.), Edna Langmuir (Hons.), Lilian I. La Valette, Edna Little, Nora M. Locke, Irene Lorenzen, Sylvia F. Mendoza (Hons.), Evelyn Moon (Hons.), Beryl N. Osborne, Ethel M. Planel (Hons.), Elizabeth A. Roper (Hons.), Rita Richards (Hons.), Inez M. Rostgard, Mavis V. Sandys, Nora Scannell, Veronica C. Sharkey, Mildred M. Sinclair, Dorothy E. Smart, Dulcie M. G. Tarbolton, Kathleen H. Thompson (Hons.), Isabel Thornton, Frances Vaughn (Hons.), Amy Walsh (Hons.), Mildred Watt, Minnie Wilensky, Dorothy M. Young, Agnes L. Young.

VIOLIN.—Florence M. Cox, Evelyn Toohey.

SINGING.—Dorothy H. Johnson.

EXAMINERS: Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D., W. Creser, Mus. D., Edric Cundell, Edward d'Evy, F.R.C.O., C. E. Ford, Mus. D., Dawson Freer, F. J. Gostelow, F.R.C.O., H. A. Harding, Mus. D., E. F. Horner, Mus. D., Cairns James, A. W. Ketelbey, Charlton Keith, C. Egerton Lowe, Albert Mallinson, A. Mistowski, Mus. D., S. Myerscough, Mus. B., Bascett Roe, E. Stanley Roper, B.A., Mus. B., Alec Rowley, F.R.C.O., A. J. Slocombe, Joseph Speaight, Charles Vincent, Mus. D., G. F. Vincent, J. Warriner, Mus. D.

NEXT EXAMINATIONS in July. Last day of Entry, June 25.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

"LAST POEMS" by A. E. HOUSMAN

MESSRS. ELKIN & CO., LTD., have pleasure in announcing the publication of FOUR SONGS by

D. M. STEWART,

the lyrics of which are from

PROFESSOR HOUSMAN'S "LAST POEMS."

1. We'll to the woods no more.
2. In the morning, in the morning.
3. The sigh that heaves the grasses.
4. The first of May.

LOW OR HIGH VOICE.

Price complete, 3s. 6d. net.

This Album is confidently recommended to all singers, professional or amateur, who are interested in good musical settings of good poetry.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

STUDENTS' DAILY BREAD

A SERIES OF USEFUL HANDBOOKS FOR ALL KEEN STUDENTS OF MUSIC.

SECRET OF SUCCESSFUL PRACTICE (SHORT CUTS TO PIANO TECHNIQUE). TAYLER. 1s. 3d.

SECRET OF ACQUIRING A BEAUTIFUL VOICE.
LAWRENCE. 1s. 3d.

HOW TO SING A SONG. LAWRENCE. 1s. 3d.

SECRET OF MUSICAL EXPRESSION. TAYLER. 1s. 3d.

SECRET OF OBTAINING A BEAUTIFUL TONE ON THE VIOLIN. SASS. 9d.

VIOLIN TEXT-BOOK. M. S. WICKINS. 9d.

WHAT VIOLINISTS OUGHT TO KNOW. STOEYING. 9d.

HOW TO LEARN TO READ MUSIC. SEPPINGS. 1s. 3d.

COLLEGIATE MUSIC DICTIONARY. MOORE. 3d.

EXAMINATION TEST-QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.
MARCHANT. 9d.

SIMPLE THEORY OF MUSIC. BATES. 6d.

RUDIMENTS AND THEORY OF MUSIC. WICKINS. 9d.

RUDIMENTS OF MUSICAL NOTATION. WESTBROOK. 6d.

MUSICAL SOUND. EDWARD WATSON. 1s. 3d.

SKETCHES OF THE LIVES OF GREAT MUSICIANS.
KRAUSS. 6d.

MODULATION MADE EASY (HINTS EASY TO REMEMBER AND EASY TO APPLY). TAYLER. 1s. 3d.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods: 'BERRINGER'S TUTOR,' 'WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR,' 'HEMY'S TUTOR,' 'WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR,' 'GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES,' Publishers of 'SEVICK'S VIOLIN METHOD,' 'BERINGER'S DAILY TECHNICAL STUDIES,' 'MACFARREN'S THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC LESSON,' 'SEPPING'S TINY TUNES METHOD,' ETC.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR INTERMEZZI

FOR THE

ORGAN

BY

C. V. STANFORD.

(Op. 189.)

1. PASTORALE.
2. MARCIA EROICA.
3. HUSH SONG.
4. INTERMEZZO. Founded upon an Irish Air.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

MAY 1 1923

CONTENTS.

Page

The Emotional Conception of Music. By Arthur L. Salmon	309
Sight and Sound: 'Eye-Music.' By Mrs. Frank Liebich	310
Gustav Mahler. By Rudolf Felber (Vienna)	311
Round about A Toccata of Galuppi's . By Charles van den Borren	314
The New Music Teaching. By Percy A. Scholes	316
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. XXVII.—Gilbert Banaster. By W. H. Grattan Flood	319
Two Curious Cases of Voice Failure. By E. W. Scripture, Ph.D., M.D.	320
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	320
The Musician's Bookshelf	323
New Music	326
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	329
Occasional Notes	330
Competition Festival Record	333
Leeds Competitive Festival	334
Church and Organ Music	340
Christchurch Cathedral, New Zealand: A Talk with Dr. John C. Bradshaw (illustrated)	340
Royal College of Organists	343
'Sleepers, wake,' and the 'Hallelujah Chorus.' By L. C. Martin	343
The Amateurs' Exchange	346
Letters to the Editor	346
Sixty Years Ago...	348
Sharps and Flats	348
Royal Academy of Music	349
Trinity College of Music	349
'Some Aspects of the present Musical Situation'	349
Tercentenary of Philip Rosseter	350
The Puppet Players	350
'The Translation of Songs'	351
London Concerts	351
Bournemouth Musical Festival...	355
Music in the Provinces...	355
Pearsall's Letters (continued). By W. Barclay Squire	359
Musical Notes from Abroad	360
Obituary	365
Miscellaneous	365
Answers to Correspondents	365
Happy art thou, O Israel. Anthem for general use from 'Honour the Lord with thy substance.' By J. STAINER...	335

ONE EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this Number: 'Come, Holy Ghost.' Introit suitable for Coronation, Ordination, and General Use. By C. Lee Williams.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	...	0	3
Three Lines	...	0	3
For every additional Line	...	0	10
One inch (displayed)	...	0	10
Half a Column	...	2	0
A Column	...	4	0
A Page	...	7	10

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.
A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than

TUESDAY, MAY 22 (FIRST POST).

THE EMOTIONAL CONCEPTION OF MUSIC

By ARTHUR L. SALMON

There is a tendency in some quarters at the present day to regard music as emotion and nothing else. Those who incline to this view are not necessarily seeking to belittle music. On the contrary, they are emphasising and insisting upon the prevalence and dominance of that emotion of which music is the fitting medium of expression. The position may be understood as opposed to that of those who assert that music is intellectual, philosophic, descriptive, pictorial. It is certain that music can be none of these things except in a strained or partial sense. It is intellectual in its framework, its technique, but not otherwise; Plato and Aristotle, Bacon, Darwin, Einstein, could not have announced their theories intelligibly in music. Such philosophy as it may contain can be only a philosophy of the emotion, if such a phrase be allowable; it cannot be a conveyance of definite thinking. That music in a measure can be descriptive gives us the lower order of programme-music, and even then it is imitation rather than description, reproducing more or less happily the song of birds, the low of cattle, the splash of waters, the roll of thunder, or the chime of bells. Few will assert that these things are anything but a degradation of the nobler musical functions. It is only by such devices also that it can become pictorial; it cannot convey pictures, though it can most assuredly suggest them. But that mood of the spirit which may be induced by a poem or a picture, by a description, or even by a philosophy—that mood which is, however, more directly induced by the happenings of our own lives, and which affects us in a different sphere from the intellectual—it is here that music exercises its glorious mission and brings us its great deliverance. Our mood has become emotional, and it belongs to music.

Perhaps I may be allowed to name Sir Walford Davies as an outstanding authority in opposition to this emotional ideal of music. He, with the fine sincerity and graciousness that are distinctive of him, takes music as the supreme exponent of religion and philosophy, and also as the natural speech of humanity, from the savage to a Beethoven. He has insisted firmly that music is articulate: that it can do everything but convey information. Of course music cannot give definite facts: it cannot tell us of events or chronicle histories. The only precise information that it can convey is of the mind and mood of him who produced it. But we need greater resources of language if we are to describe such a conveyance as articulate. Human emotion and passion themselves often pass beyond the articulate; and it is at this point that the services of music become vital. They explain what we cannot explain, they express what we cannot put into words; their reach in this direction is only limited by the reach of our own souls. Music comes in as something different from, if not opposed to, the articulate; the wonderful and mysterious world of the subconscious is traversed by it; it is as inarticulate as the song of the morning stars, and has escaped from the limitations of definite concrete utterances. That it must surrender some things to the definite Word is obvious; there is bound to be limitation on one side if there is limitless scope on another. If we may say that music is emotional, we are saying that it speaks for the soul of man at its highest and freest. Faith, Hope, Love—'these three,' are only perfect when they become emotions; only as emotions can music express them.

The poet W. B. Yeats has said recently that 'music is the most impersonal of things, and words the most personal, and that is why musicians do not like words.' His assertion may be questioned, for there is as much personality in a musical composition as in a poem or a picture—that is, essential though strictly inarticulate personality. Also it need not be true that musicians dislike words; but it is certainly true that they realise, or should realise, the immense distinction between words and the medium that they themselves use. A moment's reflection reveals that distinction. Words can deal with thought, with knowledge, with research and discussion, as well as with emotion and passion. Words could give us the history of the Trojan war, and could announce the teachings that converted Europe from paganism; they could give us the character of Hamlet and the message of Wordsworth's 'Ode to Duty.' Music might accompany and enforce such things as these, but could not possibly have conveyed them unassisted. When Mr. Ernest Newman says that harmony is 'the only truly natural language that man has ever spoken,' he is speaking correctly; but a natural language was not long sufficient for the advance and culture of humanity. The sounds by which animals convey their meaning, the sounds that we ourselves may utter in moments of great passion or sorrow, are not enough for the intelligence of man; there gradually evolved the marvellous structure of speech, and words that can embody a complete philosophy or perpetuate an entire history. By the growth of words man became man; before, he was merely animal. Words are miracles of the human intellect. But the natural language and man's inherent need of it remained. There is no antagonism—there is often the closest companionship; but the missions of words and music remain different. It is for music to express the passion and the emotion for which a full verbal utterance is impossible; it is for music to pass beyond the arbitrary definitions of speech.

We quarrel about words. Why should we quarrel about music? Words are definite and arbitrary, and yet susceptible to so many shades of meaning. A differing interpretation of words has rent Christendom from top to bottom, and profoundly influenced the world's history. Being less definite, less arbitrary, it is obvious that music is even more susceptible to shades of meaning, and is still more at the mercy of its performer and the option of its hearer. But pure music does not make statements or announce creeds; it can hardly exist at all until our condition has passed beyond the didactic and the pedagogic, and has become emotional. Wordsworth said of poetry that it takes its rise from 'emotion recollected in tranquillity'—not a perfect definition, yet one of the best. The emotion is essential, the tranquillity is not essential. Surely we may equally say of music that its source is emotion, which may itself be passionate or tranquil, but must certainly have passed beyond intellectual cogitation or scholarly device. These things belong to the form, the upbuilding, just as mastery of words and rhythm belong to poetry. By means of study any average person can write reams of music or reams of verse; but without emotion the musical constructions are not music at all, and the verse is not poetry. In the last resort it all depends on the emotion. But, then, what do we mean by emotion? Here, again, is a word with regard to whose significance we may differ. We know what it means better than we can explain it. Assuredly it does not mean that a man can at any moment say, 'I will sit down and make a tune.' Nor does it mean any academic acquirement, any excellence of technical execution, however valuable these may be. They must be conjoined with that impelling need of utterance by which we know that we are emotional.

SIGHT AND SOUND: 'EYE-MUSIC'

BY MRS. FRANK LIEBICH

In his essay on the School of Giorgione, Walter Pater came very near to defining music's intimate appeal. But close as he and others have come to giving verbal expression to the perception of music, the elusive charm it throws over the mind and senses remains unexpressed, and possibly inexpressible. All art [says Pater in an italicised sentence] constantly aspires towards the condition of music; because music, he says, is the only art that makes its appeal through pure form, and completely realises a perfect identification of form and matter. To Pater it was the true type or measure of perfected art.

In his study of the Venetian School of painting as exemplified in Giorgione and Il Giorgionismo, he draws attention to the response depicted on the human countenances, of these painters' portraits, to music. To those who love the Venetian masters' work, that listening look on the faces is familiar, as also the stillness that can almost be felt around the figures in the rooms at the intimate concerts, or in the open-air, with music heard near running water or silent pool or well. It is a merging of sound into sight on these canvases, especially in that of 'The Concert,' in the Pitti Palace, attributed for a long while—and even by Pater—to Giorgione, but now known to be by his contemporary, and sometime pupil, Titian.

Their love of music, their evident realisation of the tenuity of sound and tone, must have helped to give those painters their delicate sense of colour-values; of nuance, as exemplified in the gleams of light seen in their pictures—on polished or burnished surfaces; on old instruments, such as lutes, clavichords, viols, flutes; on mirrors set in dull or silvered metals; by sunlight on still or running waters; shimmer of silks and satins—all diversified degrees of colour and light like tones of music undulating and mingling. The subtle adjustment of sound to sight as seen in their pictures of musicians and music-makings suggests many an association of eye and ear with Nature's sounds and movements.

'Eye-music' Wordsworth calls it when in his poem on Airey-Force Valley he notices the still and motionless scene. Not a breath of air is stirring. Then a little breeze enters—so slight that only the light ash responds to it and makes 'a soft eye-music of slow-waving boughs.' Wordsworth was no musician, but intuitively he grasped the analogy between movements in Nature and rhythm and accent in music. To a musician who is a lover of Nature, and whose brain is a palimpsest of music old and new, repeatedly heard in closest intimacy, the beauty of phrase and cadence within the memory will often merge with the loveliness of Nature's sights and sounds. The response is purely arbitrary. It will take place at any moment within the brain. For instance, a whole sequence of bars from the Andante and onwards in No. 22 of Scarlatti's Harpsichord Lessons will incorporate themselves with the swayings of birch-tree branches in a breeze, and especially will they combine with the mercurial dance of the myriad leaves. A turmoil of wind and wave racing to the high rocks of a North-Western coast, and the storm sagging round big limestone boulders on the fells leaning to the shore, cause Mendelssohn's Prelude No. 1, Op. 35, to course through one's brain. A glorious view of the mountains of three northern counties, combined with sea, lake, river, wood, and fell, and distant moors seen from the windows of a poet's hill-top home, sing to me certain phrases from both movements of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony. The passages jostle one another in my head, for the waters utter one phrase, the mountains another, the foreground of woods and fells argues with other motifs, the beautiful violoncello phrases persist, till, finally, they disentangle themselves and sing to me demurely in right and proper sequence. Such instances are too numerous to relate. Many a musician and music-lover must have experienced the same mingling of sights and sounds. Coleridge did so when he wrote of the melodies of winds and waves and waters, and of Nature's dance and minstrelsy. And he was sufficiently a musician to record in verse his hatred of the concert-singer's final top-note, which made the audience 'gape for wonderment.'

In the case of Giorgione and others of his school, Pater says they caught the waves of wandering sound and fixed them for ever on lips and hands. One wonders whose music held their sitters entranced. Okeghem or Josquin, Willaert, Arcadelt, di Lasso, or Palestrina, or perhaps our own Dunstable or Byrd. But if executants and listeners can have sound-visions suggested by Nature and other men's creative work, what of the composers? Mozart, for instance, who said he heard the notes of a whole work in his mind before writing them down to the sound of his wife's voice relating fairy-stories. Or Gustav Holst, who in an essay on 'The Mystic, the Philistine, and the Artist,' told of his impression of the Parthenon at Athens. (The first sight of it, he wrote, was a direct and intimate realisation: it seemed to sing to me in the sunlight.) Or Weber, of whom it is recorded that lines and forms called forth melodies within him as sounds gave rise to harmonies. Landscapes were symphonies in his ears; melodies sprang from all kinds of country sights, and came thickest when accompanied by the rolling of carriage wheels. Debussy in his Paris study, dreaming of an unseen Spain in his Iberia. Manuel de Falla, in his former home in the lovely Alhambra Gardens, composing his symphonic poem, In the Gardens of Spain.

Thus I would add two more words to Pater's italicised sentence, and say: All art (and Nature) constantly aspires towards the condition of music.

A modern poet, who is a fine musician and a delightful pianist, has come also as near as can be to finding words to express the ascendancy of music beyond all the other arts over the mind and senses. In his A Vision of Giorgione: Three Variations on Venetian Themes, Gordon Bottomley puts these words into the mouth of Giorgione:

Ah, in the end we never come quite near
Ripe music's rippling rounding into rest,
Never the subtlest interfused wan colours,
Where varying hues are fainting undistinguished
Like mulberries and cream upon the palate,
Can meet like notes that clasp for happy chancing
And die within each other's loosening arms,
Though sound and sense lapse into a plangent poem,
Flowing in rainbow-foaming syllables,
Yet music adds another, ne'er worded grace,
And godhead holds no mightier difference.

GUSTAV MAHLER

BY RUDOLF FELBER (Vienna)

Among the composers of our time Mahler is probably one of the most noteworthy, characteristic, and prominent. Not only did he, after Beethoven, Brahms, and Bruckner, carry on the development of the symphony (Wagner had thought it completed with Beethoven, and, therefore, did not spend himself in this direction), but he was even able to produce something new in this field by essentially simple means. He evoked the spirit of absolute music, and at the same time was modern in the truest and best sense of the word. Adhering firmly to the means inherited from his artistic forefathers, he was nevertheless able to impress the stamp of a remarkable individuality on every detail of his work.

Diatonic harmony as an essential characteristic of Mahler's style is not to be rated as his primary principle, but only as the necessary consequence of his deeply-rooted inclination for folk-lore—for simple, unaffected, but vigorous music. This inclination is most distinctly expressed in Mahler's plastic and easily intelligible formation of themes and motives, and pervades even all the details of his compositions. Rhythmically, on the one hand, it is shown chiefly in his predilection for concise, forcible, and march-like movements, and, on the other hand, in regularity of structure and periods, as well as in the immediate succession of various kinds of rhythms (e.g., 4-8 and 3-8, as in the first song of the Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen, 3-4, 5-4, and 3-2, as in the Urlicht solo of the second Symphony). It is further recognisable in the diatonic character of his harmony, and is revealed in his instrumentation in the frequent use of the E flat clarinet—a popular instrument in Mahler's country—and in the occasional use of the guitar (seventh Symphony) and mandolin (seventh and eighth Symphonies).

This inclination for folk-lore probably has its origin in the composer's youthful impressions. Born on July 7, 1860, at Kalischt, near Iglau, in Moravia, the son of a brandy-seller, he early became familiar with country-, folk-, and soldiers'-songs, of which (to the surprise of all around him) he could recite and sing about two hundred when only four years old! The future showed that the youth and the man remained faithful to the ideals of his childhood. Even in so early a work as Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen, the words of which are by the composer himself, he shows his bent for representing feelings and sensations such as vibrate in every naive human heart. These youthful songs anticipate the spirit pervading the later ones of the Wunderhorn-Lieder, but already evince in artistry and technique all the fundamental qualities alluded to above. Later, more attention is paid only to the artistic differentiation of various phases of mood, and a synthesis of folk-song and art-song types is aimed at by increased use of individual musical means, greater wealth of modulation, and independence of song accompaniments. It is in the Rückert songs that this tendency seems most strongly pronounced.

With his songs Mahler first gained the love, with his Symphonies the respect, and finally the confidence of the musical world. In the Symphonies it was the lyric passages—partly the middle movements, partly the vocal Finales—which first appealed to the interest of an unprejudiced public. It is on the whole very characteristic of Mahler's artistic bent that he transferred some of his songs directly to movements of his Symphonies—a matter to be specially noted later.

On entering more deeply into the master's work, it becomes evident that the same natural, upright, and warm-hearted personality expressed in his songs speaks from each Symphony as a whole, and not only from its lyric parts. The often quoted difference between effect and impression made by Mahler's songs and his Symphonies is mostly to be traced to the difference between these kinds of composition and the failure to recognise such difference. The lyric reproduces in its limited compass the essential part of an experience in most concentrated form; it is thoroughly subjective. The symphony, on the other hand, is the sphere of musical epic, and as distinct from the sonata—which serves the same purposes, but is restricted in the choice of means, and therefore in artistic expression—is to be regarded downright as a form of musical epopee. The symphony is thoroughly objective. Its task is to represent in tones the outlook on life and the world, in which man with his struggles and passions is the central figure; it can give only limited space to subjective feeling, and can indulge only episodically in lyrical effusion. The idiom of the symphony must as a matter of course be of quite another kind from that of the lyric—more intellectual and less easy to grasp. The symphony-writer is therefore more liable to be misunderstood, or not understood at all, than the lyricist or the musico-dramatist. (In the case of the last mentioned, the scenic events may contribute to explain what is intended by the music.)

In their depth and breadth Mahler's Symphonies are in fact exhaustive world-pictures. His first Symphony in D major may be regarded as a prologue. Permeated as it is by youthful exuberance and high spirits, it yet reveals painful consciousness of severe disappointments, a consciousness which, as with Heine, resorts to the ironic and grotesque to conceal the smart. In the first movement we find the first of the Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen; the last song appears in the third movement—certainly not without intentional reference to the contents. In his second Symphony (C minor) Mahler adheres to the type of the choral symphony as created by Beethoven in his Ninth. This already portrays the experience of the matured man. It paints the chiarascuro of life: a gloomy first movement, filled with oppressive tragedy; then a second movement, mindful of Schubert, flooded by sunshine and bright melody, built up on the following lightsome and graceful motive:

Ex. 1. Andante con moto.

A Scherzo follows, also based on one of the Lieder aus des Knaben Wunderhorn ('Fischpredigt des heiligen Antonius'). The fourth movement has a solo air for alto (Urlicht); and the fifth finally contains the wonderfully comforting song of resurrection. In contrast to the first Symphony, the orchestration is more elaborate, and the percussion instruments are very liberally employed.

The gigantic third Symphony, in D minor, is the Solomon's Song of nature. The individual movements at first bore explanatory programme headings, but these were afterwards discarded. Both in structure and in spirit this work is obviously in opposition to the customary form of the symphony. A monstrous first movement, which is a whole symphony in itself, is opposed to five smaller numbers, whereby this tone-poem, incorrectly entitled a symphony, is distinctly recognisable as divided into parts. The Scherzo movement again takes its thematic material from a Wunderhorn song ('Kuckuck hat sich zu Tode gefallen'). In the fourth and fifth movements Mahler calls in the aid of words, giving them in the fourth movement to a solo alto and in the fifth to boys' and female chorus.

The fourth Symphony (G major) is a charmingly naive composition, filled with gaiety and merriment, and sparkling with good-humour. Here Mahler for once laughs to his heart's content, and though in the spookish Scherzo a somewhat more serious note is struck, joyousness and hope nevertheless break forth again.

Outwardly, the second, third, and fourth Symphonies are closely related. In like manner the fifth, sixth, and seventh Symphonies, which again discard words and let music speak for itself, are also connected. A comparison of their artistic-technical conceptions makes other close points of contact appear, especially in regard to formal structure and methods of expression.

With the fifth, furthermore, a new stage of artistic-technical mastery begins. In the first four Symphonies, Mahler's polyphonic writing had already attained a high degree of perfection, and his daring, peculiar method, which carried the voices purely horizontally, without regard to their vertical connection and their harmonic consonance, was a surprise. Admiration was excited by his thoroughly personal manner of orchestration, drawing from the instruments unusual, surprising effects, e.g., by utilising the deep notes of the flute, or the higher register of the bassoon and trumpet. Beginning with the fifth Symphony, all these artistic virtues reach a still greater degree of perfection. The independence of the voices grows, the rhythmic differentiation is carried further, the instrumental apparatus becomes more complicated, greater diversity of the percussion instruments ensues; celesta, harmonium, and organ are employed; at the close of the sixth there is even a hammer; finally, larger bells and cow-bells are sometimes used to increase the sound effect. 'The last diatonist,' as Mahler was called, takes tonal and harmonic side-leaps, the former chiefly in the fifth and seventh Symphonies, which contain atonal passages of most modern and radical stamp—e.g., from the Sixth:

Ex. 2. Cor.

VI.

Viole.

B

VI. & Celestra.

Ex. 3. Viole.

or the fourth-harmonies in the Seventh:

Ex. 4. 3 Trombe.

So much for the general characteristics of the fifth, sixth, and seventh Symphonies, of whose peculiarities as to form and content nothing more detailed can be said in this limited space.

Mahler's most solemn and important work is his eighth Symphony, the sublime song of pantheistic love. In his choral Symphonies Mahler had so far followed in the path of Beethoven's Ninth, crowning the symphonic edifice by the use of the words in the finales. In his eighth Symphony he enters on a new path, drawing the utmost conclusions from Beethoven's Ninth, and developing to its limits the principle of the choral symphony there employed. The voice takes its part throughout the entire symphonic development; the instrumental symphony is transformed into a vocal symphony. The underlying text divides the work into two parts, the first being the hymn 'Veni creator spiritus,' the second the last scene from Goethe's Faust, Part 2 (Faust's ascension to heaven). The widely contrasted character of the two texts is reflected in the different style of the two musical parts. The first part is characterised by solemn, broadly-flowing melody and highly artistic polyphony of the ecclesiastical themes; the second part by more impressionistic charm of sound, which seems to rise to ever further heights and to become more and more transfigured. The Chorus Mysticus combines both styles, and a powerful, magnificent climax closes the work. Known as 'the symphony of a thousand,' on account of the immense instrumental and vocal body it requires, it was composed in the incredibly short period of three weeks.

The deeply-mournful Ninth, which is filled with the presentiment of death, and the uncompleted Tenth—Mahler's last work—end the series of his symphonic compositions.

Two vocal works are still to be mentioned—Das klagende Lied (which marks the start of his orchestral compositions, already containing characteristic features of his artistic personality, but strongly revealing Wagner's influence) and the wonderful Lied von der Erde, written before the eighth and ninth Symphonies, and full of sorrowful premonitions. This last work, written for tenor and alto (or baritone) with orchestra, is one of the most striking examples of Mahler's art. The text is arranged by the composer himself after Chinese poems, and illustrates various pleasurable and sorrowful phases of human, earthly being. There is exuberant joy in life—as, for instance, in the first Trinklied vom Jammer der Erde, with its tempestuous instrumental introduction—praise of wine, love, and spring:

Ex. 5. Allegro pesante.

ff Cor. Wood. Vl. Tromba.

Vl. VI. Tromboni

then autumnal desolation and melancholy are sung in the other songs. Throughout this work we feel that a dying man is speaking—one who casts a long, lingering look on all the glories of the liebe Erde:

Ex. 6.

O Schön - heit! O e - wigen Lie - bens . . . Le - - - bens trunk - ne Welt!

and then with tears takes a touching leave of them:

Ex. 7. sehr zart und leise.

Ich wand - le nach der Hei - mat!

mei - ner Stät - - te! Ich wer - de nie - mals in die Fer - ne schwei - fen. Still ist mein

Herz und har - ret sei - ner Stun - de!

Mahler's art—with its mixture of popular and intellectual elements, its peculiar combination of classical, conservative, and impressionistic modes of expression—is wholly sprung from the trend of his time. Problematic, riven in spirit, believing and doubting in soul, the man was like his art, of lofty human and artistic perceptivities, of comprehensive culture, at heart throughout life an innocent and believing child, mentally an eternal Ahasuerus restlessly pursuing the problems of life and death in order outwardly to confirm his inner faith. In life and in art he stumbles over the smallest impediments—falls, and rises again, pants on, steadily driven by demoniacal instinct, gropes his way through dark-nesses, in body scarcely beholding his goal, but in soul impelled by a sure purpose, possessed by an inward certainty, and pervaded by a love of creative work deeply rooted in heart and mind.

I have already said that Mahler's Symphonies are, in depth and breadth, exhaustive modern aspects of the world. They would not have been so had their originator seen them with the eyes of an æsthetic and not with those of an intuitive artist and philosopher.

But from this comprehensive painting of the world with its noise and bustle, composed of so many variegated elements high and low, there necessarily proceeds the occasional triviality of his themes and motifs, to which exception is often taken. However, when it is Mahler's purpose to proclaim the highest and most sacred things, all triviality is banished; then we find noble expression and sublime beauty. In the final movements we often feel the breath of a life beyond—a language which recalls Beethoven, and especially speaks to the moved heart with the irresistible power of a mystic revelation.

How different (to make a comparison near at hand) is the effect of Richard Strauss's works. While Mahler comprehends the world and the universe in his creative work and points to heaven with visionary gesture, Strauss in his music rarely rises beyond the world and its doings. Human heights and depths pass before the dazzled eyes of the beholder; mighty passions and elementary impulses begin to sound; variegated and voluptuous, deep-hued colours vie one with another; hot-house odours rise enticingly. We feel that in this music a truly gifted master speaks to us, but only in earthly accents; he can tell us only of terrestrial things, though these things are replete with splendour of colouring. It is only in his Frau ohne Schatten that the Strauss sensuality seems somewhat clarified; the eloquent singer of eroticism at the eve of his life is touched by the rays of an other-worldly sun, he partakes of the grace of the seer, and for the first time finds his way to the innermost shrine of music, to the éther.

But in this shrine where in his earlier works Strauss had tarried merely occasionally and episodically, and only late gained a firm footing, Mahler stood from the very beginning. The ethos has instinctively influenced Mahler's intuition and permeated all his work. The ethos impresses on him the stamp of the superhuman, of one born of the spheres; and it is this ethos which produces the lasting, elevating, and moving effects of his art. It is this ethos, further, which gives us absolute faith in Mahler's work, and destines it, like that of Bach, Beethoven, and Mozart, to live through the ages.

ROUND ABOUT A TOCCATA OF GALUPPI'S

BY CHARLES VAN DEN BORREN

(Translation by Richard Capell)

The question has for long been asked what composition of Galuppi's was it that suggested A Toccata of Galuppi's—exactly what piece of 'old' and 'cold' music it was that to the speaker in Browning's poem conjured up the picturesque, the frivolous and doomed charm of 18th-century Venice!

So far no answer has been given, since no work of Galuppi's has been known under the name of Toccata. In his Quellen-Lexikon (1901) Eitner (art. 'Galuppi') cites in the matter of Galuppi's harpsichord pieces only concertos, sonatas, and divertimenti. Nor has Signor Fausto Torrefranca, whose pages on the Burano master are of high scientific and æsthetic value* discovered any toccata among the numerous MSS. he has studied. The 'Browning question' nevertheless has engaged him, and not without perspicacity he has sought to identify the Toccata of Galuppi's with the Sonata in one movement in D minor, No. 11, in his thematic catalogue of the Buranello's Sonatas : †

As it is difficult [he says]‡ to believe that Browning hit on Galuppi's name by sheer chance at a time when he was more than ever forgotten; and as again no Toccata, properly so-called, by Galuppi has so far [1912] been found, it is more than probable that [the Sonata in D minor] is in fact the famous Toccata after which the Browning Societies have been inquiring without success. The fact that it consists of a single movement would help to make a layman take a sonata for a toccata, the more since the style of the piece does really stand half-way between toccata and phantasy-sonata. Moreover its modern nervous vivacity was the very thing to strike the fancy of a poet like Browning.

Now it happens that among the eight MS. pieces for harpsichord by Galuppi in the Library of the Brussels Conservatoire, mentioned by Eitner under the general appellation of Eight Pieces for Clavier, there are three entitled Toccatas, and among them is the D minor Sonata ! Another of the set, in F major, answers exactly to the Sonata in that key, in three movements, numbered 15 in the Torrefranca Catalogue. It is inscribed, possidet T. H. Klemm, an inscription which dates back to the origin of the MS. Its old owner was an obscure musician mentioned by no dictionary, but he is qualified (or, if the MS. is his autograph, qualifies himself) as organista in Suerino (Schwerin) at the head of four MS. Suites for harpsichord, likewise belonging to the Brussels Conservatoire Library.§

These MSS. of Galuppi's Toccatas and Klemm's pieces may well have belonged originally to the same collection, and have been written by the same hand (perhaps Klemm's), and they probably saw the light in the second half of the 18th century during Galuppi's own life-time. It was a period when the terms Toccata and Sonata|| were indifferently employed for pieces which did not strictly answer to the notion of sonata or toccata, the former being a composition of well-regulated architecture, the latter allowing free phantasy to override constructive rigour. Hence there is now no need to make the improbable assumption that Browning off his own bat called a sonata a toccata because of the more or less free gait of the work. We have only to fancy him coming across a MS. copy or a lost printed version in which the piece that inspired him ('Brave Galuppi! that was music! Good alike at grave and gay! I can always leave off talking when I hear a master play'), happened to be called a toccata.

Signor Torrefranca does not disguise the fact that Browning's description hardly answers more than in the general tone to Galuppi's Sonata-Toccata in D minor, and thinks that the technical details introduced into the stanzas must not be taken too literally. Out of more than thirty pieces by the Buranello which he has studied, this to his mind is the one which psychologically offers most points of contact to the description. The third Toccata in B flat major (in the Brussels Conservatoire Library), which Signor Torrefranca seems not to know, does not as a whole make more claims than the other one as the poet's inspiration.

Hence, apart from the fairly improbable case of Browning having known a now lost work of Galuppi's, there are two hypotheses before us : (1) Either Browning sought to evoke the Buranello's Toccata by certain precise strokes which would characterise it, both from the technical and the expressive point of view ; or—

(2) These strokes of description were a kind of poetic fiction intended to create a musical atmosphere exempt from actual objectivity.

Take the first : it is undeniable, as Torrefranca has already suggested, that in the D minor Toccata-Sonata there are not assembled all the technical elements mentioned by the poet, which are : 'Lesser thirds so plaintive'—'sixths diminished'—'sigh on sigh'—'suspensions, solutions'—'commiserating sevenths'—'dominant's persistence . . . an octave struck the answer.'

These elements are for that matter not interesting from the poetic point of view unless they have a real expressive sense. No doubt there are plaintive minor thirds in the D minor piece. Certain of the other elements too may be found there, though probably not in a form striking enough to have caught Browning's ear. The 'diminished sixths' of which he speaks in his seventh stanza appear to us rather to be subject to caution, this interval being of a purely theoretic nature in the system of harpsichord tempering exclusively in practice from the second quarter of the 18th century. Perhaps Browning was thinking of diminished sevenths or even, in a more general fashion, of some secondary chords of the seventh, highly characteristic dissonances of which some very curious examples are to be found in the introduction in free form which serves as Prelude to the F major Sonata-Toccata in the Brussels Conservatoire. There indeed are 'commiserating sevenths' in the full force of the term. Now resolved, and again suspended in the air, awaiting a desired resolution that does not come, these dissonant chords evoke by their very disposition the idea of 'Those suspensions, those solutions—"Must we die?"' As to the 'Hark, the dominant's persistence' and 'So, an octave struck the answer,' these too are to be found, if one wishes, at the conclusion of the Prelude so full of dreaming and of phantasy. But the 'sighs'? They are hardly to be heard in any truly expressive sense in the D minor or F major pieces. But there are highly typical ones in the third Toccata (B flat).

We see then that not one of the three Brussels Toccatas answers with exactitude to all Browning's points. Supposing these three to have been all he knew, he would seem to have drawn from each some one of the varied elements by which in combination the soliloquist of the poem conjured up the old Venice of his dreams. Hence our second hypothesis—which also conforms more to the processes of poetic genius—appears to us the more plausible. That one Toccata, say the D minor or the Prelude to the F major, may more particularly than another have floated before Browning's mind as he created his poem—that is in nowise impossible. But every poet has the right to evade the prosaic minutiae of

* In the Rivista Musicale Italiana ('Per un catalogo tematico delle sonate per cembalo di B. Galuppi', 1909, p. 872. 'Poeti minori del clavicembalo'; 1910, p. 763. 'Le sonate per cembalo del Buranello'; 1911, pp. 276 and 497, 1912, p. 108).

† Riv. Mus. Ital., 1909, p. 876.

‡ Id., 1912, p. 135.

§ No. 6107 in the Catalogue.

|| Or Divertimento, as, for instance, No. 6015 of the Brussels Conservatoire Library, which has this title, while elsewhere it is termed a Sonata (No. 5 of Torrefranca's Catalogue).

fact, and what more excusable and indeed legitimate than that Browning should have assembled scattered hints from the Buranello with the aim of more forcibly exalting the profoundly Venetian essence of his genius? It may be, of course, that Browning's hints came from quite other works than these three Toccatas, a supposition that broadens the question and may justify the writer in Grove (1906, art. 'Galuppi') who, faced with the inquiries of Browning enthusiasts, declared that 'no particular composition was taken as the basis of the poem.'

THE NEW MUSIC TEACHING

BY PERCY A. SCHOLDS

For some years it has been evident to thoughtful musicians that the music teaching of the future would be very much less a question of rapping Julia over the knuckles for wrong fingering in the scale of F sharp melodic minor, and much more a question of interesting Julia and her companions in class in music itself—training their ears to 'appreciate,' teaching them to sing at sight, making them acquainted with the classics, showing them something of the course of evolution of music, and so forth. For this widened scope of the music-teachers' work many have been preparing themselves, and if the suggestions of the latest government blue book are accepted, the opportunity for using their talent for genuine musical training is at hand.

The book in question is the Report of the Consultative Committee of the Board of Education upon Differentiation of Curricula for Boys and Girls respectively in Secondary Schools. It costs 2s. 9d. (an odd sum with a resemblance to the price of a concert ticket), and can be obtained from H.M. Stationery Office, Imperial House, Kingsway, W.C.2; or 37, Peter Street, Manchester; or 1, St. Andrew's Crescent, Cardiff; or 23, Forth Street, Edinburgh. Thus every part of the Kingdom is provided with a dépôt where may be obtained this valuable publication—except Berwick-on-Tweed, which is neither Scotland nor England, and if there is a bookshop there the inhabitants need not be disconsolate, since any bookseller anywhere will also supply the volume. Get it and read it, if you are a teacher of music. It concerns you!

The argument of the two hundred pages so far as they relate to music is too long to be fully stated here, but reduced to its essentials comes down to a statement that music is just as good an instrument as any other for the education of the young mind, and that therefore every boy and girl in secondary schools should have the opportunity for studying it, if he or she feels that it is a congenial subject to him or her, and should, of course, receive as much 'credit' (as an American educationist would say) for doing so as for studying mathematics or Latin or French. To bring this about it is necessary that in the examinations of the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board, the University of London, the Northern Universities Matriculation Board, the Central Welsh Board, &c., music should be treated upon exactly the same footing as other subjects. The adoption of this policy would necessarily enormously encourage the systematic study of music not merely in the examination forms, but from the bottom of the school to the top.

The words of the Report, in pleading for a full and dignified school treatment, are very striking indeed:

The study of music, rightly undertaken, can be of the highest educational value. We are in error if we dismiss it as a recreation, or seclude it as a remote and technical study which is out of relation to the rest of our intellectual life. Its range is not less wide than that of literature; it appeals to the same faculties of emotion and judgment; it is, allowing for the necessary differences of medium, subject to the same general æsthetic principles. Its history, far too much neglected in our schools, is an essential part of the history of civilisation. The mental training offered by analytic study of its construction and texture is closely parallel to that afforded by the natural sciences. Its problems of style are as interesting and varied as those presented by any literary form. Above all, it is a language with a poetry as noble as that of Dante or Racine, of Shakespeare or Milton. All the arguments which can be used for the inclusion of language and literature in our ordinary scheme of education may be used with equal force in the case of music.

Although the name of Dr. Somervell is not mentioned in the Report, except in the formal way which will be noticed a few lines lower in this article, it is fair that we musicians should recognise in it one of the results of his persistent work as H.M. Inspector of Music during the past twenty years. The view here put forward is one he has long advocated (see his Musical Association paper of 1905, The Basis of the Claim of Music in Education).

Apparently, in discussing the draft Report, the Committee has felt that some of the examining authorities to which it was appealing might be in doubt as to whether music was, in the full sense, an examinable subject. It has therefore appended special syllabuses and papers by way of suggestion as to how the subject might be examined upon (a) in the First School Examination (School Certificate Examination), and (b) in the Higher Certificate Examination. The former Syllabus and Examination Paper follow:

B.—DRAFT SYLLABUS AND SPECIMEN QUESTIONS FOR EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

(Drafted by Sir W. H. Hadow, C.B.E., Mus.Doc., and Arthur Somervell, Mus.Doc.)

(i.) First School Examination (School Certificate Examination)—Draft Syllabus

In order to pass, candidates must satisfy the Examiners in (I.). In order to obtain distinction they must satisfy the Examiners in (I.) and (II.).

I.

(a) Aural Training.

Candidates will be required:

- (1) To sing a simple melody at sight;
- (2) To write from dictation a four-bar phrase;
- (3) To write down in any key, specified by the Examiners, one of twelve hymn-tunes, the names of which have been announced in the syllabus for the year;
- (4) To recognise simple changes of key in passages played by the Examiners: the answers to be written down;
- (5) To recognise common chords, inversions, and cadences;
- (6) To translate two examples of the rhythm of poetry into corresponding musical rhythm—the passages to be written on one note.

N.B.—The sight-singing test will be taken separately from the rest of the examination. The other parts of the aural examination will be given at the beginning of the paper.

(b) Elementary Harmony (common chord, dominant seventh, and their inversions): either (1) the harmonization in three or four parts of a given melody, or (2) the supplying of a melody above an unfigured bass.

(c) Structure of melodies: either (1) the analysis of one or more given melodies, or (2) the composition of a melody to a given stanza of verse.

(d) General elementary knowledge of the outline of musical history.

(e) Test quotations.

Candidates will be asked to identify four out of ten or twelve well-known melodies or phrases.

(f) Study of a set work (Elementary).

E.g., a Suite of Bach or an early Sonata of Beethoven, or a selection of pieces by Schumann or Chopin. The set pieces should not require a knowledge of any instrument other than the pianoforte.

The above is designed as a syllabus for a three-hour paper, of which the aural training apart from sight-singing should occupy about half-an-hour or forty minutes.

II.

Candidates for distinction are required to offer one of the following: Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, or Composition.

Candidates who offer pianoforte, violin, or singing, will be allowed to make their own selections from a prescribed list of composers. They will also be tested in sight-reading.

Compositions may be either vocal or instrumental, and whether long or short will be expected to show some individuality and some sense of musical structure.

(ii.) First School Examination (School Certificate Examination)—Specimen Questions.

PAPER I.

(a) Aural Training.

(1) Score for sight-reading:

(2) Score for dictation:

(3) Write out French in the Key of D.

(4) Write down the changes that occur at the end of each two-bar phrase in the following (the passage to be played three times and the key to be given):

(5) Write down the names of the following chords (Tonic, Dominant, &c.) and inversions. The passage to be played slowly three times:

(6) Translate the rhythm of the following lines of poetry into corresponding musical rhythm:

(i.) 'It is time, it is time, oh passionate heart, said I.'

(ii.) 'O what a plague is love, I cannot bear it.'

(b) Harmonize the following melody in four parts:

Or,

Write a melody above the following bass. Use passing-notes:

(c)—(i.) Analyse the following melody:

Or,

(ii.) Write a melody for the following verse:

'How sweet is the Shepherd's sweet lot,
From the morn to the evening he strays:
He shall follow his sheep all the day,
And his tongue shall be filled with praise.'

(d) Give a short account of one of the following:

(i.) The English Madrigal writers;

(ii.) The growth of the orchestra from Bach to Beethoven;

(iii.) The 'Romantic School' of the 19th century.

(e) Identify five of the following, giving the name of the composer or the name or first line of the song:

[Here follow about a dozen similar extracts.]

(f) Bach: French Suite in G major.

(i.) What is meant by a Suite? Of what numbers does it usually consist? Mention any additions or exceptions.

(ii.) For what keyed instruments did Bach write his chamber music? How do they differ from the pianoforte?

(iii.) Why are these Suites called 'French'?

(iv.) Contrast the structure of the Allemand with that of the Gavotte.

(v.) What is a Loure, and how does it differ from other dance forms?

(vi.) Write a short structural analysis of the Gigue.

(Three or four of these to be set.)

I suggest that this proposed syllabus and specimen examination paper are well worthy of close attention, as roughly defining the limits of a widened school treatment of music. I add a few remarks upon the problems set.

COMMENTS ON THE ABOVE PAPER

PROBLEMS (a) 1 & 2.—Problem 1 (sight-singing) is the only problem which requires the presence of an actual examiner. Problem 2 tests exactly the same faculty, and calls only for the presence of a supervisor who is capable of dictating (probably by playing the melody on the pianoforte). As these examinations are held at many centres, and in many cases on the premises of the schools providing the candidates, it is better to avoid problems which involve the sending out of examiners, and this can easily be done by setting a slightly more severe dictation test and omitting the sight-singing test. Obviously any candidate who can take down a melody from dictation can sing at sight. Indeed, dictation (= translation of sound into the language of notation) is more difficult than sight-singing (= translation of the language of notation into sound), just as translation from English into Latin is more difficult than translation from Latin into English. (Perhaps this analogy does not hold completely, but there is something in it.)

An addition to this section of the paper may be suggested—a problem in dictation of rhythms (tapped on one note of the pianoforte). In this test, rhythms a good deal more complex than any included in the melody-dictation test might fairly be introduced.

PROBLEM (a) 3.—The point of this type of problem is the demand that the candidate should be prepared to write out the tune demanded 'in any key.' This makes it not only a useful and fair test in aural perception but also one in the understanding of notation, &c. It would not be a bad idea to specify also 'in any suitable time-signature demanded.' Thus a tune originally memorised by the candidate as in 4-4 could be demanded in 4-2, and so forth. (This is but a small additional point.)

PROBLEM (a) 4.—Experience shows that candidates find this type of test much simpler than would be expected. Curiously, candidates who in melodic dictation are quite poor, seem fairly easily to recognise changes of key. The problem should, therefore, not be marked very high.

PROBLEM (a) 5.—This is a quite reasonable test. At present such tests are usually badly done. No specimen test in the recognition of cadences (provided for in the suggested syllabus) is included in this paper; for some reason, such tests are generally rather badly done by candidates.

PROBLEM (a) 6.—This is a good test in rhythm, and its presence probably explains the lack of a rhythmic dictation test earlier in the paper. It is, of course, obvious that a very large number of correct solutions are possible. In 1919 a test of this sort was set in the first- and second-years Pupil Teachers' Examinations in the Cape Province of South Africa. In their report afterwards the examiners went badly astray. They had given a verse of Whittier's Barbara Frietchie, and commented upon the results they got in these words: 'Now every teacher knows that as a rule there is not the slightest doubt as to the rhythm of a piece of poetry . . . There would be entire unanimity as to accented syllables, as to which syllables are long, and even as to the exact length of the pauses at the end of the lines . . . and except for trifling variations of detail every answer ought to be the same.' The School Music Review (August, 1919) was on the side of the candidates. Its editor made the practical experiment of sending the verse to a number of sound musicians, and of printing their solutions—no two of which came anywhere near tallying. The variety of time-signatures alone, was great. The distinguished musicians who have set the present specimen paper are under no illusion, we may be sure, as to the possibility of 'entire unanimity' in the workings; but in stating any such problem it would be well to add an explanatory word or two, making it clear that any musically intelligent solution would be acceptable. (The School Music Review article is worth reading by teachers who think of employing this method of testing appreciation of rhythm and the understanding of its notation. See also Findon's Sir Arthur Sullivan, his Life and Music. for a chart made by Sullivan illustrating his practice of working out a great variety of rhythms for any lyric of Gilbert's, before deciding on the one he intended to adopt and proceeding to make his melody. Musicians interested in the relations between poetic and musical rhythms should see a book just about to appear—The Rhythm of Speech, by William Thomson: Maclehoose, Jackson & Co., Glasgow. It is the first full treatment of the subject from a point of view which musicians can approve.)

PROBLEM (b).—The alternatives here are very valuable. By choosing the second alternative the candidate is saved wasting time on the practice of part-writing, which is useless to anyone who does not intend actually to compose, and, as every teacher knows, absorbs an immense amount of time spent on learning the mechanical avoidance of 'consecutives,' &c. The second problem, it will be noted, can be prepared for by a short practical course in aural perception of chords, &c., plus harmony practice at the keyboard. It is hardly susceptible of mechanical treatment, and does call for musical feeling. The entire absence of figured bass from the paper is gratifying.

PROBLEM (c) 1.—Problems of this kind interest pupils, and are generally intelligently worked. The melody for analysis could be dictated, instead of printed (the candidates writing down, of course, not the melody, but its analysis). Alternative 'correct' analyses are often possible.

PROBLEM (c) 2.—This is a useful complement to Problem (c) 1. To some extent, in inventing a melody, the candidate requires to have the main lines of the (imaginary) accompanying harmony in mind. It might help rather than hinder candidates if they were required to fill in the harmony (or at any rate the bass) for the cadences.

PROBLEM (d).—This represents perhaps one of the most valuable sections of the examination. If the right type of answer be expected, obviously it cannot be 'crammed for' with much hope of success. Such a question as this implies several years of gradual training in appreciation of music of different schools and periods, and of acquirement of the salient facts of the history of musical evolution. These questions should, therefore, be highly marked.

PROBLEM (e).—This is a useful test. But as candidates should be supposed, during several years of sound musical training, to have become acquainted with a large number of standard works, the proportion of folk-tune and popular song here drawn upon seems excessive. Such a paper as this should in every way possible encourage the acquaintance of pupils with the big body of the 'classics.'

PROBLEM (f).—Applying the last remark, it might be considered whether a slightly more superficial knowledge of two or three works of different schools (as, for instance, one each of Bach, Beethoven, and Chopin) might not be demanded in place of the deeper knowledge of a work of one school.

In closing I call attention to the fact that the Committee which has made these proposals concerning the giving of an enormously more important place to music in education is not (apart from its chairman, Sir Henry Hadow) one of musicians. Out of the seventy-odd witnesses it called, but three had any professional interest in music, whilst of the many institutions that sent memoranda for consideration not one was a musical institution. Simultaneously, however, the Union of Directors of Music in Boys' Secondary Schools has been at work on the same question, and has produced a syllabus which, as it happens, tallies very closely with that given above. Also in the School Music Review for August, 1922, Mr. A. Rawlinson Wood, of Denstone College, put forward very similar proposals. Thus everything points to the 'time being ripe' for a coming and huge reform, and musicians should be ready!

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XXVII.—GILBERT BANASTER

It is strange that the history of the English Chapel Royal has not yet been adequately treated, save for the account given in Rimbault's Cheque Book of the Chapel Royal (1870), which, however, begins only with the year 1485. Yet Gilbert Banaster deserves to be held in remembrance as a distinguished Master of the Choristers of the Chapel Royal, as well as an early Tudor composer. His predecessor, Henry Abyndon, had been Master from 1455 to 1478, and had made the singers of the Chapel Royal famous, so much so, that in October, 1471, Galeazzo Maria Sforza, Duke of Milan, had sent his Chapel Master (Rayner) to pick out some good English singers and musicians for Milan (Calendar of State Papers, Milan, p. 161).

Up to the present the only account of Banaster is the brief notice of G. E. P. Arkwright's in the new edition of Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians (vol. 1, p. 179). Henry Davey, in his History of English Music (new edition, 1921), dismisses Banaster in a couple of lines, although acknowledging that he was an 'important composer of the later 15th century'; and he insinuates that his Mastership of the Children of the Chapel Royal began only in 1482, this being, in reality, the date of the confirmation of his appointment.

Gilbert Banaster (whose name also appears as Banester and Banastre) was born c. 1440, and on September 29, 1478, was appointed Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal. He is said to have been a son of Henry Banaster, Yeoman of the Crown, who died in 1456, and it is not unlikely that he was a boy of the Chapel Royal, under Henry Abyndon, becoming a Gentleman of the Chapel in 1475, the same time as William Newark.

Banaster's appointment as Master was formally ratified by Patent under Privy Seal dated Westminster, February 6, 1478, and is thus summarised in the printed Calendar of Patent Rolls of Edward IV. (p. 133):

Grant to Gilbert Banaster of forty marks yearly from the petty custom in the port of London and ports and places adjacent for the maintenance, instruction, and governance of the boys of the Chapel of the Household from Michaelmas last, on which day he undertook these, so long as he shall have the same.

This grant was confirmed by the Act of Resumption, on February 28, 1483.

Edward IV. held Banaster in high esteem, and in 1481 granted him a corrody in the Priory of Holy Trinity, Norwich, confirmed to him on May 10, 1482 (Cal. Pat. Rolls, Edward IV., p. 307). He subsequently held corrodies from the Abbey of St. Benet Hulme and the Abbey of Bardney.

Richard III. also appreciated Banaster, and in the second year of his reign, September 16, 1484, issued a commission to John Melynek, Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, to impress men and boys for the King's Chapel. Under this commission, Melynek was empowered:

... to take and seize for the King all such singing men and children expert in the science of music, within all places of the realm, as well in cathedral churches, colleges, chapels, houses of religion, and all other franchised or exempt places, or elsewhere.

This grant has been incorrectly quoted by previous writers, and Rimbault gives the date 1485 instead of 1484. The original MS. of the grant will be found in the British Museum among the Harleian MSS. (433, fol. 189).

Richard III. died on August 22, 1485 (Battle of Bosworth), and Henry VII. effected the union of the two roses of York and Lancaster by his marriage, on January 17, 1486, to Elizabeth of York. By the Act of Resumption, Banaster had been confirmed in his patent 'for the exhibition, instruction, and governance of the children of the Chapel.' The number of children at this date was ten, and was continued all through this king's reign.

As was to be expected, the marriage of Henry VII. was the occasion of great celebrations. A long Latin Epithalamium was written by John de Gigliis, afterwards Bishop of Worcester, and a Latin Anthem in five parts, O Maria et Elizabeth, was composed by Banaster. This fine composition is now in the Eton College Library, and deserves the attention of the Carnegie Trust. It is interesting to add that there was also written an English Anthem, set to music by Thomas Ashwell* on this memorable occasion, commencing:

God save King Henry wheresoe'er he be,
And for Queen Elizabeth now pray we,
And for all her noble progeny.
God save the Church of Christ from any folly,
And for Queen Elizabeth now pray we.

After the marriage ceremony the King showed his appreciation of the services of the Chapel Royal by conferring various grants and corrodies on some of the Gentlemen, including William Newark and Thomas Worley. A new Dean was appointed in the person of Richard Hill, who on the Feast of Corpus Christi, 1486, permitted 'the singers of the King's Chapel' to assist at evening devotions in the Church of St. Margaret's, Westminster, under their Master, Gilbert Banaster. The King also made a grant to the Sub-Dean of the Chapel, Richard Surland, of the free chapel of St. Peter in the Tower of London.

In the autumn of the year 1486 Banaster fell ill, and his post as Master was temporarily filled by Laurence Squire, a priest-musician. Not long afterwards he retired formally, and a patent, during pleasure, was granted to Squire, at an annual salary of forty marks, on November 8, 1486. Banaster made his will on August 19, 1487, and died a few days later. His will was proved on January 31, 1488, and his three corrodies were granted (September 1, 1487) to Edward Jones, William Newark, and Thomas Worley respectively.†

Banaster was not only a composer but a poet, and there is still preserved a MS. Miracle of St. Thomas in Benet College Library, dated 1467, consisting of five seven-lined stanzas. The MS. forms part of the

* See article on Thomas Ashwell, No. XVIII. of this series (June number, 1921, page 408).

† The granting of these corrodies on September 1, 1487, makes it absolutely certain that Banaster died in the last week of August.

Chronicle of John Stone, 'Monk of Christ Church Canterbury, 1467.'

Among the compositions of Banaster still preserved are two charming Motets in the Pepys Collection, 1236, in the Magdalene College Library, Cambridge. One of these is a three-part Vos secle justi iudices, the other a two-part Alleluia Laudate. The Fayrfax MS., now in the British Museum (Add. MSS. 5468), contains one secular song by Banaster, namely, My feerful dreme.

Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright says that Banaster 'belongs to the school which is seen at its best in the work of Dr. Fayrfax,' and this opinion from an expert in Tudor music should be an incentive to the publication of the magnificent Fayrfax MS., which contains forty-nine songs to secular words for three or four voices.

TWO CURIOUS CASES OF VOICE FAILURE

BY E. W. SCRIPTURE, PH.D., M.D.

A professional singer came to me with the complaint that she could not hold a note properly and that she became rapidly tired in singing a song. With the laryngoscope I showed her her own vocal cords. In singing they closed together properly in the rear third (cartilaginous glottis), but failed to close in the remainder (muscular glottis). This indicated weakness in the muscles that stretch across the glottis. The problem was to find the cause of this weakness. I made a most careful examination of the lady's general condition, and found that not only the muscles used in breathing but all the muscles of the body were weak and flabby. The heart beat at sixty to the minute. There was also a rather peculiar condition of the skin. These symptoms pointed to a trouble known as 'thyroid deficiency.'

Just in front of the larynx there lies the thyroid gland. It produces some change in the blood that flows through it. This change is so important that when it is lacking, as in the cretins, the person is a dwarf idiot with coarse hair, bloated stomach, and thick skin. When the thyroid has been entirely removed by an operation the patient rapidly falls into a similar condition. In very many persons this gland is not doing its full duty. They do not show the marked abnormalities of those in whom it is lacking, but they are oppressed by a feeling of tiredness, mentally and bodily; there is not the spring and spontaneity that goes with an efficient thyroid. Their muscles are weak and rapidly become tired. The pulse is slow. They present just the picture of the singer described above.

It would have been quite wrong to advise this singer to take special vocal exercises for the cords. They were being overworked already, and should not be prodded to further over-exertion. Rest from singing would also have been quite wrong; no amount of rest could change the muscular condition. The one thing to do was to treat the cause, namely, the deficient action of the thyroid gland. Fortunately it is known that thyroid deficiency can be compensated by feeding with thyroid gland. By such feeding an idiot cretin can be made into a normal being. This lady was instructed to take thyroid tablets sufficient to compensate the deficiency. As a result her pulse became normal, and her muscles firmer and stronger. This included the vocal and breathing muscles. The glottis closed properly, and she could maintain her tone satisfactorily.

The second case had exactly the same complaint, namely, inability to hold a tone, and fatigue in singing. Examination showed that the cords came together for a moment but soon failed to close properly. A general examination showed that all the muscles of the body were tenser than normal; the face had a drawn and worried expression. All the reflexes were exaggerated. All responses were quick and nervous. The whole picture was one familiar to the specialist as one of 'nerves.' 'Nerves' is a trouble that has nothing to do with the nerves, but with the mind. This patient's mind was in a constant condition of anxiety and worry, with nothing really to worry about. Her lot in life was a most comfortable one, yet she was always anxious about something or other. This is the condition known as 'anxiety neurosis.' The anxiety, the worry, is there very strongly, but with no cause or justification that is known to the person himself. Nothing happens without a cause. Since the cause is not in the person's conscious mind, it must be in his unconscious self. For such a case there is only one cure. The unconscious cause must be found and brought into consciousness. Then the mind works off its proper reactions and the cause disappears. As long as this is not done there is no escape from the feeling of anxiety.

This was explained to the singer, but she thought she knew better. She said that there was nothing wrong with her mind, that her cords were out of order, that they should be treated, and that a bottle of medicine ought to do away with the worry. This is a frequent reply when the case is put before the person. His unconscious self does not want to part with its most precious possession—the matter that causes so much worry to the conscious self. As long as it can control the conscious self, it will force the person to keep away from treatment.

Curiously enough this lady's friends recognised the difficulty. Her singing was so painful to them that they begged that she should be either cured or forbidden to sing. Nothing could be done for the lady, and she went to seek someone 'who understood her better.'

It is of interest to note that both these ladies blamed their instructors for over-straining their vocal cords, presumably on the principle that when you cannot succeed in singing you must blame somebody for it, but never yourself. No instruction and no exercises could ever have taught these ladies to sing successfully until their general ailments had been cured.

Ad Libitum

BY 'FESTE'

Arnold Bennett's second series of Things that have Interested Me (Chatto & Windus) contains some musical references that invite comment. The chapter that sets out to show up a chamber concert audience is entertaining, especially as on the whole it shows up Mr. Bennett himself. His objection to all the London concert-halls (except the Westminster Central) on the score of ugliness may or may not be well-founded. The acoustic properties of a concert-hall matter so much more than its appearance that the Central Hall—which Mr. Bennett finds 'beautiful'—must be counted among the partial failures. Like the Albert Hall, it is a bit of a gamble; much depends on where you happen to sit. On one occasion at the Central Hall I heard most of the solo work in duplicate. For the first few moments I really thought that some wag at the back was echoing the singer, but it turned out to be merely a particularly stout and satisfying echo. So uncannily clear was it that I was reminded of the prisoner at the Old Bailey (where, you will remember, there is, or was, a striking echo), who was staggered to hear the judge's sentence of six months' hard-labour immediately followed by a ghostly voice repeating the dose. (The inventor of this story, anxious to make a good job of it, went on to tell us that the prisoner asked faintly if the sentences were to run concurrently!)

Mr. Bennett finds the Wigmore/Æolian 'marvellously ugly.' (I mention both because I know it was one of them; I happened to be at the concert which so bored and annoyed Mr. Bennett.) But hideous as the hall was to him, the audience was even more repellent. It struck me as a collection of ordinary, decent folk, not ill to look on; but to Mr. Bennett they were 'in the main, ugly, Calvinistic, peculiar, or superior people.' 'Why,' asks Mr. Bennett, warming up:

Why are the frequenters of serious concerts so alarmingly ugly? And why do their features usually denote harsh intellectuality and repudiation? Why have they the air of mummies who have crept out of the Pyramids in order to accomplish a rite? Why have they not the air of having come into a public-house to get a pint of beer?

The answer is that they have not come into a public-house to get a pint of beer. And when Mr. Bennett says that he came into the hall with the air of &c., he says the thing which is not. I saw the great man enter, and I can assure him that he showed no more gusto than the rest of us. He goes on:

I shall have more faith in the thesis that the English are a musical nation when I see in the features of audiences an adventurous look indicating a secret feeling that they ought not to be there, instead of a solemn, haughty look, indicating a secret assurance of entire righteousness.

But would Mr. Bennett have us go into a public-house showing a secret feeling that we ought not to be there? I can't make this square with the gusto he demands a few lines farther back. And isn't the appearance of an audience slender evidence on which to estimate the musical standing of a nation?—especially a nation so undemonstrative as the English. They are hardly likely to go to a concert with faces expressing almost as much as Lord Burleigh's nod.

Mr. Bennett was put off by the programme no less than by the audience. The Haydn Quartet which opened the ball made him wonder 'whether Haydn ever knew what the French Revolution was.' With as much reason we may wonder whether dozens of composers, writers, and painters of to-day knew what the European war was. If we are to rule out all the art that does not reflect recent cataclysms, we are likely to go a bit short. Anyway, Mr. Bennett has little use for 'Papa':

I don't mind helping to play either his Symphonies or his Quartets in four-hand un pianistic pianoforte transcriptions—it is a bit of a lark—but that a distinguished foreign quartet [the Flonzaley, if I remember aright] should get passports to England, and come to England and hire a hall and advertise themselves in order to play a Haydn Quartet, struck me as monstrous. I am convinced that the day is coming when Papa Haydn will be spoken of as we now speak of Diabelli, or Mendelssohn, or Spohr, or Clementi.

If Mr. Bennett can see no more in Haydn than in Diabelli, Clementi, and Spohr, he has missed a good deal that so keen an amateur ought not to miss. And the bracketing of Mendelssohn with Clementi and Diabelli is eccentric—especially just now, when there is a distinct reaction in Mendelssohn's favour.

The Haydn Quartet was followed by a late Beethoven, and again Mr. Bennett was bored. Nor was he the only one:

During this Quartet a musical critic sat down near me and carefully perused the Sackbut. When he had done reading the Sackbut, and before the end of the Quartet, he departed again. I thought, 'His article will probably be absurd, but he is a better critic than I had imagined.'

Why should the critic's article be absurd? Because he stayed but a short time and read the Sackbut? Or because he was a better critic than Mr. Bennett imagined? Or, ipso facto, because he was a musical critic?

When the third and final item proved to be yet another classical Quartet, it was the last straw: it drove Mr. Bennett out, and he went to the Palladium:

No sign there on the faces of the audience that they imagined they were doing duty to art or proving themselves the favoured of heaven.

Marvellous! To think that a chamber concert audience should differ so in demeanour from a gathering at a variety show!

I have seen this passage quoted by admiring reviewers as a proof that something is lacking in musicians. Yet the whole of this paper of Mr. Bennett's is based on a fallacy so obvious that one almost hesitates to point it out. Mr. Bennett apparently forgets that the audiences at the Palladium and the concert-hall overlap. I am sure Mr. Bennett enjoys a Palladium show no more than I do, and there are plenty of serious musicians who share our taste. But none of us expect to find cause for mirth, or even for any violent demonstrations of pleasure, at a chamber concert, where the pleasure is almost entirely intellectual. Nor, on the other hand, do we sit with impassive faces at the Palladium while Ella Shields sings about Burlington Bertie (who rose at ten-thirty). 'If Mr. Bennett had remembered that a good proportion of the two gatherings are interchangeable, and that, to a considerable extent, he was merely seeing the same kind of people in widely different environments, he might have spared us his wide-eyed wonder. As for that glass-of-beer analogy, let Mr. Bennett observe some of us at Queen's Hall on the night of any orchestral concert. At eight o'clock he will see us drop into our seats with no apparent sign of pleasure, and we shall sit like that until the interval. Then, if he will follow us to the refreshment bar, he will find us calling for beer in a manner befitting that noble viand.

However, Mr. Bennett may be forgiven this bad shot for the sake of his shrewd remarks on the production of Wagner at the B.N.O.C.'s season at Covent Garden. Here he is at home, because the matter is mainly one of artistic commonsense; most people who have to do with the production of opera seem to have arrived late when that quality was being handed out. Mr. Bennett sums up the case aptly when he says that the Company needs 'an expert stage director equally versed in all the arts (except music) which are brought into play':

If such a man had only half the exquisite sense of beauty which Eugène Goossens shows in rendering the orchestral music, opera at Covent Garden would develop instantly into a new phenomenon.

It need hardly be said that Mr. Bennett is among those who want an axe taken to Wagner:

Except Rheingold, all Wagner's operas are an hour too long—and some of them an hour and a-half too long . . . After 'The Twilight of the Gods' the spectator leaves the theatre a broken mortal, humbly acknowledging in the composer a destroyer.

But why except Rheingold?

One word about the audiences. Mr. Bennett says 'their behaviour was very good. . . . They were artistic and earnest, with a dash of high-browism.' Clearly, then, they had not the air of having come into a public-house for a glass of beer, nor did they show that 'night-out' feeling which so pleased Mr. Bennett in the Palladium audience. The inconsistency in Mr. Bennett's views on the deportment of audiences is explained by the simple fact that he is a devotee of opera, and hates classical chamber music.

One last quotation, showing that Mr. Bennett's devotion to opera is in spite of a good deal of boredom. Writing of Parsifal, he says:

Lots of it is inflated tushery. I have always thought so, and now I think so more than ever. There were moments, there were quarters of an hour, when I was so excruciated by the show that had I been a soprano I should have screamed. My poor Gurnemanz, I dreadfully sympathised with you, babbling in the middle register your endless banalities.

I wonder how this strikes Mr. Norman Allin, who says Gurnemanz is one of his favourite parts.

Things that have Interested Me is a book to read, though much of it is poorly written for an author of Mr. Bennett's standing—so poorly that its inclusion in a list headed 'Belles-Lettres' seems almost ironical. Its cocksure shrewdness makes for lively reading, but we lay it down with a wish that Mr. Bennett would leave this kind of journeyman work for the crowds of other writers who can do nothing better. When we think of An Old Wife's Tale and The Card we grudge Mr. Bennett's toying with belles-lettres that are only occasionally lettres and never belles.

It is to be hoped that the encore fiends—on and off the platform—have read the moral of the disturbance at the Albert Hall on April 8. Some of the newspapers have described the interruption as bad manners. Very well; call it so, but remember that the bad manners had begun some time before. The first sample was delivered by the comparatively small section of the audience which continued to demand extra songs from Dame Clara Butt, disregarding the facts: (1) That the hour was late; (2) that the majority of the audience had come to welcome Sir Thomas Beecham back to the concert platform; and (3) that there was still to be played an orchestral work of about three-quarters of an hour's duration. The second sample came from Dame Butt herself, in her easy granting of the extra songs. And what songs they were! No wonder one stout fellow expressed the feelings of the majority by a stentorian,

'We want to hear the orchestra.' Of course the audience was split, and there were demonstrations and counter-demonstrations. It was very naive of Dame Butt to say to the Daily Mail man:

I was not annoyed by the interruption. It was not rudeness to me, but most people must have felt that it was very rude to the audience.

But the Dame ought to have been annoyed, for the remark was surely addressed to her rather than to the audience. It was a rebuke, and it had been thoroughly earned.

The only fault I have to find with the protester is that he did not lift up his voice a good deal earlier. It was better late than never, for, in the completest sense of the word, it dammed the flowing tide of ballads, but it was too late to give the last orchestral item a fair chance. A lot of people had to lose either the music or their train and tea, and the performance became a mere accompaniment to a steady exodus—a long out-voluntary.

The practical point emerges that there is only one way to stop the encore nuisance, and this is It. We must refuse to be put off by the talk of 'bad manners.' If a singer ignores the convenience of those who wish to hear the remainder of the programme, and persists in responding to encores demanded by a noisy minority, the majority must become noisy, too. As Ernest Newman wrote in the Sunday Times, apropos of the Albert Hall affair:

It is a perfectly easy matter to make any encore impossible, and there are circumstances under which encores should be made impossible. We should all regret a scene: it would look like a slight on the singer, whereas it would only be the demonstration of a principle and the assertion of a right; and where principles and rights are concerned the feelings of individuals are not to be considered.

Of course there are times when the encorists may be given their fling—at ballad concerts, for example, or in the second half of a promenade concert. Such occasions are frankly commercial. The concert-givers have songs to sell, the singers are engaged to show the audience what nice songs they are, and the audience is on the look-out for just that type of nice song. Let no one complain if they make the meal an orgy. Those of us who have no use for such fare need not be present. But if the ballad-hungry souls stray into orchestral concerts, drawn not by the orchestra but by some Queen of Song, they must learn to moderate their transports. And if they and their idols are so ill-mannered as to delay and upset the balance of the programme, they must not complain if tempers are lost and rude things are said. Incidentally, the Albert Hall affair shows the danger of trying to cater for two publics at once. It is a melancholy fact, and the severest indictment of singers as a body, that in a general way the people who go to hear music and the people who go to hear a singer are worlds apart, and cannot be brought together without risk of a mild kind of faction fight.

Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch took a happy line in regard to applause at one of his concerts of old music a few days ago. He began the proceedings by saying that no applause was required. He did not wish the ugly noise of hand-clapping to disturb the mental atmosphere induced by the beautiful old music he and his family were about to play. Still, you were allowed to express your satisfaction. If you liked a piece you raised one hand; if you liked it very much you put up both. This is a kind of 'hands up' which has everything to be said for it. It is a far better gauge of an audience's feelings, for a glance shows whether the hands be few or many, whereas in applause a small number of people may make a great noise. And there is an additional advantage; it takes but a few applauders to make it impossible for a conductor to get on with the next item, but these few may hold up both hands (and feet, too, if violently moved) and keep them up, while the programme is again got under way. We hope to see Mr. Dolmetsch's soothing, simple, and time-saving idea taken up.

Poor old London has been in hot water again. The audiences at the Wolverhampton Choir's concert were small, so there has been the usual outcry that the Thames-side townlet is not musical. But people's musicality can be no more gauged by their attendance at concerts than by Mr. Arnold Bennett's childlike test of facial expression. Thousands of people who never, or very rarely, go to concerts, make and enjoy as much music as those who do, and have a far jollier time in the process.

There is almost certainly more musical activity to the square mile in the London district than in any other part of the country. Some fine day I shall try to collect statistics as to the local choral and operatic societies, amateur chamber music parties, and amateur orchestras that flourish round the metropolis. Certainly there appear to be more amateur orchestras in London than in all the rest of England put together—a fact that carries more weight than anything else. And the futility of basing hasty conclusions on head-counting at Queen's Hall is easily shown. Several of the concerts given at the Bournemouth Festival were poorly attended, but nobody rushed forward with a wail that Bournemouth was unmusical. I have read of sparse attendances at fine concerts given at Manchester, but Manchester's repute as one of the most musical cities in the world did not suffer a scrap. And I was tickled to read on the same page of the Birmingham Post two articles by the same critic, (a) a report of the Wolverhampton Choir concert, wherein we were told that London, having stayed away from Queen's Hall in dense crowds, could no longer be regarded as a musical city; and (b) an account of the Beecham concert at the Albert Hall, in which the writer said that the crowded attendance (the Albert Hall wants some filling!) led to a different conclusion as to musical London. Of course it leads to no conclusions whatever on this subject; it merely shows that one concert is more attractive than another. A long programme of unaccompanied choral music, by a practically unknown provincial choir, and with only one work of first importance (the Vaughan Williams Mass), is not likely to draw London on a sunny Saturday afternoon in Easter week, whereas an orchestral concert, with Sir Thomas Beecham once more at the helm, is a draw so powerful that only the Albert Hall can hold all who want to be present.

If Herr Eugen d'Albert and his agents really feel that his recital at Queen's Hall was the 'triumph' they afterwards announced it to be they are easily satisfied. The attendance was described by The Times as 'very small,' and the critical verdicts were not wildly enthusiastic. The fact is, the Herr is not persona grata here. We have welcomed—even slobbered over—other German artists since the war, so his unpopularity is not due to his being a German—even one of the second-hand naturalized variety. Nor do we think the worse of him for sticking up for his adopted country during the war. But he should have done the sticking-up without spitting at the country in which he was born, and to which he owed his early musical education, including the scholarship which enabled him to go to the Continent.

In 1914 he spat thus: (I quote the translation given in The Times)

Unfortunately I studied for a time in that land of fog, but during this period I learnt absolutely nothing, and if I had stayed longer in England I should have been ruined. It is my firm conviction that the system of music-teaching in England is such that every talent based upon it must be destroyed. I only began to live when I left that horrible country, and I still live only for the true and glorious German art.

Of course the Herr is entitled to his opinions, and if he really felt like that, he can hardly be blamed. But he cannot have things both ways, and if he comes back to the horrible country expecting a warm welcome and fat box-office receipts, he is likely to be disappointed. We are an easy-going people, with shortish memories for insults, but they are not short enough for this. Let the Herr go home, and continue to live only for the true and glorious German art.

The Musician's Bookshelf

NEW WORKS ON THEORY

In his Manuale di Musica (Hoepli, Milan) Gustavo Magrini has attempted an almost impossible task. He has tried to confine in a single volume essential information on such wide subjects as musical instruments, acoustics, theory, harmony, singing, pianoforte-playing, history, concluding with a dictionary of celebrated musicians. In the circumstances it is not easy to decide whether to congratulate him for what he has done or to take him to task for what he has left undone. No doubt it would have been impossible to give in a work of this nature more than a very summary account of theory. But why are seventy-odd pages devoted to harmony and only five to counterpoint and fugue? In the admirable chapter on pianoforte-playing the author has amassed an extraordinary wealth of useful precepts, and both the clearness of the exposition and the choice of material deserve praise. The chapters on instruments and history, however, are much in need of revision. The omission of Kreisler amongst violinists, of Casals amongst 'cellists, of Schweitzer, Spitta, and Roland amongst critical writers cannot be justified by claims of others, for these are the leaders in their special field. Nor can I see why Signor Magrini, while admitting Rubinstein amongst the composers of Russian opera, has ignored Moussorgsky and Rimsky-Korsakov. The violin, even in the hands of the orchestral player, has a wider range than is assigned to it here; also we are told that the maximum range of the horn reaches to G  and that the last notes are rarely employed, and possible only to 'players of distinction.' If this were true, Strauss's Don Juan would be impossible of performance—and Strauss is the son of a 'distinguished' horn-player! It is no less astonishing to learn that drum and cymbals—except in the rarest of cases—are not used independently. It is also curious that an Italian historian should devote fourteen lines to Rubinstein and five to Busoni, four to Stradivari and nine to Bériot. But considering the narrow boundaries of this dictionary, the most remarkable thing about it is that it should be no more inadequate than it is.

Il Bel Canto (Hoepli, Milan) of Vittorio Ricci gives us a golden treasury of the dicta of famous singers, teachers of singing, and specialists. Garcia, Lamperti, Dr. Maude and Dr. Mackenzie, Sousky and the Brothers Escudier, Delle Sedie and J. J. Rousseau, jostle one another in their eagerness to impart information. There is something on tuning and accompanying, on hygiene and nervousness, on the nasal cavities and the abdomen; in fact everything interesting—no matter how distantly—to singers is here discussed or defined by a master of his craft. It is all learned and also intensely human. The medical men come off best on the whole for, of course, it is the business of physicians to give advice, and their training teaches them to mingle in just proportions unpalatable truths and humanity, kindness, and firmness. If you read Dr. Mackenzie on singing you will find him far more authoritative and actually attractive than the pontifical pronunciamientos of the often-quoted 'Method of the Paris Conservatoire.' The counsellors are so many and the subjects so wide that we feel sure all singers must find here something to treasure up, some cap designed to fit him or her. The only dictum the value of which appears doubtful, is one on 'practice'—for the author affirms that a singer who cannot please himself will never please others. This may be true or not true, but for our part we have never yet found a singer who could not please himself.

A work which perhaps does not carry out completely the promise of its admirable preface is Giulio Venezian's Teoria Generale Della Musica (Trieste, C. U. Trani). The author sets down the rules clearly and, usually, concisely, which is exactly what is needed in works of this nature. But while the preface shows, on the whole, a liberal and progressive attitude, the theoretical teaching stops short of all modernity. We can understand a certain reluctance in the harmonist who has to explain Stravinsky to his students. But the theoretical contributions of Reger, the works of the French schools, and of Schönberg, cannot be ignored. If teachers were to prepare their students for the great day when they shall see modernity face to face, there would probably be less uncritical enthusiasm, and evolution rather than revolt.

F. B.

Music Engraving and Printing. By William Gamble.

[Sir Isaac Pitman, 21s.]

This admirable book has a double claim, being both historical and technical. It owes its origin to the author's investigation (in the early days of the war) into the position of the music-printing industry in this country. Mr. Gamble came to the conclusion that one reason for the decline of English music engraving was the lack of easily accessible information on the subject. Technical books in plenty are to be had in connection with almost every craft, but until this volume appeared there was no English book on music printing, and only a small brochure in French. Mr. Gamble treats his subject in two parts, devoting five chapters to historical matter (with facsimile examples of great interest), and seventeen to technical details, with many illustrations. One or two points need correction.

On page 75 we are told that Messrs. Clowes have printed Hymns Ancient and Modern from the original edition in 1861 down to the present day, whereas the earliest editions were produced by Messrs. Novello, including the first Tonic Sol-fa edition (1864). The specimen of Miller & Richard's pearl-diamond music-type (page 175) bristles with errors in musical grammar, in addition to examples of bad ranging. Every bar has a slip of some kind. Mr. Gamble ends with a chapter on the present condition of the craft in this country. He is convinced that the facilities are now such as to make us independent of foreign work, and (even more important) that the quality of English work is at least equal to anything produced abroad—an opinion that will be endorsed by all who are in a position to make full comparison. The revival of the industry in England will be materially helped by this excellent and attractively produced book. C. W.

The Unknown Truth about the Voice and its Development. (From the author, 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N. 1s.)

Few musicians will disagree with the statement in E. Davidson Palmer's little book that 'thousands of voices are being injured and rendered useless for singing purposes by pseudo-scientific and other methods based on a wrong foundation,' and that of these voices the tenor is the chief sufferer. When, however, the writer goes on to declare that on the subject of voice-production the whole musical world is in darkness, and speaks of 'the great fundamental error which underlies all the recognised systems of voice-training,' he naturally expects his opinions to be received with incredulity, and, possibly, ridicule. Briefly stated, this little pamphlet is an attempt to substantiate the theory that the vigorous and persistent exercise of the chest register in the training of male voices is a mistake and injurious to the voice, and that all training should be based on the development downwards of the so-called falsetto or head-voice. After briefly considering the theories of, e.g., Garcia and Behnke, on the subject of registers, and ranging himself on the side of the late Sir Morell Mackenzie and other authorities in support of a 'two-register' theory, the author proceeds to discuss a number of 'unknown facts,' from which we quote:

... where two registers are discernible, if the upper register be carried downwards as far as it will go, and energetically exercised, the result is that both registers are benefited.

And, again:

... the voice commonly called falsetto is capable of the most extraordinary development from its upper limit downwards throughout its whole range, and may be strengthened and extended to the bottom of the vocal compass, and so completely transformed as to lose the falsetto quality and resemble in fulness and power the ordinary chest register, from which it is then hardly distinguishable, except by its superior quality and the perfect ease with which it is produced.

In support of these statements the writer describes with considerable detail his own vocal experiences, and refers to his successful experiments with 'other and much better voices.' The whole matter is summed up thus:

The perfect voice is produced by only one laryngeal mechanism throughout its whole compass, and the mode of its production is identical with that of the so-called falsetto.

With regard to the beneficial influence which the exercise of the head register has over the lower or chest register, the author remarks that this is a fact which can easily be verified :

Let any man who uses the chest register exclusively try the effect of resting this voice for a few months, and exercising in place of it, at not too high a pitch, the other voice—the voice which he probably calls falsetto. Then let him go back to the chest voice, and see whether it is not all the better for this novel treatment.

Perhaps some of our male readers, particularly tenors, may feel disposed to put Mr. Palmer's theories to the test by practical experiment.

G. G.

Voice-production and Breathing. By J. Hugh Williams.

[Sir Isaac Pitman, 3s. 6d.]

In a preface to this handy little book for speakers and singers, the author remarks that many books appear to be written more from the master's point of view than the pupil's, and in terms which the student's lack of experience and lack of familiarity with the subject often make ambiguous, and sometimes misleading. He has therefore avoided technicalities so far as possible, and at the risk of a certain amount of repetition has endeavoured to make things clear to the ordinary student. A curious lapse occurs, by the way, in the opening page, where the writer speaks of 'painting the rose or gilding the lily'; or does some subtle intention lie at the back of this paraphrase of Shakespeare?

The work is intended primarily for teachers, clergymen, actors, elocutionists, and speakers in general, but we agree with the author that singers will find herein a basis on which—of course under the direction of a master—the singing voice may be naturally and easily developed. Mr. Williams's views on breathing are sane and sound, and will be generally approved. While agreeing that a large breath capacity is greatly to be desired from every point of view, the author reminds the student that ... good breath-control is even more to be desired; for a capacity which is only moderate, but is under perfect control, can be used more easily and effectively than a larger capacity which is not under good control.

A warning is given against unnecessarily deep breathing when actually singing or speaking:

Nor should the inspiration be so full as in breathing exercises, except for special requirements. Smaller and more frequent breaths will be found better for normal requirements. . . . There is power in a sufficient body of breath, but there can be discomfort in too much.

Again :

Saying or singing too much on one breath is a not uncommon fault. It is sometimes thought to be clever, but it is hurtful to weak lungs and may possibly be just the little overstrain which reduces rather than increases the breath-control. . . . For the singer and speaker a good full breath never exceeds perfect ease and control.

A number of breathing exercises are given, together with a suggested programme outlining a scheme for their systematic practice.

Other chapters deal with 'The vowels: their enunciations and classifications,' 'Voice production,' 'Placing the voice,' 'Vocal exercises and how to do them,' 'The consonants: their use and classification,' and 'Common faults and difficulties.' An appendix contains a description with numerous diagrams of the mechanism and working of the organ of voice and a chapter on the training of children's voices. In the latter we are glad to read the following :

Faulty intonation is also caused by singing impure vowel sounds, and this latter is sometimes caused by the direction to sing with a 'rounded mouth.' It is very desirable that we should get 'round' and mellow tone, but do not instruct the children to get a rounded mouth if you really desire good enunciation and pure tone. What is needed, and should be asked for, is an open mouth and mobile or free lips, which should assist in the production of pure vowel sounds, appropriately shaping themselves for the required sounds. We must certainly prevent grimacing and distortions, but to use the same mouth-shape for all the vowels means the discoloration of all the sounds except that for which it is the proper shape.

Both students and teachers will find much that is helpful in this excellent little book which, by the way, is very well got up and strongly bound.

G. G.

Theoretical and Practical Treatise of the Violoncello, with an Introduction by Pablo Casals. By Diran Alexanian.

[Paris: Mathot.]

The special interest of this book is that it brings the technique of the violoncello up to date in accordance with the teaching of a master whom all agree in considering as the greatest violoncellist of our times. Casals, in his Preface, points out that most classical methods of violoncello-playing repeat the acknowledged rules and omit the technical formulæ current at the present period, so that 'written tuition clashes with practical tuition.' There can be no doubt that M. Alexanian is practical, first and last, and that he brings in many points which will be new not only to readers of theoretical books on violoncello-playing, but to not a few violoncellists.

Balance, he writes, should be acquired not by striving to ape any so-called ideal position of the bow-hand, but by discovering the way which best suits each particular type of hand. Strictly perpendicular bowing is the first requirement. In down-bow, contrary to a current practice, the whole of the arm should always be at work.

Slow emission is not conducive to purity of tone. In many cases, the writer tells us, a sharp impact of the finger on the string will usefully co-operate with the bowing.

A method of passing from degree to degree while avoiding the portamenti which so often prove detrimental to tone and style is shown, and special interest attaches to the remarks on the precautions which will enable the player to avoid the variations of colour which often accompany variations in intensity, especially when passing from string to string.

The vibrato is a most useful resource, but one very often misemployed. Upon this point, and upon the subtle alterations of pitch which the function of notes may demand (e.g., the third degree of the major scale should be slightly heightened in accordance with its attractive tendency, the fourth degree slightly lowered, and so forth), the writer has much to say which will undoubtedly prove beneficial.

The chapter on artificial harmonics is novel and instructive. It will prove useful to those who write for the violoncello as well as for those who play it.

This, all told, applies to several other chapters in the book, which considerably ekes out what the existing treatises of instrumentation have to say on the matter. All that M. Alexanian has to say denotes experience and thoughtfulness. The volume is well produced, and contains a wealth of examples, diagrams, and photographs. The English translation, by Mr. Frederick Fairbanks, is printed side by side with the original text.

M.-D. C.

New Music

SONGS

In his Songs from the Chinese (Durand et Fils, Paris) Blair Fairchild has endeavoured more to reproduce something of the essence of the old Chinese poems in his work than to reflect any characteristics of the ancient music of China. And despite their modern settings, he has succeeded, both with voice and accompaniment, in capturing much of the delicate colouring and subtle suggestion of the verse. The poems, pleasing and imaginative as the Chinese paintings at the British Museum, are by poets, some a hundred years before, others four hundred years after the beginning of, our era. The Eastern touch in the music of some of the songs is given in the rhythm and accent. The whole-tone progressions here and there seem more accidental than intended. The artistry of the songs consists in the restraint which has kept the composer from overloading his accompaniments, and in keeping the voice within intervals and with inflections which are almost in some cases speech-melody. This is notable in Plucking Rushes, in which the accompaniment suggests the trembling reed-beds so favoured by Chinese painters. The Red Cockatoo gives evidence of the grave sense of humour possessed by the poet who rejoices in the name of Po-Chu-T. The setting has the shadowy outlines and soft colour-splashes of a Chinese bird picture. The serene monotony of a still Eastern night in autumn is also faithfully reproduced in No. 3, Night, whilst the wistful pathos of Old Poem (100 B.C.) is applicable to any devastated home in our own era of recent warfare and violence. The poems are from the collection of the well-known exquisite translations of M. Waley; the French version by G. Lemierre.

Deux Chants populaires persans (Durand et Fils) are examples of two ancient Persian airs collected and harmonized by Blair Fairchild. The Persian words are printed together with a French translation by G. Lemierre. The Eastern insistent use of two or three melodic phrases is given an accompaniment reminiscent of the rhythmic sounds of their instruments of percussion. To pass from these Oriental songs to Roger Quilter's Over the land is April and In the Highlands (Elkin), to words by R. L. Stevenson, is like dropping out of torrid sunshine into cool, primrose-starred English glades and lanes. There is an ease and fitness in the way this composer merges his music into whatever words he has chosen. His apparent simplicity is evidence of a practised hand that calculates to a nicety the telling effect of melodic phrase and its underlying harmony. The result is that words and music are on equal terms of happy comradeship.

Eric Fogg's Dawn-Song (Elkin), a setting of a short prose poem of W. Donald Suddaby, is good only in parts. The middle section is commonplace, and unworthy of the beginning and end of the song.

A batch of songs, seven in number (Murdoch), do not call for any special comment. Leslie Woodgate's Abiding Joys and Primrose and Colombine are pleasing and among the best. Maud Wingate's Sweet Heart of Somerset and others by Donald Ford, Elise Elkan, James F. Stevens, and Constance Holt-Finney are tuneful and easy. They will prove popular with audiences suited to that particular type of song. Franco Leoni's Sand Castles and The Skylark (J. W. Larway), sung by Dame Clara Butt, are certain of wide public favour. An Album of Songs, by F. Leoni (Larway), are settings of bright little lyrics full of fun for kiddies and grown folk who want something simple and amusing. Of three songs from Enoch, O Mother Earth, by Beatrice Thornley, is well above the average. At Night is a sensuous love-song by Sir Landon Ronald, and I Shall Know has violin obbligato and is by Mana Zucca. In Brittany, by Arthur Baynon (Weekes), and Sunshine, by F. H. Cowen (Ascherberg), are pleasant and tuneful. Reconciliation, by Cyril Scott (Elkin), and In Dreams Fleeting (Elkin), by George Oldroyd, are much in the routine of the many songs that cannot lay any special claim to having left the beaten track. In Keats's La Belle Dame Sans Merci and Shelley's Ode to the West Wind (Editions Maurice Senart) Reginald C. Robbins has striven to give a more or less melodic declamation to the words, and has provided an accompaniment which emphasises and sustains them. Both the 'Ode' and the 'Ballad,' containing each of them sufficient matter for symphonic poems, are thus wisely left unhampered to reveal their own beauty which redundant melodic and harmonic accessories might easily have obscured.

In Le Pain Quotidien, by André Caplet (Durand et Fils), the well-known conductor has met a pressing need by the publication of fifteen exercises which should constitute the daily bread of the singer of modern opera and song or whose voice is requisitioned as an instrument in string quartet or orchestra. All the resources of the newer technique are exploited in these vocalises. Roland Manuel contributes a few words of introduction.

L. L.

ORGAN MUSIC

One of the best signs of the times is the marked demand for short voluntaries of good quality and of a moderate degree of difficulty. Until recently players with modest technique were usually content with feeble material, while good players with limited opportunity for practice were too often satisfied with inadequate performances of big works. As voluntaries are not essential parts of the service, but merely desirable extras, it is well to realise that they may be quite short and simple, but that they must be good music. We may even go so far as to say that they had better err on the side of dulness than of triviality. Here is a set of Three Short and Easy Pieces by F. W. Wadely (Novello) that escapes both pitfalls. The music is strong, well-written, convenient to register, and easy enough to be undertaken by players who can manage Bach's Eight Short Preludes.

and Fugues. Yet, like all good straightforward works, they are not to be despised by advanced players. Dr. Wadely has before shown his knack of writing such useful pieces, but these strike me as being better than the former set.

Four Intermezzi, by C. V. Stanford (Novello), belong to the same useful type of work. They consist of a pleasant Pastorale, a Marcia Eroica, a charming Hush Song, and a quiet, thoughtful treatment of the Londonderry Air. They are issued in separate numbers, and, like the Wadely pieces, would be invaluable for teaching purposes as well as for Church use.

William H. Speer's Sonata in F minor (Augener) is a serious, well-written work. There seems to be a want of contrast in the first movement—a more arresting second subject would have made all the difference—and the writing of the main part of the Pastorale is rather too thick. The Finale is excellent, a short introduction and a vigorous fugue, which gets better and better as it goes on. It would make a fine voluntary or recital number.

The name of Hope Leroy Baumgartner is unfamiliar, but if the promise held out by his Idyll (No. 2 of Op. 5) is maintained, he should soon become well known. It is a recital piece showing a good sense of colour, and with an agitato section that contrives to express a great deal without rising above a forte save for a few bars of climax. Perhaps the leading back to the first subject is a little too long delayed by some rather thin passages which depend overmuch on stop changing. This apart, the Idyll is a picturesque affair. It needs a good player and a good organ (H. W. Gray Co. ; Novello).

ORGAN ARRANGEMENTS

Most people agree that musical transcription has much in common with literary, and that its success depends chiefly on the adjustment of the idiom to the peculiarities of its new medium. Yet musicians (especially organ transcribers) rarely carry this sound principle into practice. They seem reluctant to change a note of the original, no matter how ineffective it may be in its new version. This applies especially to the transcription of complex orchestral music. Here, for example, is an organ arrangement, by Herbert Brewer, of the Introduction to The Kingdom. It may be doubted whether the opening part of this fine movement can be satisfactorily given save on a big orchestra, but there can be little question as to the ineffectiveness of a good deal of the music as here set forth for the organ. Had Dr. Brewer boldly simplified some of the more difficult passages, the player would have been able to produce a far better effect with less than half of the trouble.

At the pace marked (crotchet=144), the manual work is in places forbiddingly difficult, and in the average acoustic conditions would be ineffective. The bare outline of some of the more rapid passages would have halved the difficulty and doubled the effect. Again, on page 3, we have the right hand playing triplets while the pedals are busy with leaping tenths in duplets. But as the upper notes of these leaps are already present in the left-hand chords—though in a different tone-colour—and the pitch of the pedal is 8-ft., surely a plain staccato crotchet bass giving the lower notes only would have been hardly less telling, besides being easy to play. The beautiful second portion of the Prelude is well adapted for organ use. For the matter of that, the quick section can also be made into striking organ music, but only after its texture has received more modification than Dr. Brewer felt disposed to give it.

In arranging his Fantasia on March Themes Edward German has been content to produce a version that any good average player will find comfortable. I have not an orchestral score at hand, so I am unable to see how far the composer has modified the material, but he has certainly given us an arrangement so well suited to the organ that most of it suggests no other instrument. The Fantasia will make a capital concert-hall recital piece. It suffers, like most march music, from an overdose of fanfarish material—effective on an orchestra because of the drums and the variety of wind instruments available, but merely footling on the organ. Players will easily find a way of cutting these passages, especially as the work is on the lengthy side.

Some arrangements by Henry G. Ley (Stainer & Bell) call for more discussion than space will allow. Dr. Ley has arranged a series of extracts from the works of Vaughan Williams—the slow movements from the London and Sea Symphonies, Alla Sarabanda from the Phantasy Quintet for strings, and the Antiphon from Five Mystical Songs. (The two last-named are under one cover.) The most successful appears to be the Sea Symphony excerpt, which lends itself well to the organ, especially from the Poco meno mosso onwards; the more so as a good deal of the harmony has an ecclesiastical flavour. It is fairly easy to play and register. The slow movement from the London Symphony is far more difficult, especially in regard to registration. Dr. Ley makes some extremely interesting and skilful attempts to reproduce the orchestral idiom. The drum effects (by means of double, and, in one case, triple pedal) are very striking. There is a lot of thumbing—a risky expedient to depend on to such an extent, seeing that on some otherwise excellent organs the hang of the keyboard makes it extremely difficult, if not impracticable. Some of the registration clearly calls for an assistant, e.g., on page 7, where a 16-ft. has to be added to the pedals while both hands and feet are busy, the latter with triple pedalling. (By the way, a nuance by means of the Swell pedal is called for while the feet are playing these three-part drum chords, so here is another little job for the assistant!) Clearly the arrangement is one for players with ample facilities. Given these, a capital sketch of the orchestral version could be produced. Even without them, however, much could be done; for, after all, every player has to 'tinker' published arrangements, more or less. A transcription of an orchestral work is merely a condensed version of the score, and no organist who knows his job need hesitate to add or subtract as the needs of his instrument and building require. The other Vaughan Williams arrangements are less satisfactory. Alla Sarabanda is a very short and simple piece which, despite its plainsong idiom, is far better suited to strings than organ. The Antiphon is an ungrateful organ piece, as is usually the case with fine songs; the better the song the greater its dependence on voice and text.

Dr. Ley has also arranged some of Handel's operatic Overtures—Arminius, Orlando, Justin, and Julius Caesar. These energetic and tuneful works are well worth revival. They are so strong and clear in rhythm that they make valuable studies, and are the best of tonics for a player inclined to sloppiness in style. The registration is simple, and the texture generally slight. Dr. Ley might well have added a little filling-in here and there. No doubt something of the kind was done in Handel's day by the harpsichord. Best was perhaps inclined to overdo such filling-in, but his instinct was sound, for the music is generally of a character that demands a good deal of tone—far more than is suggested by the small and sketchy force that did duty in the theatre in Handel's time. The best of the Overtures under notice are, I think, Orlando, with its truly delightful Gigue, and Arminius, which contains some striking harmonic touches, especially at the end of the fugue, where there is an extraordinary plunge on to a second inversion of C major (the key of the movement is B minor). This Overture ends with a dainty Minuet. Dr. Ley's series of arrangements includes also a version of the Adagio ma non tanto from Bach's sixth Brandenburg Concerto, the transcriber being E. W. Allam. I venture to say that he has stuck too closely to the original in giving the pedal part a practically unbroken series of crotchets. Bach writes his bass on two staves, (a) violoncello, and (b) violone (i.e., double-bass) with cembalo, giving the crotchet movement to the 'cello and a simplified version of the bass to the violone. In transcribing the movement for the organ it would surely be more faithful to the spirit of the original to use a pedal of 16-ft. and 8-ft. pitch, giving it a compromise between the two string bass parts of Bach, using minims only, with a few crotchets at points where the upper parts became thin or slow. This movement is so organ-like in feeling that it is a pity the transcription does not bring out its character by a more courageous adaptation. Mr. Allam has made not an arrangement, but a copy, and an incomplete copy at that, seeing that he has omitted Bach's slow moving 16-ft. bass—the feature that balances the structure by providing contrast to the crotchet and quaver movement of the upper parts.

H. G.

EASY PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Side Shows, by Gerrard Williams (Winthrop Rogers, 2s. 6d.), is a suite of two-part pianoforte pieces 'for children, young and old,' as the title-page puts it. These quaintly-written little pieces, five in number, are quite easy to play, although the flavour is decidedly modern. It is possible that there are youngsters, both old and young, to whom they will appeal, but frankly we cannot be counted among them. At any rate they provide capital practice in two-part playing, and it would be interesting to know what the average pupil thinks of them.

Under the title Bach and the Old Masters (Weekes, 2s.), Irene Bien has collected a number of easy pieces for young pianists in the elementary stage. They consist mainly of little dance movements from the works of J. S. Bach, P. E. Bach, Mattheson, Kirnberger, Zipoli, Handel, and Haydn. These pieces, we are told, are not adaptations, but are reproduced unaltered, and with the original expression marks, &c. They are well set out and fully fingered, and make an attractive set.

Edgar Moy's Fanciful Sketches (Winthrop Rogers, 2s. 6d.) consist of seven little pieces melodiously written and straightforward in style. They provide useful recreation for elementary pupils. For little pianists of very slender attainments M. E. Marshall has written ten easy pieces under the title of Happy Little People (Bosworth). The tunes are provided with words, and both words and music are calculated to appeal to little players.

From Elkin come two books of pieces by Ernest Austin which may be cordially recommended. Moods and Melodies consists of seven easy pieces, prefaced by a composer's note giving hints on their rendering. Of a higher grade of difficulty are four pastorals under the title Meadowland and Mountain. Still another work by the same composer is Book 2 of Playtime Pieces (Larway). From a Preface by Kathleen Boland we learn that this book has been compiled as an aid to the pianoforte teacher and to foster the love of music in the mind of the child. Each piece is preceded by a little lecture by the composer describing some of the features of the music with a view to securing the pupil's interest and developing his power of appreciation. Teachers will be glad to know that this book is the first of a series.

Teachers who have to deal with beginners will be glad to know that Walter Carroll's Musical Exercises for the pianoforte, which first appeared in Music and Youth, may now be obtained in one book (Forsyth, 3s.). To each of these delightful little studies is added a foot-note explaining the object of the exercise and giving directions as to methods of practice, &c.

The same composer's In Southern Seas (Forsyth, 3s.) is a set of nine pieces of a slightly higher grade of difficulty than the popular Forest Fantasies and Sea Idylls. They are varied in style, and provide useful practice both for nimble finger-work—as in the frisky 'By Dimpled Pool' and the 'Samoan's Dance'—and for expressive playing and use of the pedal as required in such charming things as 'Spray mist' and 'The Isle of Palms.'

Two books of studies with the title Picturesque Technique, by Julia A. O'Neill (Stainer & Bell, 1s. 6d. each), are for fairly advanced players. These are really studies, each with some definite technical aim. The harmonic basis is generally simple, and much use is made of sequential treatment, so that, as the composer suggests, they should be found a good medium for memory training. Some of the studies are for a single hand. The whole make an interesting set well worth the attention of serious students.

Geoffrey Shaw's 'Six Duets' (Novello, 3s.) are simple and effective arrangements of old English, Scotch, Irish, and Welsh melodies. They include such well-known things as Felton's Gavotte, Silent O Moyle, Wi' a hundred pipers, &c. Although very easy, they are not for absolute beginners. For purposes of rhythm and phrasing, and for practice at either end of the keyboard these little duets will be found very useful.

G. G.

VIOLIN MUSIC

There are sceptics who maintain that nothing can be made of the well-known French composer Fauré. Maurice Ravel in his Berceuse sur le nom de Fauré, for violin and pianoforte (Durand et Fils, Paris) goes a long way to prove it. To the letters of which the name of Gabriel Fauré consist, he has adapted with great ingenuity corresponding note symbols, and these are applied to a rhythmic design from the melody of the berceuse—most restless (harmonically) and most commonplace (melodically) of all berceuses. It is almost incredible that the same hand that wrote Ma Mère l'Oie should also have written this quib. If there is a deadly feud between Messrs. Ravel and Fauré, and if this is by way of a retort courteous from Ravel, we can only say that the public at large is not likely to be interested in the slightest in these family affairs. If, on the other hand, we are meant to take this seriously as a product of Ravelesian art, we must express our concern at the new twilight of the gods.

Mr. John R. Heath's poem In the heart of the country (Chester) is a curious medley. Much of it shows a distinct penchant, a good grasp of modern methods, and also an incredible belief in the virtue of old symbols. It is not surprising to find a considerable number of long trills in a work of a quasi-pastoral character. The trill is 'only the note of a bird,' and birds are plentiful in the heart of the country. But was Tosca also taking the air in the forest, or was it simply memories of Tosca that suggested the recurring chord progression of the 'poem' so strongly reminiscent of the chords that usher in the Puccinian opera? B. V.

CHORAL MUSIC

Music for male-voice choirs is so often third-rate in quality that it is a pleasure to come across such admirable examples as Thomas F. Dunhill's four new part-songs for T.T.B.B.—Who is Sylvia? The Wind and the Rain (the clown's song from Twelfth Night), Come away, death, and It was a Lover (Novello). The first-named is the easiest, and as it contains no division of parts, it would serve well for quartet purposes. The clown's song brings out to the full the whimsical text. Come away, death calls for fine basses; given these, the low divisi part should be very impressive. The rhythmic and time-value difficulties in this song are considerable. In It was a Lover, a delightful tune in the first tenor is accompanied by delicate pattering of the under parts. Except for Who is Sylvia? these songs are difficult, but skilful choirs will find the results good value for any amount of trouble.

From Messrs. Curwen comes a further batch of splendid old madrigals, in the edition of Sydney Grew. The edition has been discussed already, so there is no need to do more than draw attention to these latest numbers. There are about twenty—too many to particularise. I will draw attention only to the delightful Canzonets of Morley—models of two-part writing and of captivating tunefulness. They should be taken up by all girls' schools and clubs.

H. G.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

This month's records are unusually light in character. Here is a batch of five 12-in. d.-s. records of Polly, with about half-a-dozen songs on each side. One of the records gives a selection of the songs arranged for orchestra. This, I think, is easily the best of the bunch. After all, in such works as Polly and The Beggar's Opera the musical interest is centred in the tunes. The words are of little account when heard away from the stage performance. On the gramophone they rarely come through, and as most of the songs are either of the rapid, pattering type, or of a disputatious, scolding character, they sometimes spoil our pleasure in the music. All the records are extremely enjoyable, but the full charm of Frederic Austin's treatment of them is heard only in the purely instrumental record. His arrangements are as good as anything we have had from Respighi, or Stravinsky, or any other fashionable foreign ballet arranger. Perhaps they are better, because with all their ingenuity, they are perfectly natural. Mr. Austin conducts all the performances recorded in this batch. I feel that these Polly records beat those of The Beggar's Opera owing to the superiority of both music and arrangement. The singing, however, is not so good. There is no Ranalow, and Lilian Davies is either less good than the critics say she is, or the records do her something less than justice. There is a sense of effort in her high notes, and her singing generally lacks the simplicity and easefulness that these old tunes demand. However, as I am one of the few people who have not heard Polly in the theatre, I must not judge a singer too positively on her records, as a recent law-suit shows. The H.M.V. are to be congratulated on this lively lot.

Lilac Time has made so many friends that there should be a warm welcome for the records just issued by Æ.-Voc. There are four 12-in. d.-s., giving songs and duets sung by Clara Butterworth, Percy Heming, and Courtice Pounds; and a 10-in. d.-s. with three Waltz Tunes and the Dance of Bridesmaids and Children, played by the Regent Orchestra, conducted by Clarence Raybould. Charming as these Schubert extracts are, I cannot help feeling that they sound a trifle tame after the spice and snap of the Polly music.

The Brandenburg Concerto in G (the popular No. 3), played by the Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Eugène Goossens, has been recorded by the H.M.V. It is on three sides of two 12-in. d.-s., the fourth side being filled by the Air on the G string. These are two particularly enjoyable records. What heartening music is the first movement of the Concerto! The finale falls away somewhat, but the value of the second record is more than maintained by the Air. A curious trick of the gramophone in this movement is its giving the pizzicato effect rather as a staccato with the bow. There is little of the drum-like sound we get at first-hand.

There are some good chamber music and violin records. The London String Quartet plays H. Waldo Warner's Quartet in C minor and his Phantasy Quartet, two 12-in. d.-s., the Quartet filling three of the sides. These are unusually good reproductions. One has so often had to complain of the lack of clearness in records of this kind that it is pleasant to be able to give high praise for so good a reproduction of the texture (H.M.V.).

A capital record is Handel's Sonata in D, No. 4, played by Isolde Menges and a pianist whose name ought to have figured on the label. Too often the pianoforte part in such music is an apologetic background with the harmonic basis only a shadow. Here it is put in its right place, without being obtruded, and the fact has a good deal to do with the very successful result (H.M.V., two 10-in. d.-s.).

Franck's Sonata for violin and pianoforte has been recorded by Æ.-Voc. I presume the whole Sonata has been done, but a record of the Recit. and Finale only has reached me. The latter is the more enjoyable of the two movements. The players are Phyllis Allan and Ethel Hobday. I don't know how far the recording, or my gramophone, is responsible, but the violin part suffers from a good deal of unevenness.

Kreisler is heard in Aucassin and Nicolette (H.M.V. 10-in.), a trifle of his own. (What a pity it is that we hear so little of this player in music worthy of him!)

The outstanding pianoforte record is a H.M.V. of Paderewski playing Liszt's tenth Rhapsody—outstanding because of the personality of the player, that is, for the music is a thing of vain twiddles. But how brilliant and pearly these twiddles become as thrown off by the one and only!

Schumann's delightful Romance and Mendelssohn's Prelude in D, Op. 104a, No. 3, played by Jeanne Marie Darre, are recorded on an Æ.-Voc. 10-in. d.s.—a good record, though the rapid left-hand work in the Prelude seems to have lost something on the journey. The Regent Orchestra is heard also in 'Fifinette' and 'Lubly Lu,' from Percy E. Fletcher's Three Light [and commonplace] Pieces (Æ.-Voc. 10-in. d.s.). A first-rate military band record is an Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.s., of the 1st Life Guards in Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2. The music comes out well in its new medium, and the woodwind playing is a delight.

Owing to shortage of space, some good average vocal and dance music records must be passed over, with brief mention of a few of the best: 'Comfort ye' and 'Every Valley,' sung by Lewis James, with orchestral accompaniment (Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.s.); 'Then shall the righteous' and 'If with all your hearts,' sung by Hardy Williamson, with orchestra (Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.s.; the singer has not resisted the temptation to sentimentality here and there, but otherwise sings and records excellently); 'Voi lo sapete,' from Cavalleria Rusticana, sung in Italian by Destournel, with orchestra (Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.s., explanatory notes on back); 'Un bel di vedremo,' from Madame Butterfly, sung by Galli-Curci (H.M.V. 12-in.); a sample of the much-talked of Maria Jeritza, in 'Elsa's Dream'—a very appealing bit of singing (H.M.V. 12-in.); Ivor Gurney's West Sussex Drinking Song and Austin's Molly of Donegal, sung by Ernest Butcher (H.M.V. 10-in. d.s.); H. M. Tennent's The Spring is in my Garden and Graham Peel's Go down to Kew in lilac-time, sung by Carmen Hill (H.M.V. 10-in. d.s.); and Simon the Cellarer, and a droll North Country folk-song, arranged by Lyell Johnston, Ould John Braddelum, sung by John Buckley (Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.s.). This last is one of the best vocal records I have struck for a long time. Every word comes through, and Mr. Buckley's singing is full of humour and point. We are apt to blame the gramophone for indistinct words, but when we hear such a record as this, we naturally ask the awkward question, 'If a few singers can record plain English plainly, why not all?' And when it is remembered that in the concert-room distinct enunciation is a rare and pleasant surprise instead of being the normal thing, we shall decide that, in a general way, the words rarely come out of the gramophone for the simple reason that they are rarely put in.

The third season of Sunday evening chamber concerts at Battersea Town Hall has been brought to a successful conclusion. It is proposed to run a series on more comprehensive lines next season, including eight orchestral and six chamber concerts. These concerts are under the direction of Mr. Frederick Woodhouse, and are carried on with the support of the Battersea Borough Council and the People's Concert Society.

Occasional Notes

The British Music Society is so valuable an organization that the pronouncements of its Bulletin carry, or should carry, a good deal of weight. This being so, we venture to complain that its review columns leave a good deal to be desired. In a recent issue Mr. Philip Heseltine wrote pointing out the inadequacy of its treatment of some important new works. This, however, is perhaps a less serious matter than its recommendation of a thoroughly bad book. In the February Bulletin, under the caption 'Books to look out for,' we find mentioned one that purports to 'make clear to its readers the characteristics of musical works and the difference which lie between them.' Here are a few quotations from the book that members of the B.M.S. are officially advised to 'look out for':

A symphony is a musical work for instruments only.

[A few pages later the author shows he is aware of at least one symphony with a choral section.] In each of the Beethoven Symphonies we find the same constructive skill that never leaves us grave too long, nor toyed with to triviality when the light-hearted Scherzo dances off the strings. But for this restraint—the sign of the true artist—we should perhaps be maddened by the more sublime movements that almost tell the secrets of Eternity. Yet another conviction that comes to us as we sit through a Beethoven Symphony, is that of its creator never having to economise his inspirations. It is wealth, wealth, all the time. So rapidly did themes grow one out of the other when symphony writing, that Beethoven even kept four manuscripts on hand at a time, walking from one to another on its stand to add the phrases appropriate to each as they fired his seething ara.

Of Schubert, we are told that his power of concentration was such that ... whole subjects [!] of his symphonies would be written while a street band played popular airs beneath his garret window.

Speaking of Schubert's C major Symphony, the author says:

It reads strangely that his C major Symphony, which now draws large audiences, would not even have had a hearing in his life-time but for the interest an influential friend had with a publisher.

It does, indeed, read strangely. The Symphony was never performed during the composer's life-time, and, unfortunately, it does not draw large audiences now, even though its performances are rare, and always with 'cuts.'

The author goes on to tell us that the C major

... almost divides honours with the pathetic one in B flat known as the 'Unfinished.'

Of the sonata form:

The name in its literal translation means 'little sound,' and under this humble title it grew in structure on Italian soil. Its early builders were Passacaglio, Corelli, Alessandro Scarlatti, and others of this famous school.

Among them no doubt being Ostinato and Ciaccona.

Apropos of pianoforte sonatas, Chopin is credited with one only, and we are told that Purcell's works 'in this direction are being revived at our recital concerts,' and that 'our modern English composers, too, reveal great activity in sonata writing.' This is certainly not the case so far as pianoforte sonatas are concerned.

Of old dance forms :

The ricandon—spelt sometimes rigaudon—is another dance that has inspired quaint reposeful themes.

It has other spellings, too, in this book—ricaudon and regaudon. And the more 'reposeful' it is the less true it is to its name.

It would be easy to fill a few columns with the mis-statements that occur in this book. But perhaps even worse than its want of accuracy is its hopelessly slipshod and gushing style :

Compositions that give the violin the timbre of an inferior flute, and which tear at its tone, stand for an audience to get dismissal from our programmes. Too often the dazzling effects obtained from this kind of music tempts [sic] an audience to a frenzy of applause. And this for the reason that it has lost its head in a tumult of sensations which it takes for musical ones. An ideal composition for the violoncello, and one often included by artists in their recital programmes, is a Larghetto by Mozart. Every audience shows its appreciation of this work. The Belgian school of composers, too, offers many delightful scores in similar vein. César Franck, in his Violin Sonatas [sic], says many delightful things, also Dohnányi, and every season gives us the opportunity of hearing other moderns, including those of our own country, add to a form which Corelli deemed an ideal one for strings to interpret.

The gushing passages are far too long to quote, and we have no space for further specimens of muddled thinking, non sequitur, and platitude. Our readers will be able to judge from the above samples as to the value of the book. Out of consideration for the author's feelings we had intended giving no particulars as to title, &c. On second thoughts, however, we feel that a book of this kind does so much harm that readers should be warned against it, no matter whose feelings are hurt. The work is entitled How to listen to Good Music and Encourage Taste in Instrumental and Vocal Music, with many useful notes for Listener and Executant, by K. Broadley Greene (Reeves). The B.M.S. Bulletin is of course entitled to its views that Mr. Broadley Greene's work is one 'to be looked out for.' But we believe that most musicians will regard it as one to avoid.

We are sorry to hear that Madame Joyce Maas, sister of Joseph Maas, and herself a successful teacher of long standing, has fallen on evil days through loss of pupils during the war, failing health, and old age. Furthermore, she has lately undergone a serious operation. We are asked to commend to our readers the Fund which has been started on her behalf. The appeal is heartily endorsed by Sir Frederick Bridge, who has known her from childhood, and was at school with her famous brother. Donations should be sent to Mr. E. L. Vinden, c/o Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W.7.

The current number of the P. R. Gazette (the organ of the Performing Rights Society) contains an interview with Sir Dan Godfrey. Discussing what is generally known as the 'royalty system,' Sir Dan said :

I cannot see how this can be avoided, although, personally, I dislike the system, which, however, is easily controllable by the concert-giver. At the same time, it is certain that new songs will not be tried by vocalists unless there is some inducement to sing them.

We cannot square these statements. If the system is easily controllable by the concert-giver there is little cause for dislike. On the other hand, if vocalists will not sing new songs unless they receive the usual 'inducement,' then the control comes from the cashier, not from the concert-giver. Sir Dan went on to say that

... the vocalist will not risk failure continually by trying over new numbers. If he sings old ballads he is on safe ground, and only suffers by comparison with another artist. He may have to try over the new song sufficiently often to make it his own speciality, and the royalty inducement is the only way to ensure this. Once the song catches the public ear the royalty stops, and the publisher is justified.

There is confusion here between the royalty on a song and the fee paid to the performer. Some eminent singers receive a royalty on the sale of the songs they introduce, and this royalty continues during their lifetime, whether they continue to sing the song or not. Sir Dan seems to defend the payment of royalties for performance when he adds, 'After all, concert vocalism is not a philanthropic institution.' Of course not, seeing that the singer, like other solo performers, is paid by the concert-giver. But whereas most instrumental soloists are content with being paid for performing, and choose music that suits their style and the occasion, most singers aim at making a little extra by singing songs on which there is 'some inducement.'

Of course, if a singer happens to be an artist, the only 'inducement' that counts for much is the fact that the song is a fine one, and that it gives his powers full scope. If the publisher chooses to pay him a trifle for singing it, nobody need blame him for accepting this extra consideration. The royalty system does no harm in the case of singers whose first thought is the quality of the songs they sing. The mischief is that so many singers are not artists, but hucksters, who will sing any drivel that carries a fee. The result is that public taste in songs is immeasurably lower than in choral and instrumental music, and it will remain so until one of two things happens: either the royalty system will be entirely abolished, or it will be so extended that singers will find it more profitable to sing first-class songs. After all, there is nothing dishonest in the system itself. A performer who is paid for popularising a song is first cousin to the commercial traveller who is paid for furthering the sale of more useful things. If the goods they induce people to buy are of first-rate quality, they benefit the public as well as their employer. If they deal in shoddy—but here the analogy lets us down badly, for it is only the commercial traveller who gets found out.

A correspondent sends us the programme of an organ recital, drawing our attention to one of the annotations. He wonders what Handel would say about it. So do we :

Handelian Fantasia The Storm.

The famous Cuckoo and Nightingale Concerto, part of Handel's ninth Grand Concerto, is here presented with delicately picturesque effect; indeed, the performer's Storm may be said to be based on Handel, approximately dated 1740. In the mind's eye it will not be difficult to conjure up old-time ideas of rustics dancing on the village green, of birds carolling within the foliage, of plaintive cuckoos answering each other from a distance, nightingales with their sonorous thrills and trills, then—the approach of the thunderstorm, with its gradually increasing intensity of thunderpeals, rustling tempestuous winds, and hailstones, mingled with vivid lightning flashes, during the height of which the countryside is heard prayerfully appealing 'For those in peril on the sea'—an appeal that is answered by the gradual subsidence of the storm, admitting of the peasantry resuming their musical frolics, in which they are again enthusiastically joined by their feathered friends.

The Cuckoo and Nightingale Concerto is far from being one of Handel's best essays, and it is not likely to be improved by the addition of a storm. In principle, of course, there is nothing to be said against the musical representation of bad weather. Most of the great composers have tried their hand at it, among others, Bach (more than once), Beethoven, Weber, and Wagner (several times). But there is everything to be said against such a sample as the above, with its blend of vandalism and puerilities.

By the way, the player in this case is a Mus. Doc. and an ex-cathedral organist.

We had scarcely written the above when along came a cutting from a Yorkshire paper bearing on this subject. It gives a description of a recital that took place in a Wesleyan Church at Bradford. We quote a couple of extracts, the first dealing with the inevitable storm; the second showing that the recitalist seems to have devised a really new pictorial effect:

Undoubtedly the item which took best was the Great Storm with its howlings and rending crashes, its cuckoo calls, its birds twittering in the tree-tops; after the storm, its inevitable church bells at sunset, and the wind-up with Now the day is over. The Fantasia on popular themes, in which Robin Adair marched along with The Trumpeter, Roses of Picardy, Greenland's Icy Mountains, Boys of the Old Brigade, and There is a happy land, was another thrilling item, in which Onward, Christian Soldiers, finished up with a rhythmic 'swish-swish' of the wind from the organ, presumably representing the soldiers marching away into the distance!

Apparently with the wind up.

On page 320 appears a short article by Dr. E. W. Scripture, on a subject of importance to teachers of singing. At first sight the matter seems more suitable for a medical journal than for one devoted to music. We print it, however, because we understand that there is a good deal of valuable research work now going on in regard to the scientific side of singing, and that the results of this research are unknown to the people best able to put them to practical use, i.e., the teachers of singing. Such results are not likely to appear in the general press, and singing teachers are not given to reading medical journals. Dr. Scripture (who is Physician to the Speech Clinic, West End Hospital for Nervous Diseases, London, and Professor of Experimental Phonetics in the Vienna University) has kindly promised to keep our readers informed of any developments that seem likely to be helpful to singers.

In the London Mercury for April, Sir George Henschel makes a warm attack on the Elgar-Atkins edition (1911) of the St. Matthew Passion. Sir George had been unaware of this edition until a few weeks ago, when a pupil brought him a copy with a view to studying one of the solo parts for a Bach Choir performance. He was so annoyed with the numerous changes from the Troutbeck edition (1894) that he flatly refused to teach from it, and followed the matter up with the lengthy article in the Mercury.

Most musicians at some time or another suffer from the irritation that must needs accompany the use of a new edition of an old work. They have lived with the music so long that it has become a part of themselves, and even acknowledged improvements, or indisputable corrections of textual errors, are regarded with aversion. There will be no lack of sympathy with the feelings of a famous singer who finds one of his cherished rôles of fifty years ago bristling with small verbal and musical changes. After sympathising with him, however, we take a glance at the other side of the question, and find that the case is less simple than his article makes it appear.

The chief aim of the 1911 edition was the use, in the recitatives, of the words of the Authorised Version, with the reproduction of Bach's declamation as closely as this text allowed. Troutbeck, in his admirable version, was able to retain Bach's declamation with scarcely a change, because he was less tied as to text.

The Elgar-Atkins edition would be amply justified if it did no more than give the narrative in the language which most English hearers would know by heart. The annoyance Sir George feels on seeing minute changes in Bach's declamation is small (and, we venture to say, less reasonable) than that suffered by an English audience on hearing familiar passages from the Gospels altered in order to fit the music. The adoption of the Authorised Version inevitably leads to some slight losses on the musical side, and Sir George makes the most of them. Indeed, a careful scrutiny of the examples he quotes convinces us that he makes far too much of them. In most cases the awkwardnesses are mainly on paper. No singer likely to be entrusted with these recitatives would find any difficulty in making such passages sound as easy and natural as in the Troutbeck version. Even if it be admitted that in this matter of declamation the 1894 edition is superior to the 1911 version, the last word has not been said. In such cases the losses and gains must be balanced. Balance them in these two editions, and the scale comes down heavily on the side of the new. Not only have we the familiar text unspoiled by inversions; there are innumerable other improvements in the setting out of both text and music. This was to be expected, seeing that the editors enjoyed the co-operation of the foremost English Bach authorities of the time, as well as the advantage of the mass of Bach literature produced since Troutbeck's day. That Sir George's indignation is not shared by those responsible for the present-day numerous performances of the work is shown by the fact that, although the 1898 edition is still obtainable, that of 1911 is superseding it on all sides. Conductors and others responsible for the choice make it with their eyes open, and we believe that, in the main, the deciding factor is the strong feeling they and their singers and hearers share in favour of the familiar English Bible version of the text.

The press notices of the Wolverhampton Choir's London concerts showed a diversity of view so unusual as to invite comment. As a rule such variety of opinion has to do with matters of taste rather than of technique, and so it need surprise nobody. In the case of the Wolverhampton Choir the praise and blame are concerned chiefly with technical points, and so the matter becomes arguable.

Here are a few quotations :

A wonderfully fine performance [of the Vaughan Williams Mass].—Daily Chronicle.

Excellent choral singing . . . a fine body of voices . . . splendidly trained . . . gave a splendid account of themselves.—Westminster Gazette.

Choir sang very beautifully . . . Not all the chording was accurate . . . there was an occasional tendency to make too much for expressiveness. But this choir belongs to the first rank.—Daily Mail.

In precision, in the proper cohesion of all the parts, the choir is far behind those of our best southern societies ; while rhythm, that most vital essence, is only understood as metre . . . diversions in pitch.—Daily Telegraph.

Time will give the sopranos a cleaner attack of augmented intervals, and get rid of a tendency to flatten. One cannot say that the choir is perfect, for perfection is not to be won too quickly, but all things considered there was something very like it in many of the numbers.—Morning Post.

Some of the morning choral singing the world can produce . . . combination of richness and brilliancy of tone peculiar to north-country choirs . . . exceptional degree of executive skill.—Referee.

The fine choir . . . the sopranos on their high notes were often disappointing, the qualities of tone in the quieter portions were often very beautiful.—The Times.

The double-chorus work was finely chorded and blended ; sostenuto and pianissimo were delightful. . . . There was always clearness . . . Brilliancy and extreme contrasts.—Musical News.

If yesterday's singing represented its best . . . the choir is not in any way exceptional in its material or its standard of performance. Its voices are not unusually fine ; they somewhat lack 'ring' and thrill in a forte, and are rarely subdued to a genuine pianissimo. The 'attack' and 'release' are by no means alert or unanimous, the articulation is no better than that of any decent choir, there is a good deal of flattening, and where this does not definitely occur, there is sometimes the feeling that the singers have, at any rate, not placed their tone in the very middle of the notes, but are hovering upon the outskirts (it was noticeable in some places that the thirds of chords were not perfectly true, and this probably accounted for some of the uneasiness of our ears).—Observer.

Revealed a high degree of finish . . . pianissimo singing altogether admirable . . . wide ability in interpretation.—Sunday Times [not 'E. N.'].]

The choir was undistinguished by its merely vocal powers, and in musical technique nothing at all remarkable. Mistakes were frequent, the balance of tone often ill-adjusted, and the flexibility mediocre.—New Witness.

We said above that these widely differing views, being concerned with technical points, are arguable, but we do not propose to argue. We merely say that the return to the pre-war standard of choral singing in this country will be hastened when critics are as well agreed in the matter of choral technique as they are in that of other branches of musical performance.

We are glad to pass on the good news that the British National Opera Company will start a Summer season at Covent Garden on May 14. The opening night will see the first performance of Holst's The Perfect Fool. For this work Mr. Oliver Bernard has designed a scene reported to be striking, and the caste will include Miss Maggie Teyte, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Robert Parker. The Perfect Fool will be the only work played on May 14, but thereafter it will have for companion Bach's Phæbus and Pan.

Competition Festival Record

WHEN IS A STUNT?

In competitive singing, to condemn the 'stunt' is very like luring a man into an eating-house, and complaining because he has eaten.—'A. J. S.' in the Birmingham Post, March 5.

To condemn 'stunts' at competitive affairs is tantamount to coaxing a hungry fellow into a cook-shop and then grumbling because he has eaten.—'Dominant,' in the April Musical Mirror.

The above quotations are from articles dealing with the recent Elizabethan Competitive Festival, and they refer to the contest in which Dr. Brearley's Blackburn Choir received a mild reproof for sacrificing some of the spirit of the music to 'stunt' effects.

'A. J. S.'s' metaphor is not made more convincing by 'Dominant's' use of it. Without pausing to comment on the remarkable coincidence which led 'Dominant' not only to the use of the figure but also to strikingly similar phraseology, let us consider the reasoning. First, the singing is competitive and the eating is not. The cases would be analogous only if a choir were invited to compete, and then received a wiggling for singing. And, putting the analogy another way, to condemn a competing choir for 'stunt' singing would be 'tantamount' to coaxing a hungry man into a cook-shop and then complaining because he made a noise with his soup or ate peas off his knife. The first is bad singing and the second bad table manners, and a judge who was engaged to appraise either choir or eater would be incompetent if he failed to point out the fact.

'A. J. S.' admits that the choir concerned was guilty. He says :

As a criticism of the particular performance referred to—that of Weelkes's three-part Strike it up, tabor—there was reason behind the charge, and it applied also to the same choir's singing of Farmer's Fair Phyllis.

So we see that on 'A. J. S.'s' own showing both efforts of the choir revealed the same fault. Then why should the judges have refrained from saying so? 'A. J. S.' and 'Dominant' (again a coincidence) make the same answer : The choir had travelled all the way from Lancashire to London to take part in a competition in which no money prizes were offered ! The task of adjudicators is already difficult. It will become impossible if they are to take into account the mileage covered by competitors. Already the marking-sheets keep them busy with arithmetic ; what will they do when a Bradshaw is added ? True, it will simplify things for the choirs. The conductor of the John o' Groats Madrigal Society has only to confine his entries to the Land's End Competitive Festival in order to be sure of all prizes and no blanks. Absurd, of course, but it is only the suggestion of 'A. J. S.' and 'Dominant' worked out to its logical conclusion.

'A. J. S.' thinks that the choir concerned in the case under notice 'felt a little sore at being taken to task . . . after travelling twelve hours.' I credit Dr. Brearley and his singers with better sportsmanship. They may not have enjoyed or agreed with the criticism, but I am sure they would be the last to claim any sort of immunity on the ground that they had come a long way and that there were no money prizes. They are a highly-skilled body of singers, and when they have got rid of the fault which 'A. J. S.' and the adjudicators pointed out they will be even better.

As one of the offending judges I should of course not discuss the matter; but I am bound to take it up editorially in answer to a good deal of correspondence. The letters show that the question of 'stunt' singing needs to be ventilated, some of the writers expressing doubt as to whether such singing is a fault, others regarding it almost as a virtue, while a few seem to think that it is allowable in competitive work.

Ask any experienced adjudicator what he finds is the most frequent shortcoming among competitors, both solo and ensemble, and he will tell you that it is a failure to express the spirit of the music. This failure comes from two widely different causes. Usually it is due to deficiencies either technical or imaginative, or both. This is especially the case with solo performances. In choral work, however, there is a fair proportion of cases in which the spirit of a work is missed through the technique of the singers being obtruded, and made an end instead of a means to an end. The competitive movement has few opponents to-day, but those few are ever ready to point out the dangers that inevitably arise when performers sing against one another for marks. There is a natural tendency to aim at effects that will make an immediate impression, to exaggerate contrasts of pace and power, to consider a work in detail instead of as a whole, and to underline interpretative points until the subtle suggestions of the composer become heavy-handed commonplace. What this kind of singing leads to eventually was shown a few years ago when a crack male-voice choir from Yorkshire gave a concert in London. Hardly a bar was sung without an 'effect' being made, with a result so restless and scrappy that some of us found a few items more than enough. It was 'stunt' singing to the *n*th degree, and the fact that the performers came all the way from Yorkshire made it no better. On the contrary, one naturally felt that it was a pity for a choir to come so far only to show us what not to do.

This is the only serious danger in the competitive movement, and a choir showing a tendency that way has no better friend than the judge who pulls it up. I am sure that 'A. J. S.' himself, in his work as musical critic, would be unsparing of a concert artist who 'showed off' at the expense of the music. Why should choral offenders be exempt from blame? As a fact, however, 'A. J. S.' doesn't really think they should be exempt, for in the article from which I have quoted he pays the Blackburn Choir a well-deserved tribute to its skill, saying that 'the sense of joy in its singing went far to remove the sense of a "stunt,"' (it didn't remove it entirely, you see), and goes on to add that ... something was sacrificed to sheer pace, notably in Morley's April is in my mistress's face; the singers were disappointing here, because the feeling of the music was hardly caught.

Exactly; this is just what the adjudicators said, and if they want confirmation for their verdict, they need only go to 'A. J. S.' who at one moment says the judgment was right and at another complains that it was given!

Among the letters that have reached me, dealing with this matter, is one asking what was the difference between the 'stunts' of the Blackburn Choir in the afternoon and the extraordinarily effective singing of the Oriana Choir at the concert in the same hall a few hours later. The writer speaks of the last-named Choir's vivid contrasts of tone and power, and asks if such contrasts are not 'stunts.' I was not present at the concert, but I have heard the Oriana singers often enough to be able to give the answer. No doubt Mr. Kennedy Scott and his singers produced plenty of vivid effects, but we may take it for granted that these effects were called for by the text and music. However, let us take the evidence of one who was there—'A. J. S.' once more. He says:

In the evening a large audience was stirred to genuine enthusiasm by the singing of the Oriana Madrigal Society under Mr. Kennedy Scott. In a long programme Wilbye's Draw on, sweet night, was the outstanding gem, and the singing showed a true zest for the madrigalian style. The lightness of the under parts, and the pointed singing of the middle voices, were features one does not meet with in the everyday treatment of this music. Mr. Scott in his direction of the singing struck a happy mean between the leader and the conductor; he was unobtrusive, unmechanical, and yet always the inspirer to every effect.

To sum up, the question is really one of interpretation. The marking-sheets in general use at choral competitions divide the hundred marks allowed for each test into two fifties. The first fifty are split up into various totals awarded for attack, intonation, enunciation, time-values, and other factors in what may be called the technical side of a performance (the classification is only approximate, because most of the points have some interpretative bearing as well); the remaining fifty are allotted to interpretation and general effect. There you have the proportion as it has been arrived at after years of experience by the pooled wisdom of the bench of judges. It is thus possible for a choir to obtain very high marks for technique, and yet, through a bad misfire in interpretation or through exaggeration of any kind, to fall below a choir that, technically, it could wipe the floor with. And that is what almost happened at the Elizabethan Festival. The Blackburn Choir sang brilliantly, but sometimes by turning on the brilliance where other qualities were called for, it missed a lot of the spirit of the music; the Petersfield Choir was not remarkable for vocal excellence or technical skill, but it knew what the text and music called for, and its resources were sufficient for the purpose. Result: a tie. Judges no more want to hear the utmost of a choir's skill than they want to hear the utmost of a choir's lung-power. What they ask for is such use of skill and power as shall express to the full the spirit of the song. If the song calls for the utmost of both, of course the singers should use it; if not, they should be content to keep it up their sleeve till it is wanted. H. G.

LEEDS COMPETITIVE FESTIVAL

SOME IMPRESSIONS

[BY OUR CORRESPONDENT]

Considering the wide area throughout England from which the first Leeds Competitive Festival drew its eight hundred or so solo competitors, besides choirs, it is evident that there is room for this new institution. From March 21 to 24, Leeds Town Hall, the Albert Hall, the Albion Hall, and a smaller room were occupied with the various contests; and it says much for the good arrangements of the director of competitions, Mr. Victor Helliwell, that everything seemed to go smoothly. The Festival owed its inception to Mr. Edgar Haddock, to whose zeal as honorary musical director, and to the secretarial organization of Mr. H. S. Coghill and Mr. A. Tait, the function was indebted for much of its success.

I understand that no financial loss has been incurred. Further, the Festival at its birth has started on a scale such

(Continued on page 340.)

COME, HOLY GHOST

INTROIT *

SUITABLE FOR CORONATION, ORDINATION AND GENERAL USE

COMPOSED BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; AND NOVELLO, EWER AND CO., NEW YORK.

SOPRANO SOLO (OR FULL).

p
Come, Ho - ly Ghost, . . our souls in - spire, And light - en

p pp
with ce - les - tial fire; Thou the an - oint - ing

pp
Spir - it art, Who dost Thy seven - fold gifts im - p f

- part: . . Thy bless - ed unc - tion from a - bove . . Is

* The music adapted from a Chorale in "Bethany."

Copyright, 1901, by Novello and Company, Limited.

COME, HOLY GHOST.

com - fort, life, and fire of love, . . is com - fort,

This system features a vocal melody in the upper staff and a piano accompaniment in the lower staff. The key signature has two sharps (F# and C#), and the time signature is common time (C). The lyrics are written below the vocal staff.

life, and fire of love ; . .

This system continues the vocal melody and piano accompaniment. It includes dynamic markings: p (piano) above the vocal staff and p and pp (pianissimo) below the piano staff. The lyrics are written below the vocal staff.

QUARTET. (Org. ad lib.)

En - a - ble with per - pet - ual light The dul - ness

This system is marked for a quartet and includes the instruction (Org. ad lib.). It features a vocal melody and piano accompaniment with dynamic markings p and pp. The lyrics are written below the vocal staff.

of . . our blind - ed sight: An - oint and cheer our soil - ed

This system continues the quartet setting with vocal melody and piano accompaniment. The lyrics are written below the vocal staff.

face With the a - bun - dance of Thy grace : . .

This system concludes the quartet setting with vocal melody and piano accompaniment. It includes dynamic markings p and pp. The lyrics are written below the vocal staff.

COME, HOLY GHOST.

FULL.

Keep far our foes, give peace at home; . . . Where Thou art

This system features a vocal melody in treble clef and a piano accompaniment in bass clef. The key signature has two sharps (F# and C#). The melody begins with a piano (p) dynamic and includes a crescendo leading to a forte (f) dynamic at the end of the phrase.

Guide no ill can come, . . . where Thou art Guide no

The second system continues the vocal melody and piano accompaniment. It maintains the same key signature and dynamic markings, with the piano part providing harmonic support through chords and moving lines.

ill . . . can come. pp Org.

The third system concludes the vocal phrase with the lyrics 'ill . . . can come.' and includes the instruction 'pp Org.' (pianissimo Organ). The piano accompaniment continues with sustained chords and moving lines.

SOPRANO SOLO.

Teach us to know . . . the Fath - er, Son, And Thee, of

This section is marked 'SOPRANO SOLO.' and begins with a piano (p) dynamic. It features a single vocal line in treble clef and a piano accompaniment in bass clef. The key signature remains two sharps.

Both, to be but One; That through the a - ges all . . . a -

The final system continues the soprano solo and piano accompaniment. It concludes with a double bar line and a repeat sign. The piano part features sustained chords and moving lines.

COME, HOLY SPIRIT.

long This . . . may . . be our . . end - less song, . .

The first system of the musical score for 'Come, Holy Spirit'. It features a vocal line in treble clef with a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a piano accompaniment in grand staff (treble and bass clefs). The lyrics are: 'long This . . . may . . be our . . end - less song, . .'. The piano part consists of chords and moving lines in both hands.

FULL.
Praise . . to Thy e - ter - nal me - rit, Fath - er,

The second system of the musical score. It begins with the instruction 'FULL.' and a forte 'f' dynamic. The vocal line continues with the lyrics: 'Praise . . to Thy e - ter - nal me - rit, Fath - er,'. The piano accompaniment is more active, featuring sixteenth-note patterns in the right hand and sustained chords in the left hand. A 'Ped.' (pedal) marking is present in the bass staff.

Son, and Ho - ly Spir - it, Fath - er, Son, and Ho - ly Spir - it.

The third system of the musical score. The vocal line includes the lyrics: 'Son, and Ho - ly Spir - it, Fath - er, Son, and Ho - ly Spir - it.' The piano accompaniment continues with similar textures. Dynamics include 'p' (piano) and 'rall. e dim.' (rallentando e diminuendo) markings. The system concludes with a double bar line.

ANTHEM FOR GENERAL USE FROM "HONOUR THE LORD WITH THY SUBSTANCE"

Deuteronomy xxxiii. 29

Music by J. STAINER

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

TENOR

Allegretto semplice

SOLO
p

Hap - py art thou, O Is - rael,

ORGAN

Allegretto semplice. ♩ = 96

p senza Ped.

hap - py art thou! who is like un - to thee, O peo - ple, hap - py art thou! saved by the Lord, the shield of thy pp

pp

help, the sword, . . the sword of thy ex - cel - len cy!

cres.

f

cres.

f dim.

Copyright, 1923, by Novello and Company, Limited

p Hap - py art thou, O

FULL.
pp Hap - py art thou, O Is - rael, hap - py art thou,

pp Hap - py art thou, O Is - rael, hap - py art thou, . .

pp Hap - py art thou, O Is - rael, hap - py art thou,

pp Hap - py art thou, O Is - rael, hap - py art thou, pp p (Solo.)

mf Is - rael: who is like un-to thee, O peo - ple,

f hap - py art thou,

f hap - py art thou, . .

f hap - py art thou,

f hap - py art thou,

f (Chorus) p (Solo.)

accel.
 saved by the Lord, the shield of thy p accel. pp
 hap - py art thou! . . . Hal - le - lu - jah, Hal - le p accel. pp
 hap - py art thou! Hal - le - lu - jah, Hal - le p accel. pp
 hap - py art thou! . . . Hal - le - lu - jah, Hal - le p accel. pp
 hap - py art thou! Hal - le - lu - jah, Hal - le p pp accel. pp
 Ped.

cres. f help, the sword, . . the sword of thy ex - cel - len - cy! (End of Solo.)
mf f
 - lu - jah, . . Hal - le - lu - jah, Hal - le
mf f
 - lu - jah, . . Hal - le - lu - jah, Hal - le
mf f
 - lu - jah, . . Hal - le - lu - jah, Hal - le
mf f
 - lu - jah, . . Hal - le lu - jah, Hal - le cres. mf f

accel. più e più. ff $\text{♩} = 100.$ ff

lu - jah, Hal - le - lu - jah! Hap - py art

accel. più e più. ff $\text{♩} = 100.$ ff

lu - jah, Hal - le - lu - jah! Hap - py art

accel. più e più. ff $\text{♩} = 100.$ ff

lu - jah, Hal - le - lu - jah! Hal - le -

accel. più e più. ff $\text{♩} = 100.$ ff

lu - jah, Hal - le - lu - jah! Hap - py art thou, hap - py art thou, saved by the Lord, the thou, hap - py art thou, . . saved by the Lord, the lu - jah, Hal - le - lu - jah! saved by the Lord, the thou, . . hap - py art thou, . . saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, saved by the Lord, the shield of thy shield of thy help, saved by the Lord, the shield of thy shield of thy help, saved by the Lord, the shield of thy shield of thy help, saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, the sword of thy ex - cel - len - cy! Hal - le - lu - jah, help, the sword of thy ex - cel - len - cy! Hal - le - lu - jah, help, the sword of thy ex - cel - len - cy! Hal - le - lu - jah, help, the sword of thy ex - cel - len - cy! Hal - le - lu - jah,

Ped. 8ves.

Hal - le - lu - jah, Hal - le - lu - jah. . . .

Hal - le - lu - jah, Hal - le - lu - jah. . . .

Hal - le - lu - jah, Hal - le - lu - jah. . . .

Hal - le - lu - jah, Hal - le - lu - jah. . . .

Also published in Novello's Tonic Sol-fa Series, No. 2415.

(Continued from page 334.)

as has been reached by similar events only after some years. The contests received fairly influential support, though in future it would be wise to secure for them a still wider civic and representative basis. The weak point has been the comparatively small public attendance at the sessions. Many people, naturally, could not be present in the morning or afternoon; others, if sensitive musicians, perhaps dreaded hearing repeated tentative efforts towards interpreting a piece that may have ideal memories.

Within the limits of this article exhaustive details are impossible, so I can touch only on main impressions and other points of salient interest.

The Festival was fortunate in its adjudicators—Prof. Granville Bantock, Dr. Coward, Mr. York Bowen, Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, Mr. Arthur Catterall, Mr. Acton Bond (elocution), Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Paul le Vallon, Mr. Webster Millar, Miss Morden Grey (elocution), and Mr. R. J. Forbes.

Of course the vital function of these Festivals is to inculcate good music. Broadly speaking, the tests were of high quality, quite apart from any intrinsic difficulties they presented. The vocal solos, for instance, included some by Wolf, Brahms, Purcell, Bax, and Butterworth. Pianists essayed works by Chopin, Debussy, and Cyril Scott. Parry's Orpheus is rather feeble in its humour, and with so many glorious native madrigals, it seemed a pity to resort to Marenzio. Moreover, in the whole scheme there did not appear to be any Bach—an unaccountable omission.

The standard of achievement varied considerably. After listening to a number of the hundred and fifty pianists, I could not resist the conclusion that there must be a large amount of bad teaching. Some competitors can surely never have heard Chopin properly played; others were ill-advised to enter. Yet one does not wish to discourage them from competing.

The deficiency of interpretation was specially evident in the violin classes, where it was often accompanied by faulty technique. Not one of the eight senior candidates who played Beethoven's Romance in F got past the preliminary trial. In view of the bad tuning and poor ear-sense of intonation that I heard, I quite agree with Mr. Catterall's strictures on the string players.

In other classes, especially those for solo singing, the standard was excellent. The gold medal for the best soloist in all classes was won by Miss Florence Fielden, a Todmorden contralto. A notable success was that of Master Norman Walker, a twelve-year old Leeds boy, who, among over fifty pianists under thirteen years of age, took first place by one mark, and won first prize in the violin class of similar age limit. Miss Mary Campbell (Halifax) in the intermediate violin class was warmly commended by Mr. Catterall. Only two string orchestras entered for their class, and the body entitled the Leeds XXV. easily took precedence under the capable conductorship of Mr. J. F. Chalmers Park. Good work and close competition marked the ensemble, industrial, and dramatic classes, though entries were not numerous.

Seldom do we hear such exquisitely-balanced singing as that of Bantock's mixed quartet O can ye sew cushions, which ensured the Earl of Harewood's trophy for the Huddersfield 'CX' Quartet. The choral events always attract much attention in the North, though certain well-known choirs have now reached such a standard that there is not much chance for the ordinary choral society or male-voice organization. To all intents and purposes these famed prize-winners have become professional amateurs.

So marked was this high proficiency that on the Saturday evening three male choirs tied in Holst's Home Coming, and the adjudicators based their award on the afternoon performances. This left Manchester Orpheus, Rochdale, and Cleveland Harmonic (Middlesbrough) in that order, with one mark between each successive choir. Sir Michael Sadler's silver trophy was won by the Orpheus Male Quartet from Thurnscoe. At the conclusion of the Saturday evening session in the Town Hall, the Lord Mayor of Leeds (Alderman F. Fountain) distributed the prizes.

The test-pieces and winning choirs in the chief choral competitions were as follows: School Choirs—Dreams (Parry) and Twelve by the Clock (Lloyd), Wakefield Girls'

High School. Industrial Choirs—There is a garden in her face (Ireland) and The Angel (Rubinstein), Greenholme Mills and St. Mary's Guild Club, Burley-in-Wharfedale. Female-Voice Choirs—The Death of Trenchard (Brahms) and The Forest Fay (Schumann), Cleckheaton Central Choir. Male-Voice Choirs (open)—Ballade (Bantock) and The Home Coming (Holst), Manchester Orpheus Glee Society. Mixed-Voice Choirs (open)—Love's Tempest, Death on the Hills (Elgar), and Yield up your ancient fame (Marenzio), Sale and District Musical Society.

In the class for string orchestras the test was Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C, and Mr. J. F. Chalmers Park's Leeds Orchestra won in competition with Miss J. Purdon's Wakefield String Orchestra. A. J. D.

LEEDS.—At the second annual Eisteddfod of the Leeds Cymrodorion on March 31, Dr. A. C. Tysoe and Mr. Percy Richardson adjudicated. Chief interest centred in the male-voice class. Holme Valley Choir, the winner, gave a brilliant performance of Elgar's The Reveille, under Mr. Irving Silverwood.

BARNESLEY.—The first competitive Festival held at Barnesley took place on March 31 in the Public Hall, Dr. J. F. Staton adjudicating. The feature of the competitions was the singing of the school choirs, the best among which was Ardsley Senior Mixed School (Mr. S. Copley). The winning male-voice choir was Stocksbridge Choral Union (Dr. W. M. Robertshaw), and the first of two mixed-voice choirs was Hoyland Musical Union (Mr. H. Watson).

SHIPLEY.—Dr. J. G. Cooper adjudicated at Victoria Hall, Saltaire, on March 17, when the Shipley Competitive Festival was held. Hebden Bridge Male-Voice Choir (Mr. H. Greenwood) became the first possessor of the 'Saltaire' trophy. Keighley Vocal Union (Mr. W. H. Whittaker) was first in the mixed-voice class.

BERKHAMSTED.—At this event, in the fine Hall of the School, on April 17 and 18, the festival note was more pronounced than the competitive. The children's day (which produced some truly admirable school-singing) ended with a concert in which all the youngsters took part in mass and group. The second day brought together some village choirs which were not remarkable individually, but which combined with fine effect at the concert, when they sang small choral works and took the choruses in a performance of Acts I and 2 of Gluck's Orpheus, with Misses Sybil Cropper, Joan Elwes, and Elizabeth Mitchell-Innes as soloists. A capital string orchestra played some Bach, Elgar, and Dunhill, conducted by Mr. A. Forbes Milne, and accompanied the opera. Mr. Armstrong Gibbs and Mr. Harvey Grace adjudicated, the latter conducting Orpheus. Entries showed a good increase, and the standard had advanced markedly.

Church and Organ Music

CHRISTCHURCH CATHEDRAL,

NEW ZEALAND:

A TALK WITH DR. JOHN C. BRADSHAW

Dr. Bradshaw's many friends were glad to see him back in the old country during his recent holiday. Several pleasant meetings gave me an opportunity for learning from him something of his work in New Zealand. We began with a talk about the Cathedral at Christchurch. Dr. Bradshaw gave me an interesting sketch of its origin which I pass on, in as brief a form as possible.

Some seventy years ago four ships—Charlotte Jane, Randolph, Sir George Seymour, and Cressy—anchored in Lyttelton Harbour in the South Island of New Zealand. They brought from England a party known as the 'Canterbury Pilgrims,' the first draft of colonists to come out under the auspices of the Canterbury Association—a body with the then Archbishops of Canterbury and York and a number of well-known men as heads, formed to establish a Church of England Settlement in New Zealand. The Settlement was to comprise a Cathedral, a University College, and all the usual parochial organizations, including Church schools. Land was to be sold to the settlers at £3 an acre, and a third of the purchase money was to be earmarked for ecclesiastical and educational purposes. It was an

Six years later the first Bishop was appointed—the Rev. H. J. C. Harper, vicar of Mortimer, Berks, and sometime Conduct of Eton College. Designs for the Cathedral had been prepared by Sir Gilbert Scott, and on the fourteenth anniversary of the laying of the foundation-stone was laid.

Then things hung fire for a spell, owing to financial difficulties. In 1873—about nine years after the foundation-stone was laid—Anthony Trollope paid a visit to Christchurch, and wrote: 'In the centre of the town is a large waste space in which £7,000 has been buried in laying the foundations of a Cathedral ; ambitious scheme, and the settlers showed their grit by the way they overcame obstacles of all kinds. The site for the capital city of the new province was marked out on the plains a few miles from Lyttelton, a space being reserved for the Cathedral in the middle of the central square. A number of Christ Church, Oxford, men were among the party, and they were sufficiently numerous and influential to secure that the city should be named after their alma mater, and that the College also was to be known as Christ's College.

Photo by Steffano Webb

[Christchurch, N.Z.]

but there is not a single stone or brick above the level of the ground.' But he might have spared his sniffs; the vision had not been lost. As prosperity began to smile on the Settlement, efforts were renewed, and in 1881 the western tower and nave were completed, the consecration taking place on All Saints' Day of that year. The transepts and choir were added in 1903, about forty years after the laying of the foundation-stone—no very lengthy period for a Cathedral to be a-building, especially in a new country.

From a number of photographs supplied by Dr. Bradshaw, perhaps the one reproduced below gives the best idea of the building, though the very prosaic foreground, with its tramcar standards, is somewhat of a shock to English eyes accustomed to old cathedrals set in the pleasant greenery of closes.

Dr. Bradshaw is the third organist, his predecessors having been Mr. H. Wells, an old chorister of Worcester Cathedral, and Mr. G. F. Tendall, formerly private organist to the Duke of Buccleuch. Dr. Bradshaw has held the post since 1902.

I asked him about the choir.

'It consists of twenty-four boys, six lay-clerks, and a precentor, on the foundation, with ten voluntary members. The boys are educated at the charges of the Chapter at Christ's College Grammar School, and there are exhibitions by means of which they may continue their schooling after their voices break. I am glad to say that a Choir School is in prospect. There is good material in the way of boys' voices. We have practice every morning from 9 to 10, and there is daily evensong at 5.15.'

CHRISTCHURCH CATHEDRAL

'Repertory?'

'The usual classics of Church music, with works by representative composers of to-day. I am very keen about the old polyphonic music, and among the numerous additions I am making to our library while I am over here is a good deal of the newly published Tudor music. Among the non-liturgical works performed each year are the St. Matthew Passion and Brahms's Requiem. Last year, on Anzac Day, we added to our repertory Elgar's For the Fallen.

'Organ?'

'We have a three-manual of thirty-five stops, built by Hill in 1880. Best gave a recital on it before it left the factory, and expressed his opinion that Hill had excelled himself. I may add that we have a fine peal of ten bells by Taylor, of Loughborough.'

I drew from the Doctor some biographical details. Here they are, condensed: Born at Adlington, Cheshire, 1876; at fifteen years of age left the Parish Church Choir (before his voice changed) to become organist and choirmaster of Christ Church, Adlington; subsequent appointments were Parish Church, Adlington, and assistant at Manchester Cathedral (1896), Parish Church, Llangollen (1898), and All Saints', Scarborough (1900); first lessons from Henry Cooke at Leyland Parish Church; one of the earliest students at the Royal Manchester College of Music on its institution in 1893, studying organ with Kendrick Pyne and theory with Henry Hiles; gained the Hargreaves Exhibition at Owens College in 1897-98; graduated Mus.Bac., 1898, and Mus.Doc. three years later at the early age of twenty-five.

His life in New Zealand is busy and varied.

'For twenty years [he said] I have held the position of Lecturer in Music at Canterbury College, University of New Zealand. The College grants musical degrees, the examiner for many years having been Sir Charles Stanford. For about sixteen years I have been musical director of the Royal Christchurch Musical Society, the oldest organization of its kind in Australasia. It was founded over sixty years ago. The Society, with a chorus and orchestra of about two hundred, has produced a long list of standard works, from Handel to Elgar. Then there is a later organization, the Christchurch Male-Voice Choir, which I had the honour of founding. Its concerts are so popular that each one has to be given three times, with an audience of a thousand on each occasion. An attractive feature in every programme is the co-operation of the Cathedral choirboys in a few items. We thus get an S.A.T.B. choir, well adapted for singing old English glees and madrigals.

'Is there a City organist?'

'There is—or was,' replied Dr. Bradshaw. 'I held the post until it ceased abruptly during the war, when a disastrous fire completely destroyed the fine four-manual that had been presented to the City in 1908. We are hoping that before long we shall have a new and model concert-hall and a new organ.'

'How about orchestral music?'

'It is in rather a bad way just now, as seems to be the case everywhere. In New Zealand it is not nearly so good as it was twenty years ago, chiefly owing to the competition of the cinemas. These absorb the best players, owing to the high rate of pay they are able to offer. As a result it is difficult to get together a good orchestra for concert work. One cinema, for example, has an orchestra of between twenty and thirty excellent players, and they do a lot of good music. The public therefore gets plenty of orchestral music in a way, but its chances for hearing big complete works, choral and orchestral, are fewer than ought to be the case.'

'What are the prospects for British musicians coming across?' I asked.

'I should advise nobody to come over unless he has an appointment to step into. Competition in the teaching world is keen, and unless a new-comer holds some kind of post to serve as an introduction, he is likely to find it a slow job building up a practice. The cost of living is usually higher than in England, though, so far as I can see, it is at present about the same.'

Speaking of his holiday here, the Doctor was full of gratitude for the kindness he had met with on all sides. 'I have had a royal time,' he said, 'and of course there was a good deal of the busman's holiday about it. Trust an organist for that! I have visited twenty-six Cathedrals in England and several in France, and I seem to have met nearly all your leading musicians. I spent five months in London, during which time I had the pleasure of helping Mr. Cook at Southwark Cathedral. I also attended lectures at the R.A.M., and made a careful study of the Matthay method. And there was a good deal of organ-playing, of course, though the only actual recital work was in the North. Especially pleasant is the memory of a recital I gave, by invitation, at my old University, where there is a fine four-manual Willis. There was a really distinguished audience, and they gave me a reception that sent me away feeling very happy.'

I was lucky enough to hear Dr. Bradshaw play. We had only a brief spell together at an organ, but it was long enough for him to give as fine a performance as I have ever heard of the Mozart F minor Fantasia—and on an entirely strange organ too. The New Zealand Cathedral is fortunate in its Master of the Music—a fine player, a keen all-round musician, and an unassuming, genial man. H. G.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Candidates for the July Associateship examination are requested to note carefully that the Fantasia in E \flat (Best), in Group No. 2, is, as stated in the Regulations, 'No. 1 of Six Concert Pieces,' and is not the Fantasia in E \flat , Op. 1, dedicated to S. S. Wesley, which will not be accepted by the Examiners.

'SLEEPERS, WAKE' AND THE 'HALLELUJAH CHORUS'

By L. C. MARTIN

The indebtedness of Handel to earlier and contemporary composers for the themes and sometimes even for the treatment of the themes in some of his works has often been the subject of comment. It has been shown that he was frequently willing to borrow on a scale which has naturally raised doubts as to his moral integrity, and that in most of the instances usually quoted he may reasonably have hoped to escape detection at the time. The most striking examples of this habit are supplied by the rapidly produced Israel in Egypt, for which he seems to have owed a good deal more than he should to a Serenata by Stradella and to a Magnificat and a Te Deum ascribed respectively to two less well-known Italian writers, Erba and Urio. (The best summary of his more palpable borrowings is given in The Indebtedness of Handel to Works of other Composers, by Sedley Taylor, Cambridge University Press, 1906.) At other times—and with what degree of consciousness it is impossible to determine—Handel, like many other composers, would appropriate a short motif or idea which had appealed to him in someone else's work, and yet make it so thoroughly a part of himself that the seed took root and a new plant came to vigorous life; and in these circumstances—as for example with Milton's debt to the classics or to his Elizabethan predecessors—the borrowing, if indeed the action may fairly be so described, may be justified by the use to which the borrowed matter is put.

It is rather with an instance of this more excusable kind of indebtedness that the present article is concerned. So much has been observed and recorded on the subject of Handel's relationships to other composers, that it seems strange that the germ of one of his most popular efforts in the 'grand style' should not have been more generally recognised as such, all the more because the germ itself is widely and justly famous for its own merits. Yet it seems difficult not to believe, once the parallel has been noticed, that when Handel wrote the Hallelujah Chorus he had in mind, with or without his own knowledge, the Chorale, Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme, which was first published in Dr. Philipp Nicolai's Freudenspiegel des ewigen Lebens (Frankfort, 1599), and which later become the avowed basis of one of Bach's best cantatas.

The evidence, as usual in such matters, is not all of the same weight. It will be noticed that two of the four parallels now to be quoted, (a) and (b), are of a kind that might easily be accidental—progressions which were necessarily often used by Handel's predecessors and contemporaries, though as regards (a) the strong prominence and the repetition of the phrase in each work must be taken into account. The other parallels, (c) and (d), are more characteristic and convincing, and they leave little doubt, in the present writer's mind at least, as to Handel's indebtedness not only in these, but in the two former instances as well. For though none of the parallels alone could carry any conviction at all, the accumulation of all four within the narrow limits of the two works in question can hardly be explained away as the result of mere coincidence.

(a) This is the progression constantly recurring in the chorus, and forming, it might be said, its central idea—i.e., the progression from dominant to superdominant and back to dominant:

and elsewhere:

paralleled by the second half of lines 1 and 4 of the chorale:

(b) The second theme of the chorus begins:

For the Lord God and line 10 of the chorale:

(c) The words, 'The kingdom of this world,' introduce a new subject in the chorus, and the musical phrase is enunciated twice:

The king-dom of this world is be - come 87es.

Both the phrase and the repetition, and also the episodic occurrence, are to be found in the chorale, lines 7 and 8:

(d) The chief remaining phrase utilised in the chorus follows hard upon (c):

And He shall reign for ev - er and ev - er.

and this is very obviously paralleled in the most striking phrase in the chorale, to which lines 3, 6, and 11 are all sung:

It seems very possible that Handel's mind may have been redirected to the chorale at the time when the chorus was composed, partly because the word 'Hallelujah' occurs in the chorale, where it forms line 9 of verses 1 and 2.

CONFERENCE OF CATHEDRAL ORGANISTS

This annual meeting was held on April 5 in Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, with Dr. Basil Harwood in the chair. Mr. H. C. Colles read a paper on Cathedral music from the outsider's point of view, with special reference to methods of treating the Psalms, and in the discussion Sir Hugh Allen pointed out that the obstacle to adopting reforms lay with unmusical deans and chapters. At the afternoon session the Bishop of Ripon (Dr. T. B. Strong) dealt with some of the possibilities of action in the near future by the National Assembly, and advised that the Conference should be prepared with a positive answer to the challenge that would be made as to what was the value of the musical establishments of the cathedrals. He argued that there should be a standard of what music was suitable for worship, and if they weakened cathedral traditions there would be chaos in all Church music. The Cathedral choir sang on the staircase four examples of the Carnegie edition of Tudor Church Music, and the members of the Conference subsequently attended Evensong.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

The Society will visit St. Anne's, Soho, on May 26. Mr. Albert Orton will give a Bach recital at 3.30; tea will be at 4.45 in the Church Hall (1s. per head), followed by a paper on 'Pianoforte Playing and its Relation to the Organist's Work,' and a short pianoforte recital.

The organ at Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, has recently been reconstructed under the supervision of the organist, Mr. T. H. Weaving. The original instrument was built by Messrs. Telford & Telford in 1857, and the same firm has carried out the rebuilding. The organ is now a four-manual, with twelve stops on the Great, fifteen on the Swell, eight on the Choir, eight on the Solo, and five on the Pedal. This last department strikes us as barely adequate. It is curious, too, in that it has no 8-ft. stop. There are four 16-ft. (Double Open, Bourdon, Violone, and Trombone), and one 4-ft. (Octave). The dedication service took place on March 22, when the Archbishop of Dublin preached. Mr. Weaving gave a recital, playing Bach's Toccata in F, and pieces by Gade, Smart, and Guilmant. The authorities are to be congratulated on the fact that, although the work has cost £1,635, only £25 remains to be collected.

The St. Matthew Passion had a fine performance at St. Mary's, Nottingham, during Holy Week, by the St. Mary's Choral Society, augmented by the choirboys to a force of a hundred and ten. Mr. Vernon Read conducted, Miss C. A. Woollatt being at the pianoforte and Mr. O. Galliaerd at the organ. The church was crowded, and many people were turned away. Mr. Read has lately completed a five months' series of dinner-hour recitals, with well-chosen programmes. The organ is a four-manual Walker, built in 1914.

The St. Matthew Passion was sung at St. John the Evangelist's, Edinburgh, during Holy Week, in an unusual manner, being spread over four evenings, from 6.30 to 7.30. This is a plan that has much to commend it. The 'cutting' of this work is always a problem, and anything like a complete performance is a severe strain on a small choir, and not less on the listeners. Mr. Greenhouse Allt conducted. The recitals at St. John's show a good deal of enterprise. There have recently been a Handel-Purcell programme of music for strings and organ, a violoncello and vocal recital, a choral programme by the Scottish Choir of the Edinburgh Royal Choral Union (works by Parry, and Bantock's arrangement of Hebridean music), an organ-cum-violin recital, and a recital of old English organ music by Russell, Stanley, Purcell, Charles Wesley, Adams, and Bennett.

Mr. Lynnwood Farnam, at the Church of the Holy Communion, New York, completed on March 26 his third series of Monday evening organ recitals, extending over a period of three months. To quote Cecil Forsyth in the current New Music Review, 'the programmes form a rich storehouse of musical "reasure, particularly in the direction of modern organ literature.' Of 134 compositions played, 64 were French, 32 American, 20 German, 8 English, 5 Hungarian, 2 Belgian, 2 Italian, and 1 Spanish. The composers represented the greatest number of times were as follows: Bach 11, Louis Vierne 10, Jacob 10, Barnes 9, Dupré 8, Widor 7, Saint-Saëns 7, Franck 4, De Lamarier 4, Bonnet 4, Liszt 4, Mark Andrews 4, Mendelssohn 3, Grace 3, Mulet 3, Jepson 3.

In view of the Byrd Tercentenary, the attention of choirmasters is drawn to a new edition of the composer's six-part anthem, Sing joyfully unto God, just published by Messrs. Novello. Dr. George J. Bennett, the editor, has transposed the work up a minor third, so that it stands in E flat, the pitch that is supposed to approximate to that of Byrd's period; and he has done away with the divided alto parts (a constant obstacle to church choirs), substituting for the second alto part one for second tenors or first basses (the alteration has been effected by an interchange of the middle parts). This magnificent anthem should be in the repertoire of any well-equipped choir.

We have received the service book of the Southwark Plainsong Association's Festival Evensong to be held at Southwark Cathedral on June 9, at 8 p.m. (Faith Press, 6d.). Choirs in the Diocese who wish to develop their knowledge of plainsong, descant, and polyphonic music, should get in touch with the secretary, Mr. Godfrey Sceats, Ballina Road, S.E., with a view to taking part in this Festival. The music is not too exacting for an average parish church choir, and it has the advantage of being of a type that will be useful to singers in their ordinary service work.

Among the best examples of programme music for the organ are Otto Malling's Christus (scenes from the Life of Christ). Mr. E. W. Chaney played the whole work at Gillingham Parish Church recently, making up two programmes with a couple of suitable vocal solos interspersed on each occasion. Each of the ten pieces was preceded by the reading of a short passage from the Gospels descriptive of the scene.

A correspondent—whose word we have not hitherto had occasion to doubt—tells us that his vicar suggested that, as the organ was too loud, the stops should be pulled out only half way. Will another reader now come along with the news that his vicar asked for single chants instead of double, in order that the service might be shortened?

The twenty-first anniversary of Mr. William Parkyn's work as organist and choirmaster at East Finchley Congregational Church was marked by the presentation of a gold watch and chain, and by warm expressions of appreciation. Mrs. Parkyn was presented with a gold wrist watch.

An interesting series of recitals is being given at All Souls', Langham Place, on Fridays at 1.5. The complete programmes up to June 22 have been issued. A large proportion of the players are famous blind organists, among them being Mr. Wolstenholme, who plays on May 1.

The Messiah was sung on April 12 at Malvern Priory Church by the Oratorio Choir. The orchestra was led by Mr. Paul Beard. Miss L. Peddie and Mr. T. F. Bye played pianoforte and organ accompaniments, and Dr. Louis Hamand conducted.

Bach's St. Matthew Passion was sung on March 18 at Wakefield Cathedral. The Precentor conducted an augmented choir, and Mr. J. N. Hardy was at the organ. Mr. David Appleyard, of Wells Cathedral, sang the part of the Evangelist.

Before members of the Portsmouth branch of the Music Teachers' Association, Dr. Charles Macpherson lectured on March 19 on 'Organs and Organ Music,' and gave a recital illustrative of the progress of his subject since the 16th century.

Bach's St. Matthew Passion was performed in Portsea Parish Church on March 18 by an augmented choir, with organ, pianoforte, and violin accompaniment. Mr. Hugh Burry conducted.

At St. Matthias's, Richmond, Surrey, Handel's Passion was sung on March 18, and on March 21 and 30 the combined choirs of the parish sang Charles Wood's St. Mark Passion, under the direction of Mr. Ambrose P. Porter.

The Ilkley Vocal Society sang Brahms's Requiem on March 20 in St. Margaret's Church. Mr. Arthur T. Akeroyd conducted, and Mr. W. H. Ibberson was at the organ.

Dvorák's Stabat Mater was performed in Truro Cathedral, on March 23 by the Cathedral choir and the Musical Society. Mr. Hubert Middleton conducted, and Dr. Ernest Bullock, organist of Exeter Cathedral, was at the organ.

Two performances of Bach's St. Matthew Passion were given in Exeter Cathedral on March 24 and March 27 by the Cathedral choir and the Bach Choir. Dr. Ernest Bullock conducted.

Dvorák's Stabat Mater was performed at Ripon Cathedral by the Cathedral and Oratorio Choirs on March 28. Mr. C. H. Moody conducted, and Dr. A. C. Tysoe was at the organ.

Stanford's Requiem was performed in Mutley Baptist Church, Plymouth, on March 18, under the direction of Mr. Percy Butchers.

Charles Wood's fine setting of the Passion was sung at Brighton Parish Church on March 20, conducted by Dr. Chastey Hector.

Twgwyn Choral Society sang the first part of St. Paul and Bach's Bide with us (in Welsh) in the C.M. Chapel, Bangor, on March 16, Mr. E. T. Davies being at the organ.

Bach's St. Matthew Passion was sung in Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, on March 29, with Dr. H. G. Ley at the organ.

Charles Wood's St. Mark Passion was performed on Good Friday in St. Michael's Church, Exeter, directed and accompanied by Mr. H. Treneer, the organist.

Lee Williams's Gethsemane was sung by the choir of High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham, on Palm Sunday, directed by Mr. C. Blyton Dobson.

Gounod's Gallia was sung at St. Mellitus's, Hanwell, during Passiontide. Mr. F. A. W. Docker was at the organ, and Mr. H. J. Green conducted.

Albert Ham's cantata, The Solitudes of the Passion, was sung at St. John's, Cardiff, on March 27, directed by Mr. G. H. Cole.

An enormous congregation attended the annual performance of Bach's St. Matthew Passion in York Minster, on Palm Sunday.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. W. E. Kirby, St. Barnabas, Southfields—Two Preludes and Cortège, Debussy; Pœan, Harwood.

Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. Mary's, Haverfordwest—Nachspiel, Noble; Scherzo, Holloway; Allegro (Sonata No. 10), Rheinberger.

Mr. Greenhouse Allt, St. John the Evangelist, Edinburgh—Programme of Hebridean music; programme of Old English organ music (Russell, Stanley, Purcell, Charles Wesley, Adams, and Bennett); and a Bach programme.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, Manchester Cathedral—Fugue on 'Ad nos,' Liszt; Allegro Maestoso (from Organ Sonata), Elgar; Three Chorale Preludes, Bach.

Mr. B. Langdale, St. George's, Barnsley—Fugue on 'Ad nos,' Liszt; March on a Ground Bass, Dohnányi; Finale (Symphony No. 1), Vierne.

Mr. Charles Massey, St. Simon and St. Jude, Anfield, Liverpool—Sonata No. 3, Guilmant; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach.

Mr. Ralph W. Palmer, London Road Congregational Church, Kettering—Allegro Moderato from Sonatina, Karg-Elert; Canon in B minor, Schumann; Pièce Héroïque, Franck.

Mr. C. Hylton Stewart, St. Margaret's, Westminster—Légende, Dukas; Finale (from Suite No. 2), Boëllmann; Cradle Song, Grace; Pièce Héroïque, Franck.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Sonata No. 1, Guilmant; Pastorale, Franck; Prelude on 'Hanover,' Parry.

Miss Lilian Coombes, St. Lawrence Jewry—Fugue, Reubke; Cradle Song, Grace; Concerto, Bach.

Mr. Alfred H. Dudley, Christ Church, Port Sunlight—Symphonic Finale, Guilmant; 'Finlandia.'

Mr. Herbert I. Mountford, Nechells Wesleyan Church, Birmingham—a Coleridge-Taylor programme.

Mr. H. E. Wall, St. Matthew's, West Kensington—Theme and Variations, Rheinberger; Rhapsody No. 3, Saint-Saëns; Laus Deo, Grace.

Mr. Gordon A. Slater, Boston Parish Church—Grave in G, Bach; Vivace (Sonata No. 6), Bach; Scherzetto, Vierne; Prelude to 'Gerontius.'

Mr. A. Minto, St. Hilda's, Darlington—Scherzo in F minor, Turner; Prelude on St. Michael, West (String Quartets by Beethoven and Mendelssohn, by the Darlington String Quartet).

Mr. Thomas Keyner, St. Gabriel's, Bounds Green—Sonata in D flat, Rheinberger; Fantasia in G, Bach; First movement of Symphony No. 6, Widor.

Dr. C. F. Waters, St. Saviour's, Croydon—Chaconne, Buxtehude; Toccata in C, Bach; Chorale Preludes by Bach (3) and Pachelbel.

Mr. Arthur R. Saunders, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Fantasia on 'Hanover,' Lemare; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Fantaisie Rustique, Wolstenholme.

Mr. G. Bernard Gilbert, Stratford Town Hall—First movement (Sonata in E flat minor), Rheinberger; Gavotte, Musette, and Bourrée, Bach; Funeral March and 'Hymn of Seraphs,' Guilmant.

Mr. Cyril Pearce, St. Mary's Baptist Church, Norwich—Concerto in G minor, Handel; Chorale Preludes by Parry, Stanford, and Vaughan Williams; Meditation, Grace; Passacaglia, Rheinberger; Toccata in F, Bach; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck.

Mr. Cyril S. Christopher, Wesley United Methodist Church, Dudley—Sonata, Elgar; Prelude and Fugue in E flat, Bach; Sonata in D flat, Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt; Prelude and Fugue in B, Dupré.

- Mr. Richard B. Hamilton, All Saints', Hook—Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Prelude on 'St. Anne,' Parry; Toccata, Boëllmann.
- Mr. W. Hunt, St. George's, Belfast—Sonata in A minor, Rheinberger; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge.
- Mr. Patrick Black, Dumbarton Parish Church—Angelus, Tomlinson; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Marche aux Flambeaux, Guilmant.

APPOINTMENTS

- Mr. S. G. Cockeram, organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, West Green, N.
- Mr. Christopher H. Evans, organist and choirmaster, St. Luke's, Nutford Place, W.
- Mr. Rudolph R. Lord, choirmaster, St. John's Cathedral, Kalgoorlie, West Australia.
- Mr. W. G. Moore, organist and choirmaster, All Saints', Oxford.
- Mr. Walter J. Rainbird, organist and choirmaster, St. Mary's, Bromley, Kent.
- Miss L. A. Williams, organist and choirmaster, Parish Church, Wantage.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

- Gentleman (age twenty-four) would like to meet one of about the same age who is an artistic pianist and good accompanist. Clapham district preferred. Also a good 'cellist for classical music.—W. T., c/o Musical Times.
- Young gentleman (Putney) would like to meet young pianist, violinist, and 'cellist, with view to weekly practice and mutual enjoyment. Classics.—W. Z., c/o Musical Times.
- Good amateurs (all instruments) wanted to augment orchestra for concert at Queen's Hall in June. Rehearsals: Central London, Tuesday evenings. (Low pitch wind.)—D. WRIGHT, 46, Aldridge Road Villas, W.11.
- Gentleman wishes to meet lady or gentleman for mutual help in ear-training.—E. F., 49, Page Street, S.W.1.
- Violinist would like to meet pianist, or pianist and 'cellist, for mutual practice. North-West Hull district.—C. H. W., c/o Musical Times.
- Young man, pianist, would like to join a jazz band. S.E. district preferred.—M. M., c/o Musical Times.
- Violinist-pianist wishes to meet 'cellist for mutual practice. Good player.—Write 'VIOLINIST,' 18, Harlech Street, Dewsbury Road, Leeds.
- Conductor of a recently formed Choral Society is anxious to meet amateur instrumentalists of all kinds with a view to forming an orchestra.—Apply by letter to W. A. NOAKES, 64, Cumberland Street, S.W.1.
- Violinist (male, age 21) would like to meet a young gentleman pianist for mutual practice. Good library. Would also like to meet a 'cellist or join a string quartet. N.W. district.—JOHN DENMAN, 48, Esmond Road, Kilburn, N.W.6.
- Pianist, two violins, clarinet, flute, trombone, and cornet wanted to complete a small orchestra for practice and musical convivals.—4, Fairland Road, Stratford, E.15.
- Vocalist desires to meet pianist and accompanist for mutual practice. Classical and modern songs, &c., only. No 'shop' ballads. South Birmingham district.—J. E. R., c/o Musical Times.
- Young lady pianist (18) would like to meet violinist or 'cellist, or join instrumental trio or quartet, &c. (classics only). Croydon district.—M. V. B. TYSON, 'Uldale,' Purley Park Road, Purley.
- Baritone wishes to meet young gentleman (pianist) for practice, in South-West London district.—Letters, 'R. S. P.,' 48, Danbrook Road, Streatham, S.W.16.
- Pianist required to co-operate with violin class.—'VIOLINIST,' 236, Malpas Road, S.E.4.

Letters to the Editor

THE BYRD TERCENTENARY

SIR,—It would be interesting in this Tercentenary year if the place of Byrd's birth could be established. Authorities seem to be agreed in the belief that he was born in Lincolnshire, and most of them say probably in the city of Lincoln, but the only evidence produced is:

- (1) The fact that in the 16th century there were many families of that name in various parts of the county.
- (2) That thirty-one years before Byrd's birth, a certain Henry Byrd, sometime Mayor of Newcastle, was buried in Lincoln Cathedral;
- (3) That Byrd must have felt a particular attachment to Lincoln, as, although sworn in a member of the Chapel Royal in 1569, he retained the post at Lincoln until 1572, and his eldest daughter was christened there in 157½.
- (4) The fact that no other town claims his birthship;

all of which, is rather vague and indefinite. I have lately made many inquiries, without success, but I have discovered the curious fact that in the original records of his marriage, and of the christening of his daughter, still extant here, the composer's name is spelt 'Bird.'

In preparation for the Tercentenary the whole of Byrd's works have, I believe, lately appeared in print, most of them for the first time. In a long life of eighty years Byrd composed music of supreme beauty, but there is necessarily also some of little value. So vast a collection to choose from without any sort of guidance is the despair of the choirmaster, and in many cases he will probably do little or nothing.

One wonders whether it would have been better if a committee of Church musicians had separated the wheat from the tares, and selected a certain number (say twelve or twenty) of Byrd's finest works for publication, properly edited.

One difficulty in the performance of some of Byrd's music is the divided alto parts. Anyone with experience of Cathedral or Church choirs knows that the alto is the weakest section of the choir, and, if divided, the tonal balance is pretty sure to be unsatisfactory, especially in unaccompanied singing.

How the alto or counter-tenor parts with extended compass in some of the music of Byrd's period was performed we cannot know. It can only be surmised that they were perhaps sung by light tenors, with a cultivated false alto for the upper notes.

It is possible, by redistributing the middle parts, to avoid the division of altos in some of Byrd's works. Purists will object to this, but we may feel certain that if the composer was still living, he would prefer that they be thus adapted to present-day circumstances, rather than not sung on account of their impracticability.

It may be of interest to note that Flintoft, Priest-Vicar of Lincoln Cathedral, and composer of the well-known double chant—migrated from Lincoln to the Chapel Royal, as was the case with Byrd.—Yours, &c.,

North Place, Lincoln.

GEORGE J. BENNETT.

April 5, 1923.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE ELIZABETHAN COMPOSERS ON PURCELL

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Statham, I should like to point out that it was Mr. Holst, and not I, who said that Purcell was uninfluenced by the Elizabethan composers. I think, however, that Mr. Statham's instances to the contrary are singularly unconvincing. First, as regards O Lord God of Hosts, the imitation commencing on each successive beat is surely not characteristic of Elizabethan or any other 16th-century composers, but is to be met with in every century since the invention of counterpoint. Again, the 'unadorned 4 3 2 3 suspension' (more often than not, I fancy, 'adorned' with 6 5 4 5) certainly occurs frequently as the ultimate chord of an Elizabethan composition; but still more frequently does not so occur. Secondly, as regards Hear my prayer, which to Mr. Statham suggests the influence of Byrd: is this anthem 'really one big phrase,' seeing that there is 'a cadential stopping place' at the sixteenth bar, in the key of the dominant? It is a fugue on two subjects, and as it contains only thirty-four bars, it is not surprising that these subjects supply sufficient material for the whole; though, by the way, this is quite contrary to the usual practice of Byrd. Finally, the omission of the third in the ultimate chord is not 'an Elizabethan touch'; it is more often present than not, and has been omitted by other composers—e.g., by Mozart in his Requiem Mass; but if it were, Hear my prayer is not an example of it, for the third appears in the first alto, although it afterwards falls to the root. And it is a minor third—not specially characteristic of the Elizabethans! But the main difference is in the general style of the harmony, in which the tonality is always clearly defined.

I had thought that Dr. Fellowes said that the Tenbury MS. was a composition by Byrd. I made no note of his remark at the time, and doubtless he mentioned Parsons. But the point does not affect the argument.—Yours, &c.,

5, Richmond Mansions, ARTHUR T. FROGGATT.

Denton Road, Twickenham.

April 3, 1923.

THAT BLUE-PENCILLED SCORE

SIR,—I was much interested to read Dr. Bairstow's letter dealing with the blue-pencil marks in the MS. score of Vaughan Williams's Sea Symphony. I happen to know the score pretty well, as the publishers once kindly let me take it away on a holiday. The blue marks were there then—in the unmistakable hand of one of our most respected musicians, whose experience in either choral or orchestral conducting would make the sum of Dr. Bairstow's and mine in both fields together look rather absurd.

This gentleman is well able to take care of himself, and I am not writing in his defence. In fact, I am keeping Dr. Bairstow's letter as a vocabulary for use on people who borrow my own music and return it in the same state; but I do urge that circumstances alter cases, and that the usefulness of this particular score was vastly increased by the much-abused marks which made clear important things that the copying had obscured.

I therefore deplore the loss of Dr. Bairstow's time, temper, and india-rubbers, for especially in the earlier stages of study I must confess I was greatly helped by these 'aids to scattered wits.'

I agree that a conductor ought to know a work well enough not to need such things. I very rarely mark a score myself, but would not promise to refrain from this dastardly practice if I were conducting and rehearsing four or five programmes a week, which I expect was the condition under which this particular crime was committed.

May we ask what the composer thinks about it all?—Yours, &c.,

ADRIAN C. BOULT.

6, Chelsea Court, S.W.3.

April 6, 1923.

'MILTON' ORGAN (1637)

SIR,—Will you allow me through the columns of your paper to appeal to those who know the 'Milton' organ in Tewkesbury Abbey for donations, however small, to put it in a state of repair?

This organ was brought to Tewkesbury in 1737 from Magdalen College, Oxford. Built by the grandfather of Renatus Harris, it is said to have been played on by Milton, who was Cromwell's secretary. Grove's Dictionary gives the date of building as 1637.

In October we celebrate the Octocentenary Festival, and £2,000 at least is required for repairs for windows and stone-work, so that it is extremely difficult to obtain even the small sum of £300 to prevent one of the most historic organs in the country from being silent altogether. I should be pleased to acknowledge gifts for this purpose from any of your readers, and would send Churchwardens' receipt, together with photograph of this glorious instrument.—Yours, &c.,

PERCY BAKER

(Captain; Organist, &c., Tewkesbury Abbey).

Hazeldene, Tewkesbury.

April 6, 1923.

REPORT ON COMPETITIVE SCHEME AT KNELLER HALL.

SIR,—I give below the report of my Committee on the original compositions for the military band sent in for adjudication during 1922. Fifteen in all were submitted, of which the works of three composers were accepted.

I trust that this year the entry may be larger. Some of our leading composers—Mr. Holst, Dr. Vaughan Williams, Mr. Hebert Bedford, &c.—are now interesting themselves in the military band combination, and this fact should encourage others to experiment in the same medium.—Yours, &c.,

Kneller Hall,
Twickenham.

JOHN C. SOMERVILLE
(Colonel, Commandant
Royal Military School of Music).

April 2, 1923.

REPORT

The chief aim of these competitions—to encourage the production of military band works of really high quality—is not entirely realised by the compositions submitted in 1922. One has still to deplore a seeming failure to attract any of the acknowledged leading composers. Not much new ground is broken, even by the best of the works we have examined. Yet among the competitors are three composers who have sent in works that are definitely worth having. Mr. H. A. Keyser's Overture to Othello and Mr. J. Verney's Variations, and (in another category) Mr. D. J. Camp's arrangement of the Brahms Waltzes, have many qualities that make it really desirable to bring the works to performance. The others submitted, though in some cases good in certain directions, show a general failure to attain a distinctive standard.

(Signed) HERBERT HOWELLS.

J. E. ADKINS.

INFLATED ORCHESTRAS

SIR,—I don't know who started the hoary legend of the 'monstrous German orchestras,' but it is really time it were dead. I see the latest to repeat the parrot cry is Dr. Adrian C. Boult. Great play has been made of the legend by the commercial travellers of French music—but with those people it is useless to adduce reasoned argument when it is a question of the works of the firm they represent against those of Germania & Co.

I remember pointing out to one of those egregious gentlemen that Berlioz started really 'monstrous orchestras' generations before Strauss and Mahler (who was not a German at all, but a Jew and an Austrian one at that), and that no score of Strauss, Mahler, or even the Gurrelieder orchestra of Schönberg makes any demand conformable to the truly fabulous requirements of Berlioz for his Requiem.

Dr. Boult affirms that the size of the Strauss orchestra tends to muddiness. I must assert per contra that I have scarcely ever heard (even in London) a Strauss score sound such a 'mud-pie' as every performance of two such exquisite scores as Daphnis et Chloe and La Péri, to say nothing of Tristan; and it was not until I heard these works done at Paris—the two former at the Opéra, the latter by the Pásdeloup Orchestra—that I realised what they really sounded like. I have no hesitation in saying, too, that two recent performances of Zarathustra and Heldenleben in London were absolutely execrable—a disgrace alike to orchestra and conductor.

But in any case what is the point of gibbering about the size of orchestras should be? Presumably they are of the size necessary for the composer's needs, and any attempt to dictate to the composer in the matter is gratuitous impertinence. It may be asserted that the composer if he wants his work performed must have an eye on the practical aspects of the matter, economic difficulties, &c., and so devise matters that his score can be performed with the minimum of expense and expenditure of time on rehearsals, and so on. That is a problem easily solved by writing no scores at all. It follows, I think, that the unwritten scores will require no performance and therefore no performers. Expenses will thus be reduced to the irreducible minimum. Moreover it is plain that where a Camarilla determines to stop a man without money, i.e., influence, getting a public performance, be his score never so small and its merits never so great, going through the eye of a needle is an easier job than obtaining a hearing. On the other hand no considerations of size, unwieldiness, or difficulty—be the score never so feeble—will prevent the performance of a work the ways whereof have been greased with the one universal infallible lubricant—a lubricant whose chief ingredient is a cheque (of sufficient size bien entendu).

Then even preposterous 'poems' by one-button Mandarins of the Middle Kingdom may appear on the programmes of the Metropolitan Symphony Orchestra, and perhaps—oh, culmination of glory!—even be conducted by ecstatic perspiring Prometheans!—Yours, &c.,

KAIKHOSRU SORABJI.

175, Clarence Gate Gardens, N.W.1.

April 5, 1923.

'WE WANT TO HEAR THE ORCHESTRA'

SIR,—I wonder whether I could get into touch, through your columns, with the hero who shouted: 'We want to hear the orchestra!' at Sir Thomas Beecham's concert in the Albert Hall? He just beat me by a fraction of a second on the tape, as it were, and I had to be content with the secondary rôle of supporter. Perhaps, however, if we could meet we might patch up some plan of campaign for the future, I, personally, being game for anything in this connection.

It really does seem monstrous that we can't for once in a way have an orchestral concert of really high standing without a vocal intrusion appealing only to the lowest type of music-lover. If Dame Clara Butt felt she must prolong an already long concert by giving gratuitous encores, she might at least have endeavoured to conform to the standard in which the remainder of the concert was set. The two items for which she was actually billed were, in my opinion, far from being masterpieces, but they served to whet the appetite for the ensuing orchestral number, and were at any rate inoffensive. If Dame Butt had confined her encores to the Delilah aria in the one case, and Oh rest in the Lord in the other, we should have smiled indulgently. To continue, however, as she did, to flood the hall with the sob of bald, bad ballads, was highly inconsiderate, to say the least.

The concert agent who billed these two musicians together must have been a bit of a humorist, but this type of humour which is so blessed an asset in time of war, and in the ordinary run of life, rarely does much good to the cause of art generally. In any case, there can be no doubt that the concert was primarily arranged to welcome back a great benefactor to music in England, and under the circumstances it was up to Dame Clara Butt—who is not exactly a benefactress to the same cause—to temper her zeal as much as possible. I am aware that opinions such as the above may not be altogether dissociated from a subsequent ear-boxing, but for the sake of the oppressed I gladly take the risk.—Yours, &c.,

26, St. James's Mansions, N.W.6. ROBERT LORENZ.

April 15, 1923.

MUSIC IN EDUCATION

SIR,—In your kindly comments on my letter on Manual Training in the British Medical Journal of February 24 you say:

'Most of us are gratified by the prominence given to music in the recent Report of the Consultative Committee (with which Mr. Percy Scholes will deal fully in our next issue), but Dr. Bower thinks the subject is treated in rather a perfunctory and inadequate manner.'

From the above remarks it is quite evident to me now that what appeared in the British Medical Journal was only an abridged account of the Report. I was under the impression at the time, however, that it contained the whole of the Report, and, as barely four lines out of the five columns in the Journal were devoted to music, I thought I was justified in saying that, so far as that subject was concerned, the report was inadequate. I am very glad, therefore, to take this opportunity for saying that had I seen the full Report I have no doubt that I also should have been, as you say, 'gratified by the prominence given to music in it.'—Yours, &c.,

E. DYKES BOWER.

Elton House, Gloucester.

April 7, 1923.

WANTED—A DYNASTIC THEME

SIR,—I understand that some of our young British composers are on the look-out for more originality in sources of their inspiration. Has any Church musician yet tried to 'hit off' a Tutankh Amen?—Yours, &c.,

JOHN E. WEST.

'OH CASPIAN'

SIR,—I shall be grateful if some kind reader will give me the name of the work, chorus or part-song, in which the words 'Oh Caspian' occur. I remember hearing it some thirty years ago, but at the moment I cannot trace it.—Yours, &c.,

'MADRIGAL'

'THE POACHER'S WIDOW'

We are obliged to numerous correspondents who have kindly sent us information about an old setting of Kingsley's The Poacher's Widow. The composer was Elizabeth Philp, and the song was published by Messrs. Boosey in No. 3 of their Cavendish Song Books.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of May, 1863:

MR. CHARLES E. STEPHENS having been induced, in November last, to resign his much-valued appointment at Hampstead Parish Church (where he had officiated for nearly seven years), to accept one more conveniently situate, in which his expectations have been altogether disappointed, begs to announce that he is now prepared to treat for an eligible SITUATION AS ORGANIST. In the absence of a thoroughly competent choir, a unison service preferred. 2, Howley Place, Maida Hill, W.—April, 1863.

A BARGAIN.—To be sold, unusually low, a SINGLE and DOUBLE BASS, both in excellent condition, and of good quality of tone; parted with in consequence of an organ being substituted. Apply to W. Cantrell, Chemist, Elland.

WINDSOR; the Royal Nuptial Day.—Pastorale Diversissements for Young Pianists, introducing birds singing, horns and bugles sounding, cannons firing, trumpets calling, bells ringing, &c. Sent post-free for 13 stamps. Orders to R. Andrews, 144, Oxford Street, Manchester.

Sharps and Flats

Why should millions of people be deprived of what they adore—the tender, simple love ballad—because a few highbrows call it sickly sentiment?—Guy d'Hardelot.

I am not afraid of the word 'highbrow,' for it simply means that a man has a man's forehead instead of a monkey's.—Sir Henry Hadow.

Women orchestra players are not popular with conductors mainly because the conductors do not feel at liberty to swear as occasion demands before them as they do before a lot of men.—Richard Czerwonky.

I am going to learn English, so as to be able to sing Home, sweet Home, and other lovely English songs I am taking back with me to Prague.—Kristyna Morfova.

It seems to me to be a mistaken view of either art or religion that would exclude applause [at performances of The Messiah]; and, indeed, the only reasonable reason for not allowing it in the Church is that it might go to the heads of the clergy.—Robert Lynd.

An hour's sleep before an evening's conducting revives my faculties and nerves me to my best.—Albert Coates.

I do not think opera will ever become prosperous. It is a very luxurious, a very complicated, and very expensive form of art, and in no country in the world except our own has any sensible person tried to make it pay.—Sir Thomas Beecham.

The fact is that opera-going and grumbling seem to be inseparable. I have never met a contented opera-goer yet, and I doubt whether I ever shall.—Alfred Kalisch.

In real life lovers whisper; let love turn from conversation to song, however, and a man will yell 'I love you' as though he were megaphoning facts about boxers to an audience of ten thousand in the Albert Hall.—W. J. Turner.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

At the beginning of the Lent term Sir Henry Wood was invited by Sir Alexander Mackenzie to share with him the training of the students' orchestra at the R.A.M., and at the orchestral concert which was given at Queen's Hall on Tuesday, March 27, Sir Alexander stood aside and yielded the baton to the distinguished Queen's Hall conductor, who had trained the orchestra for this concert. The programme opened with Weber's Overture to Oberon, which was well played, although the pianissimo opening was spoilt by the entrance of late-comers. The other purely orchestral item was Franck's Symphony in D minor, which brought the concert to an end. Of this fine emotional work an admirable performance was given. The programme also included the first movement of Beethoven's Violin Concerto, played by Mr. J. Pougnet; Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor, of which Miss Désirée McEwen gave a brilliant reading; three MSS. songs by Miss K. V. Summers, sung by Miss Olive Groves; two of Elgar's Sea Pictures, sung by Miss Vera Havell; and the 'Credo' from Verdi's Otello, of which a very dramatic interpretation was given by Mr. Howard Fry, whose fine voice and artistic singing should secure him a position amongst the leading baritones.

The Academy opens for the Midsummer term on Thursday, May 3.

A course of four lectures upon the 'History of Music' with special reference to the rise of the Russian school, will be given by Dr. F. G. Shinn in Duke's Hall on Wednesday afternoons, commencing May 9, at 4.30. There will be vocal and instrumental illustrations.

AWARDS

The Philip L. Agnew Composition Prize to Frederick T. Durrant (a native of Beer, Devon). The adjudicators were Messrs. Norman O'Neill and W. H. Reed.

The Edward W. Nicholls Prize (Pianoforte), to Cicely Hoye (a native of London), Betty Humby being very highly commended, and Phyllis Sowerby-Coo highly commended. The adjudicators were Miss Florence Marr, Miss Dorothy Grinstead, and Mrs. A. Mabel Hensman (in the chair).

The R.A.M. Club Prize (for Violin and Pianoforte), to Jean Pougnet and Betty Humby. George Tobias and Harry Isaacs were highly commended, and Israel Schlaen and Gerard Moorat commended. The adjudicators were Messrs. Albert Sammons and William Murdoch.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

As a result of the open competition held at the beginning of April, the following have been awarded scholarships tenable at the College for varying periods and in the subjects named:

PIANOFORTE.—Irene Kohler, Margaret Mather.

SINGING.—Doris M. Clarke, Eva N. Clarke, Doris L. M. Duck, Lilian Mann.

VIOLIN.—Henry Balen, Israel Katsoff, Reginald Leopold, Dorothy E. S. Macpherson, Dorothy F. Sexton, Gladys M. Stevens, Bernard Wright.

BASSOON.—Leslie W. James.

The adjudicators were Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. C. W. Pearce, and Dr. E. F. Horner.

'SOME ASPECTS OF THE PRESENT MUSICAL SITUATION'

On March 13 there was a good audience at the Musical Association's meeting to hear Mr. Arthur Bliss discourse on 'Some Aspects of the Present Musical Situation.' Mr. Percy Scholes occupied the chair.

The lecturer began by saying that if it was true that there was nothing new in art, then obviously there was nothing new to be said about it. Musical developments followed each other with mathematical precision hand in hand with the comments thereon, recalling similar situations of twenty, fifty, or a hundred years before, and it might be logically maintained that the musical critics of to-day were but reiterating the commonplaces and eulogies of their predecessors of thirty years ago. The composer looked at music from a very different vantage-point from that of the critic. He was necessarily narrow-minded, leaning solely towards those composers who expressed a similar personality, and regarding with little sympathy those whose aims were antagonistic. In short, he viewed all music from the personal standpoint, while the critical mind, functioning objectively, focussed each facet of the art in relation to its opposite or adjacent facet. Therefore the views of all composers on contemporary music should be discredited as serious statements.

The amateur, it was often said, was the backbone of British music, and we could tell the height of the musical barometer by studying the pressure of the amateur on its surface. To-day countless folk fiddled, sang, danced, and played; in every village choral societies were in active operation. In many places amateur orchestras were springing up, proving that making music was a very natural, popular, and English way of taking pleasure as it was two hundred and fifty years ago during our golden age of music. It mattered little then, any more than now, whether they played with perfection and brilliance, if only they brought to their playing love and care. But in all times a hybrid had appeared, amateur in accomplishment though professional in intention. The true professional was he who tried to make his living by attaining the highest possible efficiency, but this new quasi-amateur simply lost money in the effort to persuade himself and his friends that he was gaining an entry into the ranks of the professionals. The clear line between the one and the other was fast disappearing; for every one true professional player and singer at London recitals, there were ten bungling well-meaning amateurs.

Of the vast number who yearly left our musical colleges and academies many found work in orchestras of some description, others filled posts in church and school. To these, the lecturer said, he did not refer. They justified their existence, and the results were generally surprisingly good. He spoke entirely of the multitude who aspired to be interpretative artists, and who at the outset of their career felt that some such course as the immature London recital must be found. Now, an immature attack in music was just as fatal as an immature attack in the field. Unfortunately in music such an enterprise did not convey you to the hospital; instead, it took you to the provinces, where, with a carefully expurgated press notice, you swept along, scattering wrong notes, flat chest tones, exaggerated personalities, in fact, all the symptoms of a wrongly-acquired metropolitan superiority. What would be the result to the public of flooding the world of plumpers with amateurs? No leaky cistern could be considered safe after being repaired by such a one. Similarly, the periodic deluging of the musical community with amateurs would simply result in the destruction of what little public there was left.

There should be two distinct systems of training, one suitable for amateurs, giving them sufficient technique not to shame themselves in the drawing-room, and implanting in them a taste that was impeccable and a love that was lasting; and the other, based on quite different principles, devised specially for the training of professional musicians. These professionals should be kept apart musically so far as possible, and during their years of training live a life beneficial to the growth of music. At the end of their studentship they could be wished 'God-speed,' with the certainly that they need not fear the competition of those who could be recognised at once as not belonging to their category.

A fountain-head of taste was required. It was not the public so much as musicians that were in need of education. If in every musical post there were men whose outlook was generous and catholic, and whose discrimination for the best music was acute, the result would be overwhelmingly more sudden than that obtained by herding the public into one room and feeding them up with musical food, served with scornful condescension. It was a hopeful sign that people wished to read about music, and that in the press there was a large space devoted to music—not so much in regard to reports of concerts, as to articles. No editor would insert these from altruistic motives: they were put in to be read, and presumably they were read.

Most composers, willingly or otherwise, were acutely susceptible to the influence of audiences. Anything that depended on clear, concentrated thinking was anathema to many listeners; for others every bar must jolt and jar, or the music was but passive and dull. Was it strange, then, that we jiggered them with rhythm and exploded them with reiteration? Was it unnatural that we tended towards works that were short and lacked development, and that were incisive and pointed?

We found that to-day the principle of polytonality—or atonality—was superseding the old key system. We could point to the Schönberg school at Vienna, the Busoni school at Berlin, the Stravinsky and Milhaud school at Paris, not to speak of Goossens and Berners in London. In rhythm we had developed out of all recognition, due largely to the popularity of Slavonic music, but also traceable to the study of the supple stress and rhythm of our own Elizabethan writers, while in melody every year brought fresh fields for exploration, the only difficulty being that certain ears resented the term 'melody' as applied to contemporary music. As the sense of hearing developed, the more melodic utterances could we find in the works of all ages. This great burst of musical activity in England was far from being ugly or retrogressive. Although in such a mass of music there was bound to be much that was relatively unimportant and occasionally trivial, there were also numerous indications that out of it would come the greatest epoch in English music for two hundred and fifty years.

TERCENTENARY OF PHILIP ROSSETER

DIED MAY 5, 1623

The Tercentenary of the lutenist, Philip Rosseter, is appropriately synchronised by the timely publication of his 1601 Volume of Aires, edited by Dr. E. H. Fellowes, now reprinted in complete form for the first time since its appearance three hundred and twenty-two years ago.

Philip Rosseter shares with Thomas Campion the distinction of having been one of England's greatest lute song-composers, and, therefore, a very brief sketch of his career may be of topical interest.

No biographer has given details of Rosseter prior to 1601, but it is now admitted, that like his intimate friend Campion, he was of Irish ancestry, and was born about the year 1573. His 1601 Book of Aires is dedicated to Sir Thomas Monson, and it was followed by Lessons for the Consort in 1609. Meantime, in 1604, he was appointed court lutenist, and on January 4, 1610, he acquired from Lord Barry, an Irish dramatist, a share in Whitefriars Theatre. On May 31, 1615, he was one of the four granted a patent for building a theatre in Blackfriars, but the patent had to be surrendered in 1616, owing to the opposition of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London. He was, however, enabled to organize a new 'Children of the Revels' on October 31, 1617, and the company gave a performance at Norwich on August 29, 1618. He lost his good friend Campion in March, 1620. Rosseter died three years later, on May 5, 1623, at his house in Fetter Lane, and was buried at St. Dunstan-in-the-West, two days later, near his companion Campion.

W. H. G.-F.

THE PUPPET PLAYERS

The arrival in London of the Marionettes from the Teatro dei Piccoli at Rome is indeed an event. The Teatro dei Piccoli represents a wonderfully successful attempt to take hold of the time-honoured puppet art, which has during the past few centuries been maintained at a higher level in Italy than in any other country, and to revitalise it by giving it an enhanced technique and by bringing it into touch with the most advanced ideas upon staging and upon theatre music. There are at present seven or eight other plays in the repertory of the theatre and about twenty-five operas. Shakespeare's The Tempest is there, so is a dramatic version of our old favourite, Jules Verne's Twenty Thousand Leagues under the Sea, and Gozzi's classic, The Love of the Three Pomegranates, and amongst the operas are Pergolesi's La Serva Padrona, Paisiello's Barber of Seville, Mozart's Don Giovanni, three Rossini operas, three Donizetti operas, Massenet's Cinderella, and other things.

The piece with which the Company has elected to open its season at the Scala Theatre in London is one in which the libretto has been constructed out of Perrault's old fairy-story, The Sleeping Beauty, the music written by Ottorino Respighi, and the scenery designed by B. Angoletta. It is a charming little work. The present writer saw it upon the occasion of its production at Rome a year ago, and at that time expressed the hope that it would be brought to England.

The first thing that strikes any member of the audience who previously had not been acquainted with the work of the Teatro dei Piccoli is the marvellous stage technique of the puppets, which move freely and carry out motives which would be thought impossible to creatures of wood and wire. So life-like and so artistic indeed are the acting, dancing, and staging that many of the London papers (having, rather curiously, sent their dramatic critics to report upon an opera) have treated the thing purely as a new and interesting form of stage play. This is very unjust, since the music is of great importance.

Respighi (who so far has been chiefly known in this country by one or two of his orchestral works and by his Russian Ballet adaptations of Rossini's music to the requirements of La Boutique Fantasque) has been notably successful throughout the work in his quick adaptability to the dramatic situations. It is perhaps essential in a puppet play that none of these situations should be prolonged, and the composer has passed in a light-handed way from one to another, in every case suiting the music to the needs of the moment, in a fashion which may be described as at once in the traditions of the old Italian opera and in the spirit of the modern school. The ballet dancers and the prima donna element are perhaps treated with just a touch of parody, but in the main the romantic character of the piece is preserved, so far as the composer is concerned. It is, however, a little regrettable that in the presentation there is a slight tendency once or twice to drop into pantomime or farce. Dramatically the least effective scene is the first one, which contains some lovely night music, but which is spoilt (in London as at Rome) by the ineffective attempt at the employment of fluttering bird-actors and singers.

The singing on the first night was not altogether adequate, failing chiefly in articulation; no doubt this will be remedied. The translation, so far as we could hear it, seemed on the whole satisfactory, but there were one or two places (where the speaking voice was used, and where every word could be followed) which seemed decidedly unpoetic. The singers are apparently seated in the orchestra. The conductor is Francesco Ticciati.

The audience was uproariously happy; indeed, by its too openly expressed satisfaction, it seemed occasionally to be forgetting that this was a musical piece by one of the most gifted composers of the day, and to be accepting it merely as a wonderful and artistically delightful display of puppet versatility.

